Scanned from the collections of
The Library of Congress

Packard Campus for Audio Visual Conservation www.loc.gov/avconservation

Motion Picture and Television Reading Room www.loc.gov/rr/mopic

Recorded Sound Reference Center
www.loc.gov/rr/record

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Scoop! Bob Mitchum's Own Story!

modern screen

PER

DELL

Betty Grable

"Darling... Darling

Recognize that bride-y look that Nancy's wearing?

...we'll be so elegant tonight! That heavenly plant Dad gave us, and our handsome new silverware gleaming and shimmering all over our table!"

Ever since you were a tyke, you've heard about Oneida and 1881 Ⓡ Rogers Ⓡ. The patterns they're crafting today show the distinction you'd expect of these silverwise old names. And your set's wear-areas are heavily reinforced with solid silver. The more you use it, the lovelier it will get! Start now to give your luxury-loving soul 3-times-a-day pleasure! Ask about an easy-payment plan for the patterns below—also Surf Club* (not shown). 5-piece place setting, $4.50. Complete services for 8 from $39.75.

Shown below: a really complete 64-piece service. Cabinet Chest included. 16 teaspoons, 8 soup spoons, 8 hollow-handle knives, 8 forks, 8 salad forks, 8 butter spreaders, 2 tablespoons, 1 butter knife, 1 sugar spoon, 1 cold meat fork, 1 gravy ladle, 2-piece steak set. $59.75. No federal tax.

For young people who take pride in living nicely

1881
Ⓡ ROGERS Ⓡ*
SILVERPLATE
by
ONEIDA LTD. SILVERSMITHS

*Trade Mark. Copyright, 1948, Oneida, Ltd.

"Dentists say the IPANA way works!"

PN.115
.M334

Junior Model Joan Murray shows how it can work for you, too

Sitting pretty is dateable Joan Murray, radiant 17-year-old model of Harrison, N. Y. This popular lass has a smile that wins her top honors—modeling or dating!

Of course, Joan follows the Ipana way to healthier gums and brighter teeth . . . because dentists say it wórks! Her professionally approved Ipana dental care can work for you, too—like this . . .

"The Ipana way is easy—and fun," Joan tells friend Peggy. Dentists say it works . . . and it's simple as 1, 2:

1. Between regular visits to your dentist, brush all tooth surfaces with Ipana at least twice a day.
2. Then massage gums the way your dentist advises—to stimulate gum circulation. (Ipana's unique formula actually helps stimulate your gums—you can feel the invigorating tingle!)

Try this for healthier gums, brighter teeth, an Ipana smile. Ipana refreshes your mouth and breath, too. Ask your dentist about Ipana and massage. See what it can do for you!

YES, 8 OUT OF 10 DENTISTS* SAY:

Ipana dental care promotes Healthier gums, brighter teeth

Product of Bristol-Myers

P.S. For correct brushing, use the DOUBLE DUTY Tooth Brush with the twist in the handle. 1000 dentists helped design it!

*Latest national poll

You can say "yes" to Romance

because

Veto says "no" to Offending!

Veto says "no"—to perspiration worry and odor! Soft as a caress... exciting, new, Veto is Colgate's wonderful cosmetic deodorant. Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use, keeps you lovely all day! Veto stops underarm odor instantly, checks perspiration effectively.

Veto says "no"—to harming skin and clothes! So effective...yet so gentle—Colgate's Veto is harmless to normal skin. Harmless, too, even to filmy, most fragile fabrics. For Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. No other deodorant can be like Veto!

TRUST ALWAYS TO VETO

IF YOU VALUE YOUR CHARM!

DECEMBER, 1948

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

THE TRIALS AND ERRORS OF SHELLEY WINTERS ..... by Robbin Coons 14
INGRID BERGMAN TALKS ..... by Hedda Hopper 28
BOB MITCHUM'S OWN STORY ..... by Carl Schroeder 30
HARRY'S GIRL (Betty Grable) ..... by Lillian Grable 34
CHEESEHEAD AND COMPANY (Glenn Ford) ..... by Reba and Bonnie Churchill 36
RITA'S ROYAL ROMANCE (Rita Hayworth) ..... by K. Roby Eunson 40
THANKS FOR THE MEMORIES (Gregory Peck) ..... by George Benjamin 42
MY ONE AND ONLY (Rory Calhoun) ..... by Lita Baron Calhoun 44
ARTANIS KNARF, I Know Him Backwards (Frank Sinatra) ..... by Bobby Burns 46
MRS. BRISKIN'S DREAM HOUSE (Betty Hutton) ..... by Marva Peterson 48
THEY WENT THAT-A-WAY (Roy Rogers-Dale Evans) 52
HOLLYWOOD'S "MYSTERY" ROMANCES ..... by Jack Wade 54
THIS LITTLE VOICE WENT NO, NO, NO! (Loretta Young) ..... by Winston Stallings 60

features

TO OUR READERS 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
EDITORIAL: "Why Won't They Let You Grow Up?"
(An open letter to Elizabeth Taylor) 27
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "Kiss the Blood Off My Hands" 57

departments

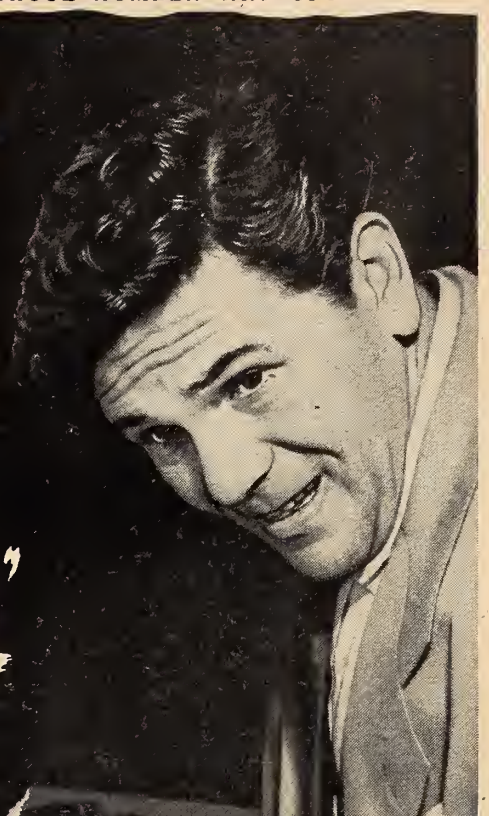
MOVIE REVIEWS ..... by Christopher Kane 16
YOUR LETTERS 25
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 63
THE FANS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 77
NEW FACES 78
MUSIC: "Sweet and Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 98
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed) 108

ON THE COVER: Betty Grable Color Portrait by Nikolas Muray

WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, associate editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
GLORIA LAMPERT, associate fan club director
IRENE TURNER, research editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York



Vol. 38, No. 1, December, 1948.

Copyright, 1948, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York.
Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada.
International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works.
Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-President. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

A BIG NEW M-G-M SMASH HIT!

THE SENSATIONAL STORY OF A NUMBERS KING WHOSE NUMBER WAS UP!

JOHN GARFIELD puts his Body and Soul into his greatest role

"FORCE OF EVIL"

DISTRIBUTED BY M-G-M

The ENTERPRISE Studios present The ROBERTS Production with THOMAS GOMEZ and MARIE WINDSOR and introducing BEATRICE PEARSON

Screen Play by ABRAHAM POLONSKY and IRA WOLFERT • Based upon the novel "TUCKER'S PEOPLE" by Ira Wolfert

Directed by ABRAHAM POLONSKY • Produced by BOB ROBERTS

Take a good searching look at your fingers. Are they soft and lovely as you dream they can be? Or are the cuticles ragged—the skin dry and rough? Try this tip for the loveliest fingertips you've ever had!

Massage rich, creamy 'Vaseline' Cuticle and Nail Cream on and around your cuticles . . . see how supple and pliant they become . . . how soft and silky they feel. You'll find 'Vaseline' Cuticle and Nail Cream a delight to use . . . it's full of soothing emollient oils, fragrant with "Forget-Me-Not." And you'll find there's nothing better for preventing cuticle hangnails!

New! VASELINE CUTICLE TRADE MARK ® AND NAIL CREAM

To our Readers

THERE'S A fourteen-year-old girl in Hollywood, name of Joan Evans. Right now Joan is being groomed for stardom by Samuel Goldwyn. She has the title role in a movie called Roseanna McCoy, and she has Joan Crawford for a godmother and sponsor. We figure she can't lose. But what really brings Joan Evans to our mind is her aunt, K. Roby Eunson, who is MODERN SCREEN's newest contributor. Aunt Roby is in Paris—and she was there when Rita Hayworth was thereabout with Prince Ali Khan at her side and half the men of France trailing behind. You'll find Roby's view of "Rita's Royal Romance" on page 40. Good reading it is, too—although what we especially want to tell K. is: "Please stop sending us those frantic messages from the Eiffel Tower. Yes, we've heard about your niece. We think she's wonderful. . ."

WHICH BRINGS us around to Ingrid Bergman and Hedda Hopper, who are also wonderful. Hedda came striding into our office the other day. "Shy?" she said, "My eye! Recluse? Pooh! Mystery woman? Huh!" "We never thought you were, Hedda," we ventured cautiously. She brushed us aside. "Not me—Bergman, the Divine Swede!" "We know," we said. "You don't know!" Hedda said. "Wait till you learn the real story. . " Whereupon she made us learn it—as you may, too, if you turn to "Ingrid Bergman Talks," the item on page 28 of this issue.

ON PAGE 36, there's a piece about the Glenn Fords. What isn't in the story, our Roma Burton could tell you. Roma, our Western Editor, was at the Fords' house with the photographers and young Reba and Bonnie Churchill. She was standing in the bedroom, admiring it, when suddenly she noticed flames crawling up the drapes. Her amazement was only equalled by that of the photographers. Before Glenn could point an accusing finger, the fire was out and blame had been placed on some errant flash bulbs. It was, nevertheless, the hottest assignment Roma's ever covered. . . .

ROMA, INCIDENTALLY, is able to cope with such situations partly because she's five feet seven and stems from a family of comparative giants. Her two youngest brothers (she has three) are probably the biggest men on the California State Highway Patrol. They have been known to tag the cars of MODERN SCREEN staff members for perfectly illegal parking—a thing which surprises no one. Roma doesn't like to talk about herself, but if you threaten her, she'll tell you she went to Santa Monica Junior College, did publicity for RKO and Goldwyn, and in 1946 switched to us. We've been happy ever since. . . .

the snake pit has been filmed!

With all the emotional impact and penetrating insight that made the best-selling novel the most powerful book of our time—the story now comes to the screen!

Darryl F. Zanuck
presents

OLIVIA de HAVILLAND
THE SNAKE PIT

20th CENTURY-FOX

also Starring
MARK STEVENS
LEO GENN
with Celeste Holm · Glenn Langan
and Helen Craig • Leif Erickson • Beulah Bondi • Lee Patrick • Howard Freeman • Natalie Schafer • Ruth Donnelly • Katherine Locke • Frank Conroy • Minna Gombell

Directed by ANATOLE LITVAK

Produced by
ANATOLE LITVAK and ROBERT BASSLER

Screen Play by Frank Partos and Millen Brand • Based on the Novel by Mary Jane Ward

Frank Sinatro's Swoaners ond Andy Russell's Sprauts played their secand onnual charity saftball game in Gilmare Park. Umpire Jack Carsan accepts a small bribe from Swaaners' center-fielder Ran Reogan.

Mickey Raaney has o beef agoinst the Swooners, but neither pitcher Harry Jomes nar short-center-fielder Sinatro is toking it seriausly. The game wos sponsared by the Hallywoad Junior Chamber of Cammerce.

With the beaming approval of husband Ben Gage, Esther Williams models the swim suit she designed for Cale of Califarnia. The Cales tassed a champagne supper far Esther at their Beverly Hills home.

One of the big fashian shaws af the manth was the swank affair given by Irene, M-G-M designer, when she presented a new callectian at her awn salon. Ava Gardner selects a black number with gald-dotted jacket.

Janis Paige, the Sprouts' bat girl, sprays teammate Dane Clark with a Flit gun because he catches so many flies. (Ouch!) After the game, which the Sinatra ten won 19 to 9, all hands took part in an uproarious comedy show.

Cabina Wright made fashion news, too, with her party for 300 honoring designer Marusia (wife of announcer Don Wilson). Among those admiring the creations are Bill Spier, June Havoc, Judy Garland, and Vincente Minnelli.

louella parsons'

Good news

■ In the long run it is not what I, his producers or his friends in Hollywood may feel about Robert Mitchum that will decide whether he is finished—or whether he gets another chance.

It's up to YOU. You, the fans and the ticket buyers, will make the decision.

Because you are the final judge and jury, I have read with great interest every letter about Mitchum you have sent to my desk since the day he was arrested on the charge of smoking marijuana.

The majority of you letter writers are shocked and disillusioned. Several are bitter and are determined never to see another picture of his. Others believe Bob is sick. But I shall be more specific and quote from some of the more interesting letters.

"What shocks me almost as much as the marijuana smoking," writes a housewife from Portland, "is the fact that he had dropped in for a date with two Hollywood bachelor girls when his wife was, at that very time, driving back across the country with his two children, willing to give their marriage another chance. Has anyone else thought of this particular tragedy within a tragedy? Is it always the fate of fine wives like Mrs. Mitchum and Mrs. Rex Harrison to stand by, humiliated but forgiving and understanding?"

A New York taxi-driver says: "I hauled Bob Mitchum once when he was visiting here and he laughed and kidded and seemed very regular. Anybody who resorts to narcotics or 'smokes' is sick. How about giving him another chance?"

A 16-year-old girl in San Francisco writes: "Robert Mitchum has thrown himself on the mercy of the public. He has confessed his mistakes. Since when have Americans re-

Watch the lads

Admire the Girls

..whose Hair has warm, rich COLOR

★ Don't put up with dull, mousy hair a moment longer. Let Nestle Colorinse give your hair the warm, rich color, silken sheen and beautiful highlights that no shampoo alone could possibly give. Absolutely safe, washes out with shampooing.

Remember — when you ask for "Colorinse" — be sure to insist on the genuine NESTLE COLORINSE.

Nestle
COLORINSE

IN 10 FLATTERING SHADES

10¢—25¢ AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS.

KEEP HAIR IN PLACE ALL DAY LONG

Delicately scented Nestle Hair Lacquers keep all styles of hair-dos well groomed. 10¢, 25¢ and 50¢ at all toilet goods counters.

Nestle- originators of permanant waving- Meriden, Conn.

First nighters at the Ice Follies of 1949 in Hollywood's Pan Pacific Auditorium were Shirley and John Agar. The Agars celebrated their third wedding anniversary in September.

Good news

fused to grant another chance to a man who says he is sorry?"

"M. S. L.," of Atlanta, believes: "Hollywood must not be judged by this one case or any single happening. I heard your plea on the radio the other night asking that the many not be smeared with the few. I get my greatest happiness out of going to the movies and so do most of my friends. This is why I am always so shocked when they rave and rant against Hollywood and its people every time a new 'case' comes up. All I can say is that I hope Hollywood is not put on trial along with Robert Mitchum."

[EDITOR'S NOTE: For a most revealing insight into Bob Mitchum's character and mind, see page 30.]

* * *

I stole a couple of days off the job and went down to Del Mar and La Jolla—to Del Mar to check up on the movie stars at the races and to La Jolla to catch Gregory Peck in The Male Animal in summer stock revival.

After the show, I went backstage to see Greg and I couldn't have been more surprised at the lack of movie-star trappings in his dressing room. In fact, Greg, who gets every convenience he wants when he's at a Hollywood movie studio, shared a cubbyhole in the basement blocked off by curtains, with leaky pipes down the walls—and two members of the cast dressed with him.

Most of the actors who appear in these summer stock shows love that sort of thing—getting right back to the greasepaint and the good old days of barnstorming.

But such was far from the case when Jennifer Jones came to the La Jolla Playhouse for a ten day run in Serena Blandish.

Wow! What swank!

Jennifer's costumes were created in Hollywood and two wardrobe women came along—plus her personal maid, hairdresser and secretary! The leaky-pipe "star" dressing room was completely out of the question, so an elaborately-appointed trailer was backed up to the stage door and served as her dressing quarters.

Whether all this made a hit with the other summer stock troupers is a questionable point. In any event, Jennifer sold out the house performance after performance. The fans went crazy over her and the show could have run a year.

* * *

Elizabeth Taylor grabbed football star Glenn Davis, and planted a big kiss square on his lips when the ex-West Pointer took off for service in the Orient. That youngster is really in love and she doesn't care who knows it.

She wears Glenn's fraternity pin even on her evening gowns.

They met when Davis came out to Los Angeles to train for his only professional football appearance with the L. A. Rams before taking off for Army duty. In fact, he stayed with the next-door-neighbors to the Taylors'. It was love at first sight.

* * *

Personal Opinions: The fact that her relatives, her father, mother and sister were constantly at the house may have had something to do with the final break-up of Gloria

Bing Bob Eddie

CROSBY · HOPE · CANTOR

say:

"It's One Of The Funniest Pictures Ever Made!"

She teaches him his A B C's by drawing them on his chest . . . and he doesn't care if school never ends!

One $20,000,000 kiss and hallelujah! He's a bum!

Paramount presents

JOHN LUND
WANDA HENDRIX
BARRY FITZGERALD
MONTY WOOLLEY

in

"Mi$$ Tatlock's Million$"

with

ILKA CHASE · ROBERT STACK
DOROTHY STICKNEY · ELIZABETH PATTERSON

Produced by CHARLES BRACKETT Directed by RICHARD HAYDN

Screenplay by Charles Brackett and Richard L. Breen
Suggested by a play by Jacques Deval

GIRLS Send this coupon, plus a dime, to cover handling charges, for your autographed picture of handsome John Lund, thrilling star of "A Foreign Affair!"

Dept. 7, Paramount Pictures Inc., 1501 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y. I am enclosing 10¢ for an autographed picture of John Lund

Name_____

Address_____

_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

BOYS Now you can have an autographed picture of beautiful Wanda Hendrix, lovable star of "Ride The Pink Horse" and "Welcome Stranger!" Just send a dime, plus coupon.

Dept. 7, Paramount Pictures Inc., 1501 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y. I am enclosing 10¢ for an autographed picture of Wanda Hendrix.

Name_____

Address_____

_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Don't be Half-safe!

by
VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush of womanhood many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nothing "wrong" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause your apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deodorants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. In fact, more men and women everywhere use Arrid than any other deodorant. It's antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate protection is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears. This new Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, will not crystallize or dry out in the jar. The American Laundering Institute has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Arrid is safe for the skin—non-irritating—can be used right after shaving.

Don't be half-safe. During this "age of romance" don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter—only 39¢ plus tax.

Mona Freemon and Pat Nerney at Gail Patrick's party for Florida's newly-elected governor, Fuller Warren.

Back from their European honeymoon, the Bob Toppings dine out at the Colony Restouront in N. Y.

Good news

De Haven and John Payne. I know Gloria is upset over the parting, but I hope she doesn't continue to try to "forget" by dating with a new beau in a nightclub every evening. . . . The man with the most delightful manners in Hollywood is Herbert Marshall—and I mean just good old-fashioned courtesy. Some of the younger casual and indifferent males could get some good tips from Bart, who treats every woman he meets as if she were royalty. . . . If Judy Garland is successful in getting Roy Rogers for her hero in Annie Get Your Gun, I'll nominate that movie a year in advance as the biggest grosser of 1949. Imagine those two plus Irving Berlin's wonderful music!

* * *

The social season in Hollywood has reached a new high with more parties than I can remember in all the years I have been reporting movie news.

I suppose it's because so many important guests have been visiting the West Coast and hostesses have vied with one another in seeing that they meet our Hollywood stars.

Gail Patrick, looking like a dream girl in the gown she wore at her wedding to Corny Jackson, was hostess at a large cocktail party and buffet supper honoring Governor-elect Fuller Warren of Florida. The handsome Governor made a decided hit with the ladies, I can tell you.

Greer Garson, so radiantly happy these days that the whole world knows it, sat between the Governor and her best beau, Buddy Fogelson, the millionaire Texan who is now the one man in her life.

But don't think for a minute that she had the exclusive attention of the guest of honor. He was most intrigued with Rosalind Russell, whose repartee was as witty and fast as his own. Rosalind looked beautiful in an ice-cream shade of pink and a small, perky hat.

There were fully 300 guests at the party and it is impossible to mention them all. But I would like to say right here in print that one of the women most admired by the distinguished visitor from Florida was Mrs. Lorena Danker, the dark-eyed beauty—whose smiles, however, were given only to Louis B. Mayer, head man of M-G-M.

* * *

That Danny Kaye is a one! He almost broke up the first formal party given in the beautiful new home of the William Goetzes by the darnedest gag of the season. He started asking everyone his or her middle name and then refused to call them by anything else! Do I rue the moment when I confided mine was "Rose"!

He also got it out of Irene Dunne that hers is "Adelaide" and that Loretta Young's real name is "Gretchen."

During dinner, he would come up with, "Gretchen, didn't you love Adelaide in I Remember Mama? I thought Rose, here, wrote just a peachy review."

We fixed him when we found out his real name is "David."

The Goetz home is easily one of the most beautiful in Southern California and it has been done in wonderful taste by William Haines. One of the things that makes it so outstanding is the beautiful collection of paintings—among them, a Van Gogh self-portrait. Bill and Eadie bought many of these works of art when we were all abroad this spring.

Claudette Colbert, with her short hair-cut (it seems shorter every time I see her) sat at a table with the host and Joan Bennett.

Joan is as loath to leave her children as anyone I know, but she has never been as reluctant to leave her own fireside as she has been since the arrival of her new daughter, Shelley. I can't say I blame her, because Shelley Wanger is a beauty and a darling. Looking at Joan in her chocolate-colored dinner gown and seeing how slim she is, you find it impossible to believe that she will be a grandmother next spring. She is only 38. Doesn't that make her just about the young-

A barrage of Bouquets for Warner Bros. June Bride!

"ONE OF THE BEST COMEDIES IN YEARS!" PHOTOPLAY

"SOCKO! ONE OF THE TOP LAUGH FESTS OF THIS OR ANY OTHER YEAR!" DAILY VARIETY (FAMED SHOW-BUSINESS JOURNAL)

"THE BEST BETTE DAVIS PICTURE IN YEARS!" MOVIE PLAY

"A WONDERFULLY FUNNY PICTURE!" LIBERTY

"THE COMEDY OF THE YEAR! THE BETTE DAVIS PICTURE THE PUBLIC HAS BEEN WAITING FOR!" MOTION PICTURE

Bette Robert

DAVIS - MONTGOMERY in JUNE BRIDE

WITH FAY BAINTER BETTY LYNN TOM TULLY

DIRECTED BY BRETAIGNE WINDUST · PRODUCED BY HENRY BLANKE

Screen Play by RANALD MacDOUGALL • Based on a Play by Eileen Tighe and Graeme Lorimer

Look closely and you'll find that Crosby and Sinatra are the clowns with Shirley Johns. It's a circus benefit for the St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica.

This event drew the largest collection of stars in years. $175,000 was raised with the aid of such gentlemen as Robinson Crusoe (Gary Cooper) and Friday (Buster Keaton).

Good news

est grandmother in the country? (One of the youngest, anyhow!)

The Goetz party went on until almost dawn—and why not, with Johnny Green coming in late to play the piano until the wee small hours and Danny cutting up so superbly?

* * *

How do these movie girls meet millionaires—not only meet 'em but marry 'em?

Well, I suppose there is no set blueprint—but it is amusing the way pretty, blonde Jacqeline White met Bruce Anderson, wealthy oil man whom she is marrying in November:

Even though she is an actress with a good RKO contract, Jackie is very much a home loving girl and still far more interested in her former college sorority meetings than she is in Hollywood cocktail parties.

So, when she was recently invited to one—she found herself just on the outskirts of the group, a little on the bored side. Since everything was being served but water, she decided to wander out in the kitchen and get a glass for herself.

There, much to her surprise, perched on the sink, drinking water, himself, and looking pretty well bored—was one of the most attractive men she had ever seen.

"Hello, Beautiful, where did you come from?" he greeted.

A few minutes later he asked if he could drive her home. The next night they had their first dinner date. Ten days later they were officially engaged!

I guess it is easy if fate is on your side.

Jacqueline hasn't yet said how her marriage will affect her career. But her friends wouldn't be surprised if she says goodbye to the movies when she becomes Mrs. Anderson.

* * *

Mrs. Dolly Walker, Los Angeles socialite who is not in the picture business, gave a delightful dinner honoring the Maharajah and Maharanee of Jaipur. I had previously met them in Paris last summer. They are very prominent in the international set and the attractive Maharajah is one of the wealthiest men in India.

Speaking of the international set—don't be surprised if Dolly O'Brien one day soon becomes Mrs. Clark Gable. Possibly by the time this is in print there will be some definite news, because Clark was right at the boat to greet Dolly when she returned from Europe. (Editor's Note:—For a somewhat different prediction, see page 54.)

Another marriage scheduled to take place before another year is out is that of George Sanders and Sari Gabor Hilton.

You may remember a few years ago this romance was hot and heavy—then it suddenly broke off.

George went to Europe, leaving behind the red-headed Sari, who was madly in love with him. At the time George said he wouldn't even discuss marrying again until his wife, from whom he was just recently divorced, was in better health.

Whatever else might be said about George and his haughty attitude, it must be stated that he was devoted to his wife and wanted to do nothing to upset her until she was feeling better.

Now she has said that she no longer wants to see him anymore—so there was nothing to block the announcement of his engagement to Sari who is, of course, a very, very happy girl these days.

* * *

It has been a month of shocking happenings in Hollywood. First, Robert Mitchum. Then Rita Johnson's mysterious accident.

The police are now convinced that the blow on the head that brought on the long, dangerous coma with the blonde actress's life hanging in the balance, was caused by a hair-dryer. Apparently, the machine slipped while Rita was under it after shampooing her hair at home.

But, for days, this had all the makings of a Hollywood "detective story."

Tips came to my desk by the dozens—all false. I'm afraid too many amateur detectives were writing their own solutions.

As I write this, the case is still a mystery. Rita is in the third week of the coma and her doctors do not hold out much hope. My deepest sympathy goes to her mother and brother, who are barely able to bear up under this tragedy.

* * *

I am sure I do not have to go into detail about the marvelous job Hollywood did putting on the big benefit for St. John's Hospital the opening night of the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey Circus. I saw MODERN SCREEN'S cameraman snapping pictures of all the wonderful acts—and the event has been much publicized.

In these days, when many darts and criticisms are being leveled at Hollywood and its people, I want to ask you all to remember the many fine, good things that come out of movietown and not the occasional—the very rare—disgraces.

There is not one single big star in this industry who did not pitch in and do everything possible to help the circus benefit become the sensational success it was.

There is never a time when Hollywood does not respond to a worthwhile cause.

That is the thought I would like to leave you with this month. The great things that Hollywood does far overshadow the few mistakes of one or two personalities who happen to be identified with this industry. THE END with STEPHEN McNALLY · Carol Thurston · Edgar Barrier · Screenplay by ROBERT BUCKNER

Original Story by ROBERT BUCKNER and ROBERT FLOREY · A ROBERT BUCKNER PRODUCTION · Directed by ROBERT FLOREY

"Discovery of the Year"

the trials and errors of shelley winters

by robbin coons

Gone are the days when she lived on doughnuts.

Because of the remarkable impact on the public of her fresh and vital personality, because she has demonstrated first-rate professional ability in all her roles, the editors of MODERN SCREEN consider that Shelley Winters clearly deserves to be honored as the Screen Discovery of the Year. She is, in our opinion, one of the most promising figures ever to arrive in Hollywood.

■ The little blonde gal sat before her mirror that day in a mood as blue as her clear young eyes.

You or I would have called her "cute" or "pert" or "pixie." We might even have called her "pretty." But those blue eyes, appraising the mirrored reflection, returned another verdict.

"Shelley Winters," the girl said to her image, "you are so ugly. . . . Look, for three years Hollywood has been telling you how unbeautiful you are. Get wise. Make dust out of here. New York. Anywhere. What that face of yours needs is footlights—(Continued on page 99)

She'd begun to think she was downright homely—now she's a femme fatale.

says ELIZABETH TAYLOR: "I Love the Super-Smooth Finish New Woodbury Powder gives my Skin!"

ELIZABETH TAYLOR, beautiful co-star of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's
"LITTLE WOMEN", wears satin-smooth
Woodbury Powder.

In Nation-Wide Test

WOODBURY WINS 4 TO 1

over all leading brands of powder

From Coast to Coast women voted New Woodbury Powder the best... they said Woodbury was better than their own favorite face powders! In this most dramatic beauty test of all time, Woodbury won on an average of 4 to 1 over all other leading brands of powder.

6 exciting shades in New Woodbury Powder. Medium and "Purse" sizes 30¢ and 15¢ plus tax.

You'll find a new kind of beauty in the Woodbury box—it's the world's finest face powder! You'll see the difference* the instant you wear divinely fragrant New Woodbury Powder:

*There's no "powdery" look!

*Shades are warmer, richer, yet the color seems your own natural coloring.

*New Woodbury Powder gives a satin-smooth finish powder alone could never give before.

Large "dressing table" size $1.00 plus tax. Get New Woodbury Powder—in the new "Venus" box at any cosmetic counter!

TWICE NEW!
New Secret Ingredient gives a satin-smooth finish to your skin!
New Revolutionary Process
—plus Woodbury's "Super-Blender" give warmest, liveliest shades, finest texture!

Movie reviews

by Christopher Kane

John Lund is persuaded by Barry Fitzgerald to double for the feeble-minded Schuyler Tatlock at the reading of his grandfather's will. Barry, paid to take care of Schuyler, fears to reveal his charge may be dead.

Through a fluke, the bogus Schuyler Tatlock becomes sole heir to the famous Tatlock millions and the family begins to fawn on him. One especially is his "sister," Wanda Hendrix, whom Lund starts to adore.

An aunt (Ilka Chase) discovers that Lund is phony, forces him to go away so that her son, Robert Stack (being clouted by Lund) can marry Wanda and recover a few millions. Then the real Schuyler returns!

MISS TATLOCK'S MILLIONS

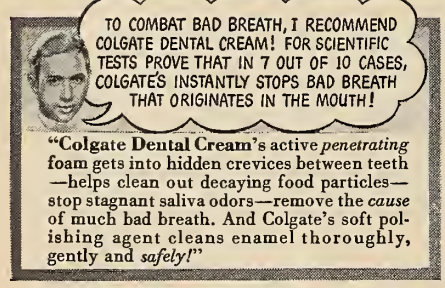
Barry Fitzgerald starts off by hiring John Lund to impersonate a young man named Schuyler Tatlock, and here's why. Schuyler's the half-wit grandson of the tremendously rich California Tatlocks, and Fitzgerald's had a soft job for years being Schuyler's keeper (the Tatlocks call it "social secretary") in Hawaii, $500 a month rolling in, and the white sand, and the broad Pacific. Trouble is, Schuyler-boy's a firebug. Leave a match around the house, and goodbye, house. One day Fitzgerald leaves Schuyler alone to go into town and pick up the monthly check. He stays away too long. Two cases too long, to be precise. When he returns, there's only a pile of ashes. No Schuyler. Barry hates to give up the easy money, so he, well, he doesn't exactly notify Schuyler's family of Schuyler's demise. Five hundred a month is $500 a month. Two years later he's in trouble. The old Tatlocks die within an hour of one another, and all the heirs have to be present to hear the will read, and Fitzgerald receives a wire from California to bring Schuyler home at once. The way he looks at it, in Schuyler's present shape, he'd be too much of a shock to his folks. (The folks are Schuyler's uncles, Monty Woolley and Dan Tobin, and his aunts, Dorothy Stickney and Ilka Chase, and his sister, Wanda Hendrix.) In addition to this, Fitzgerald figures if anyone finds he's been taking money for no services rendered (larceny) and has failed to inform the authorities of the death of a citizen (federal offense) he'll be shipped to San Quentin. Which is why he hires Lund. Lund doesn't like the idea much, but he's a movie stunt man (Fitzgerald found him through Central Casting) and not a terribly conventional soul himself. He says he'll go through with it for a couple of days. After the will is read, Fitzgerald will get sent back to Hawaii with the supposed Schuyler, and the salary will continue, and Lund will get a thousand dollars. Through a legal fluke, however, Schuyler is named the sole heir, and his acid-tongued aunts and uncles all want to be his guardians, and Lund has a field day spitting fruit pits, letting his tongue loll out of his head, and bringing them worms for presents. He's as convincing a moron as you'd care to see, and he rollicks through the part of Schuyler with zest, but he also plays his real life stunt man with nice, quiet efficiency. He's a good actor, and, incidentally, very handsome with brown hair (it's dyed to match Schuyler's). Lots more happens. Lund falls in love with Wanda (she's overly affectionate because she thinks he's her brother) and saves her from marrying Ilka's worthless son, Robert Stack, and, of course, the real Schuyler shows up at the end with a Hawaiian wife and two native babies and there's heck to pay. It's a swell movie, one of the funniest. Charlie Brackett (producer and co-writer of the script) and Richard Haydn (who directed and played a bit part) have come up with a comedy that's got everything.—Para.

New lotion miracle brings out the beauty of your WHOLE HAND!

BEAUTIFIES SKIN
New Hinds is enriched with lanolin to make your hands feel softer instantly—protect them longer. Works wonders on rough, dry skin!

SATINIZES PALMS
Even rough palms are soothed and smoothed. New Hinds' "skin-affinity" ingredients actually help to soften calluses.

SOFTENS CUTICLE
Nails look neater with New Hinds helping to keep cuticle pliable. No ragged edges to "catch." Your manicures stay lovely longer!



SMOOTHS KNUCKLES
Dry knuckles yield to the smoothing action of New Hinds. Effective emollients "sink in." Hinds dries fast —never feels sticky!

WORKS WONDERS! Lanolin-enriched for extra effectiveness, New Hinds Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream keeps your whole hand feeling soft in spite of ravages of work and water. Use it to smooth elbows, arms and legs . . . try it as a powder base. Use Hinds to help protect babies' and children's tender skin from chapping! 4 sizes, 10¢ to $1.00. PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK

Hinds
Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream
NOW IN NEW LARGER BEAUTY BOTTLE

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

NO MINOR VICES

Here is a movie where the characters all talk to themselves. For at least a fifth of the total running time, one or another of the principals stares into space and goes through suitable facial changes while he listens to his own mind working. It's this way. Flash to Dr. Aswell (Dana Andrews) sitting in his plushy office. His lips are still, but you hear his voice saying something like, "What's the matter, Aswell? Don't you trust your wife?" Meanwhile, he's clenching his fist, banging his desk, and twitching. If you want to know how Aswell got that way, listen. He's a benevolent despot. Likes things to move according to schedule—his schedule. His nurse (Jane Wyatt) is in love with him; he takes advantage of this; allows her to work long hours, refuse vacations. His assistant, Doctor Sturdevant (Norman Lloyd) has no private life either. He also idolizes his superior, and he spends his spare time memorizing Aswell's lectures to women's groups. Aswell's wife, Lilli Palmer, is pretty well sublimated, along with the rest of the gang. She cooks what Aswell likes; she sees there are no visitors during the hours when Aswell doesn't want visitors. But one day, Aswell overreaches himself. He tries to run the life of a young artist (Louis Jourdan) who's been doing subjective painting. "Go paint people," Aswell says. "This stuff is terrible." When it turns out that the person Louis most wishes to paint is Lilli, the trouble begins. When he falls in love with Lilli the trouble increases. According to Louis, the Aswells are living a tragedy. Lilli's just a piece of furniture to Aswell. To Louis, of course, Lilli could be an inspiration, a flame to light his searching way, a balm to soothe his agonies. . . . Louis is a little melodramatic, and a bit of a charlatan, but he's wonderfully charming, frighteningly handsome, and sincerely in love, so Lilli can't dismiss him lightly. I know you should be glad she sticks to her husband, in the end, but to tell the truth, Lilli and Louis were an adorable couple. You should have seen them trying to make a lobster's last day happy.—Enterprise-MGM.

CRY OF THE CITY

20th Century-Fox, having done so well for itself with Kiss of Death, Street With No Name, etc., goes on to bigger and noisier shoot-em-up's. Here again, we have a New

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Start the new year right by winning free copies of MODERN SCREEN—it's easy. All you have to do is mail in the questionnaire below. If your name is among the first 500 that reaches us you'll get the January, February and March issues with our compliments. All we want is your opinion—we'll pay for it with MODERN SCREEN. So hurry!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our December issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

The Trials and Errors of Shelley Winters ..... ☐
Ingrid Bergman Talks by Hedda Hopper ..... ☐
Bob Mitchum's Own Story ..... ☐
Harry's Girl (Betty Grable) ..... ☐
Cheesehead and Company (Glenn Ford) ..... ☐
Rita's Royal Romance (Rita Hayworth) ..... ☐
Thanks For The Memories (Gregory Peck) ..... ☐
My One And Only (Rory Calhoun) ..... ☐
Artanis Knarf (I Know Him Backwards) (Frank Sinatra) ..... ☐
Mrs. Briskin's Dream House (Betty Hutton) ..... ☐
They Went That-A-Way (Roy Rogers-Dale Evans) ..... ☐
Hollywood's "Mystery" Romances ☐
This Little Voice Went No, No, No! (Loretta Young) ..... ☐
Picture Of The Month (Kiss The Blood Off My Hands) ..... ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ..... ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST? .....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference .....

.....

What MALE star do you like least? .....

What FEMALE star do you like least? .....

My name is .....

My address is .....

City ..... Zone ..... State ..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

HERE'S A BOMBSHELL ANNOUNCEMENT from "AMERICA'S BIGGEST BARGAIN BOOK CLUB"

8 BOOKS FREE!

IF YOU JOIN THE BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA NOW

Her eyes smoldered as he drew near—
From "Queen's Physician."

Thousands Have Paid $18 for these Books—But YOU Get Them FREE!

THE QUEEN'S PHYSICIAN—When handsome Dr. Struensee entered the royal bedchamber, he knew that only passion could cure the queen's ailment!

EAGLE IN THE SKY—Exciting tale of how three young doctors gathered the facts of love, life and medicine firsthand during the Revolutionary War.

TALES FROM THE DECAMERON — Famous and lusty tales—about the amorous antics of outraged husbands and outrageous lovers, of sinning "saints" and saintly "sinners"!

THE GOLDEN HAWK—Adventure and love on the Spanish Main, where a yellow-haired pirate met a dazzling bandit-wench no man dared tame! By author of "Foxes of Harrow."

YANKEE PASHA — Young Jason Starbuck battled his way around the world—and into the slave pens of the Barbary pirates—to claim a ravishing harem beauty for his own!

JANE EYRE—The tale of a passionate love affair between a sophisticated Englishman and a young governess—haunted by the screaming secret in the tower room of that lonely house.

ANNIE JORDAN—Vivid story of a girl who fought hard for happiness—then tossed it all away for the only love she could NOT have!

SHORT STORIES OF DE MAUPASSANT — Over 50 of the frankest, most daring stories of love, hate, intrigue, and passion ever written!

Blanca backed away in terror—
From "The Golden Hawk."

RACHEL —who avenged France because of one kiss!—Maupassant.

YES—all 8 of these best-read books are YOURS FREE, to prove how much reading pleasure you will get as a member of "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"! Ordinarily, you would get your Club Bonus Books at the rate of one free with every two Selections (or alternates) purchased. But on this special offer, we send you ALL 6 of them right away—and IN THE SAME PACKAGE you get 2 MORE best-sellers free, as your new membership gift! EIGHT fine books in advance, worth $18 in publishers' editions. Send coupon for them NOW!

As a member, you never pay any dues or fees. And every month you get a popular best-seller by an outstanding author like Taylor Caldwell, Steinbeck, or Ernest Hemingway — a book selling in the publisher's edition for as much as $3.00 or more. But YOUR copy comes to you for only $1.49, plus few cents shipping charges!

You Get 8 FREE Books NOW!

On this special offer, you don't have to wait to assemble the Bonus Books which members get — one FREE with every 2 Club Selections (or alternates) purchased. You get SIX of them right away, in advance! AND — in the same big package — you get TWO MORE FREE BOOKS as your membership gift from the Club!

8 free books in all, yet the only requirement is that members accept not less than twelve of the Club's book bargains during their membership.

Moreover, if you remain in the Club, you CONTINUE to get gift books like these—including not only popular best-sellers, but also masterpieces by writers like Shakespeare, Dumas, Balzac, Poe, etc. These volumes grow into an impressive library which you will be proud to display to others.

No Need to Take Every REGULAR Selection

The best-selling book you receive need NOT be Club's regular Selection. Each month you get without extra charge, the Club's "Review," which describes a number of other popular best-sellers; if you prefer one of these to the regular Selection, choose it instead. No membership dues: no further cost or obligation.

Send No Money— JUST MAIL COUPON NOW!

Mail coupon today—without money—and you will receive the 8 splendid books described on this page.

You will also receive, as your first Selection, the current best-selling novel now being distributed to members. When you realize that you will get popular best-sellers like these month after month at a tremendous saving—and that you get $18 worth of best-read books free—in advance—you will understand why this IS "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"! Mail coupon—without money—now.

BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA
Dept. DMG12, Garden City, N.Y.

MAIL WITHOUT MONEY to
BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA
Dept. DMG12, Garden City, N. Y.

Please send me at once—FREE—all eight of the books described on this page (worth $18 in publishers' editions) and enroll me as a member of the Book League. You may start my subscription with the current Selection.

The best-selling book I choose each month may be either the regular Selection or any one of the other popular books described in the Club's monthly "Review." I am to pay only $1.49 (plus a few cents shipping charges) for each monthly book sent to me.

I may cancel my subscription at any time after buying twelve books, or I may continue to take advantage of the Club's book bargains for as much longer as I choose. I will then be entitled to additional Bonus Books—one for each two Selections or alternates I buy. There are no dues for me to pay; no further cost or obligation.

Mr. / Mrs. / Miss .....
Please print plainly

Address .....

City ..... Zone No. (if any) ..... State .....

If under 21, Occupation ..... age, please .....

Slightly higher in Canada. Address 105 Bond St., Toronto 2

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream— cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

Cry Of The City: Trigger-happy Richard Conte, policemon Vic Moture ond justice triumphing.

York City locale, and a trigger-happy hoodlum (Richard Conte this time) attempting to blast himself a place in the sun. Our cop hero is Victor Mature, and he has no sympathy for Conte, because he too was a poor Italian boy from the slums, and he didn't go wrong. Martin Rome (that's Conte) has been leading a life of crime for years, but I'm not sure whether you're expected to think he's a pretty good guy, or a pretty bad guy. It's confusing. Partly because as we first meet Marty, he's in the hospital, full of lead, after having killed a cop. That's terrible. Next minute, everybody's admitting the cop had killed several other fellows, and Marty's action was undoubtedly in self-defense. That's not so terrible. The hospital's trying to fix Marty up so he can get well and go to the electric chair, when a young girl (Debra Paget), as innocent as the dawn, sneaks in to tell him she'll love him forever. Obvious deductions: Marty must have his sweet side. Also, his old mama sends him hot soup. Obvious deduction: Marty must once have been kind to his mother. While he's in the hospital, a lawyer named Niles (Barry Kroeger) comes to ask Marty to confess to a large and appalling jewel robbery. The idea is Marty can only go to the chair once, and he's going to die anyway, so he may as well save this Niles' client (the real jewel thief) from his just desserts. Marty takes one look at Nile's sneering face—believe me, it's one of the most horrid faces I've ever seen—and tells Niles what he can do. Shortly thereafter, Marty breaks out of his jail hospital, goes to see Niles, ends up killing him. Here again, it's self defense, because Niles pulled a gun (Marty himself inclines toward knifing). Well, there's a pretty complicated plot, to put it mildly, but finally Marty meets his innocent young girl friend in a church, and has her just about convinced she should run away with him, when who should appear but detective Victor Mature. It's a showdown, by gosh. Naturally, Marty loses, and the picture ends inspiringly, for we find Victor explaining to Marty's kid brother that crime does not pay, while Marty himself lies cold and dead on the pavement below. There's a certain amount of excitement in a film like this, but I'm not sure it's an intelligent excitement.—20th-Fox.

It's Amazing! It's Sensational! It's Exclusive!

"The New Arthur Murray Way"

makes learning to dance easier than ever!

Good dancers are popular— here's the first step to popularity

IT'S EASY! TRY IT!

There is only one basic step to learn with "The New Arthur Murray Way." If you can do this simple step you can learn any modern dance. Let our experts prove that you can go dancing after one lesson, become a fine dancer in a short time.

ONLY 25¢

Even if you have never danced before you can become a popular partner in a fraction of the usual time "The New Arthur Murray Way"

Take Arthur Murray's short-cut to good times — find the self-confidence and popularity you've always longed for.

Only a few hours at any Arthur Murray Studio will transform you into an expert dancer. His unique methods, now improved to a higher degree than ever before, make learning easy, lightning-quick and such fun!

The key to all the new dances is Arthur Murray's basic discovery — the "First Step to Popularity." Like magic you find yourself leading or following a smart new Fox Trot, Rumba, Samba. You can actually go out dancing after one hour even if you've never danced before.

STOP PASSING UP GOOD TIMES
It's fun to be popular

Only at Arthur Murray's can you get that wonder-working combination of his improved, exclusive methods and the trained skill of his teachers. Save yourself time, money, disappointment. Learn the "Arthur Murray Way." You'll be a joy to dance with, a pleasure to watch. Get a dance analysis free at any Arthur Murray Studio. Come in today. Have the time of your life at your very next party!

PROOF You can dance after one lesson!

See how quickly you can learn to dance "The New Arthur Murray Way." Send for the "Murray-Go-Round" today! It contains fascinating, entertaining instructions on the Fox Trot, Waltz, Rumba, Samba and Tango. Also How to Lead, How to Follow, etc. Consult your telephone directory and MAIL THIS COUPON TO YOUR NEAREST ARTHUR MURRAY STUDIO, or send it to Arthur Murray (Studio 15), 11 East 43rd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

Copr. 1948, Arthur Murray, Inc.

Arthur Murray

DANCE STUDIOS FROM COAST-TO-COAST

Visit the one nearest you for a FREE dance analysis

ARTHUR MURRAY STUDIOS: Please send me your magazine, "Murray-Go-Round," 44 pages of pictures and instructions on the latest ballroom dances, Fox Trot, Waltz, Rumba, Samba, etc. I enclose 25c.

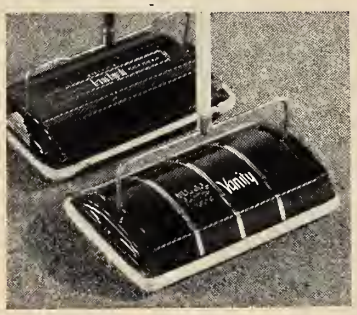
NAME_____

ADDRESS _____

CITY_____ZONE_____STATE_____

MODERN SCREEN—DEC.

No need to bear down!



Yes—just glide a new Bissell® back and forth under beds and tables—everywhere! It sweeps clean, with no pressure on the handle whatsoever!

"Bisco-matic"* brush action does work for you!

Only Bissell has this revolutionary feature that adjusts the brush automatically to any pile rug, from deep broadlooms to smooth Orientals.

Just roll your Bissell along for quick, thorough clean-ups.

"Bisco-matic" Brush Action is now available in two models . . . the "Vanity" at $8.45, and the "Grand Rapids" at only $6.95.

Both complete with "Sta-up" Handle and easy "Flip-O" Empty.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co.
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush

My Dear Secretary: Authar Kirk Douglas' secretary (Laraine Day) marries him and writes a best-seller. It's a merry comedy, helped lats by Keenan Wynn.

MY DEAR SECRETARY

The trouble is, Owen Waterbury (Kirk Douglas) has had too many secretaries. He's a best-selling novelist, but he'd rather make love than money. Half the time, he just ignores his career, and pursues happiness. His secretaries usually wind up with mink coats, he himself often ends up with black eyes, and so it goes. Ronnie Hastings (Keenan Wynn), who lives next door, and calls himself a song-writer, has been mooching off of Owen for a long time; in return, he helps get Owen secretaries, and does the cooking. (He cooks simply awful messes, but they always go out and eat later anyway, so it doesn't really matter, and it helps him keep his self-respect.) When Stephanie Gaylord (Laraine Day) comes to work for Owen, it develops that that gentleman's met his Waterloo. Laraine's a principled kid, and all she wants is to write a book eventually, and make her reputation. Because of his writing, she'd always harbored the utmost admiration for Owen, but after discovering his haphazard way of life—he drinks and also gambles—she walks out in a huff. Owen, who's fallen in love with her, goes and snatches her right out of the arms of Rudy Vallee (a bookstore tycoon she used to work for) and marries her. They go away together. He writes his book. She writes hers. The publisher turns his down (it's a jealous publisher; Owen once gave his wife a mink coat); a different publisher thinks hers is terrific. So there's a problem. She doesn't want to be a success if he's not. He thinks his failure's all her fault. And darned if he doesn't start hiring more secretaries. She tries to find him fat ones. He likes 'em lean. The landlady keeps coming around to ask for the rent, and eventually Ronnie marries her. It's typical bedroom comedy, and though it's not as funny as, say, the delightful Mr. and Mrs. Smith of Carole Lombard and Bob Montgomery, it certainly has its moments. Laraine Day, incidentally, was given the Rita Hayworth treatment. Hair cut very short, and bleached almost white. Sort of like Harpo Marx, but prettier.—United Artists.

SEALED VERDICT

This picture poses a timely ethical question. Unfortunately, it's posed in occasionally confused fashion, due to the fact that Paramount's tried to force what was a firm, fully-packed novel into 83 minutes of movie. We find Ray Milland, an American officer in charge of prosecuting Nazi war criminals abroad, with a problem on his hands. There's this General Otto Steigman (John Hoyt). A Nazi, admittedly. Ray prosecutes him successfully, with the aid of eyewitness testimony from a strange little addled victim named Rodal (Norbert Schiller) who has somehow survived the Nazi terror. The only witness for Steigman is a beautiful French expatriate, Themis De Lisle (Florence Marly), whose relationship with the general is nothing if not questionable. But once he's got Steigman safely convicted, Milland starts to hear rumors. People congratulate him for "pulling one off," tell him he's got the "gift of gab." He gradually discovers that his witness, Rodal, isn't trustworthy, because he's half-crazed with longing for revenge. Milland doesn't like this. He's in Europe as an upholder of American justice. Even though the stories of Steigman's crimes against humanity are legendary, until Milland has concrete proof of these stories in his hand, Steigman must not die. If Rodal's word is worthless, other proof must be found. American Military Government doesn't see it that way. Steigman's obviously guilty, they say. Proof or no proof, he hangs. We can't afford to coddle Nazis. But Milland, stuck with his concept of ideal justice, continues to work doggedly on the case. It grows more complicated. However, if you can keep track of all the tag ends in this movie, you will find it quite absorbing.—Para.

JUNE BRIDE

Funniest line in June Bride is Robert Montgomery's. He wakes up, after sleeping off a magnificent drunk, and finds himself in what seems to be a straw-filled pen. A pig is nestling in his neck. Montgomery screws his eyes shut. "I've been thrown away," 9 out of 10 Screen Stars are Lux Girls!

"A Lux Girl? Yes indeed!"

says lovely Rita Hayworth

Here's a complexion care that really works! In recent Lux Toilet Soap tests by skin specialists, actually three out of four complexions became lovelier in a short time.

"My Lux Soap facials leave skin softer, smoother," says Rita Hayworth. "I smooth the creamy fragrant lather well in. As I rinse and then pat with a towel to dry, skin takes on fresh new beauty!"

Don't let neglect cheat you of romance. Take Rita Hayworth's tip. See what this beauty care will do for you!

Another fine product of Lever Brothers Company

RITA HAYWORTH

Star of

"THE LOVES OF CARMEN"

in Technicolor

Lux Girls are Lovelier!

Farley Granger's idea of a "Charming Woman"

FARLEY GRANGER, ONE OF THE STARS IN SAMUEL GOLDWYN'S "ENCHANTMENT", AND CATHY O'DONNELL

in Farley Granger's own words:

"When I first saw Cathy O'Donnell, I said, 'She's charming—in every way!' And I noticed her hands particularly—they're so soft, so feminine. Now Cathy tells me she uses Jergens Lotion always." Hollywood Stars use Jergens 7 to 1 over any other hand care!

His Idea?

The Stars know. Their favorite hand care—Jergens Lotion—is more effective today in two ways: It makes your hands feel softer than ever, deliciously smoother. It protects even longer against roughness. Today's Jergens Lotion contains two ingredients many doctors use for skin care. Still only 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax). No oiliness; no sticky feeling. If you care for your hands—use Jergens Lotion!

Used by More Women than Any Other Hand Care in the World

For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use Jergens Lotion

June Bride: Editor Bette Davis hires long-lost love, Robert Montgomery, and the fun starts.

he says. Just a week before, he'd come home from Europe, one of the best-known foreign correspondents in the business, only to be told by his boss that the bottom has fallen out of foreign correspondents, if you'll pardon the expression. "There is a job for you here," the boss says, "but it's as a writer for Linda Gilman—on Home Life." Montgomery's shifty eyes light up. Linda (Bette Davis), now an editor, is none other than the girl he once loved and left, and he's only too pleased to be meeting her again. He thinks she's lovely. What she thinks of him becomes evident the minute he appears in her line of vision. You and I know she still nourishes a passion for him, though she wouldn't admit it for the world. "Three years ago, we had a dinner date," she says coldly. "I'm awfully glad I didn't wait." However, she agrees to hire him (she does need a writer) and the whole staff of Home Life then takes off for Indiana. Home Life's one of those magazines that moves in on some hapless family, reduces the weight of everybody in the place, brings all their clothes up to date, and modernizes their home in a relentless manner. This time, Home Life's going to do a June issue about an Indiana bride, and they've chosen a kid named Jeanne Brinker (Barbara Bates) for their guinea pig. Naturally, this means they massage Mama Brinker (Marjorie Bennett), act patronizing toward Papa Brinker (Tom Tully) and rip all the molding out of the Brinker living-room. Everybody is busy except Montgomery, who's miserable. "There's nothing to write about in a typical family," he says. "Unless typical Mr. Brinker should take typical Mrs. Brinker, and cleave her head open with a typical meat-axe." Before he's through, though, there's plenty to write about. He and Boo (Betty Lynn), another young Brinker, see to that. Seems the Brinker bride really loves her groom's brother. Seems Boo really loves the groom. Seems the cover of Home Life is ruined. Can anything else happen? You bet.—Warners.

STATION WEST

Dick Powell is a versatile young man. Having just (Continued on page 107)

your letters...

LOYAL TO BOB

Dear Editor: In yesterday's paper, I read the awful headlines about Robert Mitchum, and my heart went out to him. Such a fine man can and will overcome this misfortune that could only injure his career, his family, and his popularity.

Anne C. Means, New Orleans, La.

Dear Editor: . . . Mr. Mitchum is an actor with a future. Let's help him get back on the right track. We all need help and loyalty. After all, it's the public's fault that we haven't cleaned up the narcotics racket.

Mrs. R. H. Geilenfeldt, San Diego, Calif.

DISGUSTED WITH HOLLYWOOD

Dear Editor: The Bob Mitchum scandal is the last straw! We movie patrons no longer get to see actors and actresses, but the boys and girls who have the best "bedroom eyes and voices." Yet the movie magazines paint these characters as "sweet, home-loving bodies." Hogwash! No wonder young people today become juvenile delinquents, when their idols are nothing but divorcees and drunken sots.

A former movie fan

(Because of overwhelming public interest in this case, MODERN SCREEN brings you "Bob Mitchum's Own Story," on page 30 of this issue—Editor)

WE'RE A HEART-WARMER

Dear Editor: Your October story, "It's Not a Dream, Darling," about Cornel Wilde and Pat Knight, was one of the most heart-warming and wonderful articles I've ever read.

Terry Robertson, Richmond Hill, New York

TOXTON ANTI-TOXTON

Dear Editor: In the November issue, you identified the girl with Peter Lawford as "Susan Perry, formerly Candy Toxin." Maybe you should have your caption writers inoculated against stupid errors like that. The lady's name was Toxton, as appeared later on in your story.

Irma Nesselrode, St. Louis, Mo.

(We bow our heads in shame, Irma, but in the confusion of Candy's becoming Susan Perry, Rita Corday's becoming Paule Crosset, and Isabelita changing her name to Lita Baron and then to Mrs. Rory Calhoun, we're not sure we can spell our own name anymore—Editor)

YES, I'M JEANNIE. Together, Fred and I turned out songs . . . about love and moonbeams. To annoy me he sometimes whistled "Jeannie with the Light Brown Hair". . . for my brown hair was nothing to dream about. It was just dingy-looking and unruly.

BACKSTAGE ONE NIGHT, my chum Madge told me the secret of her gorgeous hair. "Lustre-Creme Shampoo," she said. "My hairdresser uses it. It's not a soap, nor a liquid, but a new cream shampoo with lanolin. Use it at home, too, and keep your hair lovely!"

Jeannie with the dull wild hair... now a lovely "LUSTRE-CREME" Girl

WHEN I GAILY ARRIVED at our studio next day, Fred whistled in amazement. "Hold it, Gorgeous!" he cried. "Your hair! It's wonderful! If Stephen Foster could write lyrics about lovely brown hair, so can I. What rhymes with glisten, glamour, sheen, and pays off with lovely dream girl?" Thanks to Lustre-Creme Shampoo, I rated a love song after all.

YOU, TOO . . . can have soft, gleaming, glamorous hair with magical Lustre-Creme Shampoo. Created by Kay Daumit, to glamorize hair with new 3-way loveliness:

1. Fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff
2. Glistening with sheen
3. Soft, easy to manage

Lustre-Creme is a blend of secret ingredients—plus gentle lanolin, akin to the oils in a healthy scalp. Lathers richly in hard or soft water. No special rinse needed. Try Lustre-Creme Shampoo! Be a lovely "Lustre-Creme" Girl. 4-oz. jar $1.00; smaller sizes in jars or tubes, 49¢ and 25¢. At all cosmetic counters. Try it today!

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor) 919 N. Mich. Ave., Chicago, Ill.

For Soft Gleaming Glamorous Hair

Whether you prefer the TUBE or the JAR, you'll prefer LUSTRE-CREME SHAMPOO

DIAMONDS BY JOHN RUBEL

Fabulous

NAIL BRILLIANCE BY CUTEX only 25¢

Luxury-loving women are finding so many glamour-extras in new Nail Brilliance! You will, too, and all for a low 25¢!*

Perfume-type bottle, steady based, with beautifully balanced artist-type brush. Dream-come-true wear. Defies peeling or chipping. Wonderful purity. Free from all irritating substances. Even women whose sensitive skins are allergic to other polishes can use Nail Brilliance with perfect safety. Ten fashion-show shades that stay dazzling, never turn dull.

Try Color-keyed Cutex Lipsticks, too—created to blend perfectly with each Nail Brilliance shade. So creamy! So clinging! Large size, 49¢.*

*PLUS TAX

An open letter to Elizabeth Taylor

why won't they let you grow up?

Dear Miss Taylor:

It's really too bad, the way they're trying to keep you from growing up.

Just the other day you revealed, quite simply and openly, that you had more than a passing interest in Lieutenant Glenn Davis, the ex-West Pointer of All-America football fame. You let it be known that you were most unhappy that you and he would be separated while he was on duty in Korea. You said you would be wearing his pin all that time.

What could be more natural for a 17-year-old girl? How could you have been more honest—with yourself and your public?

Yet a good many columnists at once began clucking their tongues fondly but sadly and in general expressing sorrow or shock over the fact that you're no longer a child.

This sort of thing seems to us quite ridiculous. It's a form of pressure that has the effect, however unintentionally, of making normal girlhood and young womanhood difficult for fine people like you and Jane Powell and Peggy Ann Garner. It penalizes you in a way, for the public interest and support which you have earned—making the widespread good-will that is felt for you into a thing that might be bad for you personally.

You'll come through all this in fine manner, we have no doubt at all—but why on earth must things be made tough for you? Why can't you be given the opportunity to develop naturally through normal experiences, exactly like any other girl of your own age?

Young love, we keep remembering, is kind of wonderful. It's certainly not incredible, extraordinary or reprehensible. But most of us older folks seem to have forgotten the facts of life.

Don't mind that, though, Elizabeth. It's your life you're leading. Let's hope people will let you lead it simply and sanely. You'll certainly have all our best wishes while you do.

Wade H. Nichols

EDITOR

INGRID BERGMAN TALKS

In one of the most intimate portraits of Ingrid Bergman ever given, a famous journalist looks behind the myths and mysteries to discover a truly remarkable woman . . .

by Hedda Hopper

In one of their rare Hollywood public appearances, Ingrid and her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, dine at the Chanteclair. Ingrid is now in England where she's completing Under Capricorn.

■ "Of course, Hedda," laughed Ingrid Bergman, "there are some things I simply won't talk about: For instance—how I keep my husband's affection and whether I sleep with a nightgown on or off!"

"You're safe," I assured her. "I don't give a hoot."

"Good," smiled the Divine Swede. "I don't think you'll find me so uncooperative."

"I never have," I told her—and I meant it. I've become pretty sick and tired, myself, of that "going-Garbo" myth they've tacked onto one of the brightest, sincerest foreign stars who ever hit Hollywood. I've never believed it for a minute and I thought now, scanning Ingrid's friendly face: "How could anyone ever mention those two in the same breath? As stars, yes. As Swedes, sure. But as persons—how very different can you be?"

Across the long, low sofa, Ingrid perched gracefully—welcoming, human and warm. A straw-tone tan made her teen-age complexion even teen-agier. Only a touch of lipstick challenged those rosy cheeks. The greens, reds and grays of her Swedish modern room made Ingrid the lovely (Continued on page 81)

bob mitchum's

Dorathy Mitchum rushed hame after Bab was arrested. This picture was taken immediately fallawing their reunian.

own story!

Only a few hours before his arrest, Bob Mitchum gave Modern Screen the most revealing interview of his career—part of it written by Bob himself. It is a poignant document, a true picture of a man trapped by fame. But although Bob's words are weighted with sadness, they are also filled with hope . . . with courage. It is an amazing story, one you will never forget . . .

by Carl Schroeder

■ It was as though a playwright had a bad dream. In his nightmare, the curtain went up, not on the first act, but at the end of the drama. The critics rushed to the exits, screaming their verdicts without having seen the play. The public, shocked at the headlines, asked, "Can it be?"

The Robert Mitchum story is like that nightmare. It must be told now in reverse, from the headlines to the truth of the matter. And it happens that as a Hollywood reporter who was with the actor just before the curtain came down, I am well qualified to present the re-enactment in the true version which until now has been cloaked in confusion.

The scene is a modest, five-room home on Glen Oak Drive, high in the Hollywood hills. An actor is seated at a desk, scribbling notes in pencil. He is Robert Mitchum . . .

"In eight years we grew so fast we had little time to talk," he writes, in part. "As a result, we discover a beautiful and charming lady of obvious advancement confronted by a comic-strip character who is glued to his background by printer's ink."

Mitchum pauses. He picks up a telegram just received from his wife, Dorothy, who is in the East. It tells him that she will be home in a few days. It tells him more than that: It says this is the end. He knows that he might as well start looking for another house for himself, leaving this one for Dorothy and the two boys. It is to be the final step before their divorce.

Bob winces, thinking of the letter he had written—the last attempt at reconciliation: "Why not leave the children back East for awhile? All this talk is for the birds. Join me in Acapulco for a second honeymoon. . ."

Well, that was that, and he had asked for it. His eyes took in the familiar scene, this living room in which he had so often roughhoused with Josh and Chris, his kids. He was proud of this home. In its simple modesty it was a symbol of the sensible man's Hollywood.

Bob Mitchum returned to the notes he had begun to scribble. He had promised them to me; promised them as an answer to all sorts of rumors and wrong guesses about him that had been showing up in gossip columns.

"It is her misfortune," Bob continued, writing of his wife, Dorothy, "to have reared a monster in her loving keep, and she in resolution turns her head. I have called, but (Continued on page 33)

BOB MITCHUM WROTE THESE REPLIES TO REPORTS OF HIS MARITAL TROUBLES...

For months columnists hinted ot trouble between Bob and Dorothy. Asked to reply to specific gossip items, Bob wrote the comments shown ot right. First reply is to o columnist's report, in 1946, that Bob ond Dorothy had "mended their troubles" and that there would be no divorce "for o long time—if ever." Bob wrote, in port, thot he hopes there will be no divorce—"forever."

"We and two children have mended Their troubles." Like a girl mends stockings — by buying a pair.
Troubled of the heart are Canadian agonies, we observed, for so particularly guarded, they are rare gals highly salable secrets. — Correction (he) frequently hopes there will be no divorce for a long time — for ever."

"Understand things are not going too well at Bob's," a columnist wrote in January, 1948. Bob soid (right) that he learned of the item through a phone call and "my girl cried." For him, it was the "handwriting on the portable lath-and-plaster wall."

This we were informed of thru clearly phone by one deliciously earnest medicaster of the Lexington Avenue, and my girl cried. I was very very tired but my eyes were open wide enough to read the handwriting on the portable lath-and-plaster wall.

Thinking of the gossip item, "Friends feor the Mitchums are writing that unhappy Hollywood ending," Bob remorked he and Dorothy were vacotioning in Delaware ot the time. He was depressed by his own troubles, by the troubles of others. In flight "like a runaway in o swamp" he left Dorothy in Delaware, drove to New York to shake off his mood of depression.

"— and an epitaph to friendship. The weather was bad, as everywhere you looked was trouble, standing in the cold deep puddles — in New York — in Connecticut — in Delaware, the people had troubles, and they sat indoors out of the cold rain and told them to you.
I was much too tired to resist and so escaped into it - like a runaway in a swamp.

In July a columnist wrote, "The Robert Mitchums' explosion is expected to take place in three weeks." "No explosion," wrote Bob. "I have spent eight yeors trying to get this girl olone for a while so that we might discover each other." And he soys mognonimously, "We discover o most beautiful and chorming lody, of obvious advancement, confronted by a comic-strip identity who is glued to his background by printer's ink." (Bob, modest in self-appraisal, sees himself as tied to his past by stories written about him.) "I have called," he says, "but she hos heard the story of Lot's wife. About the only thing I can do now is get the hell out of the comic strip ond walk around to face her. Wish me luck." (Unlike Lot's wife, who became o pillar of solt when she looked back, Dorothy hos already "looked bock"—and has now become Bob's pillor of strength.)

This explosion. I have spent eight years trying to get this girl alone for a while so that we might discover each other. In eight years we grew so fast and we had little time to talk, and depended too fully on psychic sympathy.

As a result we discover a most beautiful and Charming Lady of obvious advancement, confronted by a comic-strip identity who is glued to his background by printer's ink —

I have called, but she has heard the story of Lot's wife. About the only thing I can do now is get the hell out of the comic strip and walk around to face her. Wish me luck.

(Continued from page 31) she has heard the story of Lot's wife. About the only thing I can do now is to get the hell out of the comic strip and walk around to face her. Wish me luck."

Prophetic words, these, for less than 24 hours later the world of Robert Mitchum was to blow up around him. In his ears was to ring the shouting of newsboys: "Actor arrested—Bob Mitchum in jail!" Reporters, policemen, friends, studio workers, his bosses, his fans—all were to see him with cold, impartial eyes, like a medical student peering at a cadaver.

I know, because I felt that way, momentarily, myself. The day before the arrest I had an interview with Bob Mitchum at a table in the side room at Lucey's Restaurant. We didn't waste time. I placed a neat pile of clippings from gossip columns in front of Bob. "You'd better look at these," I suggested, "and answer them one way or another."

He glanced through the clippings. "I'll answer them," he said. "I think I ought to. If you don't mind, I'll take them along. Tonight I'll write out everything I can say. You'll have the whole story tomorrow."

"Fair enough," I said.

I knew he wouldn't forget, wouldn't fail on his promise. There have been plenty of stories about Bob Mitchum's "unreliability." I never found him to be that way. On the contrary, he was always open and honest with me. My friendly feeling for Bob and Dorothy dates back to the time when I first met them. Fresh from his first success, Bob admitted candidly that he had only one suit of clothes and $3.56 in his pocket to last until next payday. And he didn't ask for a loan.

Later, when I had a problem in finding a boarding school for my small son, Dorothy was the one who prevented my making the wrong move. My boy and Bob's small fry, Chris, were schoolmates and buddies. The teachers confided that you couldn't ask for a finer lad than that Chris Mitchum. He showed in every inch of him that he'd come from a home with good parents.

For these and other reasons, Bob Mitchum talks perhaps more freely to me than to other reporters. And this day at Lucey's he was the same as always, pulling no punches, never dodging the issue.

What he said was filled with overtones of sardonic wit. Freud has a good deal to say about wit of that cynical and skeptical type. People who indulge in it are forever appearing to shatter respect for institutions and truths in which they really believe very deeply. As a result, such people are little understood.

"If anything does happen between Dorothy and me," Bob said, pointing to the clippings, "it may well be the result of these 'stories' as much as anything else. Dorothy is a little nicer than most of us, in the genuine sense of the word. I guess you know that. She's not the type who understands these picturesque distortions that pass for journalism."

He paused, then added, "You know, the telephone is an instrument of the Devil. It shouldn't have been invented. It's so intimate, yet neither side can really tell what's going on.

"For instance, I leave the studio. I've got a couple of things to think about. I meet friends. It's harmless, but we get to talking. I think maybe I'd better call home and say I'm going to be delayed. So I call. Dorothy answers. I explain. It should be simple, but it's not. I can tell by the sound of her voice that she's hurt.

"How am I to know that she's been reading about us somewhere? There's been one line in a column—something about things not going too well domestically with us. Someone has called Dorothy and read it to her over the telephone. But this I don't know.

"So I go home. Dorothy doesn't mention the story until hours later. She has great pride and sensitivity. Afterwards, I feel that if I hadn't made that telephone call I wouldn't have upset her."

I pointed out that every actor goes through something like this. It's an occupational hazard.

"Yeah," Bob said, "but the (Continued on page 92)

Seized with Bob Mitchum were dancer Vicki Evans (left) and actress Lila Leeds. They are shown awaiting a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus granted when they were arrested.

Jerry Geisler (left), famous Los Angeles attorney, was chosen to defend Mitchum against narcotics charge emerging from Bob's arrest during an alleged Hollywood marijuana party.

photos by marty crail

When you think of Grable you think of glamor—but I don't. I think of my daughter sorting the laundry, I think how she loves to be—

HARRY'S GIRL

by Lillian Grable

■ Yes, she's Harry's girl. And that's the secret of Betty's happiness. If you're a woman in love with your husband, you'll know right off what I mean. Betty always wanted what any normal girl wants—home, husband, kids—and she knew what she wanted. Harry and her home come first, no two ways about it.

Soon after her marriage she said to me: "Mother, if I ever had to choose between marriage and career, I wouldn't stop to think twice. Without the career, life could still be good. Without Harry—it couldn't."

But I'm willing to lay ten to one that, with Betty and Harry, the question has never come up. I've never heard them discuss it. Betty's never mentioned it to me, and we're pretty close. And if I know my son-in-law, his attitude would have been: if Betty wants to work, okay; if she doesn't, okay.

Of course, you have to have two like them to swing it—Betty, who's never been the kind that's eaten with ambition, and Harry, who's an angel—both of them crazier about each other than the day they married.

But let's keep things straight. Don't get the idea that her career doesn't matter to Betty, because you'd be getting the wrong idea. She loves it. She loves making pictures that people enjoy seeing. She loves being up there among the top ten. She was proud of her picture on a summer cover of Time—who wouldn't be?

And she makes a heck of a lot of money. Reports last year had her and Harry making half a million between them. (Continued on page 104)

Harry and Betty arrange ta have their vacatians tagether—then they relax at Del Mar. This fall, when Harry's an taur, Betty will da The Beautiful Blonde From Bashful Bend.

One of the James' mutual interests is harses. Last seasan three af their awn raced at Del Mar. They gave each other broad mares as birthday gifts, now have faur new colts an the ranch.

cheesehead and company

by reba and bonnie churchill

This is about the weekend when Reba and Bonnie fell in love with young Cheesehead, and with Cheesehead's Mom and Pop—the Glenn Fords . . .

■ The Glenn Fords' hospitality would charm even a potentate. We know, since we spent a weekend at their home.

One quiet afternoon at Columbia Studios, we were gathering material for our newspaper column and stopped by to chat with Glenn on the set of Mr. Soft Touch. Glenn is always good copy.

We found him leaning back in his canvas chair. Legs propped against a sound box. Brown hat pushed over his face.

"A picture of utter contentment," we heckled and waited in vain for some response from beneath the hat.

We tried again. "Some movie stars have nothing to do but loaf."

The hat crept up a few inches.

We pursued. "And they call this work!"

That did it. The hat was pushed back revealing two amused hazel eyes.

Glenn was in a mellow mood. Don't know how we got on the subject, but the talk drifted to hobbies and home life.

"How do you spend your free time?" we inquired nosily.

"If you really want to know, why don't you come up and spend the weekend with us?"

The next Saturday we nursed our car up the steep hill, passed Pickfair, and turned into the Fords' swinging driveway.

Their house is a sunny brick affair that sprawls over two wooded acres in Beverly Hills. We walked up the rose-lined path and rang the bell. (Continued on next page)

photos by bert parry and bob beerman

Mrs. Ford (Eleanor Powell) leods Rebo and Bonnie to the guest room—actually a suite. Eleonor plons to retire soon ond devote herself to domesticity.

Rebo finds Glenn's o demon with o bodminton rocket. Ellie ond Bonnie wotch. Glenn's regulor opponents ore Bill Holden, Bill Wyler, Mork Stevens.

Ellie's brand of hospitality includes bedside service. Vanilla malteds for Bonnie and Reba are delivered in persan. Ellie not only runs her ten room house but takes weekly swimming and dancing lessans to keep fit!

Pork sausages and hot coffee cake were served at Sunday breakfast an the patio. Patio opens off the living room and overlooks a landscaped garden. Tall pines and eucalyptus trees separate Fords from neighbors.

Reba and Bonnie wade with Peter (or "Cheesehead") in his pool. Not much larger than a goldfish bawl, the pool's depth is less than three feet. Glenn (of Mr. Soft Touch) plans ta let it grow with Cheesehead.

Upstairs in Glenn's bedroom-study are Pete's electric trains, sun lamps, an ice-cream bar and the Fords' combined collection of records—8,000. Roam also halds a steam cabinet which Pete calls "The Flying Freckle."

cheesehead and company

(Continued from preceding page) And then a ferocious-looking German Shepherd nosed around the corner of the house. Took a few sniffs and disappeared. We began breathing again.

The door opened and there stood Glenn and Eleanor Ford (who used to be Eleanor Powell), wearing matching smiles. There was a chorus of hello's as Glenn reached for our bags and ushered us into the circular entry hall.

This is an antique collector's delight. On one side of the door is a large ivory chest which rests on the brows of two carved cupids. On the other side, is a caramel-colored marble table with a bowl of freshly-cut roses from the garden. And there's Gus—an imposing marble head mounted on a three-foot pedestal.

"An ancestor?"

"Nope," replied Glenn. "He's an ancient Roman ruler named Augustus. Gus for short. Came with the house. Confidentially, we're keeping him for a spare hatrack."

"And also because you can't move him," chided Ellie. "Come along, girls, and I'll show you your room."

As we started up the stairs we caught sight of a three-year-old peeking over the railing above. He caught sight of us, too.

While Ellie was on tour, Glenn filled the music room with a pool table. Director W. Wyler taught him the game. Here, Glenn teaches Bonnie and Reba.

"Hiya, Cheesehead!" Glenn greeted him.

"'Lo, Daddy," replied Peter Newton Ford gravely. "Are these them?"

"Yes, dear," said Ellie as we reached the second story. "Come say hello."

He advanced shyly and took our hands in turn. With us, it was a case of love at first sight.

Peter—or Cheesehead, as Glenn fondly calls him half the time—led the way to the guest room. Actually, it was a suite, with mirrored powder-room, bath and bedroom—all in old rose. Its pink quilted walls, satin coverlets, and thick carpets were as fluffy as cotton candy.

"Come on down to the Chinese room when you're unpacked," Glenn called cheerily from downstairs.

The Chinese room with its red lacquered walls and carved gold Oriental figures used to be the music room. But while Ellie was on a four-months' dance tour, Glenn gave the room a new look by installing a pool table.

If you hold your breath you can slide between the table and the built-in couches. By a bit of manipulating you can line up your shot (that Ford has us talking like professionals), and if you hold your cue stick just so, you can play without knocking over a lamp. (Well, maybe we're just clumsy at the game.)

Our shot was thrown off-balance by Peter tapping the end of our stick.

"Come upstairs and see my airplane."

"Airplane?" we double-taked.

Glenn explained, "Pete thinks my steam cabinet is an airplane."

"The Flying Freckle," which is Pete's name for the (Continued on page 74)

RITA'S ROYAL ROMANCE

A holiday in Europe . . .
a romance with a Prince . . . the French press called it love, but was it? Only Rita Hayworth knows . . .

BY K. ROBY EUNSON

Parisians were fascinated by Rita's adventures on the French Riviera. Prince Ali Khan (abave) took first place among her numeraus admirers.

In London, Rita's film, Down To Earth, opened at the Goumont Theater. Proceeds went to the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Assaciotion. Graup-captain Douglos Bader was Rito's escort.

The French press ployed up Rita as a dashing American movie star, and gave small spoce to her more dignified public appeorances—as here, with Michel Traubetzkay, at Poris opening of Gilda.

■ And now she's back in the United States—the little Cansino girl who flashed like a comet through the diamond-studded skies of European society. Rita's fling has been flung; the dowagers of the Riviera have almost stopped shaking their heads in amazement; there's a silence in Continental society like the calm that follows a hurricane.

But the whispers can still be heard clearly—little moth-like whispers that flutter through the salons of France to gnaw at Rita's reputation.

"That American movie star! My dear, did you see her with the Prince!" (The Prince, of course, is Prince Ali Khan, a gay blade with enough gold in his locker to sink the Queen Mary.)

"Is she going to marry him? How about Orson Welles? Did you see her dance with Alberto Dodero? Is it true that Rita . . . ?"

Well, what is the truth about Rita's three-month holiday in Europe? Were the foreign press reports correct in their suggestion that the incandescent American movie star leaped from one romance to another—each staged in full view of the public—each more colorful than the last?

It all began quietly enough, this holiday that startled European society. Typical of Rita's slow start was an incident that took place shortly after her arrival in Paris on June 10. Baron Roland de L'Epee was entertaining the diplomatic set at his swank Avenue Foch home, only a stone's throw from the Arc de Triomphe.

"There's Rita Hayworth sitting over there," exclaimed the American secretary from the embassy. "I'd recognize her anywhere."

"Jove," said the British secretary, adjusting his pince-nez, "awfully quiet sort, what?"

This party was backdrop for Rita's first public appearance in Paris. She couldn't have been more inconspicuous—and Rita wanted it that way. Those who observed her at the Baron L'Epee's party were conscious of her tremendous charm and also of her unwillingness to dominate the affair, as she might easily have done.

She had arrived in Paris a day or so before and registered at the Hotel Lancaster in Rue de Berri, just off the Champs Elysees. Although the Lancaster is anything but swank, it is comfortable and often draws visiting notables because of a management policy that guarantees protection from inquiring reporters. Miss Hayworth and her secretary put up at the Lancaster and were left pretty much alone.

But her second public appearance was at the glamorous carnival, Grande Nuit de Paris, where she shared billing with Ingrid Bergman, Charles Boyer, Edward G. Robinson, and an antiquated elephant named Mary. Miss Hayworth wore a white evening gown, draped in such a manner that it drew a good round of "ooohhs" and "aaahhs" from the crowd perched in the shadows of the spotlighted Eiffel Tower.

Again, Miss Hayworth seemed subdued in manner. "She has just finished working her heart (Continued on page 101)

thanks for the memories

The Thanksgiving when he wept, a fight ending in disgrace—things like these Greg remembers with gratitude

By GEORGE BENJAMIN

■ You feel sure that Gregory Peck must be one of those depressive personalities for which psychiatrists have hyphenated names when you first hear the kind of experiences in his past that he chooses to be grateful for around Thanksgiving time.

Events like a memorable punch in the snoot, an attack on him by three street toughs, an early Thanksgiving that started out to be the lonesomest day of his life—these are what he loves to dwell over fondly. The pleasant things that have happened to him he seems to consider as strictly secondary. He doesn't even mention the time he was signed for Hollywood, for instance. To him a much more significant day was the one at college when he came to the conclusion that he had wasted three years taking the wrong course.

And then, when this causes you to mull over your hard luck in happening to be talking to Gregory just when he is having a mental breakdown—he proves he is right! He has unerringly picked the incidents in his life that either helped mould him into the man he is, or turned him directly onto the path he had to follow to get where he is today.

Take that black morning at the University of California when Gregory decided that he was barking up the wrong career—that he didn't want to settle down in life as a teacher of English literature after all. That had been his first ambition. He had expressed it to his father thus: (Continued on page 79)

photos by bert parry

Rory gave Lita the ring for her birthday. They were quietly wed August 29. Rory's next is When a Man's a Man.

MY ONE AND ONLY

Only now does
Lita know how much Rory meant it when he said, "I love you" . . . how much she wanted him to mean it . . .

by Lita Baron Calhoun
as told to Louis Pollock

■ I always thought that if a man ever told me he loved me the first time we met, I would burst out laughing. Rory Calhoun told me that the first time we ever talked and I didn't laugh. I sat there just looking at him. If I said anything at that moment I don't remember it.

I know partly what I was thinking. I was thinking that it might happen like that in Chicago or Upper Sandusky or Temple, Texas, or maybe in the movies—but not in the place where they make the movies; not in Hollywood. And, finally, not knowing what else to do, I decided I had better start kidding.

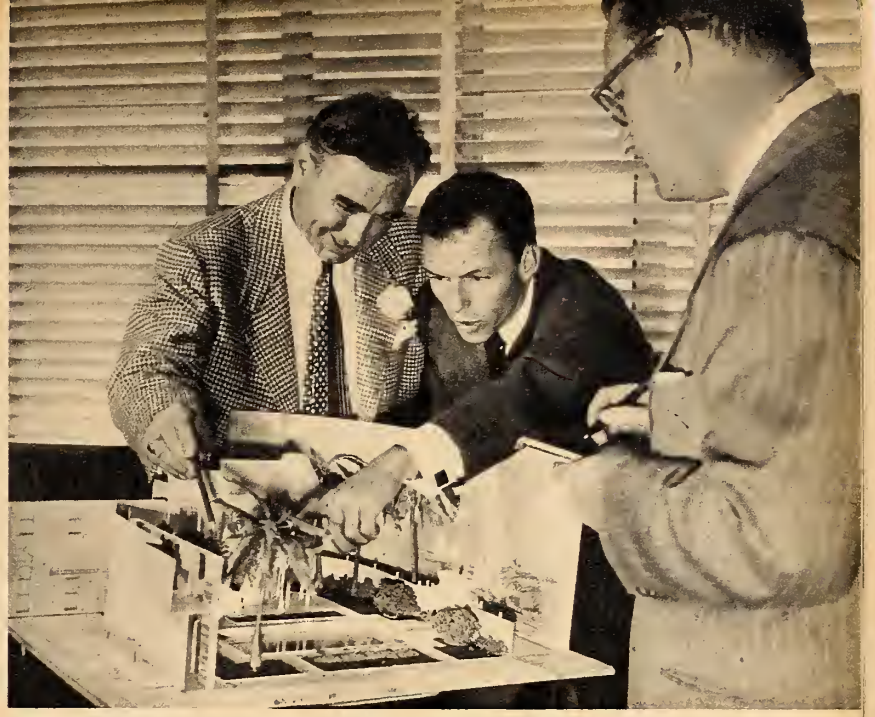
Rory kidded back. But, as we know now, we were only kidding ourselves. Rory meant it so much, and I wanted him to mean it so much. . . .

It didn't happen the first time we saw each other. It happened one night last January when, as Isabelita—as I was then known professionally—I was singing at the Mocambo. I saw him enter and take a table close to the orchestra. I felt that he was watching me. He says I never looked back at him, but I did; out of the tiniest corner of my eyes I saw him all the time.

When that evening passed and we didn't meet I was quite let down. But when other nights came, and Rory along with them, sitting again and watching again; then I felt something exciting growing within me and from then on the other patrons should have started kicking—because as far as I was concerned, I was singing just for Rory Calhoun.

I sang to Rory Calhoun, whom I didn't know, and it was as if I were talking to him. I wanted to tell him things about me . . . of a little girl who was only four (Continued on page 89)

artanis knarf



"I know him backwards"

by bobby burns

Fronk's manoger, Bobby Burns, keeps him from promising to be in three places at once. Here they're on their way to o studio conference. As usuol, Fronk rushes ahead.

They met in 1939, when both worked for T. Dorsey. Bobby joined Frank's stoff ofter his Army dischorge. He's o favorite with Noncy, Jr. Above they confer with Busby Berkeley on Take Me Out To The Ball Game.

What I can't tell you about Sinatra!
Those jokes he played on Dorsey... the way he met Bing... that time we flew his crate to NY and stopped for malteds...

All I know about planes is that I like trains. But Frank Sinatra—I'm sort of his manager—got a new airplane not long ago and he loves it. It's a Beechcraft Bonanza, whatever that is, and it's taken ten years off my life already. Frank bought it to commute between Palm Springs and Hollywood.

Nancy was a little dubious. "You aren't going to fly it yourself, Frank?"

"Me? Heck, no! I'm just taking lessons. Bob Lee is the pilot and I'll be co-pilot, and I'll make Burns navigator."

"Not me!" I said. "I couldn't navigate a bull across a cow pasture."

"Aw, it's easy. You'll catch on quick."

Nancy really worried, though, when Frank decided to make a trip to New York in the plane, with Bob Lee and me.

"Why can't you take a regular airline, like everyone else?"

Frank looked at her reprovingly. "What about Lindbergh? Where would the world be today if he'd taken a regular airline?"

Nancy gave up. When Frank makes up his mind about something he is a determined type.

They said, "Okay, you're the navigator, Burns," and handed me what looked like an Esso road map. I was navigator.

That is a trip which will be long remembered, at least by me. And by George Evans, Frank's publicity man, who was waiting for us in New York. We took our time. None of that Howard Hughes nonsense for us. We left Palm Springs at six-thirty and by the time we got to Oklahoma City, we said nuts to all this flying, what we wanted was eight hours' sleep. Which we had plus steak and spaghetti.

We got started again, but every now and then we'd have to make a landing because Frank would want a malted. Honest. I called Evans from St. Louis, in case he might be wondering what had happened to us. He was. His language was terrible and he (Continued on page 96)

mrs. briskin's dream house

Betty's house was built with joy and a few quiet tears.
Betty's house is warm and friendly—like her heart.

By MARVA PETERSON

Betty and Ted da their everyday living in the library-bar, equipped with televisian, bar counter, baaks, and small tables far informal dining.

Guest house is on English-type cottage, set in the gorden. Here the Briskins hold poker porties without disturbing kids. Cock-fight chair, left of fireploce, wos made by George Montgomery.

Betty told decorotor Roy Moyer, "I wont o coffee toble in the living room that I can put my feet on." So Roy designed a combination ottoman-table. Fireside choirs are built for two.

■ Two years ago when Betty Hutton was pregnant for the first time, she called in a drove of carpenters to add a nursery to her house.

When the room was near completion, one of the workmen stepped back and inspected his handiwork. "You know," he said thoughtfully, "this is really going to be a beautiful nursery."

He looked at Betty, at her well-tailored maternity dress, at her finely tooled shoes. "I guess," he said, "you must've had a nursery almost as nice."

"Cripes, man!" Betty exclaimed. "I was raised in a clothes-basket!"

Betty Hutton's early youth, as you probably know, was scarcely a period of gracious living. She spent her adolescence singing in night clubs, living in furnished rooms, traveling from one scrubby town to another. You might imagine that now she's established in well-to-do domesticity, she's gone all out to make up for those drab beginnings.

But her establishment isn't like that at all. There are no eye-blinding color schemes, no rococo decor, no too-elaborate furnishings—just a house, lively, pleasant, completely livable, a house transformed by the personality of the four Briskins into a happy home.

Betty bought this low, rambling, California ranch house when she was single. She bought it from Ruth Huntington, whose grandfather had founded the Southern Pacific Railroad. It was a small house, with pool, patio, and one guest room—an ideal set-up for a bachelor girl. And that was Betty's lot in life back in 1945.

A few weeks after she purchased the house, Betty left Hollywood on an eight-week USO tour. Before leaving, she discussed the interior decorating with Ray Moyer. Ray had been the set decorator on such pictures as Lady in the Dark, Love Letters, Stork Club and Dream Girl. He had also done Betty's studio dressing-room, and she had frequently promised him, "If I ever buy a house, you're going to decorate it."

Just before she boarded the train, after going over final plans for the house with him for hours. Betty gave Ray one last request. "I want a coffee table in front of the fireplace," she said, "that I can put my feet on." Moyer designed a combination table and ottoman, and it turned out to be exactly what Betty had in mind.

Unfortunately, Moyer wasn't clairvoyant enough to know what Betty had in her heart. On September 2nd, 1945, he found out. He received the following wire: GETTING MARRIED STOP FIX OUT OF THIS WORLD ROOM FOR TED STOP ARRIVE SEPTEMBER 20 LOVE BETTY.

Moyer says he almost blacked out when he read the telegram. "After all," he explains, "there I was working on a home for a single girl, with all my plans drawn accordingly. I was having a tough enough time as it was, what with shortages in everything. And then that telegram came, giving me 18 days to re-do the place for a man and wife." The memory still unsteadies him.

Luckily, Moyer had had a good deal of movie experience in building castles overnight, so he knew what to do. He feverishly converted the (Continued on next page)

by bob beerman and bert parry

mrs. briskin's dream house

Lindsay's and Candy's closets (in hollway just outside the nursery) look like disploy cobinets in children's store. Gloss doors ore intended to encourage neotness in Betty's two girls.

Mom Briskin feeds Condy in the nursery. Mother Goose folk were pointed on walls by o Disney ortist. Lindsoy's crib is modeled after Betty's bed; oll the furniture is scoled down to kids' size.

guest room, originally planned in demure blue and white, into a man's virile setting of chartreuse and brown with leather accessories. Breathing heavily, he finished the house two short hours before Betty and Ted Briskin made their appearance.

Moyer met them at the front door. He asked them to leave their luggage in the foyer on the shaggy chartreuse carpet and to "please follow me."

The first stop on the conducted tour was the dining room. It's small but well-mirrored—which, of course, always creates the illusion of size. The furniture is white and upholstered in yellow shag. The table, made of glass with an antique mirror center, is a copy of one used in Stork Club. Betty fell in love with the original and insisted that Ray have a duplicate made. There's a silver lazy susan, a present from the studio, and a corner niche agleam with much of the Briskins' wedding silver.

The Briskins don't use the dining room very often. For large parties, they have a pork or beef barbecue outside; and when they just have another couple—say Sue and Alan Ladd—in for dinner, they usually relax up in the library-bar, munching in front of the fireplace.

The decor of this library-bar probably best exemplifies the Briskins' simple, lively tastes. It's green, yellow-striped, and touched with hot pink, Betty's favorite color. Here are books, a television set (a birthday present from Ted when she was too expectant to go to ball games), a telephone. It also contains bound copies of all the Hutton movie scripts, a magazine award to Betty for being the most promising actress of 1944, and Gizmo, a funny figure of a Marine in battle dress, posed like an Oscar. This was presented to Betty for her performance in The Miracle of Morgan's Creek by Leatherneck, the Marines' magazine. The room looks small but it's got a lot of seating space. In addition to the three easy chairs and bar stools, it has striped benches along one wall.

The living room is a rhapsody in gray-green walls and raspberry-red upholstery. The two dominant features are the white concert-grand piano and the pastel portrait of Betty which hangs above it. The portrait was painted by Helen Carlton in 1942. The furniture is out-sized, with the sofa seating six quite easily and the two chairs on either side of the fireplace seating two each. In between is that ottoman-coffee table, Betty's favorite piece.

Ted Briskin's room is a prime example of remodeling ingenuity—made necessary when Ted gave up his original room so it could be turned into the aforementioned nursery. His present one was once nothing but a patio between the library and Betty's bedroom. It's an oak-paneled job, distinctly masculine, with a desk and desk chair done in green leather, other furniture of bleached wood, and a bedspread and draperies of full-bodied yellow.

Betty's bedroom is the room that made her cry when designer Moyer first led her into it. "Why the tears?" Ray asked on that memorable day. "Is it that bad?"

"No, no!" Betty sobbed. "It's—it's so beautiful I've just got to cry."

It's beautiful, all right. The wallpaper is blue and streaked with a feathery white figure. The rug is blue and the curtains, made of fine white (Continued on page 103)

Large windows take up a complete wall of the spacious living room. Couch seats six comfortably, and the white grand piano (extreme left) is concert size. To contrast with massive furniture are warm color tones of grey-green, soft red and muted yellow. Although here they are only entertaining each other, Betty and Ted can—and frequently do—hold big parties in this room

The dining room is "spun sunlight"—with upholstery and rug done in bold yellow. Illusion of space is created by mirrors. The table is a replica of one used in Betty's Stork Club.

Betty cried when she saw her bedroom for the first time—"so delicate and beautiful." Colors are pink, blue and white. Loudspeaker at night table picks up all sounds in the nursery.

Getting ready for rodeo time requires lots of work. When Trigger slows down Roy plans to replace him with Trigger, Jr. (above).

■ Before setting out on the third annual tour with their World's Championship Rodeo, Roy Rogers and Dale Evans spent three weeks putting their educated equines, Trigger and Pal, through a brisk refresher course in horse tricks. As a further warm-up, Roy and Dale appeared as guest stars at the annual Sheriff's Rodeo at the Los Angeles Coliseum—where Ann Sheridan presided as Queen (yep, Annie rode a horse) and Marshals Jack Carson and Dennis Morgan led the opening parade.

Soon after this jumbo charity event, Roy and Dale and Trigger and Pal went that-a-way with their own show, opening in Philadelphia and winding up in Chicago a couple of weeks ago following numerous stands in Midwestern cities. The Rogers rodeo is one of the two biggest in existence, the other being that owned and operated by a young feller named Gene Autry—which, as it happens, is also billed as the World's Championship Rodeo. (Seems that's general usage.)

Lots of other rodeos are entertaining as all get out to those who know the finer points of bulldozin', bronco-bustin' and the other frontier specialties—yet make the ordinary spectator right restless after the first unrelieved half hour. The Rogers show is different. Cowboys do try to out-perform each other to win various World's Championships, as decided by points accumulated by the end of the tour. But sandwiched in between the Wild West athletics are trained dogs, acrobats, auto-wrecking comedians, and lots of fine music—mainly supplied by Roy and Dale and The Riders of the Purple Sage. Throughout, Roy tells the folks jokes and little confidences.

At the end he rides around the sides of the arena shaking hands with as many as he can. Everybody—and who can blame 'em?—tries to get into this part of the act.

they went that-a-way!

Rodeo time comes every year for Roy and Dale! They give their horses a refresher course, and then take the West on tour.

photos by bert parry and bob beerman

This is Trigger rehearsing his own way of taking a curtain call. The horse is accomplished on the dance floor, too. He waltzes, fox-trots and jitterbugs—even without a band—all Roy has to do is hum a tune.

Dale and Roy put their horses into a driving gallop. Dale, as good a rider as Roy, is mounted on Pal. Their stables are at the N. Hollywood ranch of Hank Randall, Roy's trainer.

Guests at the annual Sheriff's Rodeo in the Los Angeles Coliseum, Roy and Dale sit at attention as the flag goes by. This rodeo was a warm-up for their own show which toured Midwestern cities in October.

Trigger performs for the Coliseum audience—which numbered 105,000. Roy says he won't teach his next horse 52 stunts because he's tired of having the horse act smarter than he!

Is Jimmy Stewart going to marry Myrna Dell? Will Jane Wyman go back to Ronnie? Here's an expert guide to who's likely to marry whom—and if not, why not.

BY JACK WADE

hollywood's "mystery"

THESE ROMANCES MAKE NEWS

About 12 movie couples keep the gossip columnists happily supplied with enough Cupid items to satisfy their readers. Listed below are the most "active" Hollywood romances. Note that sometimes the same name figures in more than one combination.

CARY GRANT	BETSY DRAKE
JAMES STEWART	GLORIA McLEAN MYRNA DELL
CLARK GABLE	IRIS BYNUM DOLLY O'BRIEN ANITA COLBY
RONALD REAGAN	MONICA LEWIS
HOWARD DUFF	AVA GARDNER
PETER LAWFORD	JANE WYMAN
LEW AYRES	JANE WYMAN
VINCENT PRICE	DEANNA DURBIN
BUD FOGELSON	GREER GARSON
BOB NEAL	DIANA LYNN
GREG BAUTZER	JOAN CRAWFORD
DAVID MAY	BEVERLY TYLER

■ It is early of a Sunday morning. Out where the Topanga Canyon road begins its twists and turns over the mountain range there is a roar of motors. . At this hour, shortly after dawn, the Sunday drivers have not yet begun their game of California mayhem, and the road is safe for the two dozen motorcycle fans who whiz back and forth, holding speed tests and trading gab.

Into this scene slides a sleek, squat black car of foreign make, and stops at the side of the road. In it lounges a broad-shouldered man in white T-shirt and white slacks. Seated beside him is a beautiful brunette.

The man is Clark Gable, the girl Iris Bynum.

Motorcycle riders wave as they shoot past. Casually, two or three who know Clark skid up and pause to talk awhile. Not about Hollywood or romance, but about fishing and hunting and high-powered motors. The cycle fans discuss Clark's $7,000 foreign job, want to know if it is really true that he has another car on the way, worth about $13,000. He has, he tells them, but the price rumor is a little high. Custom built, the new car will probably cost about $10,000.

What goes on here?

A few weeks ago, Clark Gable was prowling around the Riviera. Wherever he went he was preceded by a wave of hysterical excitement in the upper-crust social set. To have Clark Gable as a guest was score and point-after-touchdown for any society leader.

Yet here is Clark a few days later, hobnobbing with guys who do good and plenty if they earn over $100 a week. And the girl with him, this Iris Bynum. Who is she?

Well, who is she?

A girl from Texas, that's all. A girl who works in movies sometimes. A girl whose idea of fun is not a tea dansant romances

in the Vanderbilt set, but a lovely creature who collects proposals as the average young lady does autographs.

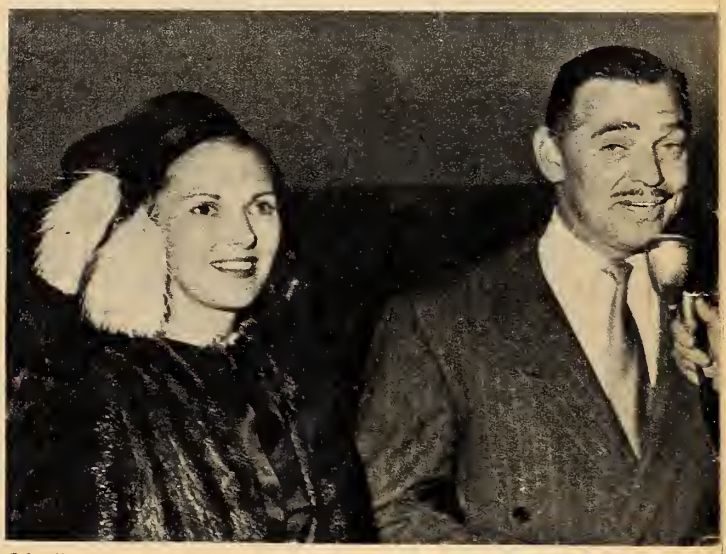
Will Clark Gable marry Iris Bynum? Nope. Will he marry Dolly O'Brien? Hardly. Will he marry Anita (The Face) Colby, with whom he is linked frequently in gossip columns? Of course not.

Of all Hollywood's romantic mysteries, the subject of Clark Gable is more intriguing to social reporters everywhere than is the next chapter of a radio soap opera to the average housewife. And it is a cinch that should Gable ever suffer a lapse from his obvious intentions and wind up at the altar, they'll all be able to claim that they predicted whom he'd marry. At one time or another every writer on the Hollywood scene has announced that Clark is more serious about one girl than another, so in case of such a cataclysmic event, nobody will make a mistake.

What's the answer to Clark Gable's playing the field?

It's simple. Clark Gable has been married a few times. He prefers to stay single.

And in that last simple statement concerning the big man's preference is the answer to so many of the other mystifying romantic situations in Hollywood.



There are some boys and girls out here who run a high fever in their desire to find and lasso a mate. It's a case of believing Nature Boy's advice about the greatest thing you'll ever learn is to love someone and be loved in return.

On the distaff side, Lana Turner has been the prize example of a girl who wants to be married. She is now Mrs. Topping and, as she says, no doubt for keeps. Before all this, Lana was a great problem to herself, her friends and bosses. If Lana met a nice guy and he proposed, the beauty of the idea seemed to intoxicate her.

Lana can well thank Louella (Continued on next page)

Columnists hove been trying to morry off bochelor Jimmy Stewort for yeors. He doted Myrno Dell three whole months before they were discovered ond onother rash of Stewart marrioge rumors broke aut.

Of oll the Hollywood stogs, Goble is the most baffling. Among his fovorite girl friends ore Anito Colby (obove), Iris Bynum ond Dolly O'Brien, but it's doubtful thot any of them will became Mrs. G

Cory Gront is onother octor who prefers single horness. Nevertheless, gossips keep insisting he'll morry his protégée, Betsy Droke. Cary mointains, though, thot his interest in the girl is only professionol.

hollywood's "mystery" romances

Howard Duff was on the verge of marrying before the war —the girl wed someone else. Then Duff met Ava Gardner, who'd made two marital mistakes. They became an item.

Ronald Reagan is reportedly still carrying the torch for Jane Wyman, but they both date others. Ronald's current favorite is Monica Lewis. Here's Jane with Pete Lawford.

Parsons for not having made several mistakes. After a couple of wrong tries, Lana had an understanding with Louella. If she felt that pell-mell urge to rush into marital vows, she'd call Louella. At least twice, she called Louella in the middle of the night to announce that she'd found the right man. And from the depths of wisdom founded on long years as a witness to Hollywood heart problems, Louella advised Lana to just kiss this boy goodnight instead of hopping a plane for Las Vegas.

In the morning Lana would congratulate herself on a narrow escape, call Louella and thank her. Unlike Louella, there are a number of columnists who are incurably romantic. When they see a nice boy going with a nice girl, they do all they can to aid and abet the romance. That's why all of us so frequently read in the newspapers that this boy is on the verge of eloping with this girl. Then, a few days later we read that this boy is going out with some other girl, and we can't figure it out.

There's Jimmy Stewart. Poor Jimmy. Every time his friends, fans and columnist historians think about him they picture him as the perfect husband. It's so bad that Jimmy can tell from the look in anyone's eyes exactly when they're going to ask, "Jimmy, when are you going to find the right girl, settle down and get married?"

Jimmy never has an answer for that, but like Clark Gable he is in favor of staying single. Not that this idea of his will ever stop people from speculating on each and every girl he dates.

For instance, many months ago Sylvia Sidney and Carlton Alsop gave a party. They asked Jimmy and they knew he'd like the charming and talented Myrna Dell. They were right. Jimmy promptly began to date Myrna. They went out together for no less than three months before they were discovered. Now Jimmy wonders whether it was a bright idea to take Myrna to that première. Right then a rash of romantic predictions broke out over every typewriter in town. Some columnists were a little peeved. They'd been saying that Jimmy was going with someone else, but when Jimmy continued to date Myrna they pegged it as a serious thing.

Serious, that is, until he took Gloria McLean to a dinner party. Then Gloria was the secret heart.

For everybody's information, Jimmy is not going to marry Gloria or Myrna, either. He still dates Myrna regularly, except that she's very busy at the moment being Johnny Weissmuller's heavy date in Jungle Jim, and they have fewer dates on the golf course than they used to.

Until now, the barrage of romantic items has not upset the friendship between Myrna and Jimmy. "I guess," Myrna says, "it's because neither of us bothers to read the papers." Then, when confronted with (Continued on page 86)

"kiss the blood off my hands"

■ It goes without saying that lots of good citizens are going to be outraged by the title of Burt Lancaster's first independent production. Matter of fact, the Johnston office, guardian of sensitivities and morals, banned the title for a while and Burt and his Norma Productions associates changed it to something daintier, The Unafraid. Then the Johnston Office reversed the ruling, allowing as how maybe Kiss the Blood Off My Hands was a nice enough name after all. But Burt said thanks, he guessed he'd just leave it as The Unafraid.

Came the first sneak preview—and the enthusiastic customers voted three-to-one for shifting back to the original gory title. So Burt, a firm believer in democracy, gave the people just (Continued on next page)

"kiss the blood off my hands"

(Continued from preceding page) what they wanted.

What's Kiss the Blood Off My Hands all about? Well, lady, it ain't no picnic. The study of a young bully who kills, lies, steals, trafficks in human misery and is finally regenerated by the love of a nice girl just before, presumably, society closes in on him with a noose, this picture is one of the most brutal and shocking ever filmed. Excellently performed and directed, its morbid fascinations will doubtless lead to brisk box-office business. But there are those who will hold that it should never have been released. Some will say that while it does point a moral—that retribution will eventually catch up with evil-doers—yet at the same time it presents as the main character a contemptible rat who, since impersonated by the glamorous Mr. Lancaster, may well be sympathetically looked upon by many impressionable young spectators as an attractively ruthless and possibly model fellow.

Be that as it may, Kiss the Blood Off My Hands is a fine example of tight, expert movie-making. Watching its smooth unwinding, you'd never suspect the troubles they had before getting it into the cans. Most movies run into production problems which delay scenes, cause absolute standstills, and in general foul up the budget. Kiss the Blood Off My Hands had more than its share.

The worst problem was rain, which kept postponing exterior scenes. Next worst was Miss Fontaine's pregnancy, which she announced after the first week's shooting. This, plus a bad cold, kept her out of action for 12 days in all. It was almost impossible to know if she'd be able to work from one day to the next. Another real problem was Burt's beard. He wears a four-day stubble in about 40 percent of the film. Several times, in order to keep things rolling along despite Joan's enforced absences, scheduled scenes in which Burt wears stubble had to be postponed in favor of later scenes in which he appears clean-shaven. This meant he had to shave off and then regrow his beard three times. On each occasion it took a week-end. And another problem was presented by Robert Newton, the fine British character actor who plays Harry. Mr. Newton, a cheery, very pleasant man, found it almost impossible to pace his studying to the American idea of speed. He needed at least two days notice on his scenes, or he simply wouldn't know them.

Despite these and other headaches, director Norman Foster completed shooting only three days over schedule.

Burt's toughest scene was the flogging scene, which was left in the picture only after it had received favorable sneak preview approval. In order to get the feeling of reality into his facial reactions to pain, Burt actually took twelve licks from the cat-o'-nine-tails. Of course, it was only plain belting, instead of the leaded affairs they use in (Continued on page 92)

1. The lurid Kiss the Blood Off My Hands begins when drifter Bill Saunders (Burt Lancaster), a Canadian ex-war prisaner, kills a Landan pub praprietar in a brawl, then flees thraugh the waterfrant streets.

4. Jane and Bill ga ta the races. On the return train, his hat temper leads him ta slug anather passenger. He leaps fram the train, dragging Jane with him. She upbraids him, runs away. He gives chase.

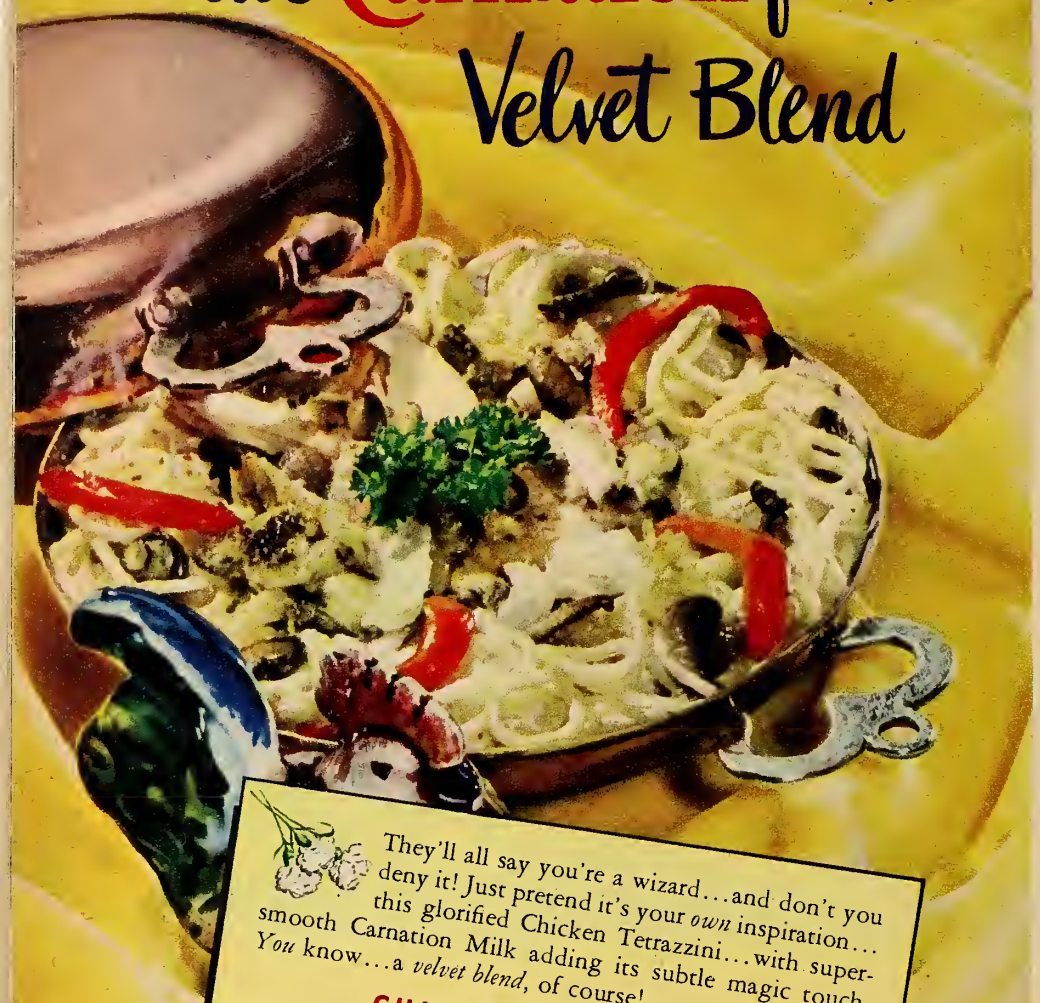
7. Now Harry persuades Bill ta steal a truckload af scarce penicillin and sulfa. But Bill finds Jane in the truck, takes her and drugs ta village stricken with scarlet fever. On return trip, they declare their lave.

2. Bill gains refuge by breaking into the flat where Jane (Joan Fontaine), a clinic nurse, lives alone. He threatens her, says he's done no wrong, lets her go off next morning convinced she won't inform police.

3. Leaving the flat at nightfall, Bill gets funds by robbery, buys new clothes, gets shaved. His appearance changed, he feels sofe, looks up Jane and gets her, against her judgment, to go out with him.

5. While chasing Jane, Bill strikes an interfering policeman, is seized by another, gets six months in jail and 18 lashes. Released, he is approached by Harry (Robert Newton), who witnessed the pub killing.

6. Harry induces him to join him in crime, but after a quarrel over laot from a garage robbery, Bill leaves him. Harry's henchmen try vainly to beat Bill up. Jane gets him a job as clinic truck-driver.



8. That night, Harry goes to Jone's flat to talk her into joining his gong. She refuses, they struggle, she stabs him with scissors. She tells Bill, who removes the still-alive Harry to a hideout. He dies.

9. Bill arranges with smugglers to take him and Jane to the Continent, steals penicillin to pay. He tells Jane Harry was only waunded. They start for the ship. Jane learns the truth, insists they surrender.

Onspiration! use Carnation for a Velvet Blend

They'll all say you're a wizard...and don't you deny it! Just pretend it's your own inspiration... this glorified Chicken Tetrazzini...with super-smooth Carnation Milk adding its subtle magic touch. You know...a velvet blend, of course!

CHICKEN TETRAZZINI

"Glorified"? That's putting it mildly!

½ cup sliced mushrooms
3 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon flour
1 tall can Carnation Milk, undiluted
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon paprika
⅛ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon celery salt
1 cup cooked shredded chicken
1 cup cooked spaghetti cut in 1" pieces
⅓ cup Parmesan cheese

Sauté mushrooms in butter till tender. Add flour and stir till smooth. Add Carnation Milk and seasonings. Cook till thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Blend half of sauce with chicken and remaining half with spaghetti. Bank spaghetti around edges of shallow greased baking dish. Pour chicken mixture into center. Sprinkle with cheese. Brown under broiler. May be garnished with pimiento or chopped parsley. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

WRITE for the "Velvet Blend Book," containing 75 exceptional recipes. It's free. Address Dept. X-12, Carnation Company, Oconomowoc, Wis. or Los Angeles 36, Calif.

LISTEN to the "Contented Hour" from Hollywood every Monday night on your NBC station.

"From Contented Cows"

The voice is little but loud. It's Loretta's Conscience and best friend, an odd character who wiggles in the face of Temptation.

■ Loretta Young was bushed. That day on location in eastern Oregon had been really rugged. If Rachel and the Stranger didn't turn out to be the greatest film since The Birth of a Nation, it wouldn't be her fault. She'd given her All.

As Loretta dragged herself through the door of her little rented house, the prospect of sitting up and opening and closing her jaws the requisite number of times to down dinner was too much to face. She called the maid. "No dinner, Beatrice," she said. "I'm going right to bed."

She fell asleep the minute her head hit the pillow. Then she was dreaming the house was on fire. Firemen, as she recalls it, were on their knees around the bed begging her to arise and jump out the window into the nice net. This she refused to consider until they'd convinced her it was necessary by signing an affidavit stating they couldn't save the bedroom.

What brought on this colorful dream was, no doubt, the ringing of the telephone. A famous novelist had just arrived in town after rushing up from Hollywood. He was calling Loretta. At Loretta's own request, he'd dropped everything to come up and talk to her about his new book in which, from everything Loretta had heard, there was a wonderful role for her.

Now Beatrice, the maid, knew it was important that the novelist get in touch with Loretta. But, sympathetic toward her mistress' exhaustion, she decided to use her own judgment—a judgment which told her it was best for Loretta and best for tomorrow's work that Loretta not be disturbed.

The writer pleaded, argued, finally threatened—and got nowhere. For one night in the life of Loretta Young her career was in the hands of her maid, and Beatrice firmly this little voice went no, no, no!

by Winston Stallings shoved it to one side in favor of the prosaic blessing of a little shut-eye for the weary star.

Next morning, Beatrice had to call Loretta three times before she got up. And then there was such a dither and a bustle to get her off so she wouldn't be late on the set that Beatrice completely forgot to tell her about the novelist's call.

Thus it wasn't until quite some time later, when Loretta had returned to Hollywood, that she discovered that the writer, in a towering passion at not seeing her, had gone back to the film capital figuratively chewing on his manuscript and spitting out whole chapters along the railroad tracks. This she learned when she chanced to encounter him at a Beverly Hills parking lot. He roared his indignation. Loretta apologized deeply, explaining she'd never been told of his call. (In a few moments, naturally, the fellow was beaming and purring.)

Loretta was darned provoked as she started for home. Why on earth hadn't Beatrice called her? She was going to tell that maid a thing or two!

But on the way back she began to think of how she had felt that night in Oregon, how bone-tired she'd been, how refreshed by the uninterrupted sleep. . . .

By the time she got home . . . well, the maid greeted her and Loretta replied with a warm smile. Then, as she started up the stairs, she turned back. "Beatrice," she said, "I want you to know something. I think you're a jewel!"

Loretta Young, you see, has a conscience. A "wiggling, loud" conscience, she calls it. Let her try to act hastily in a situation without thinking things through, and her conscience gets right up and hollers. Let her try to (Continued on page 95)

Loretto wos known os Gretchen Young when she begon her coreer ot 5. Silent stor Colleen Moore suggested the new nome. "Gretch," os her friends still coll her, has been Mrs. Tom Lewis since 1940, hos 3 kids. Rachel and the Stranger is No. 68!

Such a Wrap-turous gift —and it's Dan River fabric!

Wrap her in this Swirl for Christmas—everything from gadabout dress to fireside housecoat in one. Of Dan River's famed Starspun,. cotton just agog with holiday spirits. Completely washable—pre-shrunk, fast color. Dan River Mills, Inc.*

Swirl (one button in back, ties in front), a "Neat 'n Tidy" product by L. Nachman & Sons. Sizes 12 to 20. About $9 at Marshall Field & Company, Chicago; B. Altman & Co., New York; Hudson's, Detroit.

*residual shrinkage not more than 3%

IT'S A DAN RIVER FABRIC

holiday fashions

CONNIE BARTEL, FASHION EDITOR

■ Christmas! The stir and urge of bells; the insistent pungence of evergreens; the white whirl of snowflakes. And—the heady yen to wear your spirit on the outside as well as in, to pin some holly in your hair—to wear something red, something green, to glitter—yes, like a Christmas tree.

To help you glow as brightly as any holiday candle, and to indulge your pressed down and overflowing impulse to gift everyone you know, this month's fashions are aimed both at you and the friends you'll give presents.

The holiday clothes Peggy Cummins wears on the next three pages, for example, we picked for you to wear to all those parties you have scheduled. The ski clothes Ella Raines models we thought you might use as a hint to your mother, your husband, your rich uncle, or anybody else who's wondering what to give you.

As for the glamorous accessories on pages 68 and 70, each one of them can add the final holiday touch to any of your costumes; all of them will make exciting gifts to your friends. Need we remind you that there's not a minute to lose in ordering, if you want your holiday loot by the twenty-fifth?

So let the Christmas spirit enter in, let joy be unconfined, and get out that gift list.

peggy cummins says merry christmas and looks the part

■ Peggy Cummins, currently in Europe making "Autumn Violins" for Alexander Korda, looks gay as a gift-wrap in holiday red, green and gold.

Know a sweater girl? Give her the sweater with the gold yoke. It's all wool, the tinsel won't tarnish. Green, royal blue, black or grey. By Featherknits—$3.98.

Know a girl who goes to lots of formals? Try the gold mesh gloves. They're hand crocheted, won't tarnish. Also in bronze, silver or gun metal. By Aris—$4.98.

Know a bracelet fan? Give her Peggy's gold birdcage bracelet, and watch her swoon. The dangling gold birdcage is filled with colored stones —and it's the sensation of jewel collectors. By Coro—$4.98, plus tax.

All these are at Oppenheim Collins, New York—and other stores, page 72.

for christmas dates

the dress with the

If there was ever a girl born to wear perky, come-and-get-me date clothes, it's Peggy Cummins. At right she wears a dreamy holiday suit in tiny-checked green and black iridescent taffeta. The collar and peplum are fringed in black, the buttons are jet. Also rose or royal checks. Sizes 9-15. By Dorris Varnum for Jonathan Logan, $17.95. At Best & Co., New York; other store information page 72.

follow-me air

Cute Peggy Cummins demonstrates a boy's idea of how a girl should look on a holiday date—gay and a little bit saucy.

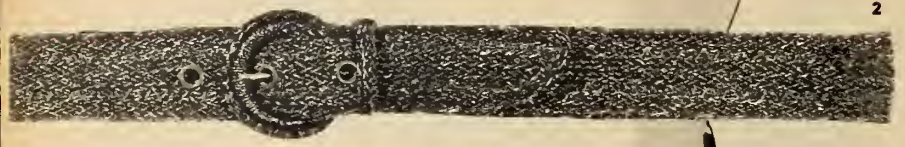
Her pert one-piece dress has a plaid taffeta skirt with apron back—flippant as anything. The black faille bodice buttons to a little collar, tied with plaid. Sizes 7-15. By Nan Scott Jr., $14.95. At John Wanamaker, New York, other stores page 72.

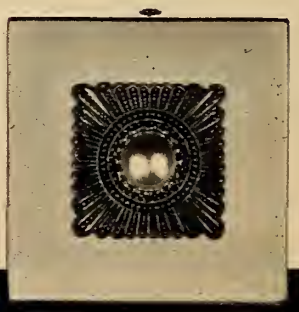
oh say, can you ski?

ella raines

makes like a pro on the slopes — she's that crazy about skiing. You can tell she's expert by the way she wears ski clothes— this St. Moritz-y looking parka, for example. It's natural colored Zelan-treated gabardine with a cotton fleece lining and vicuna fur to snuggle your ears and chin. Sizes 10-20. By White Mountain. $12.95. Arnold Constable, N. Y., other stores page 72.

■ Ella Raines, star of Columbia's forthcoming The Walking Hills, really skis a mean christie whenever she can find some snow. Right, she wears a streamlined cotton gabardine ski suit with zipper front and pockets. Your choice of navy, black, green or brown with white yoke; or black, navy, green, grey with red yoke. Sizes 10-20. By Davis Sportswear. About $25. Arnold Constable, N. Y., other stores page 72.





is she glamorous? give her . . .

1. Nylon lace stockings, very cheesecake! They're Mojud's Fantasy, and they can't run. $2.25.
2. Glowing bronze dress-up belt. It's metallic and sparkles like crazy. By Goroy. $1.
3. Rhinestone and pearl pin and earring set. Gold or silver. By Dano. $1.98* per set.
4. Pearl-centered gold metal compact, squared off in filigree. Looks expensive! By Wadsworth. $3*.
5. Fluffy angora mittens, sprinkled with twinkling colored sequins. By American Knit Gloves. $3.50.
6. White bunny fur scarf and muff trimmed with gold braid. Each $4. Fur headband in white, black or brown, $2. By Douglas of California.
7. Dreamy pearl and gold heart bracelet. By Karu. $2.98*.

For where to buy see pages 72 and 73.
*Plus tax.

BUDGET PRICED LUXURIES

with fancy nylon trim

Blue Swan
LOVELY LINGERIE

Here's a trio of styles that will make an ideal gift . . . individually or as a set. Each is made of luxurious runproof rayon, trimmed with fancy nylon for that added touch of femininity. See them at your favorite store.

In pink, white, blue, black.

No. 8950 — GOWN — $3.98
Sizes 32 to 40

No. 8556 — SLIP — $2.98
Sizes 32 to 44

No. 8532 — PANTY — $1.50
Sizes 4 to 8

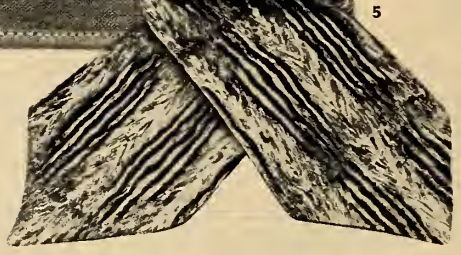
Prices slightly higher in the West

Creators of the Famous Suspants

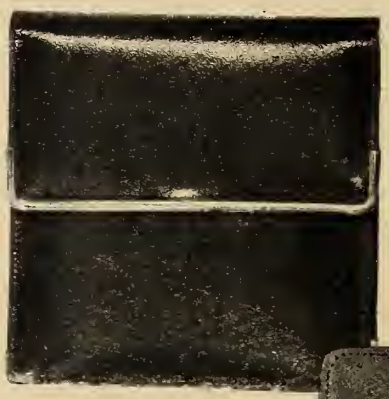
Blue Swan

UNDIES • SLIPS • GOWNS

DIVISION OF McKAY PRODUCTS CORP. • 350 Fifth Avenue • New York 1, N. Y.



is she dashing? give her . . .



1. Sterling key choin with St. Christapher medal. $3.50.
2. Sparty woal glaves with pigskin palms. By Weor-Right. $4.98.
3. Swonky grey sharkskin avernight case trimmed and lined in bright red. It's 18", cames in mony calars with contrasting leother trim. By Skywoy. $18.*
4. Leother dog-leosh belt in all calors. By Vague. $1.95.
5. Foke fur scorf—veddy smort. Baranduki printed fabric, bright lining. By Glentex. $1.
6. Fake leopard vest—in lush printed plush. By Langoil. $8.
7. New smaller hondbog. Genuine split cowhide envelope, gold edge. Red, green, block. By Kadin. $2.98*
8. Bright suede belt edged with gald beads. By Criterion. $2.
9. Morocca leother change purse. Opens flat into roomy wollet. Red, block, brown, with name. $4.25.

For where ta buy see poge 73
*Plus tox.

give her a slip for the girl who likes polka dots . .

Sweet sprinkling of embroidered dots on bodice and flounce. Fine crepe in heavenly colors—yellow, blue, pink, white. A Powers Model Slip, $3.98. At Kaufmann's, Pittsburgh.

for the girl who likes half-slips . .

Flared version with deep frou-frou flounce of crisp Alencon-type lace. In Burmil rayon crepe, white or shell pink. By Seamprufe, $3.95. At Bloomingdale's, New York.

hit the HIGH NOTE FOR VALUE!

$3.99

These MAN-MADE ALLIGATORS with 4-inch SKY-HIGH heels will set your budget singing a happy melody!

Shoes and Bag Available in RED • GREEN • BROWN
Also Black or Brown Suede Finish
Sizes 2½ to 10, B Width; 6 to 9, AA Width

MATCHING HANDBAG
$1.99 plus tax

Mary Jane

Stores in principal cities

ORDER BY MAIL
Send check or money order and we'll pay postage

MARY JANE SHOES, 119 Beach St., Boston, Mass., Dept. MSC-12

Please send me.....prs. of High Notes at $3.99 pr.

Style Name	Color & Material (1st choice)	Color & Material (2nd choice)	Size	Width
A. CAMEO
B. CELLINI

Please send me.....matching bags at $1.99 plus tax ($2.39 total)
Color.....

Name ..... ☐ Check
Address ..... ☐ Money Order
City ..... Zone ....State ..... ☐ C. O. D.
When ordering C. O. D. customer agrees to pay all charges.

the secret's in the circle!

You're glamorously, alluringly feminine in your Merry-Go-Round bra. Patented Circular Stitching, plus bias, plus faggoted seams accentuate the small bust—minimize the full bust.

New! Peter Pan pre-tested
SHRINKAGE-CONTROL
Fit and Lift won't wash out!

only PETER PAN makes Merry-Go-Round bra

Figure problem? For FREE booklet, "Your New Guide to Bustline Beauty," write Peter Pan, Dept. D-9, 312 Fifth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.
Merry-Go-Round of Canada, 3643 St. Lawrence Blvd., Montreal

ORDER BY MAIL FROM HOLLYWOOD

SEND NO MONEY

STILES OF HOLLYWOOD
Dept. D, P.O. Box 989, Los Angeles 53, Calif.
Send Check or Money Order and We'll Pay Postage.
Please send me_____pairs "California Toots-eez" at $2.45 pr.
Size_____Color Choice 1._____2._____3._____
Name_____
City_____Zone____State____
Residents of Calif. add 2½% State Sales Tax; 3% within L.A.

Gilt-Edged Glamour

ONLY $2.45
MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

GREAT FOR GIFTS!

Golden platforms topped with fluffy real bunny fur to flatter your toes. Luxurious in Bunny White, Ice Blue, Baby Pink, Red, and Rayol. Sizes 3 to 9, Medium Width. Gift orders filled promptly.

Stiles OF HOLLYWOOD

Your lashes look longer in just one minute!

New Purse-Style Kurlash

Only sixty seconds—and your lashes look longer, more luxuriant, your eyes mysteriously larger!

Just use the new PURSE-STYLE KURLASH, the patented eyelash curler. Easy-to-use KURLASH is the glamour secret of famous models and movie stars. Curls your lashes gently against a soft rubber cushion.

New PURSE-STYLE KURLASH folds into a smart plastic case, tucks into your bag like your lipstick! At all cosmetic counters...$1.25
Standard Model KURLASH...$1

KURLASH
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

COPR. 1948 THE KURLASH CO., INC.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY

(Prices on merchandise may vary throughout country)

Green and gold sweater, gold mesh gloves and birdcage bracelet worn by Peggy Cummins in the full color photograph (page 63) all at:

Los Angeles, Calif.—The Broadway Dept. Store, Broadway & 4th Sts.
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St.

Iridescent checked taffeta suit, fringe trim, worn by Peggy Cummins (page 64)

New York, N. Y.—Best & Co., 51st St. & 5th Ave., Young Cosmopolitan Shop, 6th fl.

Plaid taffeta and black faille dress worn by Peggy Cummins (page 65)

Albany, N. Y.—Cotrell & Leonard, 472 Broadway
Charlotte, N. C.—Belk Bros.—and all Belk and Leggett stores throughout Southeastern United States
Cincinnati, O.—The H. & S. Pogue Co., 4th & Race Sts., Junior Miss Shop, 3d fl.
Los Angeles, Calif.—Desmond's, 616 Broadway, Woman's Shop
New York, N. Y.—John Wanamaker, Broadway & 9th St., Mimi Shop, 3rd fl.
Scranton, Pa.—The Heinz Store
Springfield, Mass.—Forbes & Wallace, 1414 Main St., Debonnaire Shop, 2nd fl.

Hooded parka with vicuna fur trim worn by Ella Raines (page 66)

Chicago, Ill.—Mandel Brothers, State & Madison Sts.
Detroit, Mich.—Peters Sport Apparel, 1228 Griswold Ave.
New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable, 5th Ave. & 40th St.

Cotton gabardine ski suit with zipper pockets worn by Ella Raines (page 67)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's, 484 Fulton St.
Buffalo, N. Y.—Adam, Meldrum & Anderson Co., 398 Main St.
Detroit, Mich.—Crowley, Milner & Co., Gratiot Ave.
Hartford, Conn.—Brown Thomson, Inc., 920 Main St.
New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable, 5th Ave. & 40th St.

MODERN SCREEN CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Gifts for the glamorous gal (page 68)

1. Nylon lace stockings

Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh Co., Washington & Avon Sts.
New York, N. Y.—Franklin Simon, 5th Ave. & 38th St.

2. Bronze metallic belt

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Joseph Horne Co., Pennsylvania Ave.

3. Matching pin and earrings set

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Herpolsheimer's, 101 Monroe Ave.
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, 34th St. & Broadway

4. Gold compact with pearl and filigree design

New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable, 5th Ave. & 40th St.
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Bros., Market & 8th Sts.

MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

5. Angora mittens with sequin trim

New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, 59th St. & Lexington Ave.

6. Bunny fur headband, scarf and muff with braid trim

Cleveland, Ohio—The May Co., Euclid & Ontario Sts.
Detroit, Mich.—Himelhoch's, 1545 Woodward Ave.
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St.

7. Pearl and gold heart bracelet

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Namm's, 452 Fulton St.
New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 W. 42nd St.

Gifts for the dashing gal (page 70)

1. St. Christopher key chain

Order by mail from:
H. E. Associates, 223 E. 50th St., New York 22, N. Y.
(Postage included in price)

2. Pigskin palm gloves

New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St.
Philadelphia, Pa.—Lit Bros., Market & 8th Sts.

3. Sharkskin overnight case

Dallas, Tex—Neiman Marcus, Main & Ervay Sts.
San Francisco, Calif.—City of Paris Dry Goods Co., Geary & Stockton Sts.

4. Leather dog-leash belt

New York, N. Y.—Bond Fifth Ave., 5th Ave. & 35th St.

5. Fake fur baronduki scarf

Fort Worth, Tex.—The Fair
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, 5th Ave. & 34th St.

6. Fake leopard vest

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Martin's, 501 Fulton St.
New York, N. Y.—Macy's, Herald Square
Portland, Ore.—Chas. F. Berg Co., 615 S. Broadway

7. Split cowhide envelope handbag

Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus & Co., High & Town Sts.
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St.

8. Suede belt edged with gold beads

New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, 33rd St. & Ave. of Americas

9. Combination wallet and change purse

Order by mail from:
Crown Craft Products, 246 5th Ave., New York 1, N. Y.
(Postage included in price)

How to Order Modern Screen Fashions

(1) Buy in person from stores listed.
(2) Order by mail from stores listed.
(3) Write Connie Bartel, Modern Screen, Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y.—for store in your vicinity.

Vicki ... OF BOSTON

JIVE BOOTS LET'S ALL GET HEP!!

for the JUNIOR MISS

D.

Strictly hep! In White, Red. Picture of Teena in Growing Girls' sizes 4 to 8.

$3.98

for the PIGTAILERS

E.

Oh so ducky. In White, Red. Picture of Donald Duck in Misses' sizes 13 to 3.

$3.98

for the KIDDIES

F.

Mosey with Micky! In White, Red. Picture of Mickey Mouse in Child's sizes 6 to 12.

$3.98

Vicki ... OF BOSTON

VICKI OF BOSTON MS-12
89 BEACH STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

Please send me boots:

D. ☐ E. ☐ F. ☐ @ $3.98

Size_____ Color_____

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Send check or money order and we will pay postage. Customer agrees to pay all charges on C.O.D.'s.

ORDER BY MAIL

CHEESEHEAD AND CO.

(Continued from page 39)

cabinet—excuse please, the plane—is hangared in Glenn's upstairs study, Glenn's favorite room.

This is quite a place. An electric train with three tracks runs under the chairs and around the tables. "That's for the little boy," Ellie told us. We nodded understandingly as Glenn turned on the switch.

Every wall in the room is shelved with records. There's a glass case in the corner where Glenn keeps his gun. (It's always locked so Peter won't put inquiring fingers on it.) There are also sun lamps, books, cowboy boots, and an ice cream bar. An autographed picture of the late President Roosevelt stands on Glenn's desk.

Sitting next to this sleek mahogany desk is a battered-looking table. The leather is almost gone from its top and if you blow hard its legs quiver. Each year Ellie decides to get rid of it as her first contribution to spring house-cleaning. And each year Glenn gallops down the hill after the dealer's truck and manages to retrieve it.

The clock on the mantel struck five and a cool breeze could be felt from the ocean. Glenn lighted the large open fireplace. Ellie joined us on the floor before it and helped select records from the albums. Some were labeled ELEANOR POWELL and some GLENN FORD.

"How come?" we asked.

"Both Glenn and I are record collectors from way back. I had 5,000 discs B. G.—Before Glenn—and he had 3,000. I often think he just proposed so we could merge our record collection."

"Tain't so," Glenn chimed in. "You know I married you for your cheesecake—the kind you eat."

Ellie looked at Glenn and a smile started rolling up her cheeks.

It was a family joke. When Glenn had his first date with Ellie, they didn't go dining or dancing, but spent the evening at her home. They had dinner there—and what a wonderful dinner! For dessert Ellie served what turned out to be Glenn's favorite dish—cheesecake.

"I decided she was the girl for me the moment I tasted it," said Glenn. "I didn't learn until later that the cheesecake was the contribution of Ellie's cook, Agnes Clark, to the romance. Aggie has been with her since 1936. So when we were married, I got not only the cheesecake, but Aggie as well."

We can vouch for Agnes' cooking. The dinner we had would have driven a calorie-watcher mad. There was rare roast beef, Yorkshire pudding, little creamed onions and—of course!—cheesecake. (Only the week before, the Fords' next-door neighbors, the James Masons, had visited them, and they too pronounced the pudding splendid.)

We finally pushed away from the table and were steered into the living room. The thing that impresses you here is that there are two of everything. Two antique chests flank the fireplace, two love seats, two radios and even two mirror-topped coffee tables. On the latter there are two silver match boxes—one inscribed ELLIE and the other GLENN.

Glenn was busy getting out the home projector and Peter asked if he could see the Bugs Bunny cartoon first.

Glenn and Pete had a little trouble getting the screen set up because the radios were in the way. The Fords are radio addicts. They have one in every room, including the garage and the baths.

After we'd seen Bugs Bunny it was pretty late for Pete, so Ellie took him up to bed. We tagged along.

Peter's room is filled with dozens of toys. A colorful parade of elephants runs along the wallpaper. There's an alcove which houses a refrigerator and a sink, also a tiny bed which Peter has outgrown.

"Will you tell me a goodnight story?" he asked. Although he's only three, he talks very plainly.

Ellie handed him his favorite toy, button-eyed Toto the Clown—several inches taller than he. And began telling him about the gallant knight and the fair lady.

Glenn had the film changed by the time we returned downstairs. He ran a print of Fighting Lady. Afterwards we sat around and talked—about everything from fishing to Ellie's forthcoming dance tour. Then all of a sudden it was 11:30. Bedtime.

We had just settled into our extra long, extra wide bed when there was a knock on the door. And in came Ellie, with two delectable nightcaps for us—double-strength vanilla malteds! Have we already said something about perfect hospitality?

Next morning we were awakened by a clanging noise and Peter's voice calling, "Hi-ho, Silver, away!" He sounded near-by. He was—just outside our door.

He was riding a pinto rocking horse, covered with real pony's hair, and shooting bandits down the hallway. When he saw us he forgot his man-hunt. Stepping over his lifeless victims, he accompanied us downstairs to breakfast on the patio. Ellie and Glenn were waiting.

The patio is rosy brick with wrought-iron furniture. It opens off the living room and overlooks a well-landscaped yard. Tall pine and eucalyptus trees skirt the grounds and provide a forest-like setting.

This is only one of the Fords' yards. To the right of the patio and through a white picket gate is still another. Here there is a greenhouse which contains Glenn's prize tuberoses. There's also a pint-sized swimming pool for Cheesehead and a much-used badminton court.

Glenn's a whiz at the game. (Ask his regular opponents, Bill Holden, William Wyler and Mark Stevens.) It helps him keep his trim, 165-pound frame as well as his year-round tan.

Although Glenn is a kind and thoughtful guy, once he steps on the badminton court he's a demon with the racket. If we were in the rear, he'd hit one just over the net. If we were by the net, the bird would soar over our heads. He took high glee and even higher aim in spotting the bird just a little too high for our 5-foot-2 frames. (He beat us 20 to 4!)

Later in the day, Ellie let Peter go in swimming. The pool is about the size of a goldfish pond and only three feet deep.

Peter was splashing noisily about playing "Whee." This is a game Glenn and Pete invented. Pete floats in the water until the count of three—then Glenn says "Whee," and Peter makes like a rotary eggbeater.

Ellie came out of the house bearing double-dip chocolate ice-cream cones. Seeing her, Peter scampered out of the water and flung wet arms around her waist.

"Mommy, I love you, I love you!"

"Is it just because I have my hands full of ice cream?"

"No. I love you so much I want to crack your head open so I can pour all the love in."

"Violent child you have there, Mrs. Ford," said Glenn, beaming. "And to think you were afraid if we had a boy he wouldn't be affectionate." He turned to us. "You know, Ellie's so soft-hearted she makes me be the heavy when it comes to disciplining Pete. The worst thing you can do to him is to send him to bed without saying goodnight. Peter's favorite expression is, 'Let's not tell Daddy, shall we?' But Cheesehead really isn't much of a problem."

With this, Glenn abruptly picked up Cheesehead and swung him around in the air. Pete squealed with delight and Ellie got that be-careful look all mothers get.

It was a perfect picture. It was a perfect weekend. THE END

MODERN SCREEN

"Pardon me, is this seat taken?"

"Fashion plate"

Cream Wafer Face Make-Up by REVLON

IT'S GOING PLACES... in the smartest handbags!
It's designed to keep the poreless-as-porcelain perfection of the "Fashion Plate" complexion at your fingertips . . . always.

JUST FINGER-STROKE IT ON...
Not a cake, "Fashion Plate" needs no water or sponge. It ends the old-fashioned, dry, mask-y look! Choose from exclusive fashion-genius colors.

The great new fashion in make-up! New vanity-case size 1.00 plus tax

Are you in the know?

For the pale hands he loves, try—

- ☐ Bleaching lotion
- ☐ Moon magic
- ☐ Dusky locquer

You're the romantic type, now! With a fragile, "ladylike" look, even to your pastel fingernails. That calls for careful manicures—moons and tips showing. Here's how: Outline moon with enamel; paint rest of nail completely. Then, while enamel's wet, "thumb off" a rounded nail tip. Depth of moon should suit your individual nail. Just as—on "those" days—your needs should guide your choice of napkins. Try Kotex—3 absorbencies to choose from.

What's the Jinx in this jalopy?

- ☐ The cuddle couple
- ☐ The boogie blast
- ☐ Four's a crowd

Joy ride? Uh-uh. For here, say safety experts, are the makings of a crash landing! (See all answers above.) The car's crowded: bad for careful driving. The raucous music adds more distraction. Anyway, how can a highway romeo keep his mind on the road? Sharp gals will avoid these hazards: take no risks. Even of problem-day accidents. And that's why they choose Kotex . . . its exclusive safety center means extra protection!

If your back's blemished, what's best?

- ☐ A white honky
- ☐ A roin check
- ☐ A stole

Stoles for your strapless frocks are high fashion . . . not meant for hiding hickeys! And you can't "un-date" at zero hour. Why wait 'til dance night to cover back break-outs? Start days ahead, with antiseptic—plus white hanky, pinned to shoulderstraps. Worn beneath school dresses, the medicated "goo" works while you grind! Never fret about how to conceal "certain" outlines—with Kotex. Those flat pressed ends prevent outlines; protect you—all ways!

When giving a party, which is important?

- ☐ Fancy refreshments
- ☐ Banishing the family
- ☐ Keeping your guests busy

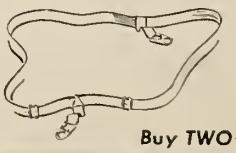
To save your party from the floperoo brackets it doesn't take caterer's chow . . . or shooing Mom to the movies. Plan the doings. Have records handy. Provide the "props" for games. At Christmas, let your guests trim the tree; anything to keep them busy. And should your calendar suddenly betray you, don't be a blu gnu! Turn to Kotex, for comfort. For softness that holds its shape. In short, be carefree with the new Kotex—made to stay soft while you wear it. And happy hostessing to you!



Why does a gal buy 2 sanitary belts?

- ☐ For extra security
- ☐ For that "bandbox" feeling
- ☐ One belt's for her sister

Next time you're dressing for a date—donning fresh undies, a charming frock—you'll want a change of sanitary belts. Yes, for that crisp, "bandbox feeling" you need two Kotex Sanitary Belts, for a change.

You know, the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. And because it's adjustable, all-elastic, your Kotex Belt fits smoothly; doesn't bind. So—for more comfort, buy the new Kotex Sanitary Belt. And buy two—for a change!

Kotex Sanitary Belt

Buy TWO—by name!

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION

SHIRLEY FROHLICH
director
GLORIA LAMPERT
associate

News: Bob Atcher Club is convention-minded. Also looking for a new name for their journal . . . Rex Allen Clubbers are calling on the entire MSFCA to help one of their members, Paul Nelson, Jr., injured in on accident, and now unable to move about unless you can help buy Paul his own ambulance station wagon. Several businessmen hove started the fun and you may add to it by mailing contributions to Peter Burowski, pres. of Cosmopolitan Bank, Chicago, Ill. . . . To celebrate the first anniversary of her club, honorary Joan Fulton is sending every member an autographed 8x10 photo . . . Any qualified person who wants to start a club for Jack Smith in L. A. can write to Delores Feeney, 1827 South Bronson, L. A. 6, Calif.

When Bing Crosby couldn't appear in person to accept a music award in Grand Central Palace, N. Y., he designated Terry DiFrancesco, prexy of the Bingites, as the most proper person for the job . . . Due to illness, Joan Travnicek has turned her Perry Como Club over to Margaret Staley's Como Cream City Club . . . Over 140 members attended the Sleepy Hollow Club outing at Sleepy Hollow Ranch, and 40 new members were signed up in one afternoon . . . Harriet Denahy is the new prexy of Arthur Neal's Club . . . Jean Cosenza of Brooklyn entertained her honorary, Sammy Solo, and his secretary in her home.

Memberships: Bobbie Meltzer is offering a free membership in her Stuart Foster club to anyone donating baby food or baby clothing money for the club's adopted French orphan. Her address is 110 Riverside Dr., New York 24, N. Y. . . . Marie Johnson is giving away 50 free memberships in her Jayne Meadows Club to the first 50 who write her at 261 E. Duval St., Phila. 44, Pa. Mention MODERN SCREEN . . . Anyone who brings six new members into the Darryl Hickman Club gets a year's privileges free . . . Philip Reed Club (Virginia Golz, 41 Ripley St., Somerset, Mass.) wants three new members from any foreign country except Great Britain. They'll be admitted free.

If you're a fan of Donna Atwood, the figure skating champ and Ice Capades star, and you'd like to start a club for her, write to Peggy Pearl, 2229A Oregon, St. Louis 4, Mo. You must live in one of the cities where the Ice Capades appears every year, and you must list your qualifications, stating whether you have a typewriter, can borrow o mimeo, etc. . . . The new James Melton Journal will be a music magazine as well as a Melton fan mag . . . If you join the Barbara Lawrence Club before Dec. 31 and mention MS, you'll receive five extra snaps absolutely free. Address Mrs. Katherine Galloway, 3658 McGill Road, Jackson, Mich. . . . First 10 Como fans in the Detroit area who contact Shirley Wiers, 6645 Pelham, Allen Pk., Mich., will receive a half-rate membership. (This club was formerly piloted by Betty Schwarz.) . . . Marceline Sonenberg, 1548 N. Honore St., Chicago, Ill., is offering free memberships in her Lloyd Bridges Club to the first five fans from any state except Illinois . . . Member who brings the most new Ted Steele fans into Ada Rubins' Club gets a personally dedicated recording by Ted.

. . . First 50 shut-ins who write Ann Bellino, 1267 Addison St., Berkeley 2, Calif., will receive free memberships in her Alan Ladd Club Tito Guizar is offering a $500 Mexican outfit to first-prize-winner in club's membership contest. . . . Dick Haymes Associates still agog over Dick's visit to New York. He was so-o-o-o cooperative . . . Official Dick Jaeckel Club, former MSFCA Trophy winner, is reorganizing, under Louise Warnes' direction . . . Leota Carter is looking for new prexy for her Cliff Johnson Club. If you're interested, send your qualifications to Leota at 1001 Lyon Street, Des Moines 16, Iowa . . . Officers of the two official Nelson Eddy Clubs would like it known that there are only two clubs exclusively for Nelson: the International, presided over by the Nicholins, and the Music Club, piloted by the Mottolas . . . Recommended to Canadian clubs for journalwork: Peerless Fan Club Service, 171 Talbot St., North, Simcoe, Ontario. Write for details, price list, samples, etc., before sending order . . . Dorothy Fenger has sent up a "Movie Fan Diary," a printed diary which helps you keep a record of every movie you've seen during the year, and important facts about them. Very useful and handsome, too. They're $1 each, only 85 cents to fan club members. Her address is: 1402 Superior Ave., Sheboygan, Mich.

8 SEMI-ANNUAL TROPHY CUP CONTEST (4TH LAP)

Did you write an article or poem for your club journal this month? We have a lovely Helena Rubinstein Fourcast lipstick set for you, if you are a winner in our "This Is My Best" contest. The set has four luscious shades for your particular coloring! Club artists can compete for those handsome Tangee Trip Kits, each one packed with super Tangee products, including powder, base, astringent, rouge, etc. And don't forget, there are also smooth-as-silk Eberhard Faber Pen and Pencil sets that write like a dream and are absolutely guaranteed. Subscriptions to all Dell magazines are waiting to be won by you and you and you!

This Is My Best: (100 points) "Why," Miriam Budnick, Morgan Memos. "Sensational Team," Dorothy Vincent, Rae-Lowery journal. "Why Fan Clubs Help Frank," Eva Smith, Voice Parade. "My Visit to U-I," Lyn Ricker, Joan Caulfield journal. "Is It All An Act," Robert Spearin, Ron Randell Roundtable. "Let's Visit Gloucester," Jean Doyle and Mary Perry, Warren Douglas journal. Best Journals: (500 points) League 1, no entries. League 2, Joan Crawford journal. League 3 (tied), Nina Foch journal, June Allyson journal, "Musical Echoes," (Riley). Best Editing: (250 points) League 1, no entries. League 2, Kit Pritchett, Morgan Memos. League 3, Dot Reisser, Musical Harvest. Best Covers: (250 points) League 1. no entries. League 2 (tied) Velvet Fog and Morgan Memos. League 3 (tied) Walsh Watch and Hickmon (Reeks) journal. Best Art Work: (150 points) Lucille Bishop, Musical Harvest (Melton journal). Membership Increases: (100 points) League 1, Reno Brown Club. League 2. Mel Torme Club. League 3, June Allyson Club. Most Worthwhile Activities: (250 points) League 1, no entries. League 2, Ginger Rogers Club (sent food packages to Europe). League 3, (tied) Barbara Lawrence Club (sent CARE package to England) and Bingites (collected 3,500 stamps to be sent to VA hospital in Castle Point). Best Correspondents: (50 points), League 1, none qualified. League 2, Lorraine Paxton, Sleepy Hollow Club. League 3, Flo Steingraber, Joseph Cotten Club. Candid Camera Contest (100 points to 1st prize winner, 50 to others). Lee Dyer, Rand Brooks Club. Nelda Clough, Charles Korvin, Joyce Moison, Sinatra Club. Isabel Lee, Bob Crosby Club. Dorothy Nix, Sinatra (McMullen Club), Flo Zomak, Mel Torme.

for lovely young curves

The Lift that never lets you down

Your dainty "Perma·lift"* bra is specially constructed to add allure to your youthful figure. The exclusive cushion insets at the base of the bra cups gently and healthfully support your bust from below, never lose that support through countless washings and wear. Lovely new styles at your favorite corsetiere. $1.50 to $3.50. Buy America's Favorite bra today.

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Perma·lift
REG U S PAT OFF.
BRASSIERES
THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN

Another "Hickory" Success

Swirl-away

A FULL 220 INCHES OF MAGNIFICENT SWEEP!

Styled by Ajax

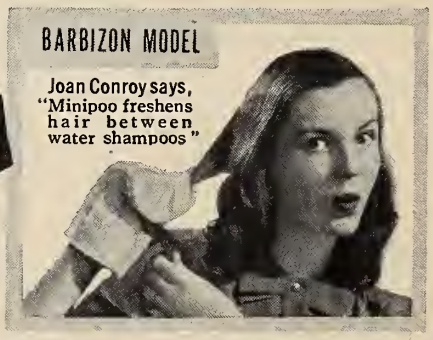
$8.99

You never paid so little for a dress so grand in manner... so superb for that important date. Skirt swirls out in tremendous sweep of full 220 inches, giving this dress a regal air that makes you Queen anywhere you go! Comfortable envelope sleeves—handsome gold-covered belt. Fashioned in Luana Rayon Faille... in Jewel Tones for Fall and Winter—Peacock Royal, Grey, Kelly, Black.

Junior Sizes: 9 to 15.
Misses: 10 to 16.

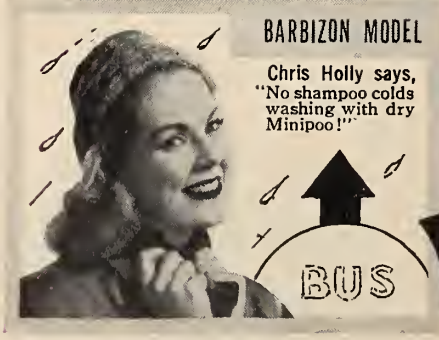
SEND NO MONEY! SENT ON APPROVAL!

JONAS SHOPPES, Dept. MS-128
Sixth Ave. at 14th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Send me my Swirl-away Dress in size_____
1st Color Choice_____2nd Color Choice_____
☐ SEND C.O.D.—I'll pay postage.
☐ PAYMENT ENCLOSED—You pay postage.
In either case, if not entirely delighted, I may return it within 5 days for complete refund.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____Zone____State_____



Christmas Hints

You know your best friend's size. Wouldn't this make a delightfully different Christmas gift for her?



GLAMOROUS MODELS shampoo without water

Lovely Barbizon School models have shining hair always. They learn that between water shampoos Minipoo removes oil, dirt and hair odors, leaves wave intact! Easy to use with handy mitt—no soap, water, drying!

At all drug and cosmetic counters
Cosmetic Distributors, Jersey City, N. J.

MINIPOO

10 MINUTE DRY SHAMPOO

30 Shampoos and Handy Mitt in Each Package

new faces

MICHAEL NORTH returned to Hollywood after his discharge from the Navy to take up the career he'd started seven years before. Mike was born of theatrical parents in Topeka, Kansas, in 1918, and made his debut at the age of 12. Graduating from the University of Kansas in 1938, Mike went straight to Hollywood. The war intervened and North got his first role seven years later when Mike Curtiz cast him in The Unsuspected. He's 6′ 2″, has blond hair and blue eyes and is unmarried.

CATHY O'DONNELL whom you remember in The Best Years of Our Lives was born July 6, 1923, near Birmingham, Alabama. Her father was a school teacher and operated the town's only theater. Cathy enrolled in the dramatic course at the University of Oklahoma. Later, on a $90 a month job, she saved enough to venture to Hollywood. Ben Medford, Goldwyn agent, discovered her in Schwab's drugstore. Cathy has brown hair and brown eyes, is married to Robert Wyler and will soon be seen in The Twisted Road.

DORIS DAY who was born in Cincinnati, O. on April 3, 1924, first started out in life to become a dancer. She was doing well, too, when a nasty auto accident broke both her legs and kept her in the hospital for over 14 months . . . Doris started singing just to escape boredom but wound up as a better singer than dancer. Working in night clubs and hotels, she signed with Bob Crosby's band and then with Frank Sinatra on the Hit Parade. Mike Curtiz gave her a movie contract. She made her debut in Romance on the High Seas. Doris is 5′ 5″ and weighs 125 lbs. Married to George Weidler, has 1 child.

GERALDINE BROOKS doesn't come from a long line of actors, but her father is the foremost theatrical costumer in the world (Brooks Costumes). Her first theatrical role was in the Broadway musical, Follow the Girls. Born in N. Y. C. Oct. 29, 1925, and went to Julia Richman High and the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Geraldine made her movie debut in Cry Wolf with Errol Flynn. She's 5′ 2″, weighs 100 lbs, and her latest is Embraceable You.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORIES

(Continued from page 42)

"I just want to have a little house, a big library and a middle-sized wife."

That afternoon he was crossing the campus when (as has been written before) he was asked to take part in a school play. Had he not felt discouraged and at a completely loose end, his reply would have been, "No." He had no interest in acting; had never given any thought to it. But now, with fate having gotten to him that morning and placed him in a receptive mood for anything, it was "Yes." That's what Gregory means.

Actors are often overly moody. Gregory isn't. He set himself against this kind of softness when . . . well, let's see this particular phase of his character get its initial shaping-up.

Gregory, a 13-year-old boy in a gym suit, stands all alone in the basketball court of the San Diego Athletic Club. He is making some half-hearted shots with a basketball. After a while he lets the ball go and just watches it bounce aimlessly away to roll to the edge of the floor finally and lie still.

so very sad . . .

He is a boy lost in thought. He is thinking it was a dizzy idea to come to the club at all; not another boy was there, of course. What other boy would be there on such a holiday? What other boy lived just with his father who worked nights and came home mornings for merely a brief greeting before going to bed? What other boy in the whole world felt so much alone, especially on big days like . . . well, what other boy had to face such a sad, lonesome Thanksgiving Day?

He finds no answer to any of these questions. Slowly he trudges off the floor and through the dark, crooked corridor that leads to the locker room. There he slumps down on a bench, unlaces his worn sneakers and begins peeling away spiritlessly at his tight woolen socks. After a while, as he sits there, he is crying. . . .

Gregory Peck has never forgotten the hollow echo of the basketball that Thanksgiving. As far as he is concerned, it wins the palm for sounds steeped in pure melancholy.

But now comes Act Two. It burst upon Gregory when he left the club and arrived home an hour or so later. Relatives crowded the house, his father was up and bustling, in the oven a big, golden-brown turkey dripped all over itself. There was a telegram from his mother sending him love and wanting him to be with her for Christmas. There were presents from her and from his father and from cousins. There was kidding and joking and a sense of high excitement all over; all the festivity he had been unconsciously longing for. . . .

"You know," Gregory recalls, "I stood there and couldn't believe that life could take such a sudden flip-flop. I felt ashamed at having felt so sorry for myself. And every time since when I have become too much concerned about myself, especially when there has been a little self-pity involved, I think of that Thanksgiving Day and snap out of it."

About this period in his life, Gregory Peck was a youthful romanticist—classically speaking, that is. Thoughts of girls—that is to say, real, live girls of his own neighborhood—never entered his head until he was 16. But we'll come to that. The point is that Gregory's romantic outlook gave him a slightly false conception

THE LOVABLE GIRL-OF-THE-MONTH

loves her Lovable BRA

MISS CORKY CROWLEY
Winner of International Beauty Show

Blouse, Sidney Heller Created Jewels by TEMPLE'S Fifth Avenue

You'll be lovely, too, in a Lovable® BRA

For "lovable" lines choose Lovable Bra #902. Quilted bust sections do a superb job of uplift. New cushion-edge straps add to comfort, wear indefinitely!

#902 Nude, Black, White or Blue Rayon Satin. $1.50

LOVABLE BRASSIERE CO.
358 Fifth Avenue
New York 1, N. Y.

of things. He thought, for instance, that life is like a book. It was time for him to learn otherwise and the lesson came in the form of that paste in the snoot he is so thankful for now.

When this happened he was still 13 but by now attending St. John's Military Academy in Los Angeles. There was a 14-year-old student at the school whose name was not "Pasty," even if that is the name Gregory prefers to use because it is most accurately descriptive of him. Pasty, who is the villain of this yarn, not only was older and bigger than Gregory, and domineering, Pasty was the only son of rich and doting parents who had their chauffeur take him special bed sheets, and toothpaste and soap, and call to take Pasty for rides and bring him home on holidays. Pasty also received unlimited pocket money to spend at the school commissary for candy—which he ate all by himself without ever sharing. But all this was not enough for Pasty. For complete happiness he had to cuff and push Gregory around—and he did.

One afternoon, the last school afternoon before a Thanksgiving, the kids ran out of their final class for a last-minute romp on the campus before leaving for their separate homes. Most of them charged onto a rickety, wooden merry-go-round which they operated by shoving at the ground with their feet. Greg was having a great time at this when Pasty suddenly showed up and shouldered him off. It was too much. For weeks he had been brooding about this fellow. Getting up from the ground he doubled up his fists and rushed Pasty, letting fly with lefts and rights as fast as he could propel them.

In a novel it would be written that Greg thus overcame the bully and laid him low and quiescent for the rest of the school term. Greg felt like the heroes of all the books he had ever read. But this fight took place in a matter-of-fact world, not in a book. As a matter of fact, Pasty was stronger and had the reach. As a matter of fact, Pasty picked the right time, just the right target (which was Gregory's mouth and nose) and let go. Greg was knocked cuckoo. The whole front of his face ached for days. He ached even more inside when he realized he had accomplished nothing by his rebellion. Pasty kept picking on him and it went on wearily like that all through St. John's.

"Anyone who thinks this isn't an important lesson for any boy to learn . . . well, just hasn't learned his lesson," Gregory laughs.

About those girls, now that they are in the picture (as they are in every Gregory Peck picture), Greg remembers that he began thinking about them about the same time that he began wishing that he had a car—which he considers very good timing. What he recalls with much nostalgia is the fun he had with both the girls and the car when his father helped him get his first jalopy.

Only a year before, when Gregory was 15, his father, Gregory "Doc" Peck, Sr. (who still works steadily at the only all-night drugstore in San Diego and has bandaged the heads of some 5,000 errant sailors in his time), had thrown him a birthday party—and there had been a dispute as to whether any girls should be invited at all! They were, but Greg's father noticed that, for the first time at any such affair, Gregory was taking a great interest in the culinary and serving ends of the party. He was keeping himself very busy—and away from any possibility of getting involved in a conversation with any of his feminine guests.

So with the coming of the jalopy—a Model T, of course—there were girls. And with girls there developed a need for money with which to buy gas and sodas and football game tickets—which all seem to go together with girls and a car. A thing like this has driven many a man to work—and it did young Gregory. That's when he went to work driving a truck for the Union Oil Company the summer before he finished high school.

This leads directly to another of Gregory's odd Thanksgiving recollections—a crash between his truck and an ancient Essex driven by an old man. The latter, for some reason, tried to steer his Essex right through the middle of Greg's truck. The Essex just came apart and when the old man was questioned as to what was on his mind he had no answer—but his driving license did. It specified that he was to drive only while wearing glasses—which he wasn't. He claimed he looked for them when he got up that morning but that he never could find his glasses—without his glasses.

Despite the fact that it wasn't his fault, however, Gregory had to go through a lot of legal rigmarole in connection with the accident and he began to feel that the life of a truck driver was not as ideal as he had imagined. Perhaps his father was right about continuing school—and back to school he went. His father was right, as it turned out, and that's why the crash has become one of Greg's fonder recollections.

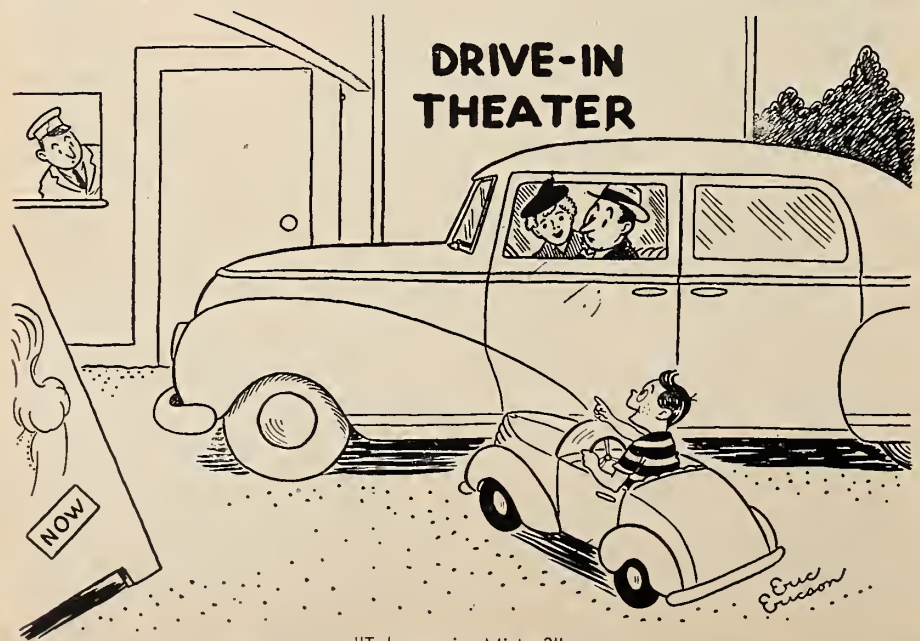
Incidentally, there is another incident in connection with Greg's career as a truck driver that his father remembers but Gregory doesn't. This has to do with the time when Gregory brought the day's receipts into the company's home office and found he was $30 short. Gregory doesn't remember it, probably, because he simply borrowed the $30 to make up the deficit and that was that. His father remembers it because it was his $30 that Greg borrowed.

Of course, not all of Gregory's memories have a calamitous sound to them at first hearing. There are three very nice ones whose names are Vincent Price, Ingrid Bergman and Greer Garson. They helped out the Gregory Peck who arrived in Hollywood as an apprehensive newcomer.

He was a nervous boy when he started his first scene in his first big picture, Keys of the Kingdom. It was a complicated bit and playing opposite him was Vincent Price, a tried and capable performer. Gregory sweated his way through it and when it was finally shot heard Price addressing him angrily, "For Heaven's sake, Peck! Don't you ever do anything wrong?"

It was a moment or two before Gregory realized that Vincent was speaking in mock anger and was actually complimenting him on his work.

What happened in The Keys of the Kingdom was, Gregory learned, the key to what lay ahead of him from then on in Hollywood. Spellbound was his next picture and not until he arrived on the set did he meet his co-star, Ingrid Bergman. She was in front of the camera doing a makeup test and he wondered what he could say, when introduced, that would insure their getting off on the right foot together. But he need not have worried. Even as he pondered, the shot was over, and before she even took a step toward him Ingrid called in delight, "Why, here is my wonderful new leading man!"



He couldn't believe that it could happen so easily but, almost as if she sensed this, Ingrid went further. She ran over to him with hand extended. As they stood close together she said something in a tone of thankfulness that seemed to come right from her heart. "Oh, you're tall! It will be so wonderful—I won't have to play with my shoes off in this picture!"

So by the time Gregory went on stage to meet Greer Garson for the first time, before they started The Valley of Decision, he knew his fears were groundless. Perhaps it was a good thing, because for a moment Garson set him back. As soon as she caught sight of him she cried out, "Well, Mr. Peck has finally arrived. Now we can get started!"

But Greer was kidding. When they were more formally introduced she said, "It wasn't that you were late. It was my impatience. I have been impatient to meet you ever since I knew we were going to work together."

And who could blame Greer?

This accounts now for all of Gregory's favorite, if ominous-sounding memories—except the one concerning the attack made on him by three street hoodlums. This took place before he came to Hollywood, when he was attending the New York Neighborhood Playhouse School trying to acquire acting experience. Some of the students threw a party and Greg, along with a cute girl (he hadn't yet met his Greta) departed for the neighborhood delicatessen to buy sandwich meat. On the way back, three neighborhood toughs passed some insulting remarks about the girl. To his own surprise, Greg challenged them. The three men were so surprised themselves that they stared back in silence and even let Greg go halfway up the block with his companion before they woke up and decided to come after him.

"Take me in, Mister?"

Greg is no weakling. Not only has he the strength of a man of his weight and height, he is perhaps more supple than the average fellow because of his lifelong love for swimming. But he is emphatically not, and never wants to be, one of your muscular monstrosities. And don't forget, he had learned his lesson by this time about life not being like a book. This means that he knew very well what was probably in store for him—the three toughs would tear him apart.

Nevertheless, Greg took a deep breath, put down his packages, and sailed into the three bruisers as they came up.

The first man he hit, dropped. The second man stayed up for two punches—then he dropped. The third man ran . . . and Greg, having tasted blood, chased him. He caught him at the corner and in a few more punches had this man on the ground!

It was no time to quit now. Greg felt that, by then, the first man had had sufficient rest and should be a sound opponent again. He went back to this fellow, but found him reclining gracefully on the sidewalk.

"Well?" demanded Greg. "Are you getting up?"

The fellow stared. "What for?" he asked—and reasonably enough.

Now for the moral of this incident—the great lesson it taught Gregory. But when he is asked for this he looks blank.

"There isn't any moral," he replies. "It's just something any man would like to remember. Good Lord! I licked three guys at one time. Me! Do you think I'll ever forget it?" THE END centerpiece of a rich color-scheme. Ingrid had just completed all arrangements for her trip to Europe, she was so happy at the prospect she practically glowed and—golly—here I was glowing right back. She can do that to you, can Bergman.

INGRID BERGMAN TALKS

(Continued from page 29)

For a long time, I'd wanted to know the answers to a lot of questions about the best actress on the American screen. I was lucky. We started off chattering like magpies and kept it up for two hours.

I'm not bashful. I asked her straight off, "Ingrid, what are your honest thoughts about all these interviews, pictures, fans and public appearances you're supposed to duck?"

Ingrid's gray eyes were earnest as she replied. "From the beginning, I've always struggled to save myself for what is most important—my work. It's as simple as that. I've never understood how I could spend all my time, thoughts and energy talking about myself, posing for pictures. meeting people and signing autographs—and have anything left for my work. I don't think I'm so important. But I think my acting is.

"They say I've changed," Ingrid went on. "I haven't changed at all. I've always felt that way. Of course, when I first came to America I didn't understand the language too well. I'd miss the point of

59¢-43¢
25¢ and 10¢

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, creamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can use the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this safe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration better. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for a free jar.

RED WHITE
BLACK ROYAL BLUE
BLOSSOM PINK HEAVENLY BLUE

Downy, satin slippers with comfortable built-up arch . . . Smart elastic sling back . . . Hard leather sole. In sizes 3 to 9 including true half sizes. AA to B, order regular size . . . C and D, order ½ size larger for perfect fit.

at just 4.95

10 day unconditional guarantee

ORDER BY MAIL
COLLEEN ENTERPRISES
HAVERHILL, MASS.

Colleen

Please send me ____ prs. PUFFS at $4.95.
Size ____ Width ____ Color ____
Second color choice ____
Name (print) ____
Address ____
City ____ Zone ____ State ____
Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Postpaid anywhere (except C.O.D.) MS

Look lovely and be loved!

with *Lasti-Side cup
by CELEBRITY

The bra that insures perfect fit . . . by controlling the fit right in the cup itself...$2 and $2.50 (*Pat. Pend.)

At leading Specialty, Corset or Dept. Stores

BEST MAID BRA COMPANY
148 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y.

a joke, laugh at the wrong time, or make some absurd answer due to my weak English. I often gave the wrong impression. So I started keeping my mouth shut in self-defense."

"Half the time," I sighed, "that's why I keep mine open."

Ingrid isn't missing any cracks these days. "I see what you mean," she said, "but at least you know to whom you're talking. I've the most horrible memory in the world for faces and names."

Ingrid confessed that's another handicap she's lugged along from the start. She used to bluff, she said, asking, "And how is your wife?" when the gentleman didn't have one, or "How did you leave New York?" when the lady had never been outside Hollywood for years. She just got into jams, so she quit pretending and started saying, "I'm sorry—I don't remember who you are." Which didn't win her any popularity contests.

you can't win . . .

"But believe it or not, I'm really a friendly soul," laughed Ingrid. "Although, when I am friendly, sometimes they say it's an act. . . . You really can't win!"

Ingrid wasn't worked-up or mad about anything. She simply was eager to elaborate her attitude on a touchy subject.

"Peter and I are out dining sometimes when perfect strangers come up to our table and ask me to dance." Bergman smiled. "Probably a dare, a bet or something. But it always surprises me—when you act on the screen, people think they know you, personally. I've walked down the street dozens of times and have had a friendly 'Hello' from some passerby who had no idea who I was at first—just someone he knew, a familiar face. Then I've watched them turn around and stare when it dawned why they'd said 'Hello' when they recognized me. That's a nice feeling, that friendliness. I like that."

Ingrid told me about her pals, "The Alvin Gang," a set of Bergman fans who clustered around the Alvin Theatre in New York where she played in Joan of Lorraine. They started out mobbing her for autographs, and she told them off in no uncertain terms, right at the start. She wasn't, she stated, going to sign autographs at the stage door every time she passed through it—and that was that. But they kept coming back anyway, loaded with presents and tributes which filled her dressing room and touched her heart. By the end of her run, she had a circle of firm friends, and I do mean circle.

Because each night the fan gang formed a ring of hands when she entered or left, to protect her from the Broadway crowds!

"They were such a help and so wonderful," sighed Ingrid. "I felt horrible remembering I'd bawled them out at the start." So at her last matinée, Ingrid threw open the Alvin to the whole group and after the show she met them all, explained everything about herself, signed autographs until her arm ached and made everybody happy, including herself. She still hears from some of "The Alvin Gang."

Ingrid said she'd had her scrimmages with ruder fans, of course; she's been trapped in elevators, trailed on streets, stalked here and there. She's had to abandon the long walks she loved on Manhattan streets and in Central Park after three of her pictures played Broadway at the same time. She's had to grab cabs to shake persistent pests, such as one group of ladies who trailed her in cabs to a Swedish sculptor's apartment in Greenwich Village where she hunted refuge, and hammered on the door until she came out. That sort of rudeness makes Bergman see red, but it doesn't happen often and she rises above it when it does. It's all a part of this weird, celebrity-happy America, Ingrid supposed.

So I had a question. "Come on, now—aren't you going to find it like that in Sweden, too?"

Ingrid shook her head. "It wasn't like that when I was there last," she said. "You see, there is only one screen publication, a few theater magazines, and"—she grinned wickedly—"no movie columnists. Anyway, my severest critics are the Swedes." I asked her to explain that.

"My pictures go very well in Sweden," she said (five of them played Stockholm at one time), "but my countrymen are a little disappointed in me."

"Disappointed!" I almost fell off the divan.

"They don't think I'm doing the things I should," said Ingrid. The Swedes, she explained, look on her a lot more seriously than the Americans. (She's a sort of national idol, I know, and they're supremely proud of her.) They like to picture her as sweet, intelligent, virtuous—as anyone loves to picture an ideal. Intermezzo was how the Swedes liked Bergman best. But Spellbound, Notorious, Arch of Triumph, made them wince.

Ingrid's hoping she'll win back a little character in her native country with Joan of Arc. Because Sweden's deep in her heart always, and she herself is sort of "touchy" too about what the home folks think. When she was doing Joan of Lor- of MODERN SCREEN, published monthly at Dunellen, N. J., for October 1, 1948.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACTS OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AS AMENDED BY THE ACTS OF MARCH 3, 1933, AND JULY 2, 1946

State of New York } ss.
County of New York }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared Helen Meyer, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the Business Manager of the MODERN SCREEN and that the following is, to the best of her knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily, weekly, semiweekly or triweekly newspaper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946 (section 537, Postal Laws and Regulations), printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, George T. Delacorte, Jr., 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. Editor, Wade H. Nichols, 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. Managing Editor, none. Business manager, Helen Meyer, 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a firm, company, or other unincorporated concern, its name and address as well as those of each individual member, must be given.)

Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. Margarita Delacorte, 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by her.

(Signed) HELEN MEYER, Business Manager.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 13th day of September, 1948.
(SEAL) JEANETTE SMITH GREEN (My Commission expires March 30, 1950.)

raine on Broadway, an interviewer asked her if she'd do the play in Swedish in Stockholm. "Oh, no—I couldn't," replied Ingrid. Well, her answer was twisted to mean she couldn't speak Swedish well enough any more. When the Swedes read that they almost burned down their icebergs—and Ingrid was very embarrassed. What she'd meant, of course, was that she'd be far too busy in Hollywood to consider the project.

Ingrid Bergman has been pretty thoroughly Americanized in her seven years in this country. As we talked it was hard for me to detect a trace of the undulating Scandinavian rhythm; occasionally a "Yah" pops out, but not often. Ingrid has worked steadily—and still does—with her best friend and English coach, Ruth Roberts, to tailor her tongue to American ears. She and her husband, Peter, never speak Swedish at home, and in public only when they've a private thought to communicate. Even then Ingrid's likely to punctuate her Svensk with "Don't be silly!" "Okay" or "Nothing doing."

Her daughter, Pia, can't speak a word of Swedish, Ingrid said. Pia's nine now, a tall-for-her-age cotton-blonde. ("I hope she doesn't grow into an elephant like me!" sighed Ingrid.) She's never had a Swedish nurse or governess.

the unpredictable age . . .

Her daughter is another private-life subject on which Ingrid has always preferred to be reticent. But now she answered my questions readily. Pia's in fourth grade at Beverly Hills public school and when I asked Ingrid how she was doing I got a mother's frank appraisal: "Not too well, I'm afraid."

Pia's at the unpredictable growing-girl stage now which baffles most mothers, including Ingrid. The youngster was perfectly content with pigtails, for instance, until her mama came home with a short haircut for Joan of Arc. Then she had to have one, too, and to keep peace Ingrid trotted her down to the studio and observed wistfully while her hairdresser snipped Pia's curls.

During Pia's early years, Ingrid firmly refused to allow the child to watch her making a film. But she finally admitted Pia on a set to see her act in The Bells of St. Mary's. When her scene was over, Ingrid asked Pia how she liked it.

"Oh," said Pia in her best blasé tones, "it looks easy. I could do that!"

The Bells was Pia's first full-length look at her mother on the screen. What wowed Pia then was the boxing bout Ingrid staged with her boy pupil. She thought it was terribly funny when Mama got clipped on the jaw.

Ingrid's not training Pia to be an actress or even thinking about it, yet, she said. Later, if Pia follows in her footsteps, that'll be fine with Ingrid and she'll try to teach her everything she knows. Right now, she said, she's very relaxed about her daughter's future, and she couldn't say whether or not Pia had an ounce of acting talent.

"But she loves to play-act and dress up all the time," Ingrid admitted. Pia makes up her own plays and acts out all the parts. "I'm her audience and critic," admitted Ingrid. "We take everything she does apart—and sometimes she takes apart everything I do, too."

Ingrid has never been anywhere for long without having Pia around. Her stay here without her daughter for Intermezzo, Bergman's first Hollywood film, was pretty unhappy. I know she kept a picture of Pia inside her makeup box and used to close her dressing-room door and have a good cry almost every day, then try to walk off her loneliness at night along the foggy streets of Culver Peggy Diggins' smile wins her a story-book career!

Peggy Diggins, Beauty Director at famed John Robert Powers School, attracts glamorous assignments wherever she goes. Peggy's charming smile was first spotted by a famous columnist, who launched her on a promising movie career.

When war began, Peggy left Hollywood to join the WAC. Overseas, another exciting task awaited her—as a war correspondent, she interviewed world-famous people. Now marriage and motherhood keep Peggy in New York. Her winning smile serves as a shining example to her Powers students. It's a Pepsodent Smile! Peggy says, "Using Pepsodent is part of my beauty routine."

The smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile!

Peggy Diggins knows it. And people all over America agree—the smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile! They've seen how Pepsodent removes the film that makes teeth look dull—uncovers new brightness in their smiles!

Wins 3 to 1 over any other tooth paste—families from coast to coast recently compared New Pepsodent with the tooth paste they were using at home. By an average of 3 to 1, they said Pepsodent tastes better, makes breath cleaner and teeth brighter than any other tooth paste they tried. For the safety of your smile use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year!

ANOTHER FINE LEVER BROTHERS PRODUCT

DELICIOUS! NUTRITIOUS!
Manley's
Hi Pop
POPCORN

IN BAGS OR BOXES FRESH FROM Manley POPCORN MACHINES

IN PACKAGES FOR POPPING AT HOME

Get hot, fresh, delicious Hi Pop Popcorn anywhere—the Nation's popular food confection. Served from sparkling Manley Popcorn Machines at your movie theatre and variety store or wherever good popcorn is sold. Ask your food store for Hi Pop in the red and white candy cane package. Make your own popcorn at home. Remember—Hi Pop is the same fine corn movie shows feature.

For the love of your life a Bluebird Cedar Hope Chest for Christmas

No. 660—48RT

You'll lose your heart to a Bluebird Cedar Hope Chest the moment you see it . . . for these spacious beauties in exotic veneers of rare woods are the very finest of all cedar chests. Write now for a free illustrated folder; see them at leading stores from coast to coast.

Dillingham Mfg. Co.
122 N. COMMERCE ST. SHEBOYGAN WIS.
Furniture Craftsmen Since 1857

City. Her daughter's the apple of her eye and the flower of her heart—along with the other member of her family, her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom.

Ingrid has no close relatives left in the world—her mother died when she was two, and her father when she was 12—and she centers all her affections on those two hungrily. You don't hear much about the private life of Ingrid and Peter (this has been the Number One topic on Ingrid's list of things she won't talk about) but I know they're idyllically mated—and pretty sentimental, too.

For instance, last New Year's, when Ingrid was East in Joan of Lorraine, Peter grabbed a plane and flew East to see her, arriving the afternoon of New Year's Eve. They stepped out that night at the Cotillion Room of the Pierre and danced the New Year in. The next afternoon, Peter was flying back to his Los Angeles hospital job. He'd made the trip because New Year's Eve is their very special night and has been ever since they met.

Ingrid has always been fiercely proud of her husband's profession and she's always sized it up as being twice as important as her own. Peter has just been appointed resident neuro-surgeon for the Los Angeles General Hospital, a mighty important post.

Sometimes their two completely different careers make them strangers for days, Ingrid said. Sometimes Ingrid's husband drags home at 3 A.M., sometimes he leaves earlier than that. He often works Christmas and holidays. But whether Ingrid is deep in a picture part or not she's always wrapped up in what he's doing. His doctor friends are the most regular guests at their home and she's even watched one operation of Peter's—on a nine-year-old boy, to remove a brain tumor. (She told me she steeled herself for hours before, not to be squeamish, and she worried far more over how she'd act at that event than she ever did over a movie scene.)

Then Ingrid gave me an intimate little sidelight on her relationship with Peter. "There's one thing my husband is always kidding me about," she smiled. "I've overcome a lot of things since I've been in America, but I still hate to be stared at. I'm always sneaking into little cafés and having a good time until somebody says 'Look!' Then the whole room, it seems, bends its eyes on me and I have to leave. I've fled stores so many times, just as the shopping was getting interesting, because a crowd collected."

Ingrid laughed, "My husband kids me a lot about that. 'You don't like people to stare at you,' he says, 'yet you're always staring like a hick at other celebrities yourself.' That's true. I'll grab his arm and say, 'Look, look—there's Bette Davis!' or someone when I should know better.

"Well, I'm guilty. I stare. But I don't see why people have to stare at me so long.

so here goes! . . .

"Anyway, at Sun Valley it used to be a nightmare for me to start down that slope on skis. The sides were always lined with people and I knew I would be so bad. I could see amateur cameras pointing my way and I could picture myself upside down, pointing six different directions awkardly in a spill, or wobbling wildly while movie cameras kept grinding, grinding. So I just stayed at the top being miserable, when I was dying to learn to ski.

"But one time not long ago it suddenly occurred to me that, stared-at or not, I must live my life—and I wanted to ski. So here goes, I said! I slipped and slid and wobbled down—but after a time or two I didn't care who watched. I cured myself of that and I had a grand time."

Ingrid's full of little surprise items like that when you warm her up and get her talking. I dragged out another one when I asked her why she was still such a homebody, if she's blunted the edges of her self-consciousness. "Don't you like to go out at night?" I asked her. (I know she's a divine dancer; Ray Milland told me once Ingrid was light as a feather.) And although I never see her in public much around Hollywood, it was getting harder and harder to picture Bergman as the Alice-sit-by-the-fire you usually hear about.

"I love to go out," Ingrid came back at me. "In New York I never ate dinner until midnight, after the show. Then I was always asking, 'Where do we go now?' There were so many interesting places to go and things to do. I adore New York," glowed Bergman. "Hollywood is an ideal place to work. There's absolutely nothing to distract you. But as a place to enjoy—well, Hollywood has little that attracts me. And so I just stay home."

no ivory tower . . .

But hugging her hearth does not mean that Bergman is living in an ivory tower, remote from the whirling world. Not at all. She's very sociable and keeps her house crowded with her good friends—among them Ruth Roberts; Signe Hasso (the Swedish actress who went through the Royal Dramatic Theatre in Stockholm ahead of her, and who has always been Ingrid's acting idol); Alfred Hitchcock and his wife; Lewis Milestone; the Charles Boyers, and the Gary Coopers. Larry Adler, the harmonica player, and Jack Benny, both of whom traveled with her through Germany on a wartime GI entertainment tour, drop by often. Ingrid likes concentrated conversation. She loves to pump people who can tell her things she doesn't know about art, philosophy, medicine, politics. But she can also be bright with small-talk. She can even be whacky if she gets an idea. Her witch ride Hallowe'en before last proved that beyond any doubt.

It started when Victor Fleming, directing Ingrid in Joan of Arc, caught a cold and stayed home in bed. After a couple of idle days, Bergman called him and quipped, "If you don't hurry and get well, I'm coming over like a witch and scare you out of bed! This is Hallowe'en, you know."

Walking away from the phone she thought, "Why not?" So she hustled to her makeup man, Jack Pierce, and soon was the most horrible-looking hag you'd care to shudder at. She drove to Bel Air—and rode her broom into Vic's house, clawing and screaming. He got well fast.

Then Ingrid decided her makeup was too good to waste. She buzzed over to Leo McCarey's to give him the terror treatment, and on to Al Hitchcock's to scare him out of bed, too. Along the way, plenty of Hollywood citizens got a startled eyeful of Ingrid Bergman in her frightwig.

But quieter joys are her real recreation. She reads three and four books a week, working or not. She's absolutely greedy about seeing plays, too. Once Ingrid was in New York for an 11-day visit. She saw 14 plays—one a night, plus three matinées! In Hollywood, she loves to shop at the Farmers' Market. She also loves to eat, but hates to cook.

Ingrid stacks on weight rather easily, so she goes light on breakfast with coffee, fruit and a muffin, a cottage-cheese lunch and then a whopping dinner. If she can stave off her weakness, nibbling throughout the day, she's safe. Her figure looked super-trim the day I saw her, and she's dressing much more smartly since being exposed to Manhattan styles last year. Incidentally, we've seen more of the Bergman silhouette in Arch of Triumph than the camera had hitherto exposed, and if she does Adam and Eve for Leo McCarey (she said she probably will—but the script's not written yet), well—Bergman in fig-leaves—could you take it?

Ingrid has no prudish complexes whatever about how she appears, if it's in line with her art. You hear she never wears makeup. I asked her and she blasted that fiction pronto. "Of course I'll wear makeup, all that's needed, if the part calls for it."

Ingrid's as curious as a cat professionally, too. She was in New York once when Mae West was starring in a bawdy burlesque, Katherine Was Great. Bergman told some friends she wanted to see it. They shuddered.

"Why?" they asked her. "It's a lousy play. You'd be bored with it. And Mae West—she's not your type at all!"

Ingrid shook her head. "She must have something," she persisted. "I'd like to know what it is. Maybe I can learn something from her." So she went.

Ingrid seemed a little wistful to me when I asked her whether she had any other great goal or ambition to take the place of Joan of Arc.

"No, not yet," she said. "How could I? When I started the picture, it was like someone handing me a shining castle, one I had dreamed about forever. But," she said, "one of these days I'll have to find something."

She will, I'm sure—because Ingrid Bergman is not only a great actress but a human being, warm with feeling and the capacity to love ideals and her fellow man.

I looked at my watch. Two hours of frank talk with the bashful Bergman! Uncooperative? I couldn't help but wonder how long I'd have lasted with the unsociable Greta Garbo.

On the steps, I couldn't resist the question, "Ingrid, have you ever met Greta Garbo?"

She blushed and shook her head. "No—well, yes, once," she corrected, "but so briefly. I was in a store and someone quickly introduced us. She just said, 'How do you do'."

"Then what happened?" I wanted to know.

"Why," laughed Ingrid, "she disappeared."

Then I reluctantly did a Garbo myself. But I was happy. For I'd learned a number of new things about the mystery woman (huh!), the shy (my eye!) recluse (pooh!) that we've long ago unofficially crowned queen of Hollywood stars.

And I'm happy to be able to pass them along. It's a shame someone hasn't before.

THE END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

This was the last Sunday for Roy Rogers at the Boston Garden. When he came to the microphone he asked for the spotlights to be dimmed. Three of the lights went out, but the fourth stayed on. The other men at the microphone backed away when Roy took his gun out of its holster, shot out the lights and went back to his song. He certainly has good aim!

Catherine Kelley
Everett, Mass.

BRILLIANT, WORLD-FAMOUS STAGE STAR . . . says:

"for Dream hands, Cream your hands!"

Lynn Fontanne says: "An actress's hands must be beautifully groomed . . . that's why I CREAM my hands . . . with Pacquins, of course!"

Try her method for 3 days . . . a 12-second hand massage with non-sticky, non-greasy

Pacquins Hand Cream

. . . morning . . . night . . . and whenever housework roughens your hands!

TRY THE hand beauty treatment of famous stars . . . a Pacquins massage morning . . . night . . . whenever skin needs softening. Your own softer, smoother hands will tell you why Pacquins is the largest-selling hand cream in the world!

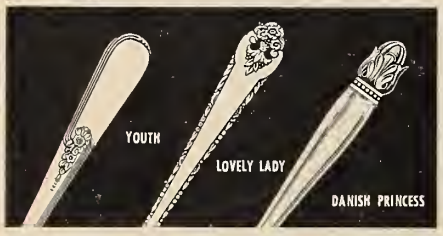
When household tasks roughen or chap your hands, regular Pacquins massage softens them . . . soothes them, and Pacquins will never leave any greasy after-film.

Keep Pacquins within reach and for dream hands . . . take a hint from lovely Lynn Fontanne: cream, cream, CREAM your hands with Pacquins!

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins are:
GLADYS SWARTHOUT • VERA ZORINA
RISE STEVENS • GERTRUDE LAWRENCE

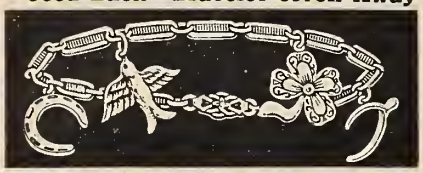
GLENYA WESTBROOK, NURSE: "Pacquins and I are old friends. It was originally formulated for nurses and doctors. Nurses' hands take a beating—30 to 40 washings and scrubbings a day. We must have this kind of hand care."

On sale at all cosmetic counters in United States and Canada



Also: For extra dry Skin—
Red Label Pacquins contains Lanolin

You ought to know about these



These are the two blocks of sterling inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks to make Holmes & Edwards silverplate stay lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 with chest. (No Federal Tax.) All patterns made in the U. S. A.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID*
SILVERPLATE

Copyright 1948, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"Good-Luck" Bracelet Given Away

Girls believe it "good-luck" to wear this charm bracelet. It has fancy chain in 14-k electroplate finish with sure grip clasp. The charms are most attractive—consisting of a Four-leaf-clover, Bluebird, Wishbone and Horse-shoe. GIVEN for selling only 4 Rosebud Salve at 25c a box returning the $1.00. Order 4 salve—Send No Money. (We will mail your Bracelet and 4 salve NOW if you send $1.00 with order).
ROSEBUD PERFUME CO. Box 20, WOODSBORO, MARYLAND.

To Get It Use Shampoo Made Specially for Blondes . . . containing ANDIUM

The newest shade of blonde hair is soft, shining, lovely. To keep it light—but not hard, brittle looking—use BLONDEX the home shampoo that contains amazing new ANDIUM for extra lightness and SHINE. Instantly removes the dingy film that makes hair dark, old-looking. Washes hair shades lighter, gives lustrous highlights. Takes only 11 minutes. Safe for children. Get BLONDEX at 10¢, drug and department stores.

HOLLYWOOD'S MYSTERY ROMANCES

(Continued from page 56)

an Eastern columnist's item about her switch to dates with Lew Ayres, Myrna choked on a giggle and said, "That would be the most unusual romance I never had. You see, I've never met Lew Ayres."

All this confusion is one thing that makes life interesting anywhere, whether in Hollywood or Popopolis, Nebraska. It's impossible to state emphatically when an emotion will sail into the heart and mind of any boy or girl and upset the entire future as seen in the crystal ball.

Only one thing is certain. When a man carries a torch, his dates are going to be as scattered as a double shotgun blast. That's the case with Ronald Reagan. Columnists haven't been able to get it out of their minds that Ronnie will go back to Jane Wyman because their marriage seemed to be so perfect.

For instance, on a recent evening Ronnie came into the pint-sized restaurant known as the Bantam Cock alone. This charming little cafe is now the gathering spot and kick-off place for bachelors, romances and romantic bust-ups. On this particular evening, Ronnie was more cheerful than he had been in weeks.

hot tip . . .

"Watch," a columnist said to another. "In a couple minutes you'll see Jane Wyman come in. I've been tipped off that there will be a reconciliation."

Sure enough, Jane did come in. She and Ronnie retired to a corner booth. They sat close together. As he talked he touched her hand.

"See?" the columnists declared in triumph. "It's just like I said—they're getting back together. Boy, I've seen all I need for a sure-shot prediction tomorrow."

The columnist left, happy in the thought of his little scoop. But what a dope he was. He should have stood around, for ten minutes later Jane and Ronnie were joined by two other individuals—both male. Ronnie didn't look too happy. After a while, he left. After a longer while, Jane left with the two escorts, both unknown to the movie world.

The answer? Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan tried one reconciliation. It didn't work. The chances are heavily against another attempt. Frankly, Ronnie is carrying a torch—one that could be used on the Statue of Liberty, it's that bright. But what almost everyone overlooks is that Ronnie's torch is lit as much for the state of matrimony and the incomparable happiness that comes with daily association between a father and his kids as it is for Jane.

And now? Well, Ronnie has taken out Doris Lilly, Nancy Duke, Betty Underwood, Ann Lawrence, Patricia Neal, Ann Sothern and most recently Monica Lewis, the lovely singer who has just returned to New York. He appears to like Monica better than any of them, considering he had four dates in a row before her departure, but who's to tell what's going to happen when he finally puts down the torch for good?

By then he may have found the girl he wants to marry next—and it is a safe bet that Ronnie will marry again (if he doesn't do the unexpected and go back to Jane) long before such stalwart characters as Clark Gable and Jimmy Stewart are ready to settle down.

Not that Ronnie isn't stalwart. He's a real guy and the best husband material loose in these parts, but don't try to figure his next move or believe everything you read.

Sometimes these torch-carrying situations bounce with dramatic effect and no one thinks to look backwards to find out what really happened.

Consider the case of Bob Walker. He took his divorce from Jennifer Jones hard. Like Ronald Reagan he had a tough time forgetting his former bride but a much worse tussle taking the loss of daily association with his children in stride. It's not funny when a man is the good father type.

When Bob Walker put down the torch, he put it down for good. He still spent long hours with his children at every opportunity. They are crazy about him and vice versa, but in his personal life, Bob became a cynic. He'd make a date with a girl and stand her up. He'd be at a party and just walk out on his date. He was confused and his subconscious seemed to be bent on proving that he didn't care a darn for any female. The old policy of hurt rather than get hurt. So Bob eventually married Barbara Ford.

It was a sad mistake.

A mistake which perhaps might be rectified if the love between the two were strong enough. The trouble is that they hadn't known each other long enough—long enough, perhaps, for Barbara to fully understand Bob, and for Bob to have resumed a completely normal attitude toward women in general.

At any rate, two days before they were married, Barbara spent a long weekend on the yacht where she's lived most of the time since childhood. Her father, John Ford, is a quiet, stern-visaged individual, known for his deeply religious convictions and his big heart. He didn't want Barbara to wed a man who'd been divorced. Barbara thought she knew better and so did Bob.

They didn't take into consideration the truth—that a man who has had one or more unfortunate romances is not sure of what he wants. Actually, Bob was on the verge of falling in love with someone else shortly before he married Barbara, and that girl was Ava Gardner. They had been seeing a lot of each other, until an accident happened that put an end to the budding romance.

Actually, the climax to Barbara and

Earl's Pearls

■ Lois Andrews, married but separated from a Hollywood actor, doesn't plan a divorce just now, and explains it with this logic: "I do not want to get unmarried because you see, as long as I'm married, then I can't get married. . . ."

■ Dick Wilson: "The single girl looks for a husband every day and the married woman looks for one every night."

■ Groucho Marx, now filming Love Happy, insisted that publicity for stars was needed. Without publicity, he said, people say, "Groucho Marx? Never heard of him." With publicity, they say, "Groucho Marx? That bum!"

■ "I saw a movie so old," says Milton Berle, "it should be on television . . ."

■ "An income tax reduction," says Jackie Gleason, "is the kindest cut of all."

—Earl Wilson

Bob's romantic troubles began a long way back with a series of emotional accidents, none related to the other. There was Ava Gardner who had been hurt by two previous marriages, with Mickey Rooney and Artie Shaw. Until then Ava's own personality had been a light hidden under a bushel of male dominance. When she emerged, she was determined never to let it happen again.

Then Howard Duff entered the picture. Few people know it, but he was on the verge of marrying a girl before the war. He made up his mind that she was the one while he was on Saipan. His declaration of intentions was almost on its way when the girl married someone else. A year later, Howard emerged from the war to become the famous Sam Spade of radio. From there he stepped into pictures. He wanted no part of one woman. He was playing the field. He met Yvonne de Carlo. They dated steadily, but not exclusively.

One day he dropped into the dressing room of Burt Lancaster. By accident, Ava Gardner was there. They liked each other. A little later people stopped talking about Bob Walker and Ava Gardner. Now it was Duff and Gardner. What happened is not known in detail because Howard Duff and Bob Walker have a solid virtue in common. They are not lippy.

emotional climax . . .

But the emotional atoms were at work. One bounced off another until a climax was reached in the Walker-Ford wedding.

Of course, after the fashion of people who wake up with hangovers, there are always those among us who wake up after a broken romance and declare, "Never again!" That's the way Howard and Ava and Bob all felt, and the only conclusion that can be drawn when it's all summed up is, "It shouldn't have happened to a nice girl like Barbara."

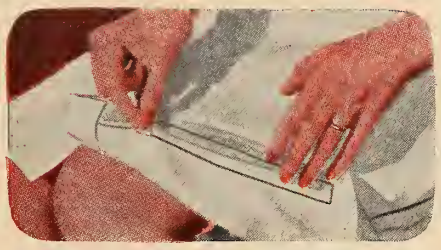
There's nobody to be censured, for like the ancient defense against crimes of violence, when it comes to people in love the verdict must always be, "Not guilty and not guilty by reason of (temporary) insanity."

Obviously, because it is true that sweethearts everywhere are in a state of coma, the alert press of Hollywood cannot be blamed for not reporting anything but conflicting stories when those involved in romances don't know the answer themselves. Except for certain "pat" situations, Hollywood heart situations are like a closely contested basketball game, the answer to which is in doubt until the final whistle. And even then a tie score may result in an extra period.

Of course, there is the old business of "publicity romances." Rory Calhoun had one with Vera-Ellen.

They seldom rush off to get married and the resultant friendships make for interesting reading. It's no one's fault if impressionable people go off the deep end and figure that a hot romance is going on. That's why everyone—almost—was amazed when Rory suddenly upped and married Lita Baron, formerly known as Isabelita (see page 44).

The facts are that Rory for many weeks had been dating the pretty singer four-to-one to the times he saw Vera-Ellen. On the other hand, the Guy Madison-Gail Russell romance which started out to be purely a publicity gimmick seems to be moving toward a permanent cementing.



Dating for publicity's sake is an old and honored practice in Hollywood. Consider Pete Lawford. Pete is a very ambitious fellow. A few years back he used to cheerfully complain, "What's the matter with me? I'm not such a lousy actor. I get good parts, but nobody knows me. I might as well be Peter the Hermit."

"The thing for you to do," he was told

"As soon as Daisy gets to know you better, we'll take off the 'Scotch' Tape."

Tape it easy
with "SCOTCH" TAPE

SKIRT HEM RIPPED? A strip of transparent "Scotch" Cellulose Tape makes a quick temporary repair.

FIRST AID INSTRUCTIONS taped on inside of medicine cabinet door are helpful in emergencies.

PREVENT GARMENT SNAGS by covering clothespin jaws with smooth-surfaced "Scotch" Tape.

"Scotch" Brand Tape is transparent as glass, seals without moistening. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., St. Paul 6, Minn.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND Cellulose TAPE

MADE BY THE "3M" COMPANY . . . also makers of "3M" Abrasives, Adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry.

3M COMPANY

General Export: DUREX ABRASIVES CORP., 63 Wall St., New York 5, N. Y.
In Canada: CANADIAN DUREX ABRASIVES LTD., Brantford, Ontario

©1948 3M CO.

"PAIN" DAYS
CAN BE
PLAY DAYS

MIDOL

RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL
PERIODIC PAIN
CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

"What a difference Midol makes"

MIDOL
RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"

by a studio friend, "is to whip up a little romance publicity."

Pete went to work on the idea. At the time he had very little money, so he didn't go the Mocambo route. But before very long his name was linked with popular names, one after another. The results were pleasing. Every time you picked up a newspaper, Pete's name was in the gossip columns. The same for magazines.

Today, Pete doesn't have to date for "sweet publicity's sake." Nevertheless, when he takes a good long look at what happens to the general run of marriages, he's a wary boy and he is not exactly allergic to the thought that he is one of the few remaining bachelors in Hollywood who make romantic news. It's part of the business.

That's why, when you see Pete's name linked with Jane Wyman, he's not to be considered the reason Janey doesn't go back to Ronald Reagan. The same goes for his dates with Ann Miller, the couple of dates with Rita Hayworth. The time to wonder what's happening with Pete is when his name is not in the columns as sparking with this girl or that. It will mean that Pete has "gone underground" in the Hollywood romance field and he's about to come up with a bride.

permanent bachelors . .

Of course, Pete is not in a class with bachelor characters like Bruce Cabot. A suave, handsome oldtimer who can still spot any of the new glamor boys eight phone numbers and never get lonesome, Bruce doesn't bother with "serious" intentions to start a romance. He's a fellow who's not trying to prove anything. Either a girl wants to date him or she doesn't and everyone knows he's a permanent bachelor.

The same thing goes for Cary Grant, who has long enjoyed an acute attack of singleitus. Newspaper predictions that he would marry Betty Hensel—who is now one of the most beautiful models ever to be stared at on the floor at Adrian's in Beverly Hills—would fill a book. It's happening all over again with Betsy Drake. Of course, Cary can weaken, but less impressionable friends of Mr. Grant's are already insisting that the star is more fascinated with Betsy's promise as a future star than he is about a possible career for her as his wife.

Lew Ayres also ceased to be the marrying type a long time ago and he is such an habitual bachelor that the columnists have even ceased to revive that old one about Lew not having been able to forget Ginger Rogers. His dates with Jane Wyman are not serious.

Similarly, the talk about Deanna Durbin and Vincent Price may be marked down as a large cut of whole cloth.

Not so in the case of Greer Garson and Bud Fogelson, the Texas oil man. Greer's dates with Georgie Jessel were for laughs. She was a lonesome gal until she ran into the enterprising Fogelson, one of the most likable characters ever to hit Hollywood.

It is Fogelson who several years ago revealed himself to be a big-time man of action when he was puzzled by the question: "Why is it that grey horses don't win as many races as other horses?"

"That's easy," a jockey told him. "There aren't as many grey horses."

This sounded reasonable. But Fogelson decided to test it. He did so, spectacularly. He began to buy grey horses. Before long he had more grey horses than anyone else. In fact, he had as many grey horses as the average stable owner had other-colored horses. He began to race them at Del Mar back in 1938, and sure enough, it turned out that if a racing stable had as many grey horses as other stables had brown and black horses, there'd be many grey winners.

Fogelson met Greer at a party. His sense of humor matched hers. They have no bankroll problem. Hence they have no career problem. They have no problems, period. As a result they are an exceedingly good bet in the future book for marriage.

But what of Richard Ney? There's no question but that he still is deeply fond of Greer. For a time, whenever Ney walked into a restaurant or a theater and discovered Greer present, he did a fade-out. This is a normal reaction because no two recently divorced people get any laughs out of sitting in the same restaurant and being stared at. In the meantime, Richard Ney apparently is not too happy. His dates are scattered and not serious. Studio people took notice of the fact that he had dinner a couple of times with Madeleine Carroll before she left to do a New York stage play. They took note because Madeleine is older than Ney and the suspicion is that Ney is generally more attracted to older women.

But there can be nothing more than friendship of the acting sort between these two because Madeleine is married. Her husband is in Europe, or was at the time, and she naturally had dinner with several friends. Perhaps Ney and Miss Carroll had something in common to talk about because her marriage to Sterling Hayden began to flounder originally because of the disparity in ages. The allegation of the experts was that Madeleine couldn't forget that Sterling was a bit younger, although he continually protested that this made no difference. If this is true, it may be equally true from the male standpoint with Richard Ney and Greer Garson.

Back of all these mysteries and the constant microscopic examination of the stars' private lives is considerable heartache which none of them desire and few of them deserve. True, movie stars differ from other people in the size of their bankrolls and the glamor of their lives—but their heart problems are the same as those of anyone else.

Meantime, we will all go on reading the daily puzzle columns. We'll find out that it's now really serious between Diana Lynn and Bob Neal—as indeed it isn't but could be . . . that Joan Crawford has quarreled with her attorney, Greg Bautzer—as indeed she sometimes does, except with less frequency as time goes by . . . that Roddy McDowall is interested in Ann Blythe and something will come of it—as it well might if Roddy continues to grow up, as he will . . . that David May is jealous of anyone who pays too much attention to Beverly Tyler . . .

Fascinating people, these romantic Hollywoodians. THE END

HOW TIME FLIES!

■ Our movie reviewer wrote of Bing Crosby's performance in Sing You Sinners: "The Groaner has always been a likable screen personality, but now for the first time in his career he really acts. . . . Bing will probably never win an Academy Oscar for his histrionics, but he does play a drunk scene . . . beautifully."—From a 1938 issue of Modern Screen

MY ONE AND ONLY

(Continued from page 44)

when she was brought to this country from Madrid . . . who first sensed the immensity of America in the shadow and noise of the giant automobile plants at Detroit . . . who wanted to grow and learn quickly to become a part of this new life . . . but took such long years about it.

I wanted to tell him that this girl had dreams . . . dreams that she thought were answered when she got a chance to sing, to travel, to find for herself a place in the world of music and art. But that she was wrong. All this was not the answer to her dreams. That answer was . . . well, that was what I was singing about. I had finally found the answer!

Up to now he had been coming in with friends; sometimes men, sometimes girls. Then, one night in March he came in alone. He was dressed in his dark blue suit—that, I found out later, he calls his "Diamond Jim Brady" outfit. It was a night in which he had started out by dining alone at the Bel Air—in a booth usually reserved for Greta Garbo. And he had come to the Mocambo planning to talk to me.

no introduction needed . . .

He didn't send someone to ask if I would come to his table. He didn't ask anyone to introduce us—though he was aware that many people he knew there, knew me as well. No. He waited until a moment came when I was walking by his table, and then he rose to his feet and spoke right out. For a second I only knew that he was tall above me . . . and that he was . . . and he was actually talking to me!

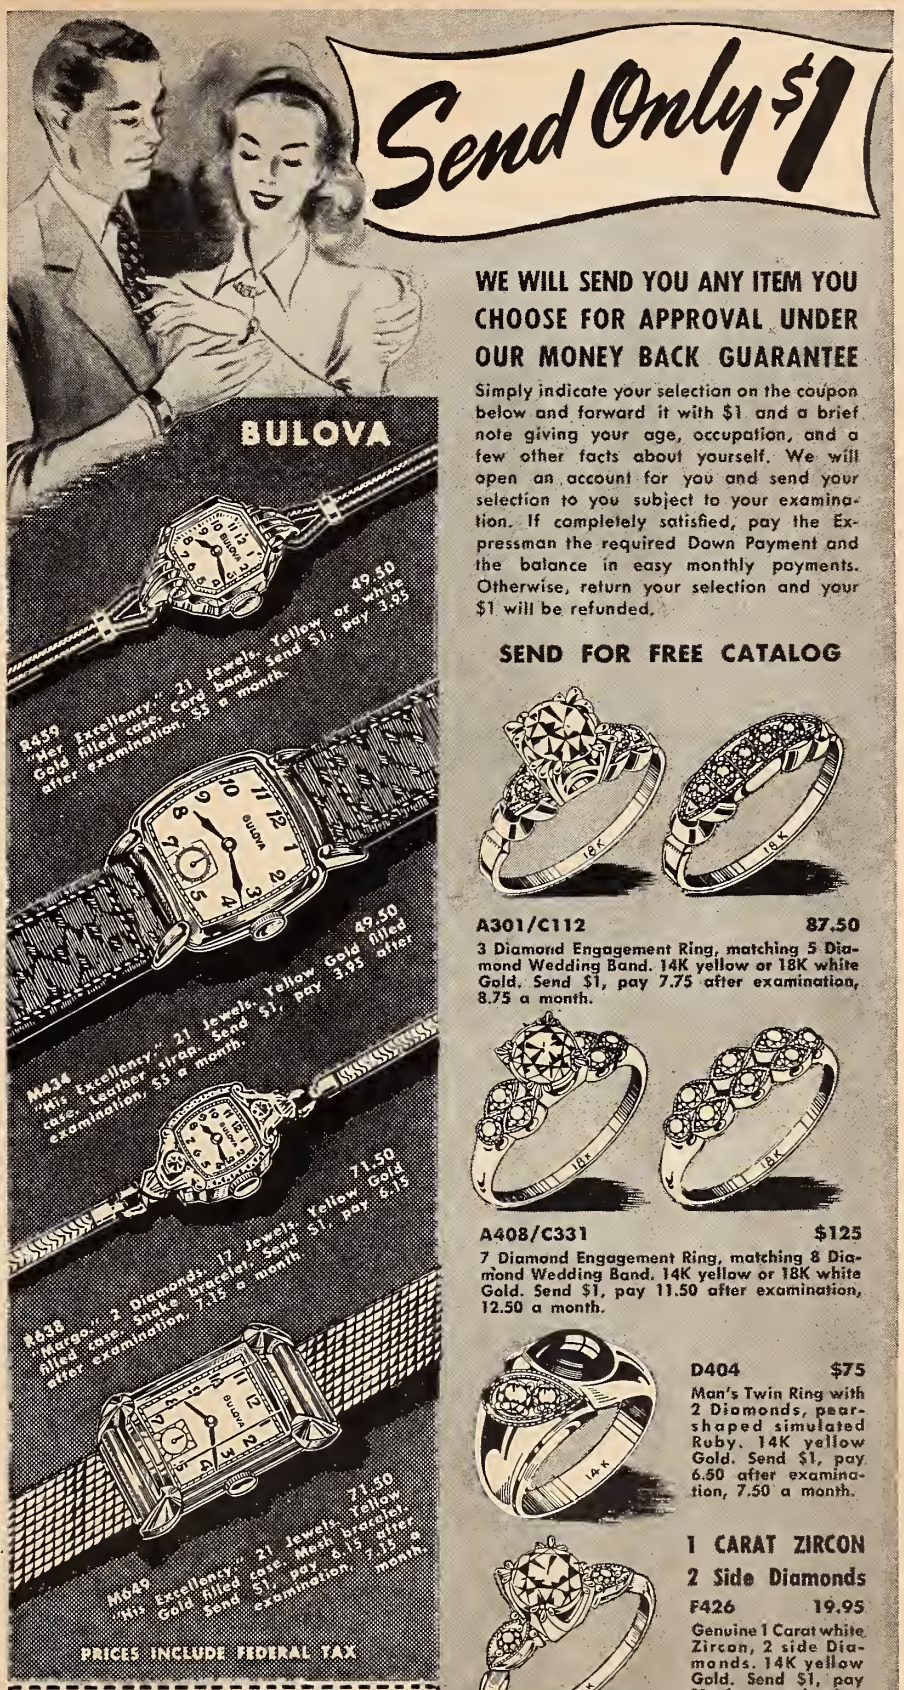
"Hello," he said. "I've been wondering if you would sit with me."

Quick things went through my mind. I remember thinking, "That's not really a question, Isabelita. He has actually merely made a statement. All you have to do is say, 'Oh, have you?' and walk on."

But the next second I was sitting down. It wasn't at all what I had expected to find myself doing. And then he was giving me a glass. "What are you doing?" I asked myself as I took it. "There is champagne in that glass. Don't you know you never drink . . . ?"

Of course I knew. I distinctly remember telling him that I never drank. And then I was drinking the wine and neither one of us noticed it because he was saying something so earnestly that it seemed not only to take all the saying he could put into it—but all the listening I could give him.

"I know you've noticed me here all the time looking at you," he said. "Maybe you've wondered why I never tried to meet you. I avoided it on purpose, because I knew that when it did happen I would fall in love with you the same instant."



After a moment I realized I was staring. And it came to me that he had said, ". . . fall in love with you the same instant." He went on from there.

"Tonight I want just that to happen," he said simply.

So this is what we both couldn't take; this is when we found it a relief to laugh and kid each other. He acted as if he were terribly disappointed with my speaking voice, and said that maybe it would have been better if I hadn't taken elocution at Wayne University in Detroit.

"I thought you would talk the way you sing—with a Latin accent," he said. "You know, like Carmen Miranda."

"You mees thees?" I asked, as Latin as

WE WILL SEND YOU ANY ITEM YOU CHOOSE FOR APPROVAL UNDER OUR MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Simply indicate your selection on the coupon below and forward it with $1 and a brief note giving your age, occupation, and a few other facts about yourself. We will open an account for you and send your selection to you subject to your examination. If completely satisfied, pay the Expressman the required Down Payment and the balance in easy monthly payments. Otherwise, return your selection and your $1 will be refunded.

SEND FOR FREE CATALOG

A301/C112 87.50

3 Diamond Engagement Ring, matching 5 Diamond Wedding Band. 14K yellow or 18K white Gold. Send $1, pay 7.75 after examination, 8.75 a month.

A408/C331 $125

7 Diamond Engagement Ring, matching 8 Diamond Wedding Band. 14K yellow or 18K white Gold. Send $1, pay 11.50 after examination, 12.50 a month.

D404 $75

Man's Twin Ring with 2 Diamonds, pear-shaped simulated Ruby. 14K yellow Gold. Send $1, pay 6.50 after examination, 7.50 a month.

1 CARAT ZIRCON
2 Side Diamonds
F426 19.95

Genuine 1 Carat white Zircon, 2 side Diamonds. 14K yellow Gold. Send $1, pay $1 after examination, $5 a month.

New York's Largest Mail Order Jewelers
Established 1878

L. W. Sweet

MAIL ORDER DIVISION FINLAY STRAUS, INC.
25 W. 14th St., NEW YORK 11, N. Y. Dept. D3

SEND $1 WITH COUPON — PAY BALANCE OF DOWN PAYMENT AFTER EXAMINATION

L. W. Sweet, 25 West 14th St. (Dept. D3)
New York 11, N. Y.
Enclosed find $1 deposit. Send me No._____
Price $_____ After examination, I agree to pay $_____ and required balance monthly thereafter until full price is paid, otherwise I'll return selection and you will refund my dollar.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Give your hair the NEW

"Sleek Look"

• The "Sleek Look" is the "New Look" in hairdos. So pat on a few drops of Nestle Hair Lacquer and keep your hair smooth and glamorous all day long. This delicately perfumed hair lacquer is ideal for all hairstyles. Absolutely safe. In 10¢, 25¢ and 50¢ sizes at beauty counters everywhere.

Nestle HAIR LACQUER

Made by Nestle—originators of permanent waving and makers of the famous Nestle Colorinse—Meriden, Conn.

Fibs tampons

Rounded Ends

See how the gently rounded ends make Fibs tampons really easy to use!

"Quilted" Comfort

Only Fibs are quilted . . . to keep Fibs from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size!

"Quilted" Safety

Fibs' quilting helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues!

Internal Sanitary Protection

T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF

I could make it. "Eef you do, I can talk like that—but, believe me, señor, eet ees hard for me without music."

We laughed and he said, "No! I like you better without the accent. It's as if you had a double personality."

Later, he asked if he could drive me home. Naturally, I accepted. I saw some pictures of him in the back of his car and told him I would be one of his strongest fans if he would autograph one for me. He wrote something swiftly and I read, "For Isabelita, a wonderful, sweet person and it is my pleasure to know you." It was nice . . . but perhaps written a little too swiftly, too formally?

On the way home he seemed to hunt up all the traffic lights in the city, managing it so that he stopped for the red light at each one. Then he stopped at a drive-in. Then he stopped so we could see the lights of Hollywood below. Then he thought we should stop at another drive-in. And then . . . well, he just stopped!

getting serious . . .

I never saw a man who seemed to care less for driving and more for stopping! But each stop and each talk brought us closer together and when at last I ran inside my house I felt that maybe such a wonderful thing could happen in Hollywood after all!

There were other nights afterwards, and mornings and afternoons—whenever we could be together. Little by little we found out that we were getting to be very serious.

One night we talked about the other people we were dating. I talked about the men I knew. He talked about the girls he knew (and whom I had read about and seen with him so often). We kept on talking about them—and then one night, as if someone had thrown us a cue, we started referring to them in the past tense!

What had happened struck us both at the same time. He put his hand on my shoulder.

"Did—did you notice something?" he asked.

"Uh-huh," I answered.

A big smile spread over his face and another one, even bigger, was on mine.

"Gee, that's swell!" he said. "You know, I've been wanting to get into that subject—about the others we go out with."

"Used to go out with, you mean?" I asked.

"That's just what I mean!" he said.

So, from that it wasn't long before the afternoon when Rory's arm went reassuringly around my shoulders as I nervously prepared to enter his home and meet his father and mother . . . and the night when he met my parents and I covered his awkwardness by constantly handing him things, taking them away again, and practically chattering my head off.

There was a special night when Rory and my sister Mary Lou barred me from a room, while they both worked on something, to emerge later with my second autographed picture from him. This one he had written in Spanish, with Mary Lou's help. This one was much better than the first. Translated into English it read, "For Isabelita . . . we are made for each other . . . with all my love and affection . . . always yours, Rory."

Much, much better!

We learned things about each other. I learned that with Rory absence does make the heart grow fonder. I learned that when he was away on location at Durango, Colorado, making Sand for 20th Century-Fox, he did not stop thinking about me. The proof was in a package that came for me one day. When I opened it I saw a silver fox cape; six of the most beautiful, unusual skins I have ever seen. But it wasn't the furs that thrilled me as much as a hint of what was on his mind in the form of the initials he had chosen to be sewed on the inside of the cape.

They weren't just the initials "I. C." that would stand for Isabelita Castro, my real name. The initials were "I. C. C."! Could that second "C" stand for Calhoun—or could it?

"No," said my sister, kidding me. "The furrier has to put that on to show the fur comes from Colorado."

"That's not it," volunteered my brother, Peter, who knows all about everything now that he is in the middle of his college career. "All goods shipped from one state to the other are under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that's what the 'I. C. C.' stands for!"

Our first big formal date almost never came off, because he rushed me and I wouldn't be rushed. He arrived all shining and black-tied, to find me still in rolled-up jeans and knockabout sweater! He poked at me to get started and I balked. We began fencing with outstretched arms for weapons, carrying on the fight through living room, out to the backyard, past the incinerator and in and out the garage. When at last the duel was over, Rory looked a mess—his tuxedo smudged, his shirt wilted and soiled. No party. We had our dinner in the kitchen.

The first big mystery of our romance concerned his former girl friends whom I never seemed to meet at any of the first half-dozen affairs we attended. And I had thought there were so many of them! Then I learned that it wasn't just chance that caused this . . . it was Rory's diplomacy.

About that time we had our first experience with one of Rory's fans (something I knew I would have to get used to). It started off badly but Rory saved the day—or, rather, night.

We were leaving Ciro's one night when he noticed a 15-year-old bobby-soxer whispering to her pals along "autograph row." But she didn't run forward for an autograph. She stood perfectly still while Rory's car was brought up and while he held the door open for me to enter. But when he had entered his side and we were slowly pulling away, the youngster leaped up to him and screamed a "wolf call" right into his ear. He couldn't help being startled and the car jumped badly, almost hitting a pillar before Rory could straighten it.

happy fan . . .

For a minute he was angry—and then he saw the girl standing in deep dismay, her hand to her open mouth as she realized what she had done. Now her friends began to jeer at her and her eyes began to fill.

Rory leaned out of the car and, acting as if she were someone he knew, said, "Oh, it's you!" and blew a kiss to her. As we pulled away her mouth was still open . . . but on her face was the happiest look I have ever seen.

We learned, as we got to know each other, that our instincts matched each other, in idea and practice. Many times we met for a date, to find ourselves with the same inspiration about where to go and even wearing similar combinations—he in his white flannels and blue jacket, I in my white wool, pleated skirt and navy blue coat with sailor collar; or, if we were to "rough" it, he in levis and baby blue shirt and I in my powder blue seersucker skirt and deeper blue blouse.

We had an attunement on the matter of our careers. I shared with him his close attention to all facets of his screen work—and he was delighted that the screen was becoming my own major activity when Columbia gave me one of the leads in Jungle Jim, starring Johnny Weissmuller. (The studio also gave me my nice new name—Lita Baron.)

All this was what we had lived together and known about each other when, one night late in summer, we sat parked on the hill outside my house, the front of his car pointing up at the stars rising in the east, and the orange-colored beams of the Hollywood Bowl searchlights playing over our heads.

He said the many things that a girl wants to hear . . . and remember for the rest of her life.

He spoke of other girls he'd known, saying that in each of them he had found one thing or another to attract him: unusual beauty, a smile, a sense of humor, a way of talking or a way of doing; but in only one girl had he found all of the qualities he really thought important.

He spoke of plans: of a house, and of what kind of house; of the kind of life he wanted to live in it.

He spoke of all this and then he said that I was the girl and the plans were for us. . . .

mind made up . . .

One night, after our marriage, we dropped in at the Mocambo together and Johnny the waiter grinned as he seated us.

"You never had a chance," he kidded Rory. "The minute you walked into the Mocambo last January your goose was cooked. Isabelita and I went after you. It was two-to-one—a cinch!"

Rory laughed—but as if he were especially tickled by something.

"You mean," he said, "that you and Isabelita laid plans to put shackles on me, eh? Well, that works both ways."

"Well . . ." said Johnny. "You know I was only kidding."

"Sure," said Rory. "But I wasn't. Long before you and Isabelita saw me, I saw her."

It was my turn to talk.

"Where? When?" I wanted to know.

Rory leaned over the table and took my hand. "A couple of years ago in my home town, San José," he said. "You sang there with Cugat one night, remember?"

I thought quickly and then recalled the time. "In a theater?" I asked.

"That's right," said Rory. "That's when I fell in love with you. But you were a singing star on the stage and I was just a guy in the audience. What chance did I have? But I made up my mind. Someday—somehow—I would meet you . . . and I did!"

Now Johnny, who is ordinarily so suave, so sure of himself, stood there with his mouth open. Both of us looked at Rory—wondering that something like this could happen, not in a book, not on the screen, but in real life.

And Rory, leaning back in his chair, winked at us. He was enjoying himself hugely.

I hope he always will. THE END

A BIRD IN THE HAND . . .

Got your eye on a Thanksgiving turkey? We've got our eyes on you! But we don't mean any harm. Our arms are full of $5-bills and our hearts are full of kindness. We're in the mood to read your "I Saw It Happen" anecdotes, and to pay $5 for every one we use. So come on, mail your true, short and amusing contributions to the "I Saw It Happen" Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Then set your Thanksgiving table—that bird is flying in!

Love-quiz . . . For Married Women Only

WHY DOES HE TURN HIS BACK ON HIS WIFE'S TEARS?

A. Because she has neglected one precaution, often of major importance to intimate marital happiness.

Q. What is that important precaution that can so greatly help to safeguard marital happiness?

A. The practice of sound feminine hygiene with a scientifically correct preparation for vaginal douching, such as "Lysol" in proper solution.

Q. Why are wives wrong to trust to soap instead?

A. Because soap, like soda or salt, is an old-fashioned makeshift that cannot compare with "Lysol" in germ killing power. Though gentle to delicate membranes, "Lysol" is powerful in the presence of mucus and other organic matter. Destroys the source of objectionable odors . . . kills germs on contact.

Q. Do many women use "Lysol" for feminine hygiene?

A. Three times more women use "Lysol" than all other liquid products combined! Many doctors advise patients to douche regularly with "Lysol" brand disinfectant just to insure daintiness alone. No greasy aftereffect. Use it as often as you want.

KEEP DESIRABLE, by douching regularly with "Lysol." Remember—no other product for feminine hygiene is more reliable than "Lysol" . . . no other product is more effective!

For Feminine Hygiene rely on safe, effective

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Easy to use . . . economical

A Concentrated Germ-Killer

NEW* . . . INTIMATE HYGIENE FACTS

FREE! New booklet of information by reputable gynecological authority. Mail coupon to Lehn & Fink, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

D.M.-4812 Product of Lehn & Fink

Beauty the natural way

The perfect gift for every woman. For who doesn't enjoy the youthful freshness, the bright rosy cheeks, the tingling glow of well being that is the natural aftermath of "Swedish" massage. No longer need this be a luxury enjoyed only by the very wealthy. For that magic machine — brings into the home, the user a quickly skilled operator, all the soothing relaxation, all the invigorating benefits, long associated with "Swedish" massage.

VITALATOR

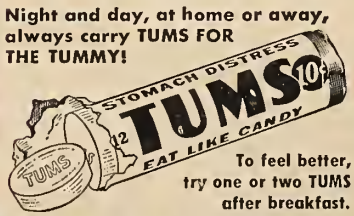
$15.00 At Your Favorite Beauty Counter or Better Drug, Appliance and Dept. Stores

The A. C. Gilbert Company
New Haven, Conn.



When you Take a Trip take heed take

TUMS

To travel in comfort, travel with Tums! Then, if strange food, fast eating, smoking or hurry brings on acid indigestion, slip Tums in your mouth. Almost instantly, Tums neutralize the excess acid—you feel better fast! No baking soda (bicarbonate) in Tums. No danger of over-alkalizing! No acid rebound! Get Tums today.

Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS FOR THE TUMMY!

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

QUICK RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION

NR TUMS are antacid, not a laxative. For a laxative, use mild, all-vegetable NR Tablets (Nature's Remedy). Get a 25-cent box today.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

(Continued from page 58)

British prisons, but he insisted that the man who whipped him really lay it on. (Incidentally, the British refused to send over any research about the cat-o'-nine. They had to find a picture of one in a French crime magazine.) Burt was so welted the next day that he couldn't comfortably wear a shirt, but he feels strongly that scenes of that intensity cannot be faked. He wanted to show four shifts in his character's response to the whipping. First, complete surprise that the first lick could even ruffle his feelings. Second, real hurt as the next few cracks broke down his bluffed bravery. Third, the shift from simple pain to mental imagery of the crime which he is being beaten for. Fourth, complete breakdown as he considers that his guilt is being repaid.

On the screen, the scene is powerful stuff and they were afraid that it might be too much for the public. But it will be left in, almost untouched.

Being a psychological study of a bully, this picture didn't have much of the usual set horseplay during the shooting. The funniest thing that did happen was the day Fontaine outran Lancaster. They were doing a scene in which Burt was supposed to catch Joan just in front of the camera after a long chase. She took off like a deer and Burt, running like a track star, couldn't catch her. Both ran right by the set-up and the take was ruined. Burt, who gets up every morning at six to work out on the UCLA track with his friend and former acrobatic partner, Nick Cravat, decided he'd better add another couple of miles to his workout.

Burt startled everyone on the set by climbing up a 40-foot steel scaffolding one morning. He explained when he got down that "I just felt good and wanted to see how fast I could do it." His friends (and Burt) are hoping that he can soon do a circus picture to get some of the acrobatics out of his system.

Suggested title: The Unafraid. THE END

BOB MITCHUM'S OWN STORY

(Continued from page 33)

telephone is to blame. The reporter calls the actor and says he hears there's going to be a divorce. The actor explains. Yes, he admits, they have had a little trouble. But divorce? No. No divorce. So the next day the paper says, 'Too bad about that actor, Joe Flotsam, and his wife. Looks like they're breaking up over that trouble they had.' Of course, Joe Flotsam didn't say that, exactly. He said things on both sides of it which would explain. And it's not the reporter's fault—he can't write the life history of everybody who gets his name in the paper."

The words came back to me vividly two days later when the news of Bob's arrest on a narcotics charge broke into print. I didn't believe everything I read.

I recalled the stories that broke a few years back when Lew Ayres went to a conscientious objectors' camp rather than bear arms, and I remembered his later distinguished service in the front lines with the wounded.

Then there was the case of a Marine by the name of Fitzgerald. A hero of Guadalcanal, he married a fine young actress named Gloria Dixon. Their home burned down. She was killed. He was picked up as a deserter, given twenty years' hard labor. On reported "facts" alone, he didn't have a friend left in Hollywood. But two months later I saw him again, back in uniform, and advanced to the rank of sergeant. There had been a mistake, but it had finally been rectified when the payroll record of his 10c a day as a prisoner reached Washington. There the honorable discharge he had claimed all along had been discovered.

I thought of something else: Bob Mitchum left me at Lucey's that day to go house-hunting. I stayed for a few more drinks with friends. When we left, any one of us could have jumped a stop signal, smashed into a car, hurt someone seriously and wound up in jail facing serious charges.

But Fate was fond of us. Fate gave Bob Mitchum a kick in the pants.

Strangely enough, in the hours of sadness into which Bob plunged, he was pursued by the ringing of the telephone he hated. Perhaps he should have answered, for hours before his ill-fated decision to stop in at the little house in Laurel Canyon, a friend was trying to reach him. Someone had called to say, "I don't know what it's all about, but I've had a call from someone close to the law. He says he was tipped off that they are going to try to pick up Bob for something tonight—maybe you'd better tell him to stay home."

I wondered about that. I guess everyone has friends, in a pinch. Did Bob have enemies, too?

Certainly he had made mistakes. They might have been swept away by a reconciliation on Dorothy's return. But would there have been such a reconciliation? In the notes he wrote for me, Bob said, "I have spent eight years trying to get this girl alone for a while so that we might discover each other. In eight years we grew so fast that we had little time to talk, and depended too fully on psychic sympathy." The two of them were struggling to reach each other, yet going in opposite directions at breakneck speed.

Actually, what appeared to be tragedy was an abrupt, if brutal, climax which could provide them with a fresh start. When Dorothy did return to Hollywood after Bob's arrest, she rejoined him publicly. As this is written, they are alone together at last.

Will the shock they have withstood undo the damage of so many years? To present that possibility honestly, let me relate an incident as Bob told it to me.

Weeks ago, he signed a contract to do some personal appearances in New York.

"Dorothy," he said in that clipped manner of his, "I have to do this trick. Pick up some nice money. Then we'll take a vacation."

"A vacation?" Dorothy exclaimed. "That's wonderful. We can pile the kids in the Buick and drive across country."

Bob's face lit up. "Yeah, that's it. See the Grand Canyon. Talk to people. Be a couple of average fellows for a change. I'm jittery. Seems I can't even shave any more without some guy looking over my shoulder and trying to sell me something. Yeah—get ready. We're driving."

They got ready, but the telephone rang. Telegram for Bob Mitchum. The date in New York was moved up. No time now for a leisurely jaunt across the country.

"Can't do this to us," Bob told Dorothy. "We're going anyway—the whole gang. We'll fly."

Dorothy was alarmed. After all, their savings had been wiped out only a few months before. They'd had too much confidence that someone else would do the right thing. She knew that the worry over this loss had cut deeply, undermining Bob's confidence in his own judgment, upsetting his faith in other people.

"The boys and I had better stay home," she said. "It's too expensive."

Bob exploded. "To hell with expense! This is important. We'll sell the car. We can pick one up back there when I've piled up some money. You and the kids can go down to Delaware. No, we'll all go to New York, and when I'm through with my work we'll go to the country together."

That's what they did. They had been in a $30-a-day hotel suite in New York for three days when dispatches from Hollywood were still speaking of impending divorce!

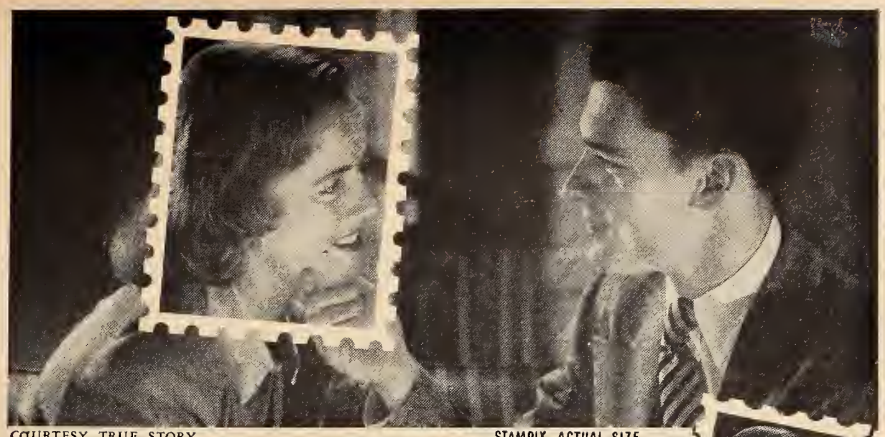
Then came the trip to Delaware. It, too, shows how the odds were piling up against them long before the headlines broke.

"—An epitaph to friendship," Bob wrote of that trip in his notes for me. "The weather was bad, and everywhere you looked was trouble, standing in cold, deep puddles—in New York—in Connecticut—in Delaware, the people had troubles, and they sat indoors out of the cold rain and told their troubles to you. I was much too tired to resist, and so escaped into it—like a runaway in a swamp."

Bob Mitchum didn't intend it to be this way, for his family's sake.

He and Dorothy went to a few parties, fewer night clubs, but they couldn't turn down all invitations graciously. Bob ran smack into trouble. Trouble like this: at one party a blonde, somewhat over par in alcoholic content, wanted to muss his hair. She did. Bob got sore and didn't say anything. Mrs. Bob got sore and did, later. It wasn't so important, but it was typical.

"I thought you said you knew her," Mrs. Bob commented.



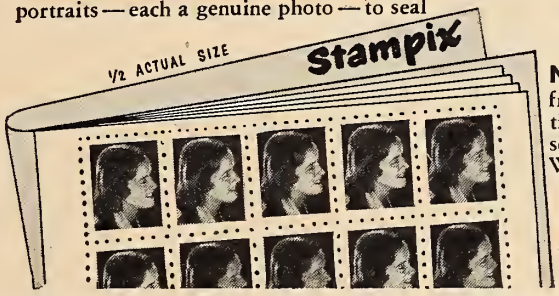
"I guess I know everyone," Bob said, wearily.

They argued a little and then forgot the episode. They were both tired.

A few nights later, Bob decided to take a walk, prowl around on his own. Everything was all right. He was talking to

"That's nathing——you see it done every day in the newsreels."

COURTESY TRUE STORY



STAMPIX ACTUAL SIZE →

IT'S LIKE A Christmas Kiss

Seal your Christmas gifts and "sign" your greeting and gift cards with this exquisite Stampix Portrait of YOU Lend us your favorite snapshot, picture or portrait (or any negative). We'll send you by return mail 50 exquisite miniature portraits — each a genuine photo — to seal your gifts, sign your letters, your gift cards, your Christmas and New Year's cards. When ordering, print your name and address clearly, enclose $1.00. We return your picture and your Stampix book of 50 — postpaid. Money back guaranteed, if not satisfied. PORTRAITS-by-STAMPIX, 32-56 62nd Street, Woodside, N. Y.

-Confidential-

New Gift Idea—Borrow your friend's, sweetheart's, wife's prettiest snapshot (or negative) and send it to us with one dollar. We'll send Stampix book of 50 back to you fast — with the picture — as your most intimate, original Christmas gift.

50 FOR $1.00

BUY U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

YOUR SAVINGS MOUNT UP LIKE MAGIC BECAUSE YOU

Make Money With Your Own JUKE BOX BANK

A Real Money-Maker For You . . . Because

FRIENDS AND RELATIVES WILL HELP YOU SAVE, JUST TO SEE HOW IT WORKS!

You'll see those nickels and dimes rapidly add up to mighty dollar bills with this new Juke Box Bank that's a gay plastic reproduction of the tuneful Juke Box down at the corner soda fountain. Bring it out at parties or when company comes to call. The coins and currency will really pour in, because everyone wants to see it light up electrically and flash its bit of advice: "It's Wise to Be Thrifty"—to which we might add: it's easy to be thrifty when you have an attention-getting, fun-producing Juke Box Bank.

SEND NO MONEY: send only your name and address. Then pay postman only $1.98 plus postage. Or send cash and we pay postage. If you are not delighted, return within 10 days for speedy, cheerful refund.

AMERICAN MERCHANDISING COMPANY, 9 Madison Avenue, Montgomery 4, Ala. Dept. JB-192

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1

STAMMER? GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 47 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 4816, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

"Scotch Nap" 100% wool "Soft-as-Cashmere" SWEATERS in hunter green, royal blue, cherry, black, white, yellow, country cream, pink and heaven blue. $4.50 postpaid

Short sleeve, cap and long sleeve pullovers Cardigan $5.95 ppd.

Name or monogram in your color choice $1.00 extra.

ANGLOBASQUE BERET

Imported from England—Fine British wool

$2.50 In all sizes—Black, brown, navy, dark green, beige, gray, white, scarlet and royal blue.

3 letter monogram in your color choice 50c extra.

Janes 725 Rahway Avenue Elizabeth, New Jersey

somebody who'd known him when. All of a sudden, a few feet away, a little guy was punched by a big guy. He went flat. He got up. The big man poked him again. He went down, permanently.

"Don't do that," Bob said.

"Who said don't do that?" the big man asked.

"I did," Bob answered. "Now stop it."

"Don't worry, actor," the big man said. "This won't take long." He started across the room.

"I'm going to do it again," Bob said to himself. "I've got no right hand. Everybody tells me that. Why do I always have to try once with the right? Oh, well, maybe I can roll over by the little guy and we can sleep this one out."

The big man threw his punch. Bob's right hand moved. Somebody fell on the floor.

"Well, whattya know," Bob muttered. "I did it with that no-good right. I'd better go. When this character gets up he'll kill me. I could never do it again."

He turned. The police were there. Two men were on the floor. Bob knew better than to explain, so he did anyway. "It was like this—" he began.

"Never mind what it was like," one of the officers snapped. "We saw the whole thing. Now get out of here before some nut claims it was your fault."

Bob walked to his car. He was about to go inside and talk to Dorothy. He felt ridiculous. Things like this had to stop, that was all there was to it.

take a ride . . .

The thing to do was to take a ride and cool off. Pretty soon he was on the highway—the one to New York. He remembered the play he had been discussing with the Theatre Guild—a thing he'd written when he was eighteen years old.

Go to New York, he thought. Dorothy knew he did the unexpected, knew he wanted to spend a few days alone incorporating some changes in the play, changes that were suggested to him by Eugene O'Neill and others. He'd be there in a couple of hours. Then he'd wire her.

He stepped on the gas. Later he saw a sailor on the highway. "Can you drive?" he asked as he stopped. The sailor could. Bob crawled into the back seat and fell asleep. When he woke up he felt like he'd dozed off on the BMT during rush hour. There were six sailors in the car. Nice guys. They liked him. He liked them. They stopped off for a nightcap.

Bob reached the hotel near dawn. Instead of wiring, he called Dorothy.

The short story was a long story now: Yes, of course, he'd be back in a few days. Sure, he'd be there for the county fair. Wouldn't miss it.

And in a couple of days he did go back, did go to the fair. Then—

"I guess this vacation isn't working out," he told Dorothy. "I'm not making you or the kids happy." They talked for a long time and it was late at night.

"I'll drive on up to New York," he said.

"But about the car," Dorothy said, trying to head off his flight, "I'll need it to get around with the children."

"That's right," Bob agreed.

Dorothy drove Bob to New York, almost two hundred miles.

They were understanding each other better when they reached the Holland Tunnel. Dorothy thought about staying over. Bob already had rooms.

"Right there our troubles could have been over," Bob told me later. "But something perverse always seemed to be nudging me. Instead of asking her to stay, I said she could use the phone in my room to get a reservation. I hated myself while she called around. Then she left. Drove all the way back in a heavy fog.

"I was the one in the fog. I'd been there a long time. Dorothy is the best. Intelligent, beautiful, loyal, a wonderful mother. I don't know what's wrong. Maybe it's the place, this Hollywood. Maybe it's me. The money? I earned $25,000 a week once and got to keep $376 net. . . .

"If I sound like a fool, I am, but I'm my own fool. Nobody else's. I don't want this marriage to end. I don't want a lot of things to go on as they have been, and these things have nothing to do with my wife. Maybe I'll find out when I have that so-called freedom. Anyway, we'll find out in a few days. . . ."

He didn't know then that everything was going to explode the next day. . . .

I had a morning paper with me when I stopped in at the corner gas station. The attendant indicated the headlines. "I suppose you writer guys will really give it to Mitchum now," he said.

"Oh, I don't know."

"Look," he said. "I don't know him. But I know about myself. A few years back I got off on the wrong foot. One thing led to another. I didn't really do anything wrong, but I drank myself right out of a job and I lost my wife and two kids in the bargain. It took me two years to get them back. Now I really amount to something. I take collection in church. I work with a boy's club. You'll see, Mitchum will turn out all right."

I had a date then to talk to Red Skelton. "Mitchum?" Red said. "Too bad about him, you say? Look, I haven't seen the headlines yet, so don't tell me. First, let me tell you something about him."

Red went to the files in his office. He brought out a folder with some pictures. "See these pictures?" he asked. "They belong to the Pacific Boys' Lodge. All those boys have been in court for one reason or another, but they aren't sent to any reformatory. They go to the Lodge. A lot of outstanding citizens support the Lodge and a few motion picture people have helped in getting funds and inspiring these kids.

a lot of good . . .

"We had a basketball game to get funds for a new building, and some other events too. None of it ever got into the papers. Some of the people we expected to show up never did. But Bob Mitchum was there. He's done a lot of good."

Then Red and I talked about Bob. It was Red's thought that Bob was lucky, strange as that may seem. "Think how close he can get to kids like these now," he said. "He can do more than a hundred men who lecture kids and don't know what it means to be in trouble."

Up at the little house on Glen Oak Drive the newspaper watch was waiting for Dorothy Mitchum's return. A line a newspaper columnist had used came to mind. It had been published two months before and was strictly a guess. "Bob and Mrs. Mitchum have mended their troubles."

In his notes, Bob had commented on this item. "Like a girl mends her stockings?" he wrote bitterly. "By buying more? Troubles of the heart are agonies we keep passionately guarded, and they are highly salable secrets . . . . He (the columnist) fervently hopes there will be no divorce for a long time—I hope forever."

Mrs. Bob Mitchum drove up with the kids. She went up the walk. Bob opened the door. His arms went around her.

"Bob," she said.

The dialogue was not intended for a third act curtain line, but it was the real climax to the story of Robert Mitchum.

The door closed, and I thought of what Bob had scribbled on that miserable evening so short a time before:

"We want very much to be alone together."

THE END

THIS LITTLE VOICE WENT NO, NO, NO!

(Continued from page 61)

forget some irksome promise, perhaps even one made in thoughtless haste, let her try to neglect some obligation, and it starts wiggling until she decides to remember.

People have been known to rebel against their consciences. But they can't win, Loretta is convinced, if they have "wiggling, loud" ones. Take the case of the time she tried to overcome that inner voice once during the war. One morning she was scheduled to make a promised appearance at a Lockheed employees' bond rally. As she sat down to breakfast, she suddenly felt light-headed and dismally ill. Which was certainly natural, considering that Loretta was a prospective mother. And it was also natural that, feeling as wretched as she did, she should shrink from the prospect of struggling through a speech at that rally. At her elbow was a telephone. A quick call and a quick explanation and she could lounge back and "enjoy her misery quietly."

The tussle between her physical misery and her conscience raged for a quarter of an hour. "The only sensible thing to do is call off the date," cried her misery. "No!" came back the conscience. "You've promised. Lying still won't make you feel any better. I will see to that! You'll hear from me, if you don't go. You'll hear from me all day long!"

That noon Loretta was at the rally. Not long afterward came a most gratifying reward for her fortitude. Loretta is chairman of the board of directors of St. Anne's Maternity Hospital, an institution founded to give haven and care to unmarried mothers. A drive for fifty thousand dollars in new funds was under way. Since everyone was contributing to war efforts, the drive was making slow headway. But at Lockheed the employees had formed what they called "The Buck of the Month Club" for the purpose of making contributions to worthy causes. To St. Anne's there soon came a substantial check from the club. Substantial enough to help St. Anne's well along the way toward its goal.

Since to be a star in Hollywood is to be one of some 200 persons who vie with each other for the favor of millions of their fellow citizens, the stress on self is apt to be fierce. But in order to keep thinking of one's self all the time a certain degree of deafness, blindness and a dulled sense of touch is required to keep the outer world from intruding. When you properly achieve such a state it is termed absent-mindedness and taken as a mark of genius. Here is where Loretta fails badly. With as much right as anyone to be egocentric she has little chance with that unsleeping conscience of hers.

And Loretta is awfully interested in the little things of life; things your true, moody artist, surrounded by his or her mental wall, would hardly know existed. Is the cook's brother-in-law going to get married? Why are the people who own the house on the hill adding a new room? Have they got a new baby or is someone coming to live with them? Why are those fences up on that corner property near the market; are they going to build there? What is it going to be? Why do the leaves on the Chinese Elm fall continuously? Don't they know there is such a thing as seasons? And so on for all the days she has lived, and all the days before her, as far as she knows.

Most often this all-embracing curiosity of Loretta's works out along fine, beneficial lines. When she was ready to start in The Bishop's Wife, for example, her stand-in came to her looking deeply troubled. Gregg Toland, the camera chief—whose untimely death occurred this September—had told her she was not suitable for the job; her face was too square, her color wrong. Much as Loretta's sympathies were with the girl, how could she oppose the man responsible for the photography of the picture?

But something made her go see Gregg anyway. She didn't know quite what she had in mind, but that old conscience was working and she went to see him anyway.

The first thing she told Gregg was that he was perfectly right in refusing to use the girl. But, she went on, she found herself wondering just why a differently shaped face or variance in color interfered with good camera work. Would Gregg explain?

What happened then should have happened to a physics student—not Loretta. Gregg started away back with Newton's work on optics. He gave her light, light reflection, the coefficient of light absorption, and the albugineous properties of various types of human pigment when struck by light. What he was trying to say was that a fair skin needs less light than a dark skin, but that wasn't the way Loretta heard it.

Nevertheless, she thanked him and said it was very interesting and to the point. He was so right. He was so right that she was going straight to her stand-in and explain everything he had said so she wouldn't feel so badly about losing her job, what with a mother to support and all. With a sad, sweet smile, she turned to leave.

"Just a minute!" exclaimed Gregg. "What was that about the mother?" Lorwhat's the name?

Like to juggle words? Here's a game to test your skill. Following is a list of forty names—the first names of Hollywood actors and actresses. If you match one with another you'll get the complete names of twenty famous personalities. Try it—then turn to page 105 for the solution and your rating.

1: ABEL	21: ARTHUR
2: ERWIN	22: EDWARD
3: JOAN	23: STUART
4: SHIRLEY	24: WARREN
5: RAYMOND	25: ARNOLD
6: TONY	26: CHESTER
7: HARRY	27: WALTER
8: PATRICK	28: EDDY
9: FRANCIS	29: RANDOLPH
10: JAMES	30: GENE
11: RUSSELL	31: BENNY
12: MELVYN	32: BRUCE
13: VIRGINIA	33: GAIL
14: JEAN	34: LESLIE
15: HAROLD	35: ANNE
16: KAY	36: LLOYD
17: MORRIS	37: DOUGLAS
18: NELSON	38: SCOTT
19: WILLIAM	39: MARTIN
20: ROSALIND	40: JACK

the stocking buy of the year

15 DENIER
ONE THREAD EQUIVALENT
51 GAUGE

DU PONT NYLONS

Deluxe First Quality with Fine Pencil-Line Seams

$1.10 PR.
3 prs. for $3.25

Here are the stockings that are proving America's favorites . . . because of their wonderfully outstanding value. You'll love their sheerness, their fine pencil-line seams, their delicate shadow heels. They are truly the nation's outstanding buy—order several at this special Gaylordlowprice. Newest shades: HoneyAlmond (Light), Autumn Dusk (Medium), Deep Dawn or Brown Toast (Dark). Sizes 8½ to 10½.

GAYLORD Dept. H, 404 5th Ave., McKeesport, Pa.

Please send ..... pairs of Pencil-Line NYLONS, I will pay postman $1.10 (or 3 pairs for $3.25) plus small C.O.D. Charges.

SHADE	SIZE

If prepaid we pay postage. Money-back guarantee

Print name and address along margin

Amazing New San Fernando Valley

THE RAVE OF CALIFORNIA
$4.98
AUTHENTIC MOCCASINS

Luxurious, soft suede cunningly hond-loced with snow-white reol leother to upper of genuine unborn colf-skin which retoins noture's colors ond the silken hoir. For rugged street or sports wear! Horold's of Hollywood's renowned styling! Amozing volue! You'd soy $8.50! BUT—direct by moil—only $4.98! Your choice of the seoson's preferred colors: GREEN, RED, GRAY, BROWN, BLACK. Sizes 3½ to 10. Stote 2nd choice color.

FIT GUARANTEED! MONEY BACK GUARANTEE!

Order By Mail Now from Hollywood. SEND NO MONEY!

HAROLD'S OF HOLLYWOOD—Dept. 170
Box #611, West Bronch, Hollywood 46, Colif.
Rush me my lovoble "Ponies."
Size____ 1st Choice Color____ 2nd Choice____
I will poy postmon $4.98, plus postoge ond C.O.D. chorges.
NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ ZONE____
STATE_____
Enclose money—Horold's will poy oll postoge.

If you need a

LAXATIVE

when you have a

COLD

It's important to keep your bowels open when you have a cold. So, if you need a laxative, take gentle Ex-Lax.

Ex-Lax gets results easily, comfortably. It won't upset you. Gentle as it is, Ex-Lax gives you a thorough bowel movement. It is biologically tested to assure effective action. Many doctors use dependable Ex-Lax in their practice.

And Ex-Lax has a delicious chocolate taste. It's a real pleasure to take! Ex-Lax is America's No. 1 Laxative – the favorite of young and old. Still only 10¢.

When Nature "forgets"... remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

Earn Extra Money! Full, Spare Time!

YOU can make many EXTRA DOLLARS with our new, sell-on-sight Plastic Line! Tablecloths, Aprons; also many other beautiful, fast-selling items, novelties. Postal brings free details. Write today. Hurry!

Royalty Sales Co., Box 748, Passaic 15, New Jersey

Hand Out Only 20 Coupons FREE

NEW WRIST WATCH GIVEN

Just for helping us get acquainted with new customers and friends, we will send your choice of a smart, new, imported Swiss movement, Lady's Wrist Watch or dependable Man's Wrist Watch for handing out or mailing only 20 snapshot and photo Enlargement Coupons FREE to neighbors and relatives. There is nothing for you to buy. There is nothing for you to sell and collect for. Your exquisite Wrist Watch is sent in a special gift box when all of the coupons have been used. You can even mail these Enlargement Coupons to friends and relatives in other towns if you wish. Everyone is glad to use the coupon promptly to get a beautiful, 5 by 7 inch enlargement of their favorite snapshot at a quarter PLUS their choice of a handsome, "Movietown" frame included as our get-acquainted gift. You will be charmed and thrilled with your beautiful Wrist Watch. Send today for your 20 get-acquainted Enlargement Coupons to hand out FREE and also get our EXTRA GIFT offer of a beautiful simulated Birthstone Ring correct for your month of birth, also given when half of the coupons are used. Be first to wear such a beautiful Wrist Watch and Birthstone Ring. DEAN STUDIOS, Dept. X-124, 211 W. 7th Street, Des Moines (2), Iowa.

etta repeated it. Gregg thought a moment —and then said that while the proper stand-in was important, maybe it wasn't that important, and—well, maybe the girl would be acceptable to him after all.

"Despite Newton?" asked Loretta. "And that albig stuff and everything?"

Gregg nodded. "I think there's something in Einstein's work which will handle everything," he said. "I'll—I'll look it up right away."

Loretta thinks she got into the habit of letting her conscience get the upper hand when she first started work in the studios. At 15 she was already a star and greatly in demand. One of the things that used to irritate a certain producer was the fact that Loretta, since she was under age, was under the constant supervision of a state teacher and permitted to work only a limited number of hours a day. He made a suggestion to her one day and Loretta, in love with the romance of her work, agreed.

At five-thirty every afternoon she would leave the set in the company of her teacher and go home. At her front door they would exchange farewells.

"Good afternoon, Loretta," the teacher would say. "Study your homework, get a good night's sleep, and I'll pick you up first thing in the morning."

"Yes, ma'am," Loretta would reply politely.

Whereupon the teacher would go on and Loretta would enter her house—to emerge from the back door, get into a waiting studio car and go back to work in front of the cameras until three in the morning!

A tiny little voice used to pipe up inside of her someplace those days—the as-yet-undeveloped wiggler—but she would beat it down firmly. And then one day the three A.M. routine caught up with her and Loretta found herself lying in a hospital exhausted from overwork. She was weeks recovering and her only comfort was that, at least, she had helped this producer and he would be appreciative of her herculean efforts.

But when she returned to him she discovered that she had been off salary every day she was in the hospital! All the time she'd thought she'd been fooling her teacher, she'd actually been fooling herself! And the only voice which had warned her had been the little one from within.

From that day on it has been the voice she's listened to, not only in connection with her career but as a guide to her everyday actions.

It has been a good mentor. It has directed a lot of splendid decisions for her. Wiggling and loud though it is, her attention to it has not become a burden—her sense of humor and clear sense of values keep it in its constructive place in her life. A life of work and home and family which makes her a fulfilled woman—a constantly finer actress—and, for all of these things, a grateful human being.

THE END

ARTANIS KNARF

(Continued from page 47)

said his hair was turning white. He said for us to get on a train before he collapsed.

"Before you collapse!" I said indignantly. "You're safe in New York, you're not flying around the country with these maniacs. I'm supposed to be navigator, but this map they've dreamed up looks silly to me. Just a lot of crooked lines."

"Oh, Lord!" George said in anguished tones. "Put Bob Lee on the phone."

Bob reassured him, and we got started again eventually. When we reached Columbus we called George again. "Take it easy," Frank told him. "We'll be in before you know it. Keep in touch with the control tower at LaGuardia. Here's our plane number."

Actually it wasn't too long afterward that George, pacing the soles off his shoes at LaGuardia, heard our number announced. Then he really started getting panicky, because about ten planes were over the field, waiting to land. The control tower gave us our landing number. The plane ahead of us was a DC-3 and the one behind us was a Constellation.

"You have 25 seconds to land," the tower informed our plane and George gave a moan of anguish.

As we came down toward the field it felt like a power dive. I covered my eyes—and darned if we didn't make a fine landing. Frank was very pleased.

"Only way to travel," he declared largely.

That's Frank. If I'm an old man before my time, blame it on Sinatra.

Let's go back a few years to the time he first came into my life.

In 1939 I was Tommy Dorsey's manager. I'd been with him for three years. One day in Chicago he came around to me and said, "Bobby, I'm thinking about taking on a new singer. A guy by the name of Sinatra."

I'd heard Frank in person and on records and I thought he was just what we needed.

"He's with James at the Palmer House," Tommy said. "Give him a ring and see if he can duck over here tonight between shows. Just for a little talk."

You know what happened. Harry James gave him a release, and Frank joined our band the next week in Milwaukee. When he first got there, Tommy took me aside.

"Say, Bobby, kinda look out for the kid, will you? He doesn't know anybody in the band and it might be a little tough for him at first."

That's how it happened that Frank and I roomed together for the next three years whenever we were on the road. But Tommy needn't have worried about Frank. Frank makes friends faster than a dog gets fleas.

What really gave me a boot was how hard the kid worked. He knew he could do a good job for us, but he knew he couldn't do it just by sitting around. Right then was when he started to wear me out and he's been doing it ever since.

Look at the schedule we had on the road. Play till two in the morning, grab a quick meal, get on the bus and ride till noon next day. Get a few hours' sleep, then some food and play all evening. But was that enough for Frank? Never! He spent half his sleeping time learning new arrangements. He made appearances with Tommy and the Pied Pipers in record stores. Whatever anybody asked him to do, he said yes. That's a habit I've been trying to break him of for darned near nine years now. I guess I'll never succeed. If I did, he wouldn't be Frank.

In a year or so, we got a chance to go to Hollywood and make a picture. We were all pretty pleased with the idea. We had visions of lying in that warm sun, eating avocados, and walking with beautiful starlets in the moonlight.

Visions is just what they were, too, except for the avocados. Because we were booked to play at the Palladium at the same time we made the picture. Brother, Mexican jumping beans weren't in it with us.

But Frank had had a neat little vision of his own, and his came true. He wanted to meet Bing Crosby.

"That Bing's the greatest singer in the world," he'd say to me, wistfully. "Do you think I might get to meet him, huh?"

I'd say I didn't know, which was the truth. Sure, the picture was being made at Paramount and that was Bing's studio, but Bing wasn't making a picture now. He was away somewhere, only I hated to tell Frankie that.

He found it out, of course, as soon as he got to the studio. So he went around for a week looking like a small boy when Mom says, "No cookies today."

Until one day. We were shooting a long sequence of the band playing and Frank making with the tonsils. I happened to glance over my shoulder and practically froze in that position. Because there was the Groaner himself, lounging in the door back of us, and looking as if he liked what he was hearing.

He got hold of Dorsey as soon as the scene was over and said, "This Sinatra. Very good, Tommy, very good. I think you've got something there." Then Tommy introduced Frank to him, and I thought the kid was going to faint.

Later Frank grabbed me and rushed me outside. "Bobby, you mean he was there all the time? Listening? Gee, I hope I sang all right."

"Bing seemed to think you sang okay," I told him, grinning, "and I understand he's a pretty fair judge."

After we left California we traveled all over the country. And we all had one pet gripe. Tommy had bought a bus for the band to ride in. Painted silver it was, and a very fancy-looking job. But the seats wouldn't tilt back, and the thing bounced all over the road and when you got through a long trip you felt as if every bone in your body was broken. We used to beg Tommy to let us drive our own cars, but he was afraid we wouldn't make the next stop on time if we did.

One night Frank and I did miss the bus, because he'd been calling Nancy long-distance. Ordinarily, we could have hired a car to catch up in, or taken a train. But this time we were both broke and that's for sure. Of course Frank was always broke, because he lent so much dough to the other guys. Anyway, we decided to hitch-hike.

Ever try hitch-hiking along a strange road at three in the morning? Oh, a few cars go by, but that's just what they do—go by. We were hungry, too, and we finally swiped some raw corn out of a field and ate it. Before long, we did get a ride that caught us up with the bus, but by then it was too late. That raw corn made Frank so sick that he might as well not have been there at all that night when it came to singing.

One time Tommy started for New York from a place we'd been playing in Pennsylvania. He drove his own car, natch, and the rest of us were supposed to start four hours later on the bus, for he had business to attend to in New York before we got there.

So we slept an extra four hours, and then piled into the bus. Frank climbed into the driver's seat. "Let's beat that car of Tommy's to New York," he said suddenly. "Hold your hats!" And he started down the road like a bat.

At first everyone yelled at him that he was nuts. Then they began to laugh. "Tommy keeps saying what a wonderful bus this is," somebody said. "Let's prove he's right."

We rocketed along that road like a sardine can rolling downhill. Not that Frank was driving recklessly, you understand. But he sure did kick that crate along as briskly as the law allowed. And when we finally got on the New York ferry, the car ahead of us belonged to one Mr. Thomas Dorsey!

I thought he'd have apoplexy when he saw us. Especially when he found out we had burned out various essential parts during the trip. He had to sell the bus after that, and allow us to drive our own cars. But let me say in our favor that we were never late.

Well, those days ended for me when I went into the Army. Naturally I didn't know when I'd see Frank again—if ever. Then I was sent to a camp near Hollywood. I knew Frank was out there—he'd become pretty famous since I'd last seen him. I got a yen to talk about old times, and I wrote him a letter and said so. But I thought maybe I'd get back a note signed by a secretary saying, "Mr. Sinatra is too busy."

Instead I got a phone call. "Bobby, you old so-and-so, get yourself a pass as soon as you can and come up here for a week end. Boy, do I want to see you!"

He wanted to see me! Things like that explain why Frank has more friends than any guy in the world.

I spent a lot of weekends at Frank's house after that. Nancy is the kind of wonderful hostess who lets you relax completely and do as you please, instead of trying to fit you into her plans.

"What you going to do when you get out of the service, Bobby?" Frank asked me one day.

"I don't know yet. I've had a couple of offers."

"Well, here's one I'd like you to give a little special attention to. I'd like you to come and work for me. I need somebody like you."

It took me about one-fifth of a second to forget those other offers.

One day I said to Frank, "I sure wish you could be best man at my wedding." After all, we'd worked together off and on for eight years. When a guy is your best friend as well as your prospective boss, you naturally want him around when you take the big step. But Frank was involved in a million things. "I know how busy you are . . ." I said, trying to sound casual.

"That busy, I never get," Frank said, grinning. "If you're going to climb into a straitjacket, I want to be there to lace it."

I laughed. I always laugh at Frank's

that's hollywood!

Curvaceous Esther Williams was wearing a bathing suit of lamé on an M-G-M set. "Hmmm," hmmm'd an extra, "thar's hills in them thar gold . . ."

Greer Garson gets giggles displaying a clipping reporting an accident she suffered. It's from the Monterey Peninsula Herald—which read: "The area in which Miss Garson was injured is spectacularly scenic . . ."

Dick Haymes' definition of a glamour girl is probably as good as any: "A girl who has what it takes to take what you have . . ."

Irving Hoffman in
The Hollywood Reporter

AMAZING NEW DEW
SPRAY DEODORANT

in the Magical
"Self-Atomizing" Squeezable Bottle!

STOPS PERSPIRATION
AND ODOR TROUBLES

Daintier than creams! Dew never touches hands, nails. Not messy. Just squeeze new flexible bottle. Spray on a gentle mist.

Only deodorant containing "Retselane" to stop perspiration troubles safely, protect clothes from perspiration stains. Instantly removes odor. Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.

Will not rot clothes! Dew is harmless, stainless. Can't irritate normal skin.

Bottle magic! Dew's new plastic bottle can't leak, break or spill. Perfect for purse or travel.

SAVES MONEY!
Full year's supply only
98¢ Plus tax
Less than 2¢ a week

You need "Santa Claus's Helpers" — You need them every day. Be sure they are "DEUBENER'S — America's Standard" for BEST Quality, Service & Value for 30 years.

AT YOUR FAVORITE STORE

DEUBENER'S SHOPPING BAGS
GARFIELD PARK, INDIANAPOLIS 3, IND.

Exquisite
RING BARGAINS

SEND NO MONEY!

Just pay Postman C.O.D. on delivery amount plus 20% Government Tax and postage. Write Name and Address and Order Number. On ring orders, state finger size or send string or strip of paper. Money Back Guarantee. Send all orders to:

WORLD WIDE DIAMOND CO., Dept. K-999
2451 So. MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO 16, ILL.

GENUINE ZIRCON 10 KT. GOLD BRIDAL SET
3-4 kt. Weight flashing Zircon. Engagement Ring with the gleaming Wedding Ring. Both No. D-56 $9.95

10 KT. GOLD "TRUE LOVE" BRIDAL PAIR
Brilliant imitation Diamond Engagement Ring. Matching Wedding Ring. 10kt. Gold. Both No. D-58 $4.98

VERY ELEGANT GENUINE ZIRCON BRIDAL SET
Gleaming, Brilliant, Large, Brite-White Zircon. Both Rings are 10 Karat GOLD. Both . . . No. D-57 $12.95

6-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
An exciting 10 Kt. GOLD mounting with 6 Gnaranteed chip Diamonds. Both No. D-36 Each 5.95 $9.95

4-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
Treasure of Love! 10 Kt. Gold settings with 4 Genuine chip Diamonds. Both No. D-60 Each 4.95 $8.95

10-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
10 Kt. Gold Wedding & Engagement Ring with 10 Genuine chip Diamonds. Both No. D-38 Each 6.95 $11.95

IMITAT'N DIAMOND RING
12 imitation DIAMONDS with Brilliant on STERLING SILVER. Adorable! No. 2R-417 Only . . . $1.98

STERLING SILVER PAIR
Wedding & Engagement Ring set with Gorgeous, Brilliant Imitation Diamonds. No. 2R-508 Both . . . $1.95

BIRTH-MONTH RING
Gleaming, Individual Fancy Birthmonth Ring in Sterling Silver. Send Month. No. R-425. Only . . . 98¢

LOVE BRIDAL PAIR
25 Exquisite Brilliants in STERLING SILVER filigree pattern. Order Both No. R-405 Each 2.95 $3.95

MEN'S IMITATION DIAMOND RING
Men's, On Brite Sterling Silver. Looks so Very EXPENSIVE. No. 2R-426 Price . . . $1.98

STERLING SILVER BRIDAL SET
11 Gorgeous imitation Diamonds. Sterling Silver. Both No. R-442 Each 1.95 $2.95

STERLING SILVER SIGNET RING
Brilliantly flanked Initial on Ebony Color Base in STERLING SILVER. Order one now! Price No. R-448 $2.98

"BIG TIME" GOLD FILLED MEN'S RING
Huge White Brilliant and 4 Red Brilliants on Genuine 1-20-14 Kt. Rolled Gold Plate —Bargain! No. R-555 $3.95

MEN'S MASSIVE RING
1-20-12 Kt. GOLD Filled Ring set with 8 Large, Brilliant Fiery White Sparklers . . . Order by No. R-511 $3.95

World-Wide Diamond Co., Dept. K999, 2451 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, H914, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

Asthmador SAVES THE DAY!

ASTHMA ATTACKS without warning—be prepared with Asthmador Cigarettes, Powder or Pipe Mix—for relief from the painful, suffocating paroxysms. Breathe Asthmador's aromatic, medicated fumes and you'll find this time-tested inhalant tops for convenience and dependability.

At all drug stores

DR. R. SCHIFFMANN'S
ASTHMADOR

jokes. He claims I do it to be polite, but that's not so. I think he's one of the funniest guys in the world.

"When and where's the wedding?" he asked.

"The day of my Army discharge. Right at the camp. But of course that's eighty miles from Hollywood."

"I know that, you dope. I've been down there often enough in the last few months."

He had, too, entertaining the boys, and usually bringing along his whole radio show to help.

He was considering me now, thoughtfully. "Might need a little help, being best man. Okay if I bring Phil Silvers or somebody to help hold us both up?"

I said that would be fine. The days skidded by and all of a sudden it was my wedding day.

Frank was a little late that afternoon. Finally I went out by the gate and paced up and down waiting for him, just for something to do. I was watching for his convertible and hardly glanced at the big Greyhound bus marked CHARTERED that swung in beside me.

Then a voice yelled from the bus, "Hey, Burns. I can see your knees shaking from here!" It was Frank. It was also half the rest of Hollywood. Phil Silvers, Axel Stordahl, Nancy, a whole set of musicians from the old Dorsey band. Any room that was left was taken up with wedding presents. Seemed like a million of them. I really felt myself getting all sentimental inside.

Know what Frank's wedding present to me was? Honest, that guy is terrific! Here I was, just out of the Army, no civilian clothes and none available. So he had had his tailor make me a whole new wardrobe! It was really a thing.

After the honeymoon in New York, we came back to the Coast and I went to work for Frank as a combination secretary-manager-timetable.

I knew him so well by that time that it wasn't like taking on a completely new job. But Frank was a different proposition now from what he had been in the old days. He was a figure of national interest. Not only was he the idol of a million bobby-soxers, but he was doing important work in the campaign against racial intolerance. He was giving benefits by the dozen. He was a picture star as well as a radio singer.

All of that affected my job. Because Frank was still saying yes to everything. I found I had to act as a buffer between him and all the requests he got, or he would forget and make dates to be in three different places at once.

I soon discovered one thing about Frank. His mind is always occupied. We'll be driving along in the car, me with my mind on nothing except maybe where we could pick up a hamburger. But Frank, quiet for a long time, will suddenly come up with something.

Like "I think we oughta make a short for the Cancer Fund. I've been working it out in my mind. It'll go like this . . ."

And, sure enough, there it is, all worked out for presentation. I've come to have a lot of respect for those silences.

Maybe I'm giving you too serious a picture of the guy. Maybe I'm making him sound angelic, and he isn't. He clowns more often than he's serious, and sometimes he does things that just about drive me crazy.

Like his getting into the habit of calling me "Burns." Around the studio, Frank will let out a yell you can hear from here to Harlem—"Hey, BURNS!" And now the rest of the gang has taken to doing the same thing. I hear "Hey, BURNS!" in my sleep.

I mean that literally, too. Because Frank loves to stay up late—the later, the better—while I am strictly a Cinderella type, all for getting in the sack by midnight. But when we're living together, which is frequently, just let me start to doze off, and—

"Burns! We gotta talk. Let's not have any sleeping around here at this hour."

Then another thing. He loves to make me sing. I can't sing a note, can't carry a tune even one bar, never could. But every once in a while, Frank will put on that hypnotic smile of his and say, "Bobby, sing 'I'm An Old Cowhand.'"

Like a dope, I do it, and Frank laughs so hard they have to dump cold water on him to keep him from having a fit of hysterics.

Nobody minds things like that from Frank, though. He's just as willing to be kidded himself.

Frank's children are one of the chief attractions for me in that household. That little Nancy. She'll call me up on the telephone.

"Uncle Bobby. When are you coming over?"

"Maybe this evening, sweetheart."

"Well, that's good. Because I have a new jigsaw puzzle and I don't want to start it till you get here."

So I rush over and spend the evening lying on my stomach doing a jigsaw puzzle with Nancy. When it's her bedtime, I talk to big Nancy awhile and then probably Frank and I get involved in a long discussion about the split-second timing we will need to get everything done the following day.

I suppose it's sort of a strange life I lead, and it's the kind of job that goes on 24 hours a day. But when you're working for a guy like Frank, who cares?

THE END

sweet and hot

by leonard feather

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

FROM THE MOVIES

A SONG IS BORN—Stealing Apples: Benny Goodman (Capital). A Song Was Born: *Louis Armstrong (Victor). Doddy-O: *Dinah Shore (Columbia); *Page Cavanaugh (Victor). Blind Barnabas: *Golden Gate Quartet (Columbia). Flying Home: *Lionel Hampton (Decca), *Benny Goodman Sextet (Columbia). Redskin Rhumba: *Charlie Barnet (National). I'm Getting Sentimental Over You: *Tommy Dorsey (Victor).

If you're a jazz fan, this department advises you not to miss the picture, even if it isn't Danny Kaye's best.

NIGHT HAS A THOUSAND EYES—title song: *Vic Damone (Mercury), Art Mooney (MGM).

PALEFACE—Buttons and Bows: *Betty Rhodes (Victor), Betty Garrett (MGM).

SO DEAR TO MY HEART—Lavender Blue: *Dinah Shore (Columbia); Jack Smith and Clark Sisters (Capitol).

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME—By The Way: *Ja Stafford (Capitol); Dick Haymes (Decca); Art Lund (MGM). What Did I Do: Margaret Whiting (Capitol); *Helen Forrest (MGM).

HOT JAZZ

COLEMAN HAWKINS—*April In Paris (Victor).

ALBUMS

GENE KELLY—*Song and Dance Man (MGM).
PIED PIPERS—*Harvest Moon (Capitol).

...gazine, Variety.
...riter and director, was
...eady to launch a road com-
...of his hit play, Born Yesterday. Garson Kanin . . . She had met him once. Four years ago. Maybe . . .

Impulsively, she reached for the telephone. She dialed Long Distance and placed her call—and then she began to quake, and a little chill skipped along her spine.

She was always doing the wrong thing, she reflected shiveringly, and this—this could be her prize boner. Why, any fool could tell you that it wasn't the thing to do, calling a big shot clear across a continent to tell him you could act. Maybe if you hung up real quickly nobody would know—but now it was too late, because already Garson Kanin was on the line, and you had to say something. . . .

Such was the beginning, however improbable, of today's boom for Shelley Winters, Hollywood's "wrong-way kid," who has achieved the eminence of Discovery of the Year by doing the "wrong thing" at practically every opportunity. Five-feet-four, her 115 pounds dynamically distributed, Shelley at 25 is the screen's newest femme fatale, a torchy little honey whose impact made critics yip as they did for the early Bette Davis. And she's still exuberantly jumpy and impulsive, obeying those impulses and having them somehow turn out right.

Like that telephone call, for instance. She didn't dream it then, but that spur-of-the-moment dialing was to set her small feet squarely on stardom's path. It was to lead to her memorable role as the little tramp of a waitress whom Ronald Colman strangled in his Oscar-winning A Double Life. She was to parlay that small role—a death scene, plus thirty lines of dialogue and a few sequences of insolent sultriness preceding her demise—into a career that sizzles with promise. This cute youngster who thought she was "so ugly," has already moved ahead rapidly in four more films: The Cry of the City, The Great Gatsby, Larceny and Criss-Cross. Along the exciting way she has signed a Universal-International contract, chosen from a welter of studio offers. And she has known the thrill of hearing producers mutter, "Yes, but can we borrow Shelley Winters?" Some of the same producers, too, who had helped convince her she was the homeliest critter this side of Dogpatch!

And all because of her positive talent for "the wrong thing."

Consider that call to Kanin. Having made it, knowing it wasn't the thing to do, did she state her case and ask for a job? Not Shelley. No.

The dialogue ran like this:

"Hello. . . . Yes, this is Garson Kanin."

"Oh. Mr. Kanin, this is Shelley Winters."

"Oh, yes . . ."

Pause—while Kanin tried to remember who in blazes Shelley Winters might be.

"Mr. Kanin, I wonder—I mean—er—how's the weather back there?"

"Fine. And how is it in Hollywood?"

"It's—it's fine here, too. Well—er—well, goodbye now."

That was all. Her nerve completely wilted, Shelley hung up in confusion, feeling very, very silly. Imagine calling Long Distance to talk about the weather! What would Kanin think?

But the call probably impressed Kanin by its very pointlessness. At any rate, when Shelley followed through with a ...replied promptly. No stage job for her, he said, but he and his wife Ruth Gordon had just written a movie. His brother Michael in Hollywood was filming it, so why didn't Shelley go see him?

The movie was A Double Life, and Shelley was on her way—to fame, fortune—and more faux pas.

She came from a stage career barely notable enough to win her the most meager of passports to pictures—train fare and a short-lived Columbia contract. Once arrived, she spent three years being told how sensationally undecorative she was. At first, nobody seemed to know anything about her or why she had come, although some vague reference had been made to a part in Rita Hayworth's Cover Girl.

When she was finally noticed, the attention was most disheartening.

A makeup man studied her blue-eyed blondeness for a while, then shook his head. "You need to have your hairline raised," he sighed despondently. "You need your teeth braced, too, and—oh yes, you ought to have your nose bobbed."

Shelley ducked the second two suggestions, but shelled out $400 for electrolysis aimed at a higher brow.

"Then," she recalls, "they gave me pink hair and a wide mouth, to look as much as possible like Rita Hayworth. I didn't—I looked a fright. They put me to work, after all this makeup, in A Thousand and One Nights—with my face hidden behind a veil."

Taking the hint, Shelley laid aside one U. S. savings bond a month against the time of her departure from steady salary. The time came, and she embarked on a free-lance career which caused nobody to dance in the streets. She ate one bond a month, and she took screen tests, feeling uglier with every test.

At 20th Century-Fox they gave her hair a Betty Grable up-do and applied other cosmetic treatment, but vetoed her chances. "You're hopeless, your voice is all wrong, and you have three left feet," they said. (Recently she played there in The Cry of the City.)

At M-G-M they made her up like Lucille Ball. "Ye gods," the makeup man answered her mild protests, "you don't want to look like you, do you?" Squelched, she played a small role in Living in a Big Way while her personal living dwindled along with her savings. (M-G-M wanted to borrow her, not long ago, for a movie life of Jean Harlow.)

At Warners, she got an Ann Sheridan treatment, and another brush-off that made her feel as glamorous as Gravel Gertie. (Warners, since the Winters boom began, also has tried to borrow her.)

Everywhere it was the same. She had one of the most thoroughly disparaged faces in town, and her ego was flatter than last year's slang. She was convinced that she needed at least a ton of makeup to brave a camera.

But when she landed her role as waitress-hussy in A Double Life—

"No makeup," said George Cukor flatly.

Shelley tried to fool him. A gal had to have glamor.

"Wipe that lipstick off, Shelley," he ordered day after day.

When she still persisted pleadingly, a less patient man might have fired her. But Cukor just ordered the mirror removed from her dressing room. He just collected all stray lipsticks and combs on the set, and put them under lock. He just made Shelley forfeit all her own cosmetic aids.

TRY IT ON MONEY-BACK OFFER

45 PHOTOS show exactly where to put your fingers
101 SONGS words & music INCLUDED!

Now let Bob West, radio's favorite guitar player, show you how! Most "Courses" have only 6 or 8 pictures—but Bob's new method has 45 actual photographs! It not only teaches but shows exactly where and how to place your fingers, etc. Most others offer a few songs—Bob provides 101!—chosen for their radio popularity so you can sing and play right along with your favorite radio program or records!

SEND NO MONEY: Just send name and address to Bob West and pay postman $1.69 plus COD and postage. Start playing beautiful chords the very first day. Be playing beautiful music in two weeks or get your money back.

BOB WEST, 1101 N. Paulina, Dept. 205, Chicago 22, Ill.

NEW, Beautiful Simulated BIRTHSTONE Identification BRACELET $1.95 Send No Money

Your name engraved WITHOUT COST on this curved identification bracelet set with four sparkling, simulated birthstones correct for your month of birth. Just send your name, address, birth month and print out name for engraving on bracelet. Pay your postman only $1.95 plus Tax and C.O.D. costs, on arrival. Satisfaction guaranteed. Write today. GORDON & CO., Dept. M-12, 918 40th ST. PLACE, DES MOINES 12, IOWA.

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME! Trained artists are capable of earning $60, $75 or more a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE. VETERANS: G.I. Approved.
STUDIO 8012M, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N. W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

Get Well QUICKER
From Your Cough Due to a Cold
FOLEY'S Honey & Tar Cough Compound

GLOWING CROSS GIVEN AWAY

Just Send Your Name and Address
We will mail you this beautiful GLOWING CROSS. Also FREE CATALOG showing many VALUABLE GIFTS that are GIVEN with FULL INFORMATION on HOW TO RECEIVE THEM. Enclose stamp or coin for mailing GLOWING CROSS.
THE RELIGIOUS HOUSE, Dept. DMG
7002 N. Clark St. Chicago, 26, Ill.

LEARN AT HOME
TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE
You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.
HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED
50th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 2312, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name
City State Age

Lovelier
COIFFURES FOR YOU

Race 65* Electric Hair Dryer

Just what you've been waiting for — an attractive, efficient electric hair dryer to use after shampoos or home permanents. Spend minutes and save hours. Race 65 serves you in scores of ways — defrosting, drying lingerie, vaporizing, many other jobs. Buy it in cosmetic or housewares sections of finer department stores, or order direct — only $14.95, postpaid.

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

RACINE UNIVERSAL MOTOR CO.
1637 GOOLD STREET, DEPT. D M RACINE, WISCONSIN

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your favorite photo

NEW SILK FINISH • GOLD TOOLED FRAME

Just to get acquainted, we will make you a FREE 5x7 enlargement of any picture or negative and mount it in a handsome gold tooled frame. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes, and clothing for information on having this enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil.

SEND NO MONEY. Send your most cherished photo or negative now, accept your beautifully framed enlargement when it arrives, and pay postman only 19c for frame plus small handling and mailing charge. If you are not completely satisfied, return the enlargement within 10 days and your money will be refunded. But you may keep the handsome frame as a gift for promptness. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. M-41, Hollywood 38, Cal.

Brush Away GRAY HAIR

LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

● Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale streaks of gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands of women (men, too)—Brownatone is dependable—guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. Cannot affect waving of hair. Economical, lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One tinting imparts desired shade. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. First application must satisfy you or money back. 75c and $1.75—all druggists. Retain youthful charm. Get Brownatone now.

"But I'm so u believing it. "I "Stay away plied. "That'
But to the v
was a challenge.
Shelley smuggled herself into a projection room after the others were seated. She thought she'd escape unnoticed before the lights went on again. But it was so-o-o-o interesting that she forgot. And in her excitement she began telling Producer Michael Kanin how he should cut his picture. She must have been very cute about it, because ordinarily that's a good way for an unknown actress to buy a ticket to oblivion.

"I guess," Shelley muses now, "I shouldn't do things like that. But it seems to me that movies are so depart*men*talized. I mean, everybody attends to their own business and you're not supposed to make suggestions outside your own department."

She was so tense and nervous in her first scenes (thinking of her "ugliness") that she almost lost the part. But Shelley soon relaxed enough to make a few suggestions about her dialogue. When Cukor liked one of these, she was elated and made more. One day Author Garson Kanin memo'd: "Shelley dear, I know you've written many distinguished plays, but do you mind saying my lines as I wrote them?"

That cured her. "Since then," she avers, "I've never tried to improve my lines."

But her zeal for "un-departmentalizing" the movies has found outlet in other directions. It reached dangerous proportions on Larceny, for instance. Here Mr. Lane (Shotgun) Britton, her makeup man, admirer and confidant, had to rush in to smooth out a "situation." Seems Shelley, eager to help, was telling the veteran cameraman how she preferred to be photographed!

"You just don't do that, Shelley!" warned Shotgun, after tranquillity was restored.

"Oh," said Shelley, contrite, "I didn't know."

Fortunately for her future, the girl makes these voluntary contributions to cinema uplift with a friendliness, zest and enthusiasm that soon win forgiveness.

Even in her theatrical beginnings, Shelley violated that prime rule of the stage trouper: "Never overstay your welcome." As a moppet named Shirley Schrift, she made her way to a theater's Shirley Temple contest in her native St. Louis. She shrieked "On the Good Ship Lollipop" and kept on shrieking it until they finally had to remove her from the stage. She won a consolation prize.

Apparently she never recovered, because by her 'teens she was persuading her father, a designer of men's clothing, that his future really lay in New York. Her mother, the former Rose Winters of St. Louis' famed municipal opera, was sympathetic. They moved to Brooklyn.

Highlight of Shelley's dramatic career at Thomas Jefferson High there was her performance as Katisha in The Mikado. The school had two orchestras, which joined forces for this production without prior rehearsal as a unit. The resulting cacophony had reached a nice frenzy by the time Katisha entered for her aria. As Shelley recalls it, the chorus was singing something the orchestra wasn't playing, and poor Katisha was stumped. This time she did the wrong thing—stepped out of character—and made a hit.

"Excuse me a minute?" she asked the thousand faces in the audience.

Then she turned to the orchestra: "Let's start over and get together!"

The thousand faces roared and cheered.

Her professional debut was as a model in a metropolitan garment center. And it went of course all wrong.

sational. Shelley sang and danced in to keep her in doughnuts and family home to go it alone. Almost enough, that is. There was one time when she ushered at the Belasco Theater for $8 a week during an "at liberty" period—and impulsively spent all her cash on a fancy bathing suit in which to audition for a part. She didn't get it, and went two days without food.

The stage career was not, however, without distinction of a sort—the wrong sort.

In the musical Rosalinda Shelley had a good singing role. Rather lost in the music's complications, Shelley connived with the orchestra's oboe player (who carried the melody in her important number) to cue her. He would throw his head back, they agreed, as a signal that she should sing.

"It worked fine," she reports cheerfully, "except the second night—he threw his head back too far, lost his balance, and knocked down half the orchestra."

Despite this Winters-connected catastrophe, Rosalinda sent Shelley to Hollywood, with results partially aforetold. The whole results, at this writing, are still unfolding.

After completing A Double Life, she took time out to go to New York for a part in Oklahoma!

She returned from New York and Oklahoma! still unaware what A Double Life would mean to her. In practical terms it has meant a contract for three times the money she might have had if they'd signed her before the film's release. Nearly a thousand a week, with more promised.

Meanwhile, the Winters life has settled down to routine confusion. She used to share a small apartment with mother, father, and sister Blanche, a pediatric nurse. An aunt and uncle were close neighbors—"and all my relatives moved out from St. Louis, and—oh, yes, the baby . . ."

The baby, it developed, was a "borrowed" one from a motherless home upstairs. It spent the day at Shelley's while its father worked. (Shelley's own marriage, an impulsive wartime union now dissolved, produced no offspring.)

Recently Shelley moved into her own small apartment in Hollywood, but bedlam moved with her. Oversupplied with energy and vitality, she creates her own—"just by being in a room," as someone observed. She keeps on the go. She works. When not working, she dashes breathlessly through her days, usually half an hour late for appointments, always with fantastic but legitimate reasons for her tardiness. She telephones friends, endlessly, for advice which she usually, and impulsively, ignores.

And equal to her talent for doing the "wrong thing" is her gift for saying, without thinking, what she thinks. Recently, for instance, at a Jack Warner party the big man was reproaching Shelley for signing with U-I rather than with WB. Shelley, ever outspoken, told him of her Warners test.

"But why didn't I see it?" he protested.

"You did see it," said Shelley blithely, "and it was you who turned me down."

Reminded later that it is lèse majesté in Hollywood to recall a big shot's oversights, Shelley was unmoved.

"Well, he did turn me down, didn't he?" she demanded innocently, as if that made any difference.

But when you can be a "wrong-way kid" in the Winters way—who'd ever want to be "right"?

THE END

...ère found to-
...ner) on a bench
...oisette.

...aused her illness as
...ju pressure and a general
...condition. He kept her tucked
...bed for more than a week.

Coming out of the hospital, Rita spent most of July just resting and getting well. So far, she had acted in a predictable manner. Nothing sensational. Nothing for the headlines.

On July 23 she was in Cannes, registered at the fashionable Eden Roc, apartment Number 34. On that date Orson Welles arrived at Eden Roc and registered in apartment Number 29.

The word went out, the newspaper columnists moved in and there immediately began the story of Rita Hayworth's adventures on the French Riviera.

The August 1 issue of France Dimanche, Parisian weekly, carried a picture of Rita Hayworth and Orson Welles dining together.

"Orson Welles says, 'I shall never remarry Rita Hayworth'," whooped the headline.

"Orson Welles, the youthful genius, and Rita Hayworth spent a night at Cannes . . . but strictly honorable," the story went on to say.

"Gilda (Miss Hayworth was called by the name of the character she had made known throughout the world by her portrayal on the screen) did not appreciate the pleasantry. She is still very much in love with her ex-husband. . . .

"The night of his arrival, Orson Welles invited Gilda to dine with him at Chez Francis at La Garoupe.

" 'He truly treated me as if I'd never been his wife,' sighed Miss Hayworth."

France Dimanche neglected to say to whom "Gilda" sighed.

"After dinner they had a drink at La Jungle, a cabaret in Cannes. On leaving around four o'clock in the morning, Orson, who was feeling very gay, embraced Gilda a la Francaise." (Meaning, of course that he kissed her noisily on both cheeks.)

"At five o'clock in the morning," you could almost hear the France Dimanche

Now, it is necessary to point out that the French papers have a typical Gallic approach to romance items and sometimes go to far greater lengths then their American cousins in reporting affairs of the heart. It is well to remember that everyone in France, from diplomats to the least shopgirl, wanted the glamorous American star to behave in a manner befitting French ideas of movie star behavior

It's possible that Rita and Orson spent an exceedingly gay evening together—and it is also possible that the evening was no more exciting than an excursion to the local bistro of Cranberry Corners, Idaho. Whatever the case, the newspaper stories were unfortunate. They established Rita as a type, m'sieu, that the Continent had not seen since pre-war days—gay, beautiful, dashing, careless of reputation, typical of those mad Hollywood beauties portrayed in American films.

echoes at home . . .

The story created such an uproar that echoes were heard in New York. Paris reporters for American newspapers were asked where they had been wasting their time when Rita Hayworth and Orson Welles announced their plans to marry again. It isn't difficult to understand why the newspaper boys began to watch Rita with the worried expression of men with a bomb in their midst. The pressure was on. From this point forward, Rita would be big news.

Orson Welles went back to Rome on the day. after his "reunion" with Rita. And Rita retired to the quiet of her apartment. It is possible that she should have talked to the press; her seclusion only added fuel to the fire of rumors.

Rita's self-imposed retirement was brief. It was in the fashionable club Paradis a short time later that it was decided Rita had completely recuperated and was once more in "great form." This deduction was obvious when, in stocking feet, Miss Hayworth demonstrated a wicked samba. The eager partner was Alberto Dodero, Venezuelan millionaire. Although often referred to as "the pompous Señor Dodero," he didn't hesitate to discard his white dinner jacket, the better to match the antics of his spirited partner.

Even Mohammed Rega, the Shah of Iran, during 48 hours of liberty allotted him by protocol, spent his precious time pursuing the most sought-after woman in France. Shah or not, he was the recipient of a Hayworth brush-off. It seems he did manage to say hello to her, and was under the impression that she was to dine with him at Eden Roc on his last night in town. But Rita didn't show. After a two-hour wait, he finally gave up and consoled himself by having two of the prettiest of the pretty Viseux sisters join him for the evening.

It is now time to introduce Ali Khan, a character in the pageant of Rita's holiday. He takes a bit of introducing. Ali Khan, be it said, is son of the Right Honorable Aga Sultan Sir Mohammed Shah (better known as the Aga Khan). The Right Honorable is probably the richest man in the world. Every year his people, the Ismail Mohammedans, pay their beloved leader an amount of gold equal to his weight. On the fiftieth anniversary of his reign, they made it diamonds—and that year he tipped the scale at a neat 272 pounds!

Prince Ali Khan, with that sort of inhe-

MODERN SCREEN

"I've got news, Pop! I wos held over for another twenty-six weeks' engagement."

all in fun and fun for all

That's MODERN SCREEN's bright new show, Red Benson's Movie Matinee. It's an audience participation show like no other with a laugh a minute and prizes galore. You'll enjoy this fun-filled half-hour. Folks in New York City think it's Mutual's top daytime quiz!

TUNE IN

You'll hear Red Benson's Movie Matinee every day, Monday thru Saturday, if you tune in your Mutual Station at 3:00-3:30 P.M., E.S.T., Monday thru Friday: 11:00-11:30 A.M., Saturdays. (Saturdays for WOR, New York, 1:30-2:00 P.M.)

modern screen

"America's Leading Movie Magazine"

COMMON SENSE.. proved thousands upon thousands of times!
ALL-VEGETABLE LAXATIVE

NATURE'S REMEDY (NR) TABLETS —A purely vegetable laxative to relieve constipation without the usual griping, sickening, perturbing sensations, and does not cause a rash. Try NR—you will see the difference. Uncoated or candy coated—their action is dependable, thorough, yet gentle as millions of NR's have proved. Get a 25c box and use as directed.

Nature's Remedy
NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT

FUSSY STOMACH?
RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION, GAS AND HEARTBURN

FOR THE TUMMY!

DON'T LET THOSE "DIFFICULT DAYS" COME BETWEEN YOU

Maybe it was his fault—that quarrel. Maybe. But next time take care! Don't let those Monthly Blues make you nervous and irritable! Instead—for nervous tension, periodic cramps and headache — help get usually grand relief with these improved Chi-Ches-Ters Pills! Packed in three convenient sizes. Get Chi-Ches-Ters Pills at your druggist today.

The Improved CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS
For relief from "periodic functional distress"

FREE—New illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write today! Chichester Chemical Company, Dept. E-12, Philadelphia 46, Pennsylvania.

EVEN IF YOU DON'T KNOW A NOTE OF MUSIC NOW...

You can learn your favorite instrument, this easy A-B-C way!

No special talent, no previous training needed. This U. S. School home-study method is so successful because you learn to play by playing real tunes by note, right from the start. And just think, you can learn your favorite instrument for only a few cents a day. If interested, mail coupon for FREE Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. See for yourself how easy it is to learn any instrument right at home, in spare time, without a private teacher.
U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
14412 Brunswick Bldg.,
New York 10,
N. Y.

FREE PRINT AND PICTURE SAMPLE

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
14412 Brunswick Bldg., New York 10, N. Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).
Have you
Instrument..... Instrument?.....
Name.....
(Please Print)
Address.....

ritance ahead how he's going u
an attractive gi
tary, he gets riage a day.
and has had

For obvious rea does is news. Let him bow casu beautiful lady—the European press will scent a romance. Couple his name with that of a girl already in the headlines, and you have a story that approaches, in sensation, the fabulous Wally Simpson-Prince of Wales romance.

Khan, accustomed as he may be to having beautiful women swooping down on him in droves, was not immune to the Hayworth charm. He first sized her up appreciatively at a party organized by Elsa Maxwell to celebrate the tenth wedding anniversary of Lily Pons and Andre Kostelanetz. Rita was wearing a ravishing rose-colored gown, purchased during her short stay in Paris. During the evening, when Prince Ali Khan stepped out on the dance floor, the partner he embraced was usually a girl in a ravishing rose-colored gown.

It was after Orson Welles had left for Rome and there was gossip of a reconciliation that Ali Khan met Rita again. This time it was at a party given by Alberto Dodero at his fabulous Chateau des Pins.

However, it was not until the end of the first week in August, the time of the opening of the summer Sporting Club at Monte Carlo, that the romance of Rita and Ali became apparent. It took a great deal of perseverance on the part of the young prince, but by the time the Gala had ended it was obvious to those who had witnessed the public flirtation that the Prince was first contender in the Hayworth holiday sweepstakes.

The opening of the summer Sporting Club of Monte Carlo is one of the biggest events of the season on the French Riviera. This year, in addition to the satisfaction of seeing the Edward G. Robinsons, Maurice Chevalier and Sacha Guitry, the famous French actor-playwright, the guests were caught up in the excitement of watching and commenting on the attempts of Prince Ali Khan to captivate the beautiful Rita.

The word was whispered around that Ali Khan was out to steal a kiss from this girl of his princely dreams. One observer reported he had tried but had been rebuked in the restaurant. Others reported watching similar futile attempts in the entrance hall and in the cabaret.

prince's reward . . .

Five hours after the quest for a kiss had started, or at 3 o'clock in the morning, to be exact, interested spectators—and the persistent Ali Khan—were rewarded. Under the spell of the languid rhythm of "Clopin, Clopant," Rita embraced her prince charming and kissed him.

This may or may not have been unwise; whatever the case, it made news. (When Molly Jones kisses her escort at the Fireman's Clambake, no one is more than mildly interested except Molly and her escort. When Rita Hayworth kisses a prince at what, fundamentally, is a Fireman's Clambake on a somewhat larger scale, columnists quiver and the news strikes into remote corners of the world.)

After the Case of the Kiss, everyone was certain of Rita's selection of a vacation companion. As one well-known French scribe summed it up, "Rita took a long time to make a choice among her numerous admirers, but now it's official. Of all those who sighed after her, it is the Prince Ali Khan who has won her company."

It had been too interesting a yarn, however, for the scribe to write such a definite finis to it, so he continued with this gem of speculation: "Naturally, she has made june allyson on the january cover of modern screen on sale

december 10

many others jealous, the principal one being Orson Welles. Since his first visit to Cannes to see Rita, he has made several trips between Rome and the French Riviera. He arrives unexpectedly and then acts embarrassed about being here at all.

"It is said that if Rita left the Hotel du Cap to live at La Reserve de Beaulieu, where it is quieter, it was only to keep from getting involved with Orson Welles."

The correspondent explained the two rivals' attitudes and editorialized as follows: "Orson and Ali spy on each other and dodge one another. A fight between the two would provide great sport. Orson is a colossal specimen, and Ali, though not quite so muscular, is nonetheless in good physical shape. He exercises a lot and is quite a sportsman. He is a fighter. This young man, immensely rich, to whom life refuses nothing, loves a fight and provokes it."

It was undoubtedly a great disappointment to those who had hoped for a violent physical encounter between Orson Welles and Ali Khan that the fight didn't come off.

Instead, by August 20th, the United Press reported that Rita Hayworth and Ali Khan were motoring through Spain. The UP dispatch from Madrid said:

"Rita Hayworth is the most popular movie star in Spain today. Everyone knows her by her maiden name of Margarita Carmen Cansino. Nevertheless, she refuses obstinately to receive journalists and has given strict orders to the hotel that no one is to disturb her. A Spanish reporter remarked, 'She doesn't even speak Spanish any more, but there is not a possible error —with her temperament and disposition, she couldn't possibly have been born anywhere but in Spain.'"

It was a bad guess on Rita's part, this refusal to receive journalists. But the error is an understandable one. Because of the prominence of her escort and Rita's own fame, her every move had been watched by the press. The reporters had dramatized the slightest flicker of an eyelash and Rita, a girl who simply wanted a vacation, had found herself sharing headlines with the French Cabinet. Irritated by the wild and sometimes spicy items, she made the mistake of underlining them by avoidance of the press.

From Madrid, Rita and Prince Ali motored to Lisbon where they stayed at the fashionable resort of Estoril. Besides Rita, the Associated Press reported, "the prince is accompanied by Mr. A. Williams, his secretary, whose chief task is to keep

...ighfiled
...squired
...v Group
...nd na-

...ita insisted
...Nations chil-
...At about this time,
...secretary announced: "She doesn't want anything printed about her illness because she's afraid people in America might worry."

...; and strolled
... of Biarritz.
... brief trip to San Sebastian
...e Rita showed up on the passenger list of the Queen Elizabeth. Now she's home. Prince Ali? He's down at Mayfair, his Côte d'Azur villa, reportedly planning an early visit to Hollywood. (Whether or not the "romance" will flame again in that more workaday atmosphere is anybody's guess.) Orson Welles, it is said, may marry an Italian girl named Lea Padovani.

Rita has her memories of a vacation that involved a Prince. And normally this story could be expected to end here.

It doesn't.

In addition to flashing across the horizon of European society with Ali Khan, Rita did some things that were not emphasized by the press. She attended a Paris premiere Rita's romance with Prince Ali made the headlines. Rita's appearance at a children's benefit, although noted by the European papers, received quiet treatment. It didn't fit the preconceived pattern of movie-star behavior.

Certainly Rita romped around Europe with Ali Khan. It's in the record, it happened and perhaps it was unwise. But any other star of Rita's prominence, if paired with Europe's most eligible male, would have received a comparable amount of gossip attention. Rita's mistake—if, indeed any mistake was made—was that of forgetting for a few weeks that she was Rita Hayworth. And the reporters never forgot it.

THE END

MRS. BRISKIN'S DREAM HOUSE

(Continued from page 50)

organdy, are bounded by blue draperies. The bed is white with a quilted headboard of pink satin, and a duplicate is in the nursery for little Lindsay. An identical one is on order for the littlest Briskin, Candice, whom everyone calls Candy. So all three Briskin women will soon sleep in beds of the same design. . . . Which brings to mind the loudspeaker attachment in Betty's bedroom that picks up the slightest sounds from the nursery. In most Hollywood homes, the loudspeaker is located in a nurse's room. But not in Betty's! If one of the children is crying, she wants to be awakened, and in a hurry.

Something else she likes to keep close tabs on is her clothes. And to this end all her wardrobe closets are equipped with glass doors so she can see at a glance where every garment is. Her closets are so designed that each item of dress has its own compartment. For example, there's a separate space for short blouses and lingerie, one for long blouses and sweaters, one for hats and bags, one for gloves, and so on.

Compared with some other actresses who practically live in Adrian's and Howard Greer's, Betty doesn't have an extraordinary amount of clothing. She has a few dressy things and one new Sophie wardrobe—which consists of 17 outfits. She bought them all in one day on the spur of the moment when she was shopping with her secretary, Susan Hawkins.

She was very much pregnant with Candy at the time, and she couldn't stand the sight of maternity clothes any longer. She and Susan went down to Saks Fifth Avenue in Beverly Hills and politely asked for a private showing of the new Sophie creations. In one fell swoop, Betty ordered 17 of the 24 outfits shown. Then she had her Paramount dress form sent over to the store, and the dresses were made to fit her regular figure. This served as an added incentive to regain her pre-pregnancy outlines when the time came.

Lindsay and Candy have a nursery room which is all sunlight and moonbeams. Windows form two sides of the room and the white walls are covered with nursery-rhyme murals. These were painted by a Walt Disney artist and so cleverly executed that they extend along the toy cupboards, and the knobs on the cabinets constitute Humpty-Dumpty's eyes.

The crib in the nursery is a copy of Betty's bed, but its sides are removable and it will become a youth bed before long. In the hall outside the room are two store cabinets which hold the Briskin girls' wardrobes. Like their mother, they'll have to hang their clothes neatly, because the closet doors are made of glass.

If you were to judge Betty Hutton's home life by her screen roles, you'd imagine it to be wild. zany, slapstick, raucous. Not so! The Briskins lead a typically American middle class life. They're both early risers. Ted, who is a camera manufacturer, gets to his factory by nine, and Betty, even when she doesn't have to report to the studio, is up by seven. For years, when she was playing the night-club circuit, she went to bed at three in the morning and slept till noon; now she turns in at ten and awakens each morning a little after dawn.

Ted comes back to lunch each day, and when Betty is working he lunches with little Lindsay.

After dinner when the children are abed, the Briskins frequently slip away to their guest house, which is furnished like an old English cottage. Here Betty can study a script while Ted reads, or they both can play gin rummy, or they can hold a little poker party away from the house and the sleeping children. The guest house is equipped with a fireplace; an early English breakfront which displays a china collection; a day bed, and a cock-fight chair made and given to them by George Montgomery.

Betty says she hopes to have at least three children, and if she does, the present house will be too small. When the third Briskin is en route, she and Ted are going to buy a larger house. "One with two stories and a colonial front."

"When I was a little kid," Betty says, "and used to visit my school mates, I found out that the happiest families always seemed to live in two-story colonials."

If happiness is any criterion, the Briskins deserve just about the largest colonial house in America.

THE END

ONLY $1 for Any Item

Balance in easy payments.
Your Money Back if Not Satisfied.

Immediate Delivery

J3
3-genuine diamond engagement ring and 3-genuine-diamond wedding ring. 14Kt. Gold. Perfectly matched in attractive gift box. Both for $29.95 tax incl. 3 diamond ring only $22.95.

MEN'S WRIST WATCH

J2
Nationally advertised watch with written guarantee. Latest model in luxurious gift box. $24.95 tax incl. Ladies' Watches at same price.

J4
Bargain of the Month. 14Kt. gold engraved wedding band. White or yellow. Sale price $3.98 tax incl. while they last.

J6
Beautiful gold filled Carmen stretch bracelet to enhance her wrist and win her heart. Attractively Boxed. $10.95 tax incl.

Send for Big FREE 48 page Catalog. Full line Genuine Diamond Rings. Nationally Known Watches. Lowest Prices. Best Terms Guaranteed.
HOW TO ORDER: Send only $1. Balance in Easy Payments. State age, occupation. No extra charge. No red tape. Orders filled promptly. ORDER TODAY.

ATLAS JEWELERS, Inc.
Dept.M-2, 225 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Secret..... of Longer HAIR!

IMPROVE APPEARANCE OF YOUR HAIR IN "ONE" APPLICATION OR YOUR MONEY BACK!
All men adore girls with Longer Hair. Amazing method imported from Paris sold exclusively by us, helps make your Hair Longer. HAIR MIRACLE adds body, brings new life to hair injured by sun, wind, dyes or bleaches. Stops dry brittle ends from breaking allowing hair to grow longer. NOT GREASY OR STICKY! Sensation of the Age. Thrill to new joy of romance & Love with beautiful Longer Hair. SEND NO MONEY! Order now. 2 months' supply $1.49 plus C.O.D. postage & tax. Pay postman. Money refunded in one week if not satisfied.

KAY EVANS of Calif.. 150 Powell St., Dept. D. San Francisco. Calif

SHOE SIZES 9 to 12 ?

AT LAST...
EXCLUSIVELY FOR YOUR FEET - SHOES TO GIVE THEM THAT "SIZE 5" LOOK!

CLASSIC

You'll never tire of CLASSIC, the flat little shoe that goes with everything. In black, chocolate brown, kelly green or navy blue suede . . . red, black, brown, white or green smooth leather. Open or closed back. Sizes 9 to 12, AAA to B widths. Also in regular sizes. $8.95, plus 25c postage. Money-back guarantee.

9 12 NINE-TWELVE

Write for Free Catalog

NINE-TWELVE SHOES
HAVERHILL, MASS.

Order Today!

Please send me——pairs CLASSICS M
Size——Width——Color——
Suede ☐ Smooth ☐ 2nd Color Choice——
Open back ☐ Closed back ☐
Name——
Address——
City——Zone——State——
Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C.O.D. (charges extra) ☐
$8.95 Add 25c for mailing $8.95

CAT'S PAW
Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

CALLUSES and CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO
Safe • Sure • Convenient • Stainless • Economical. Millions use it. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. 30c, 50c jars. Sold at drug stores. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

POCKET RADIO
REALLY WORKS, TOO!
Black Silver Plastic. NO TUBES —BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG-INS"! Works by new "Radacrystal"! EASY TO USE! SHOULD LAST FOR YEARS! GUARANTEED TO WORK on local stations!
ONLY $3.99 POSTPAID or send $1.00 (bill, mo. ck) and pay $2.99 plus postage on delivery.
GUARANTEED COMPLETE READY TO PLAY ON SIMPLE ATTACHMENT. SWELL GIFTS—REALLY LOW PRICED! GET YOUR "POCKET RADIO" TODAY—NOW!
MIDWAY SALES CO., Dept. NMM-12, Kearney, Nebr.

"How to Make Money with Simple Cartoons"
A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address
FREE BOOK
CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 4312 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

SMOKE IN BED
COMFORT LUXURY SAFETY
Prevents burns on rugs, bed sheets, furniture
The robot collects ash ond butt automoticolly
DEPT. 4S Chrome ploted $2.65 Postpoid
SMOKERS ROBOT CO.
157 STATE ST., NEW HAVEN 10, CONN.

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR
TEMPORARY RELIEF IS NOT ENOUGH
Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure unwanted hair is gone FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the Mahler Method safely and efficiently. Used successfully all over the world for 50 years.
Send 6c coin or stamps TODAY for booklet, "NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU."
Mahler's, Inc., Dept. 36T, East Providence, R. I.

Send for Free Catalog!
OUT OF PAWN!
Genuine DIAMONDS
Direct to You — at Amazing Savings! Over 100,000 satisfied customers—Sold with Iron-Clad Money-Back Guarantee. Order from this ad. Write for FREE ILLUSTRATED CATALOG.
1/5 CARAT $49 $125 Value Tax incl.
1/2 CARAT $95 $200 Value Tax incl.
BERMAN'S COLLATERAL LOAN BANK
Dept. OS, 836-38 W. Balto. St., Balto. 1, Md.

(I don't know wh... none of my business.) ...they ... what they can in government bonds. They support me. When Betty's father lost most of his money and came out here to retire, they gave him an allowance. But retiring just about drove him crazy, the way it does most men. So Harry and Betty made him supervisor of their ranch, and if they'd gone into the open market they couldn't have found a better man for the job.

But what I was going to say, before I got lost in all this chatter, is that it just wouldn't make sense for a girl to think about retiring when she was earning that much and enjoying herself in a career that doesn't interfere a bit with a happy marriage.

As I remarked, Betty's never been the terribly ambitious type, no matter how much she likes her work. I'm the one who was ambitious for her. I kept pushing her, encouraging her—when she was little, I made all her costumes, went to every darn rehearsal, sat on those hard benches from eight in the morning till ten at night.

I've never seen Betty very disappointed over parts she's lost. And before DuBarry Was a Lady, believe me, she was up for plenty that she didn't get. "What of it?" she'd shrug. "There'll be another one coming along."

Today she behaves like anything but a movie star. Never reads reviews, doesn't wait to see rushes—she's in too much of a hurry to get home. Loves to tell stories on herself. Like when women at the market take a gander at her legs, and their voices carry farther than they imagine. "Oh, I don't think her legs are so wonderful. . . ."

So there's my daughter, who doesn't take herself too seriously, married to the kindest, sweetest, most thoughtful man in the world—and if you want to put that under the head of bragging, don't let me stop you. Harry's a fellow who will not fight with people. He wants things to be pleasant, he wants peace. If he's not satisfied with a boy in the band, he'll do his level best to iron things out. If that's not possible, he'll tell the manager to let the boy go. You can't get Harry to argue —especially with his wife.

Betty used to have a quick temper. She'd fly off the handle and say things and be sorry. But not any more. I don't even try to account for the change. All I know is that once right after their marriage, some little thing happened, and Betty flared up. Harry said, "Excuse me, Betty," and got up and left the room.

"I feel so ashamed," she said.

I've never seen another two like the Jameses—never heard them quarrel. They still act like a couple of honeymooners—oh, nothing mushy—just the way they smile at each other, the way she slips her arm through his in the car and pats his hand. He even wants her to eat everything he eats—and how he loves those rich desserts! When Harry's home, Betty just can't help gaining. Not long ago they ran Springtime in the Rockies for us at the studio, and we laughed our heads off. Harry looked like a matchstick—135 pounds! Now he's 185, thanks to home cooking. When he's away, Betty simply tells the cook to skip the starches, and takes any extra poundage off rehearsing.

Her one aim in life is to please her husband. When Jessica arrived five weeks early, she worried herself sick because the house might not be in apple-pie order

...she's ... hates makeup, so th... lipstick. And she hasn't ... colored nail polish on her ha... they were married. On her toes she uses it, which strikes me funny.

"How come you don't like it on her fingers and you do on her toes?" I asked Harry once.

"I don't look at her toes," he grinned.

They're both grown-up. They both know that something has to be sacrificed to their work and they don't act childish about it. Harry's as pleasant and nice when Betty's on a picture as any other time—doesn't complain about her being tired or having to go to bed early. Betty understands that an orchestra leader has to travel, that the public wants to see him. Naturally she misses him. She expects to be lonesome. He calls her every night and how eagerly she waits for that call!

Otherwise, they've got things down to a kind of routine. Arrange so they can have their vacations together, and that's when they just thoroughly relax down at Del Mar. Betty used to make three and four pictures a year, and the schedules are so long she hardly had a breath between them. After they were married, she fixed it with the studio not to make more than two a year, and one of those she does while Harry's off on his long trip—six weeks to three months. This fall she'll start That Beautiful Blonde from Bashful Bend soon after he leaves. She'll be busy all day and dead tired at night, and I don't know any better medicine for loneliness. It's no cure but it helps.

At home they're Betty and Harry James with a couple of kids. The name Grable means nothing in Vicki's young life. Ask what her mother's name is and she'll tell you Betty James. Of course she knows what her parents do, same as any child does, but it's all in the day's work to Vicki. Her favorite line used to be: "Daddy's blowing his brains out to make money to buy shoes." And though I've taken her to a couple of Betty's pictures—The Dolly

critic's corner

WHAT PAPER DO YOU READ?

With all due regard for Rita Hayworth's abundant and evident charms, bestowed upon her by nature and the makeup department equally, it must be surmised that the lady simply hasn't got what it takes to play the role of Carmen, Prosper Merimee's classic gypsy vamp. For an emptier lot of posturing and posing, of slinging hips and general emoting of passion you're never likely to see, than that indulged in by Miss Hayworth in The Loves of Carmen.

Bosley Crowther
The New York Times

Rita Hayworth dancing in The Loves Of Carmen is one of the movies' true bewitchments. A lovely thing to contemplate whatever they call the dream-like creature, as Carmen she's a natural, at ease, on earth—at last.

Cecilia Ager
New York Star

Mouse.
aketyak e door bs are as married, about her he's played a cut a new record and you ask him how it went, he has three expressions: "Pretty good" or "pretty good" or "pretty good." "Pretty good" means what some other man might call "terrific" for an hour and a half.

They both have the same idea about a home. It's for the people who live in it —grown-ups, children, dogs, no matter who. If Betty's terrycloth robe slips to the floor and Punkin and Wow, the poodles, want to sleep on it, they sleep on it. "Why have dogs," Betty wants to know, "just to give them complexes?" Two years ago she fixed up the garden with beautiful old-fashioned white wicker furniture. It looked heavenly. Then she had a fence built round the pool, which maybe didn't look so heavenly but, more important, it kept the children safe. Last year Punkin and Wow chewed up the furniture, so now there's a chicken-wire fence to keep them away from it. There's also Jessica's playpen, a swing and slide and merry-go-round for Vicki, toys for the children and dogs and I don't know what all. Any resemblance between what it looked like two years ago and today is purely accidental. But they should worry, the family's happy.

And it's not just the outside. When Jessica came, they gave Vicki the upstairs music room. It was too small for her doll house, so that went down to the living-room. So did about 9,000 records, which they stuck under the piano. Then I walk in one day and here's this shuffleboard smack down the middle of the living-room, and so long that it sticks out into the hall. All over the walls they've got signs tacked up about how to play the game, and a towel hanging from the end of a mahogany desk.

"Interior decorating by the Jameses," said Betty. "How do you like it?"

"I like anything you two do. But pardon me if I mention that this room was once beautiful."

"Sure, but we never used it. Now we have fun."

They don't mind the clutter of garden and living-room because there's a reason for it—it makes for happier living. Otherwise they're both bugs about order. Harry can shave and shower and you'd never know he'd been in the bathroom. Betty's clothes and dresser drawers are immaculate. She's forever fussing around and straightening things. That she always did. But if you want to know what really amazes me, it's the wonderful housekeeper she's turned out to be.

Makes me laugh sometimes, the differ-solution to what's the name (page 95)

Give yourself 5 points for each correct answer. A score below 65 is poor; between 75 and 90 is good; over 90 is excellent.

27- 1: Walter Abel
23- 2: Stuart Erwin
3-34: Joan Leslie
35- 4: Anne Shirley
30- 5: Gene Raymond
6-39: Tony Martin
7-10: Harry James
33- 8: Gail Patrick
16- 9: Kay Francis
20-11: Rosalind Russell
12-37: Melvyr Douglas
13:32: Virginia Bruce
14-21: Jean Arthur
15-36: Harold Lloyd
26-17: Chester Morris
18-28: Nelson Eddy
24-19: Warren William
22-25: Edward Arnold
29-38: Randolph Scott
40-31: Jack Benny

GUARD THOSE YOU LOVE

Remember that MOST CASES CAN BE CURED IF TREATED IN TIME.

1. Any sore that does not heal, particularly about tongue, mouth or lips.
2. A painless lump or thickening, especially in the breast, lip or tongue.
3. Progressive change in the color or size of a wart, mole or birthmark.
4. Persistent indigestion.
5. Persistent hoarseness, unexplained cough, or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Bloody discharge from the nipple or irregular bleeding from any of the natural body openings.
7. Any change in the normal bowel habits.

Research and education are our most potent weapons in the war on cancer. Your contribution is needed to carry on the fight — to wipe out cancer — to guard yourself and your loved ones from this dread disease.

GIVE TO CONQUER CANCER

American Cancer Society

If You Suffer From Some Of The Torture-Like Kinds Of "RHEUMATIC" PAINS or from "ARTHRITIS" or "LUMBAGO"
SIMPLE NEURALGIA OR MUSCULAR ACHES
PLEASE READ THIS CAREFULLY

$3.00 POSTPAID

We don't care what you've tried before—patent medicines, hot water bottles, heating pads, etc., our ELECTRIC MASSAGER may do for you what it has done for thousands of people who suffered from some of the torture-like pains of "RHEUMATIC, ARTHRITIC or NEURITIC TYPES," or from LUMBAGO, SIMPLE NEURALGIA or MUSCULAR ACHES due to cold, exposure or fatigue — or we will refund your money! There is nothing mysterious about our unit. It is a well-known fact that heat has relieved the various pains described above. Our ELECTRIC MASSAGER is the finest heating unit ever made which enables you to MASSAGE the painful area at the same time that invigorating heat is applied. You will be amazed at the efficiency of this new instrument. Operates on any 110-volt line, AC or DC. Send $3.00 cash, check or Money Order and we will ship prepaid or, if you wish, we will ship C.O.D. and you can pay the Postman $3.00 plus few cents postage.

HERE'S PROOF! From original letters on file
D. J. W. OF MISSOURI WRITES: "Words cannot express the wonderful relief I have had in this short time you can expect some more orders some time by doubting Thomas'. I am satisfied."
MRS. N. M. W. OF TEXAS WRITES: "I purchased one . have used it many, many times for relief of pains in various parts of my body especially for muscular backache . I wouldn't be without one."

METROPOLITAN ELECTRONIC CO., Dept. 75-A 42 Warren St., New York 7, N. Y.

"I'm SO Glad I Did!"

FORM A NATIONAL CURTAIN CLUB TODAY!

Easy ● Profitable ● Exciting!

What a difference these wonderful new high quality curtains will make to your home. Without any obligation, you have your choice of $36 worth of the loveliest curtains money can buy for forming a National Curtain Club. Send today for interesting catalog and simple details on How To Form a National Curtain Club.

NATIONAL CURTAIN CLUB, Inc.
P. O. Box 232-E, Boston 1, Mass.
No Obligation Whatsoever

Design Smart Fashions

Fascinating work. Originate your own distinctive clothes. Our basic training provides excellent starting point for career. Learn at home—spare time. Send for FREE booklet today.
NATIONAL SCHOOL OF DRESS DESIGN
1315 So. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2369, Chicago 5, Ill.

MUSICAL POWDER BOX

$5.95

Beautifully designed for your vanity or dresser—
THE IDEAL GIFT
Appealing to both eye and ear
CHOICE of your SENTIMENTAL "Get together" song or POPULAR HIT TUNE
. . . Begin the Beguine . Always . Anniversary Song . Woody Woodpecker . and many, many others
Send money order or check with list of first, second and third choice of songs.

SHERRY'S Dept. A 229 Main St., Norfolk, Va.

FREE SEND FOR PHOTOGRAPHIC CIRCULAR OF SHERRY'S GIFTS FREE

7-DAY TEST
DO YOU WANT LONGER
HAIR

BRUNETTES • BLONDES • TITIANS

Just try this SYSTEM on your hair 7 days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of Attractive Hair that can so often capture Love and Romance.

MARVELOUS HELP FOR DRY, BRITTLE, BREAKING-OFF HAIR. When Scalp and Hair conditions are normal and dry, brittle, breaking-off hair can be retarded, it has a chance to get longer, much more attractive. Amazing. The JUELENE System is not a hair restorative.

Send No Money • Fully Guaranteed

Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. Then let your mirror PROVE the thrilling results. JUELENE comes in 2 Forms ☐ Pomade ☐ Liquid. SEND FOR IT TODAY! C. O. D. $1.00 plus Government charges. It is fully guaranteed. Money back if you are not delighted. Write Now!
JUEL CO., 4727 N. Damen, Dept. G603, Chicago 25, Ill.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, actual photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c. (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925 Strathmoor Station, Dept. 2009, Detroit 27, Michigan.

Give Him A Personal Gift..
HIS NAME in MARCASITE on a Sterling TIE HOLDER

$7.95 INCL TAX FOR FOUR LETTERS

He'll remember you every day! Give him this beautiful sterling silver tie holder, with his own name set in gorgeous, gleaming marcasite. Attractively boxed for Christmas giving. A regular $15.00 value sold everywhere. SEND NO MONEY. Pay your postman only $7.95 for four letters plus postage. Three initials $6.95. Add $1.00 for each additional letter in name. If you send check or money order we will ship postpaid. Print initials in name clearly LaMAINA SALES, 4359 GERMANTOWN AVE., PHILA. 44, PA.

WHY WEAR DIAMONDS

When dazzling Zircons from the mines of the far-away mystic East are so effective and inexpensive? Thrilling beauty, stand acid, true backs, flashing brilliance! Exquisite gold mountings. See before you buy. Write for FREE catalog.

National Zircon Company Dept. 20-RN Wheeling, W.Va.

Catalog FREE!

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan, Dept. 2369, Chicago 5

EASY TO LEARN

...Train At Home For This WELL PAID PROFESSION-
PRACTICAL NURSING

Help fill the urgent need for Trained Practical Nurses. If you are between 18 and 55, it's easy to train at home in your spare time to take your place in this respected calling. Many earn while learning. High school is not needed. Nurse's equipment included. Mail this ad today for FREE Facts.
Wayne School Of Practical Nursing, Inc.,
2525 Sheffield Ave., Desk K-36, Chicago 14, Ill.
Please rush FREE FACTS and Sample Lesson Pages.

NAME_____ Age_____

Full Address_____

dancing see her s she insist up to he piece by pie or that a bu
ing, believe me, s folks say, "Don't tell things they're not glamorous." And I say, "Bosh!" It's true that during the war we sent out 90,000 pin-ups of Betty. But the minute Vicki was born, we got so many requests for the three Jameses together that we had to have new photos made—and the same with Jessica. Which proves to me that Betty's fans are interested in her as a human being—in the fact that she's got a husband and kids and sorts her laundry like any other woman.

And while we're on the subject of children, let me say this. Betty realized from the start how easy it would be to spoil them, and that's one thing she won't stand for. "A spoiled child," I've heard her say, "means a self-indulgent parent." Vicki and Jessica get all the love and security they need, but when Betty says no, it's no, and that's the end of it.

On the other hand, both Betty and Harry hate this business of shunting children off to the nursery. As soon as she was old enough, Vicki started eating with her parents—her own kind of dinner, of course, but at the same table. Jessica comes down now and stays in the room with them for half an hour before bedtime. That's so they'll know they're part of the family. Then when Vicki's ready for bed, Betty and Harry go up and she sings these two little songs her nurse taught her—"God Bless America" and "Jesus Loves Me"—and says her prayers.

And at Christmas she's mistress of ceremonies. Betty tells her whom to take each package to, and everybody waits till that one's opened and admired before she brings the next one. We're all there—Betty's sister Marjorie, and her husband Peter, Mr. Grable and myself—so it takes forever, but I don't know a pleasanter way to pass the time. Last Christmas Harry was Santa Claus—stood waiting at the foot of the stairs when Vicki came down, and boy! was she thrilled. Then she started calling for Daddy—Daddy had to see Santa Claus.

"Think fast," muttered Harry.

"Now you know Daddy's on a show this afternoon, Vicki, and he's out rehearsing."

So the situation was saved.

Betty and Harry don't give big parties or go to 'em—except maybe once in a blue moon like the party Jack Benny throws on New Year's Eve. They just seem sufficient unto themselves, and it's their life, and who's to tell them not to enjoy it their own way? On a free evening Harry likes to have friends in for gin or poker. As a rule, men can't stand playing poker with women, but Betty's an exceptional player and gives them a run for their money. Or they'll call the studio and ask to have a picture run off. Once in a while Harry'll go for a good musical—apart from Betty, Judy Garland's his favorite. Otherwise, it's always Westerns. Or they'll just sit home and listen to records and the radio.

Outside of music, they're both crazy about horses and baseball. That's nothing Betty got from Harry, though of course being married to him makes it more so. From the time she could climb on a horse she adored riding and, coming from St. Louis, we'd take her to see the Cards every time they played.

As for horses, I suppose you've read time and again how they bought the ranch so's to have a place to ride, and the thing gradually grew. Harry had a chance to other days. They've got fou right now, and my! the exc those foals are born. Usually in the dle of the night, just like human babies.

Before she married Harry, Betty used to go out dancing all the time. So did Harry, for that matter. The Palladium once ran a jitterbug contest between musicians and bandleaders, and Harry asked Betty to enter it with him. Not knowing him very well at the time, she refused, and he won it anyway. Well, believe it or not, I have never seen Betty and Harry dancing together. Not once since they're married. Also I've got a pretty good notion why. Because if my daughter hates the limelight, my son-in-law hates it worse. Quite a few times I've been in New York with them. We'd go to some night spot, and the headwaiter'd say, "I've got a ringside table for you, Mr. James."

But oh, no! Mr. James had to get clear off in a corner somewhere, and me, who wanted to see everything, I'd just trot along, keeping my mouth shut. As for those two getting up on the floor together, you'd have thought there was some law against it!

Now, I wouldn't be surprised if Betty'd like to go dancing now and then. But people might say, "There's Harry James and Betty Grable dancing!" Maybe even stop and stare. Which would embarrass Harry, and spoil any pleasure he got out of it. Well, dancing's not that important to Betty. Her husband's comfort is. On all the important things they agree. The trifles don't matter. That seems to me the basis of a real marriage. Unless her husband's happy, Betty can't be. First, last and always, she's Harry's girl, and I'm glad.

Glad? You know that silly song about I want a girl just like the girl that married Harry James. Well, here's a twist on it. When the time comes, I couldn't wish anything better for Vicki and Jessica than to marry a man just like the man that married Betty Grable. THE END

MODERN SCREEN

"Frankly, you shouldn't go in unless you understand lip reading."

...is up in this Western ...age coach days as a completely believable hard-hitting, gun-toting secret service man. It's a shock to see him out of pin-stripes and into levis and a ten-gallon hat, but we think you'll like his new look.

The story with all its twists and angles and vast numbers of indistinguishable good and bad hombres is incredibly complicated, but the gist of it is this. Two soldiers have been murdered by bandits while guarding a shipment of gold from the mining town of Rock Pass. Lieutenant John Haven of the Military Information Service is sent out to look into it. Haven drifts into town in civilian clothes, goes into a saloon and deliberately picks a fight with his friend Lieut. Stellman (Steve Brodie) just to let the customers know how little he thinks of the U. S. Army. He flirts with the saloon proprietress, Charlie (Jane Greer), and in due time is told off by her strapping bouncer, Mick Marion (Guinn Williams).

There's a fight (and it's a honey) during which Haven KO's Mick, impressing the sloe-eyed Charlie (whom Haven has shrewdly sized up as the town's Big Wheel) no end. She offers him a job running her stage coach line, and Haven, suspecting that Charlie is involved in past and present skullduggery around the gold mine, accepts, hoping to learn something. He does—the hardest possible way.

There's a brief, doomed love between these two, but that isn't the big thing here. What will hold you from beginning to end is the action: the fights, the chases, the warehouse fire at the end.

Agnes Moorehead, prettier than we've ever seen her, is fine as the fiancée of Haven's commanding officer (Tom Powers). Jane Greer is lovely, but a little bit wooden. Burl Ives, as Orville—Haven's guitar-playing hotel clerk—is—well, don't you love that man? This is an excellent Western, full of the stuff that makes your heart pound. Go see it.—RKO.

...MUSKETEERS

MGM has put just about everybody but Peter Lawford and Louis B. Mayer into this glorious Technicolor epic. For example, D'Artagnan is played by Gene Kelly, Lady De Winter by Lana Turner, Constance by June Allyson, the three musketeers by Van Heflin, Gig Young and Robert Coote, the King of France by Frank Morgan, the Queen by Angela Lansbury, Cardinal Richelieu by Vincent Price, and the Duke of Buckingham by John Sutton, to mention one or two. With that many stars, who could ask for anything more? You get more, whether you ask for it or not. Hours more. You get the story of D'Artagnan's trip to Paris (he's a country bumpkin, but an artist with a sword), of his joining the three musketeers, of his love for Constance. Then you get the story of Richelieu's power over the king, and you discover how Richelieu used the infamous Lady De Winter to wheedle state secrets out of recalcitrant gentlemen. And you get the story of Lady De Winter's past life—she was once married to one of the musketeers (Heflin) and she was also once a common thief. The love affair of the French Queen with the British Buckingham is explored; there's a war; there are more horses than you'd find in three Republic Westerns, and enough duelling and loud music to last you for years. Some of the duelling scenes are graceful and exciting (since there's no opportunity to dance, Kelly's been given plenty of leaping, bounding action to occupy his agile feet) and some of the duelling scenes are revoltingly suggestive of pig-sticking. After you've watched eight or ten men get run through the body with swords, you more or less have the idea. Still, it's a question of taste.—MGM.

LUCK OF THE IRISH

What might have been a fearfully routine story (about a poor but honest young journalist going to work for a rich but crooked old politician, and sweating it out until, at the end, he regains his ideals) is saved and even made delightful by the magic of Cecil Stations West: Army officer Dick Powell solves a Western mystery, meets tough Jone Greer.

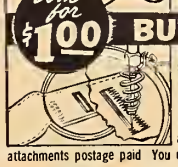
Luck Of The Irish: Newspopermon Ty Power goes to Eire, finds Anne Boxter ond romonce.

Sparkling Splendor
PENDANT LAMP
$7.50 Value
Only $3.98 !
OR TWO FOR $6.49!

Use them everywhere—on buffet, fireplace, piano, tables, radio, bedroom, etc. Each gracefully arched metal gold holder adorned with crystal clear, 3½ inch long tear drop shaped pendant—36 in all—which cheerfully catch and beautifully reflect the light. Hobnail crystal glass base. Full 14 inches tall with 5-foot cords. Unusual, most novel decoration for any home. Never before offered by us at this low price. Limited supply. Only $3.98 each or set of 2 for $6.49 postpaid, or sent C.O.D. plus postage and small C.O.D. fee. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. Hurry!

SEND NO MONEY

ALLYN & CO., DEPT. I
419 S. Main (Box 2611), Memphis, Tenn.



HEMSTITCHER

Hemstitch on any sewing machine with this handy attachment. Does two piece, criss-cross, inlaid, circular and hemstitching for pleats, also tucking, smocking and picoting. Makes rugs, comforters, slippers, etc. out of any material. Easy directions included

Both for $1.00

BUTTON HOLER

Makes button holes on your sewing machine instead of by hand. Also darns stockings, sews buttons, zippers, and can be used for quilting. Sews in any direction—front, back or sideways.

SEND NO MONEY—Merely send your name, address and pay postman $1.00 plus postage on arrival. Or, send $1.00 with order, and we mail attachments postage paid. You risk nothing. Satisfaction guaranteed or $1.00 back

LELANE CO. Dept. DM-128 Box 571 Kansas City 10, Mo.

IS THERE A FUTURE FOR YOU ON THE STAGE?

THERE CAN BE if you have talent, are willing to work and know how to get your first part on Broadway. Getting that first break is the hardest. You must know who to see, how to audition for Broadway plays, how to meet producers and stars.

PROVED SHORTCUTS

ALL THE FACTS you need are in the book, "How To Get Your First Part On Broadway." This book covers everything from make-up and clothes to Broadway and Hollywood contracts—interviews, actors' unions, agents. "How To Get Your First Part On Broadway" is a handbook for everyone interested in the stage. If not satisfied, return book within 10 days and money will be refunded. Send $1 today for your copy of "How To Get Your First Part On Broadway."

BROOKE WHITE, Dept. A-12
1148 Fifth Avenue New York 28, N. Y.

ITCHY
Checked in a JIFFY

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, scabies, pimples and other itching conditions. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Soothes, comforts and checks itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Don't suffer. Ask your druggist today for D.D.D. Prescription.

LIKE to DRAW?

Use spare time at home preparing for profitable art career. A complete home study course with money back agreement. For details and talent test give age and occupation.

AMERICAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL ART
DIVISION D, BOX 8066 • DALLAS 5, TEXAS

EASY TO LEARN
MILLINERY
AT HOME

Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 1812, Chicago 1, Ill.
Please send me your FREE catalog describing your training course in professional millinery.
Print
Name
Address

is Tyrone Power, who's been in Ireland, but is returning to the States at once to go to work for a man named Augur (Lee J. Cobb). Augur wants to be a senator, and he's buying Ty's brains to run his campaign. Anyhow, Ty gets lost in Ireland, and meets up with a real live leprechaun (Cecil Kellaway) whose chief shame is that he's so big. Leprechauns have a reputation for being petite. Ty wins this leprechaun's undying affection when he returns to him the pot of gold which he wrested from him in the first place. (He didn't mean no harm, guv'nor, just never really believed that story about leprechauns having pots of gold before.) Ty goes on his way, with Cecil blessing him cordially, and up at an inn nearby he meets an Irish girl named Nora (Anne Baxter) in whom he realizes he could be interested. But Augur is waiting, and off to the States Ty goes. He's been home one day (Frances Augur, the boss' daughter, has fixed him up with an apartment already) when who should appear at the door but the leprechaun. He denies that's what he is; claims the employment agency sent him. "What's your name?" Ty says. "Oh, call me Horace," says the little man. "I've always had a fancy to be called Horace." Horace develops quite a hate on Frances Augur (Jayne Meadows), once it looks as though Ty's going to marry her (after all, us leprechauns have to stick up for nice Irish girls) and first thing you know, Anne Baxter is suddenly in New York on some legal business. Magically enough, Ty bumps into her. From there on, Anne and Horace battle with Frances and her father for Ty's immortal soul, but don't you worry for a minute. Ty's the sort of guy who'd rather have Anne Baxter in a cottage on the auld sod than Jayne Meadows wrapped in mink at El Morocco. If you think he's crazy, that's your business. The girls are charming (Anne has a brogue), Tyrone is handsome, and Cecil Kellaway's "What an actor!"—20th-Fox.

Apartment For Peggy: As Mr. and Mrs., Bill Holden and Jeanne Crain, meet problems.

APARTMENT FOR PEGGY

I'd heard this was another Miracle on 34th Street, which made me curious. I missed Miracle myself, but half the people I know thought it was great, warm, human, etc., while the other half thought it was ham. And not even fresh ham at that. Well, Apartment for Peggy can stand on its own, for my money. It exploits a few trite situations for tears, and some of its solutions are too slick, but it says some things that most movies don't kill themselves saying these days. It says that knowledge is good, and that all men who teach aren't absent-minded dodos not quite bright enough to concerns a young cou[ple] Jeanne Crain. He's a veter[an] lege under the GI Bill, because he wants to teach some day. He figured it all out when he was hanging on a raft in the Pacific. He figured the reason he was hanging there, to begin with. Ignorance, and therefore fear, and hence hatred, and so, wars. But always the ignorance coming first. So he'd decided to be an educator if he ever got safely home. He and his wife have their problems at school—they need a place to live, they're going to have a baby, he'd like to be able to buy her nice things. They meet Edmund Gwenn (he got an Academy Award for his performance in Miracle), an elderly retired professor about to kill himself. He feels he's outlived his usefulness. You can plot it from there. He takes them into his house, they give him something to live for, and everything moves along nicely until Holden, in a fit of aberration, suddenly decides to go off and sell used cars in Chicago. After all, he says, why is it his responsibility to be a sober, hard-working, do-gooding fellow when the whole rest of the cock-eyed world is playing black-market in a great big way? This, though logical enough, is a little hard to take in such a nice boy as Holden, but you know it's not going to last, and it doesn't. See Apartment for Peggy. The brightest thing about it is by no means its Technicolor. —20th-Fox.

also showing . . .

A FOREIGN AFFAIR (Para.)—Jean Arthur, a strong-minded Congresswoman, goes to Germany to investigate the morals of U. S. occupation troops. Jean is superbly funny, Marlene Dietrich gives the performance of her career, and John Lund is perfect in this most unusual and down-to-earth comedy.

A SONG IS BORN (Goldwyn-RKO)—Imagine a Danny Kaye movie without Danny Kaye specialties, a Goldwyn musical without the Goldwyn Girls! Well, this is that—but still delightful. Danny is a professor who falls in with a group of jazz musicians, including Benny Goodman, Louis Armstrong and T. Dorsey. Even if you're not a hepcat, you'll have a fine time.

AN INNOCENT AFFAIR (U. A.)—A very funny lightweight comedy. Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll, Rita Johnson and Buddy Rogers have a field day in one of the brightest sparklers in a long time.

GOOD SAM (RKO)—Gary Cooper plays a guy who believes in being nice to all comers, come what may. Naturally, he gets into difficulties. So does this movie. Gary Cooper is expert at playing Gary Cooper, Anne Sheridan can deliver a hrisk line, and Leo McCarey always comes through with bright directorial touches. Still, Good Sam is a long bore.

HAMLET (Univ.-Int.)—Shakespeare's masterpiece has been made into a magnificently beautiful and exciting film by Sir Laurence Olivier and skilled assistants. A great motion picture in every respect and an unforgettable and deepening experience.

ISN'T IT ROMANTIC? (Para.)—This is a sort of poor man's Meet Me In St. Louis. It has its moments, some of them musical. Veronica Lake, Mary Hatcher, Mona Freeman and Roland Culver are involved. Nothing to rave about, but it'll pass the time pleasantly enough.

JOHNNY BELINDA (Warners)—Jane Wyman adds definitely to her stature as a fine actress with an extraordinary portrayal of a deaf mute in a small Nova Scotia town. Lew Ayres, as a kind young doctor who befriends her, is excellent. A powerful, adult movie.

JULIA MISBEHAVES (MGM)—Greer Garson proves she's a first-rate comedienne in this uproarious comedy. Her old teammate, Walter Pidgeon, also scores heavily as do Cesar Romero (especially!), Liz Taylor and Peter Lawford. You'll laugh yourself silly.

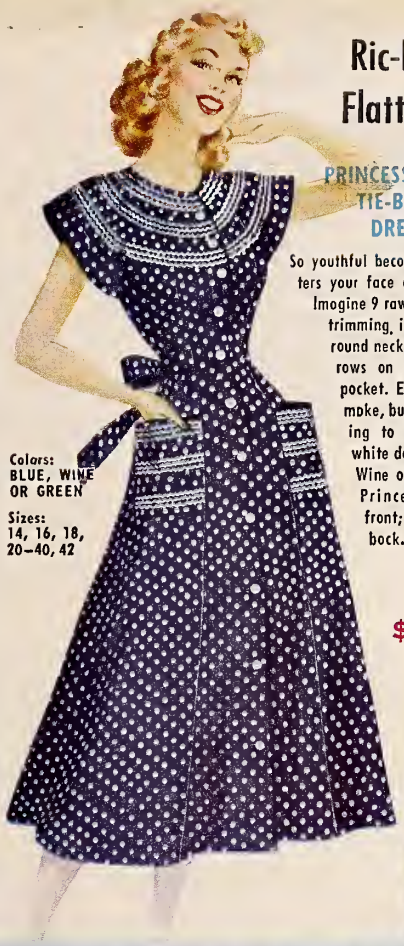
LUXURY LINER (MGM)—A light, pleasant musical with Jane Powell, Lauritz Melchior, George Brent, Xavier Cugat and Technicolor. All in all, delicious and refreshing.

ONE TOUCH OF VENUS (Univ.-Int.)—Department store clerk Boh Walker kisses a statue of Venus and, he-dad, she comes to life as Ava Gardner and employs her magic touch both to complicate things and straighten 'em out. An entertaining fantasy, full of chuckles and, what with Ava, beauty.

RACHEL AND THE STRANGER (RKO)—Loretta Young is a nice girl who, to eat, becomes a bondwoman—or slave—to Bill Holden on the old Western frontier. Bill's married her, but looks on her as strictly a servant until Robert Mitchum comes along. Loretta falls for Robert. The climax arrives in a redskin attack. Good story, swell acting by all concerned.

THE ILLEGALS (20th-Fox)—An exciting story of displaced Jews on their adventurous way to Palestine. All the actors are non-professionals. Frank and realistic, it's a picture you'll long remember.

THE LOVES OF CARMEN (Col.)—Rita Hayworth plays the celebrated gypsy with fine abandon in this diverting Technicolor version of the old novel. The novel, we said—it's not the opera. Glenn Ford and Victor Jory also display fire. Go see.



THE NIGHT HAS A THOUSAND EYES (Para.)—Here's a strange one. Edward G. Robinson is a guy who finds he can predict the future, and the things he sees in the lives of his associates hother him mightily. Even if you're skeptical ahout the whole thing, you'll find it darned absorbing. With John Lund, Gail Russell, Virginia Bruce and Jerome Cowan.

THE SAXON CHARM (Univ.-Int.)—Sounds like a mystery, but it's just a talky and unconvincing thing about an egomaniac theatrical producer. Robert Montgomery, Susan Hayward, John Payne and Audrey Totter get all they can out of an uneven script.

Only BY MAIL

Only FROM FLORIDA FASHIONS can you get these UNUSUAL DRESSES These MIRACLE VALUES!

Ric-Rac Flatterer

PRINCESS-PANEL TIE-BACK DRESS

So youthful because it flatters your face and figure. Imagine 9 rows of ric-rac trimming, its youthful round neckline, 9 more rows on each large pocket. Expensive to make, but so becoming to you. Fresh white dots on Blue, Wine or Green . . . Princess panel front; ties in the back.

Colors: BLUE, WINE OR GREEN

Sizes: 14, 16, 18, 20–40, 42

Only $2.77

Striped Darling

ZIPPER DRESS IN DAISY STRIPES

Success dress of the year, now brought you at only $2.77 in carefully matched stripes with zipper and wide swing skirt. Keyhole neckline with perky tie, trim set-in waistband. Florida Fashion's exclusive pattern of daisies and stripes . . . beautiful enough to wear everywhere.

Colors: GREEN, BLUE, PINK

Sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18, 20

Only $2.77

Nowhere in the world, but from Florida Fashions can you get these beautiful cottons!

Only BY MAIL 2.77

2 for $5.50

Any 2 Dresses, any 2 sizes or colors, for $5.50

You've Waited a Long Time for This Magic-Fitting Housecoat

Jiffy COAT

With the 12 row elastic waistline . . . gives perfect fit

NO ZIPPERS
NO BUTTONS
NO TIES

COMPLETE SKIRT
NO MORE GAPS

FITS SO PERFECTLY! . . . magic dirndl waistline, full swing skirt.

LOOKS SO GOOD! . . . just right for 'round the house, as a hostess gown, lounging robe.

SO EASY TO GET INTO! . . . slips on in a jiffy.

BEAUTIFUL EXCLUSIVE PLAID

BLACK-AND-GOLD, GREEN-AND-PINK.

Sizes: 12, 14, 16 18, 20

Only $2.77

E-Z Whirl

Buttons - in - the - back Easy to get into! Easy to wash and iron! Easy on the eyes!

Just a button and a tie, and whiz—it's an! Look at the glamorous swirling skirt, the two large pockets, the smart square neck. See how they're outlined with rows of flashing braid. Simply beautiful in clean, crisp checks. You'll want one in each color.

Colors: BLACK, BLUE OR RED CHECKS.

Sizes: 14, 16, 18, 20 40, 42

Only $2.77

GUARANTEE

We GUARANTEE your complete satisfaction. You can make an exchange or get an immediate refund within 10 days—no questions asked — if you are not 100% thrilled with your dresses.

Only by Mail — THIS MIRACLE VALUE!

Any Florida Fashions customer will tell you why—doing a business in millions, making only penny profits—is wonderful for you and your pocketbook.

Write for FREE Style Folder

Tested O.K.

• Quality cotton fabrics • Washable. Dress and trimmings won't fade • Fine seams. More stitches per inch • Stronger thread • Full cut . . . Good fit • Careful, experienced workmanship.

ALL OF THESE DRESSES ARE MADE TO FLORIDA FASHIONS HIGH STANDARDS OF QUALITY AND WORKMANSHIP, YOUR SATISFACTION IS GUARANTEED.

Even if you've never ordered by mail before, this is one time you should . . .

florida fashions, inc.

Please send me ..... dresses at $2.77 (2 for $5.50) plus postage and C.O.D. charges. I may return purchase within ten days if not satisfied. (You save C.O.D. fee by enclosing purchase price plus 20c postage; some refund privilege.)

EASY TO ORDER—SEND NO MONEY! SENT TO YOU ON APPROVAL! FULL SATISFACTION OR MONEY BACK!

FLORIDA FASHIONS, Inc., Sanford 88 Florida (B)

	Quantity	Size	1st Color Choice	2nd Color Choice	Fill in Price
Ric-Rac Flatterer
Striped Darling
Jiffy Coat
E-Z Whirl
				Total

Name .....

Address .....

City and State .....

© 1948 F. F. Inc.

CAMAY

the soap of beautiful women

PLAYS "SANTA CLAUS" WITH THIS AMAZING OFFER!

12 EXQUISITE

Christmas Cards

(A $1.20 VALUE)

FOR 25¢ AND 3 CAMAY WRAPPERS

NOW YOU CAN GET 12 of the most exquisite Christmas cards you've ever seen—complete with envelopes—for only 25 cents and 3 Camay wrappers! These lovely cards are all different—in full color—printed on fine quality paper with the fashionable double fold. So beautiful—you'll want to order several sets!

SO DON'T WAIT!

Get Camay today! Your complexion can be softer, smoother with your first cake of Camay—if you give up careless cleansing—go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. The wrapper tells how. And to be lovelier all over, take a daily Camay Beauty Bath with Bath-Size Camay.

HERE'S HOW TO GET YOUR CARDS.

For each set you order, mail 25¢ and 3 Camay wrappers—either regular Complexion-Size or Bath-Size, to:

Camay, Box 837,
Cincinnati 1, Ohio

Offer good in continental United States (except Montana). Offer expires December 1, 1948.

Order your cards today!

Your First Cake of Camay brings a softer, smoother skin!

MRS. RUSSELL FLAGG GREER, this beautiful Camay bride, says: "Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet for a really lovelier skin! My very first cake helped make my skin clearer and smoother."

DEC 13 '49

january 15¢

modern screen

PER.

DELL MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • DELL MAGAZINE •

JUNE ALLYSON

Picture yourself with a Lovelier Skin with your First Cake of Camay!

MRS. LAWRENCE H. BURCHETTE
the former Barbara Alexandra Gunn of Yonkers, N. Y. bridal portrait painted by pchrimm

A lovely skin is the beginning of charm! And you can win a smoother, softer skin with your first cake of Camay! Do this! Give up careless cleansing . . . begin the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay's beauty promise on scores of women. In nearly every case their complexions improved with just one cake of Camay! The directions on the wrapper tell you how to be lovelier!

MEET MR. AND MRS. BURCHETTE!

Barbara dances the highland fling to the music of Larry's harmonica! And Barbara thanks Camay for her fair (and indescribably lovely) skin. "My first cake made my skin clearer and smoother," says she.

Both tall and active, the Burchettes are a tough team to beat at mixed doubles, and Barbara's expert at beauty as well as tennis. Heed her advice. "Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet for a really lovelier skin!"

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

©C1B 176266

RAGING WITH THE VIOLENT PASSIONS OF A WILD FRONTIER . . . A LAWLESS ERA!

COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents

Glenn FORD • William HOLDEN

in

The Man from Colorado

with Ellen DREW

RAY COLLINS • EDGAR BUCHANAN • JEROME COURTLAND • JAMES MILLICAN

Screenplay by ROBERT D. ANDREWS and BEN MADDOW

Directed by HENRY LEVIN • Produced by JULES SCHERMER

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective ... Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle ... Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto Lasts and Lasts From Bath to Bath

JANUARY, 1949

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

THE TRUTH ABOUT JAMES MASON ..... by Morgan MacNeil 16
THE TEN GREAT MYTHS OF HOLLYWOOD ..... by Hedda Hopper 28
MOTHER WAS NEVER LIKE THIS (Joan Bennett) ..... by Arthur L. Charles 30
THE CHRISTMAS I'LL NEVER FORGET ..... by Alida Valli 32
THE GANG'S ALL HERE (Ann Blyth housewarming) by Reba and Bonnie Churchill 34
ROBERT WALKER: TRAGIC FIGURE ..... by Sheilah Graham 38
THE MOCAMBO AFFAIRS ..... by Charlie Morrison 40
WHY JIMMY STEWART WON'T MARRY ..... by Jack Wade 44
THIS SECRET POWER ..... by Greer Garson 46
AND BABY MAKES THREE (June Allyson-Dick Powell) ..... by Cynthia Miller 48
SHE'S A BIG GIRL NOW! (Elizabeth Taylor) ..... by Sara Sothern Taylor 50
HE GOT WHAT HE WANTED (Larry Parks) ..... by Louis Pollock 56
PARTING IS SUCH SORROW (John Payne-Gloria DeHaven) ..... by Florabel Muir 58
PERPETUAL EMOTION (Cyd Charisse-Tony Martin) 60

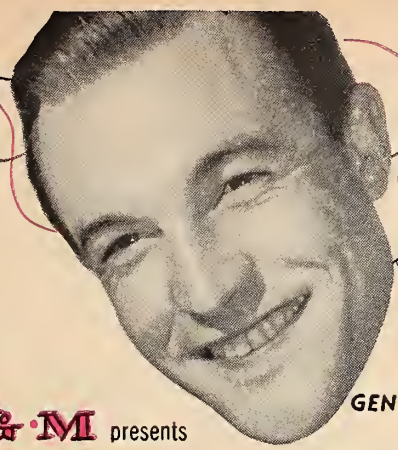
features

TO OUR READERS 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
EDITORIAL: "To The Winners" 25
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "Enchantment" 52

departments

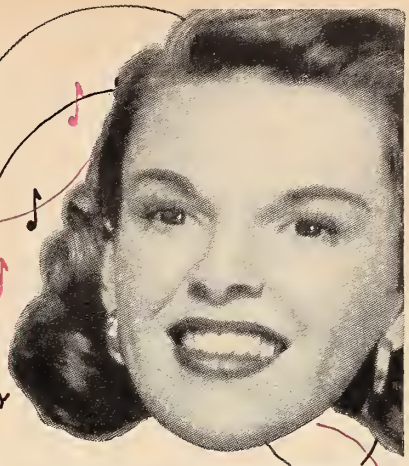
MOVIE REVIEWS ..... by Christopher Kane 18
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 64
NEW FACES 75
MUSIC: "Sweet and Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 76
YOUR LETTERS 77
BEAUTY: "Bow Meets Curl" ..... by Carol Carter 81
THE FANS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 89
FAN FARE 91
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed) 96

ON THE COVER: June Allyson Color Portrait by Nikolas Muray



WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, associate editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
VIOLA MOORE, associate editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
GLORIA LAMPERT, associate fan club director
IRENE TURNER, research editor



POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 38, No. 2, January, 1949. Copyright, 1948, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-President. Single copy price, 15c in U. S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

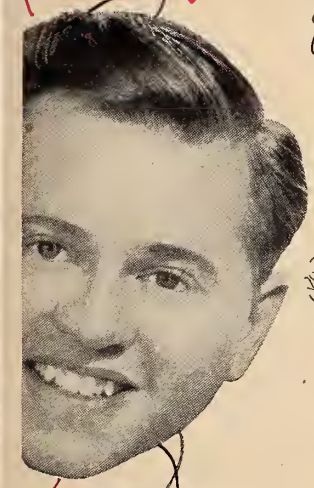
GENE KELLY

JUNE ALLYSON

JUDY GARLAND

M·G·M presents

a spectacular musical, packed with the beloved hits of the famed song-writing team of Rodgers and Hart; their own story, with all the adventure, romance, high life of the Great White Way.



Words AND Music

starring

JUNE ALLYSON
PERRY COMO
JUDY GARLAND
LENA HORNE
GENE KELLY
MICKEY ROONEY
ANN SOTHERN

MICKEY ROONEY

PERRY COMO

color by Technicolor

with

TOM DRAKE · CYD CHARISSE · BETTY GARRETT · JANET LEIGH MARSHALL THOMPSON · MEL TORME · VERA-ELLEN

LENA HORNE

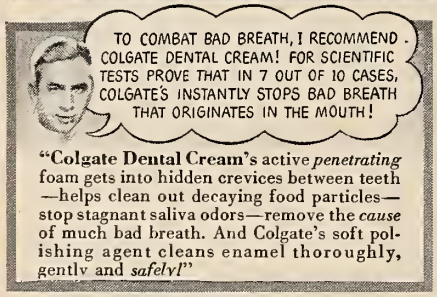
ANN SOTHERN

Musical Numbers Directed by ROBERT ALTON
Directed by NORMAN TAUROG
Produced by ARTHUR FREED

Based on the Lives and Music of RICHARD RODGERS and LORENZ HART

Screen Play by FRED FINKELHOFFE
Story by GUY BOLTON and JEAN HOLLOWAY
Adaptation by BEN FEINER, Jr.

20 Hit Songs



Manhattan
Small Hotel
With A Song In My Heart
Spring Is Here
Where Or When
The Lady Is A Tramp
On Your Toes
Blue Room
March Of The Knights
Thou Swell
Someone Should Tell Them
Blue Moon
I Wish I Were In Love Again
Mountain Greenery
Where's That Rainbow
A Tree In The Park
A Little Birdie Told Me So
Slaughter On 10th Avenue
Way Out West On West End Avenue • Johnny-One-Note

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

It's All History -but No Dates!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles— stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

To our Readers

THERE ARE over two hundred birds at the Mocambo—little feathered things that flutter around behind a glass wall. Every once in a while someone looks at the wall and screams. Charlie Morrison takes this philosophically. Charlie, being the proprietor of the Mocambo, has seen more people fall in love at his night club than fall into anything else. He's figured it out to a science—give 'em birds, give 'em dimly-lit corners, give 'em the works—and then, hold back the waiter! After all, where did Cyd Charisse discover love? And where did Tony Martin? And where did Marie McDonald? Of course: the M - - - - - o. You can read all about these and other "Mocambo Affairs" on page 40. Charlie (who was there) tells the tale . . .

SHEILAH GRAHAM was probably there, too. In fact, Sheilah seems to be almost everywhere—several hundred newspapers throughout the country carry her column—and now she's writing for MODERN SCREEN. We're proud and delighted to have her join the distinguished group whose good and lively stuff graces our pages. The piece on page 38 of this issue, called "Robert Walker: Tragic Figure," is her first offering. We think you'll be fascinated by this penetrating analysis of a very confused man . . .

If you have any mad notions about Hollywood just turn to page 28 and you'll be cured. Beginning on that page Hedda Hooper gives it to you straight from both shoulders. Did you know, for instance, that the gold was never moved from Fort Knox to Vine Street? That the family silver, of certain Hollywood families, spends more time in the pawn shop? Well, even if you did know, read "The Ten Greatest Myths Of Hollywood." Recommended especially for those who love the town well—but not too wisely . . .

WE HAVE a lady here who gives us an inferiority complex. We feel, somehow, you ought to know about her. She's Viola Moore, our newest Associate Editor. Viola was born in Calcutta, India, twenty-nine years ago. By her twelfth birthday she'd lived in Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. As if that weren't enough, she was kissed by Fredric March in the picture, I Married A Witch. But more—while covering the UN conferences in San Francisco (as a writer for the London Daily Mail and the Australian Women's Weekly) she ran into Queen Julianna in a ladies' room at Stanford University. Needless to add, Viola got an exclusive and widely-read interview. For us, Viola will get equally hot tips on the home-making and personality habits of your favorite stars. All we can say now, and feebly, is "Welcome aboard, Vi."

IT HAPPENS

UP IN THE WILD BLUE YONDER IT GETS WILDER AS THEY GET FONDER!

They find love in a mile-high kiss with a corpse and a crook to add to their bliss

a chump and a chimp

and a couple in a coma

and a half a ton of fish with a horrible aroma

the plane stacks up in a field of corn and the funniest love affair

ever filmed was born!

It's from that wonderfully wacky SAT EVE. POST serial by Robert Carson

UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL presents

Joan Fontaine James Stewart

YOU GOTTA STAY HAPPY

with EDDIE ALBERT

ROLAND YOUNG · WILLARD PARKER · PERCY KILBRIDE

Produced and Written for the Screen by KARL TUNBERG · Directed by H. C. POTTER · A WILLIAM DOZIER PRESENTATION · A RAMPART PRODUCTION

THERE'S ANOTHER GREAT COMEDY ON ITS WAY, "FAMILY HONEYMOON"!

Hollywood has fun at the press photographers ball

Frank Sinatra goes along with the current advertising gag, trying to guess "Which twin has the Tani?" The "twins" are Loretta Young and Rosalind Russell; the occasion: Hollywood's Annual Press Photographers' Ball, at Ciro's.

Ava Gardner sits on the General's lap. George Jessel, who was emcee for the evening, created a mild sensation as U. S. Grant. Event was the highlight of Hollywood's social season.

Roddy McDowall (note the new mustache) escorted Coleen Townsend to the Ball. They came as Rameo and Juliet. Castumed guests started arriving at nine and same remained to hear the last strains of music at four in the morning.

Bob Mitchum and his wife Dorothy ware monkey heads and sat quietly on the sidelines all evening, temporarily forgetting their legal troubles. Many friends visited at their table.

LOUELLA PARSONS'

Good news

John Agar, usually shy about kissing his wife in public, was so impressed with her Marie Antoinette costume he couldn't resist a light peck. Under the wig is the shortest hair-do Shirley's ever worn.

Louella Parsons predicts marriage for June Haver and Dr. John Duzik —Colonial girl and Paul Revere. Evening was climaxed by entertainment—Danny Kaye and Frank Sinatra were among those in the acts.

■ The romantic mystery of Rita Hayworth and Ali Khan had Hollywood guessing. No one knew when he came, when he left and why he didn't call up his friends in our town. Now the big question is—will our glamorous, red-haired Rita marry the international playboy, whose father, the Aga Khan, is ruler of the Moslems both in India and Africa?

Marrying the Khan isn't half as simple as it sounds. Ali, in his country, is the equivalent of a Crown Prince, and is heir to a fabulous fortune. Moreover, he is not free, being still married to an Englishwoman, by whom he has two children. Ali and his wife have not lived together for many years, but the children were in Cannes with him this summer. They all lived in the magnificent Mediterranean villa, once owned by the late Maxine Eliott, which is one of the most famous show places in Southern France.

I must say Ali looked like a most devoted father. When I was there on my vacation, it was an everyday sight to see them all at Cap Antibes, water skiing.

But the romantics say that surely the Khan must be madly in love with Rita or he wouldn't travel 6,000 miles just to see her in Hollywood.

I don't doubt that he is fascinated. Who wouldn't be with Rita? But I cannot believe that marriage is part of his plan—nor, for that matter, that it is Rita's.

Rita once told me that she had to be sure next time, and that she wouldn't marry without taking plenty of time to make a decision. As for Ali Khan, he arrived in Los Angeles without letting his embassy know. He always travels with a retinue, but this time he came practically unattended to see the lady of his heart. He saw none of his friends in California, and spent all of his time either at the house Rita rented for him across from her own home, or at hers. He slipped out of town even more quietly than he had entered it.

If Ali should seek a divorce, it would take a long time—and right now his wife, although separated from him, has not consented to free him.

A box of roses is accepted by Jone Wymon, stor of Johnny Belinda, os she enters the Hollywood Theater for the picture's première.

This wos the first importont full-dress première of the foll, ond ottrocted mony of the top-flight stors. Above, Alon and Sue Lodd.

Douglos Dick and Martho Vickers (seporoted from her husband, A. C. Lyles) orrived together. Here they say hello to the citizenry outside.

Lucille Boll, Callier Young, Ido Lupino ond Desi Arnoz added their luster to the occosion. Hollywood opinion is thot Jone Wyman's performonce in Belinda moy eorn her on Acodemy Aword.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

So I cannot see marriage for Rita and Ali Khan in the cards.

* * *

On the other hand, I do see marriage for Greer Garson and the rich Texas oil man, Buddy Fogelson. Unless, of course, something entirely unforeseen happens.

Greer sees no one but the very likable Buddy, and it could very well be that they will be married by the time this appears in MODERN SCREEN.

All she says is, "I'll let you know"—and I have to be satisfied with that promise. But if it doesn't sound like marriage, my name is Ingrid Bergman.

Both Greer and Buddy had passport photographs taken, and nobody sits for these dreadful things unless they are contemplating an important trip abroad. And also, Greer, who is sorta thrifty with her money, has recently been buying clothes like mad.

So I'll miss my guess if the wedding bells don't ring for these two; maybe somewhere overseas, and soon. Personally, I hope they do. Buddy seems very right for the intellectual, sensitive Greer, and I happen to know that she's been mighty lonely since her separation from Richard Ney.

* * *

Right smack off the train from the East, June Allyson and Dick Powell came directly to my house. They came to quiet the separation rumors that have been much too persistent ever since June went to New York and Dick to Arkansas on separate vacations.

I must say I never saw two people act more like turtle doves than Junie and Dick during their call on me. Dick admitted that June had dined out a few times with Peter Lawford when they were working together on the same picture.

For her part, June gave that cute giggle of hers and confessed that she loved dancing and occasional nightclubbing—which Dick frankly doesn't go for. She said that their picture schedules had been in conflict lately,

The hide-and-seek, tongue-in-cheek tale of a marriage-shy baby doctor... and a misbehavin', man-huntin' Babe!

a Dore Schary presentation

Cary Grant

in DON HARTMAN'S production

Every Girl Should Be Married

CO-STARRING

FRANCHOT TONE · DIANA LYNN

and Introducing BETSY DRAKE with ALAN MOWBRAY • Produced, Directed and Co-written by DON HARTMAN Screenplay Collaboration by Stephen Morehouse Avery

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Don't be Half-safe!

by
VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush of womanhood many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nothing "wrong" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause your apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deodorants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. In fact, more men and women everywhere use Arrid than any other deodorant. It's antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate protection is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears. This new Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, will not crystallize or dry out in the jar. The American Laundering Institute has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Arrid is safe for the skin—non-irritating—can be used right after shaving.

Don't be half-safe. During this "age of romance" don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter—only 39¢ plus tax.

Rita Hayworth and the wealthy Ali Khan, whom she met on the Riviera last summer. He arrived quietly in Hollywood and left town the same way. Neither would comment on their "romance."

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

she being free when Dick was tied up and vice versa. This was the reason she took a trip to New York with Gloria De Haven. Dick was kept home by a cold.

I'm all for giving the Powells the benefit of the doubt, and here's hoping we see them celebrating a golden wedding anniversary about 46 years from now.

* * *

Here's a new twist on that old, old story about the two careers in one family. Brenda Marshall, who, as you know, is Mrs. Bill Holden, claims she has played her last screen role. From now on, she says, she just wants to be a devoted wife and mother.

The twist is that Brenda has just completed Whispering Smith in which she had the best role of her entire life. She is wonderful in it, too, and Paramount has been prophesying great things for her. But this beautiful girl loves her home and everything connected with it, and has decided to give all her time to it.

I say, three cheers for Brenda! If there were more girls like this in Hollywood, it would be a much, much happier town.

* * *

As you probably remember, when he came back from service, Lew Ayres talked about entering the ministry. He changed his mind on that, but it hasn't prevented him from spending much time on good works. Lew does these very worthy and humanitarian deeds very quietly. For instance, he has just completed a two-reel subject called The Greater City of Hope. It is for the benefit of a T.B. sanitarium at Duarte, a suburb not too far from Hollywood.

All the film and equipment to make the picture was donated by our various studios, but it was Lew who organized the venture, persuaded other actors to donate their services, and saw the whole thing through.

Incidentally, Lew is seen everywhere these days with Heather Walsh, a beautiful young actress from South Africa, which has quelled those rumors about him and Jane Wyman.

* * *

Personal Opinions: I'm no authority on this subject, but for my money, Cary Grant is the best-dressed man in town, even if he almost never wears socks. . . . Jimmy Cagney certainly gives me a terrible pain in my civic pride when he announces he is moving to Massachusetts so that his children can be brought up away from the influence of Hollywood. I wonder if Jimmy also plans to keep his children away from being tainted by all that money he has made here? . . . My nomination for the happiest personality anywhere at any time: Esther Williams. . . . RKO has dropped Lawrence Tierney's option, which isn't surprising to anyone. But if you ask me, the Tierney family doesn't have to worry. . . . Scott Brady, who is Larry's brother, and temperamentally completely unlike him, has scored so tremendously in his first picture, Canon City, that I believe he'll be a major star before another year is over. . . . I am about to go overboard, too, concerning the future of Douglas Dick. He had never impressed me too much until I saw Accused—but when I watched him in that, I knew he was "in"—but good. . . .

* * *

The Errol Flynns are separated again, but could be, by the time this is printed, they will be together once more. I doubt it, however: this time I think it's really the end for them. That's because it isn't Nora who is lonesome and sitting home moping during the separation—it's the dashing Errol who is sitting by the home fires while the lovely Nora is at gay Palm Springs, surrounded by friends.

How this girl has changed! When she first came to see me, she dressed plainly, almost severely. She was very quiet and deeply,

Are you in the know?

How much should she have tipped him?

- ☐ 10%
- ☐ 25%
- ☐ 15 to 20%

Don't wait 'til a waiter wears that "why don't you do right" look. Hone up on tipping! 'Taint what it used to be, thanks to inflation, so leave a little extra on that silver tray. A 15 to 20% tip pays off in smiles; good service. And for certain times there's a special service Kotex gives . . . your choice of 3 absorbencies, designed for different girls, different days. You'll find it pays to try all 3: Regular, Junior, Super Kotex. See which absorbency suits your needs.

If she tries on your hat, should you—

- ☐ Resent it
- ☐ Lend it
- ☐ Feel flattered

You break away from babushkas . . . wow your cellmates with a whammy chapeau. But, it needn't go to their heads. Why court ol' dabbil dandruff? Like borrowing combs or lipstick, trying each other's hats is scowled on in cactus (sharp, that is) circles. Discourage same, for your own protection. On "those" days, too, let caution guide you. Straight to the counter that sells Kotex. For it's Kotex that has an exclusive safety center: your extra protection against accidents.

What clan does her plaid represent?

- ☐ Frazer
- ☐ Macphersan
- ☐ Black Watch

If you give a hoot for the Highland touch in togs—and who doesn't?—bend a wee ear. Have a fling at "ancient tartans": top-rating plaids with authentic patterns, representing actual clans. A genuwyne Macpherson, for instance, as shown. And when your own clan meets, have fun—even at calendar time. No cause to be self-conscious what with Kotex preventing telltale outlines. Those flat pressed ends just don't turn traitor. They don't show. (As if you didn't know!).

Which gal would you ask to complete a foursome?

- ☐ A Suave Sally
- ☐ A numb number
- ☐ A character from the carnival

Your steady freddy asks you to produce a date for his pal? Here's advice! Choosing a gal less winsome than you, can doom the party. It flusters your guy; disappoints his friend. Best you invite Suave Sally. You can stay confident—regardless of the day of the month—with Kotex to keep you comfortable, to give you softness that holds its shape. You risk no treachery with Kotex! It's the napkin made to stay soft while you wear it.

When buying sanitary needs, should you—

- ☐ Wait 'til next time
- ☐ Buy a new sanitary belt
- ☐ Buy 2 sanitary belts

After a bout with the daily grind, you welcome a shower . . . a change to fresh togs. Of course! But to make your daintiness complete, on "those" days you'll want a fresh sanitary belt. You'll need two Kotex Sanitary Belts, for a change.

Remember, the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. You'll find your adjustable Kotex Belt fits smoothly; doesn't bind. (It's all-elastic.) So—for extra comfort, choose the new Kotex Sanitary Belt, and buy two—for a change!

Kotex Sanitary Belt

Buy TWO—by name!

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

British stor Michoel Wilding, with Joe Cotten, Ingrid Bergmon, ond director Alfred Hitchcock on the set of Under Capricorn, in Englond. Loter, Bergmon returned to her notive Sweden, where she wos joined by husbond Peter Lindstrom ond daughter Pio. Ingrid moy moke on Itolion film next yeor.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

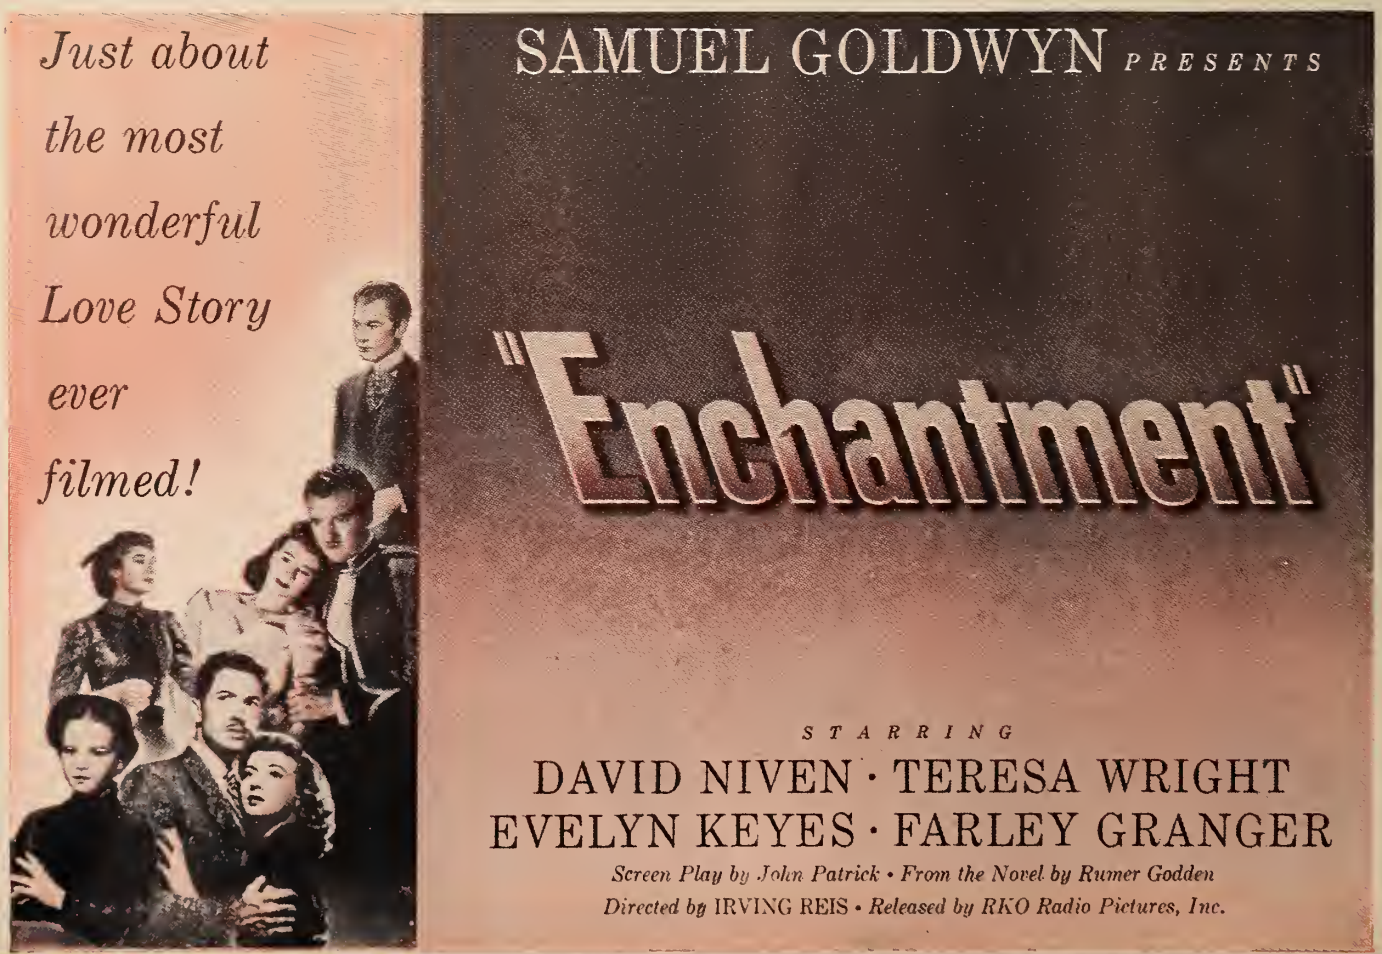
deeply in love with Errol and determined to make a go of her marriage. Now she has cut her red hair fashionably short and wears exquisite clothes. As the last woman in Errol's screen life in Don Juan, she is very pretty.

Nora had her eldest daughter, Deidre, with her at the desert resort when news of the separation was printed. But her youngest little girl was sick back in Hollywood with a nurse. Errol was in the hospital where he underwent a minor operation.

Nora has leased a house out in Brentwood for herself and the children. It is miles from Errol's bachelor establishment, Mulholland Farm. Nora lived at the Farm for about a year after her marriage to Errol, but Errol has always felt it was too small for the entire family.

Well, he'll have plenty of room now—if Nora sticks to her same mood. But Errol's such a charmer, and he may win her back.

* * *



Not only was the Hollywood Press Photographers' Ball the high spot of the social season thus far, it also was so darn much fun I wish all of you could have been there.

The entertainment was wonderful, and I've never seen our glamorous stars dressed up in such beautiful and clever costumes. The first person I met was Sonja Henie, who has been discussing a business deal to make pictures with the Texas multi-millionaire, Glenn McCarthy. Sonja was there with the gentleman, and was all done up in a fluffy pink ballet dress and feathers. And, of course, she was wearing her fabulous diamonds.

Robert Mitchum made his first appearance since all his trouble. Bob and his wife came wearing monkey heads, and sat very quietly on the sidelines all evening. Dozens of his friends, I noticed, went over to his table to visit. Among them, Loretta Young.

Of course the younger crowd was out in full force, and looked mighty handsome. Shirley Temple wore a voluminous gown of heavy satin and a white wig which was so becoming to her cute face. I stopped to ask if she were Marie Antoinette, and the famous Temple dimples flashed as she laughed, "I guess so."

John Agar, Shirley's husband, obviously thought his young wife was the most beautiful girl in the room. I was glad to tell John about all the fan mail which is pouring in about him. He's such a nice boy, that one, and I'll bet all I own he'll never "go Hollywood."

Rory Calhoun and his Isabelita were with the Agars, and Rory, as a knight of old, practically swept the floor with his plumed hat in giving me a super-low bow. I'll admit that it took me some time to recognize Jane Withers rattling on like every new mother about her first-born. Janie was anything but glamorous in an old tramp costume. But, then, Janie always did go for a laugh.

Seated near to us were Farley Granger in a red costume of the Renaissance period, and his date of the evening, dark-haired Geraldine Brooks. They both table-hopped to visit with us for a few minutes.

Rosalind Russell and Loretta Young came as the Toni Twins of the advertisements. Both girls wore identical black wigs with signs on their dresses saying: "Which is real and which is permanent?"

Betty Hutton and her good friend, Lindsay Durand, shared Ted Briskin and a table. That is, Ted was bedecked as an Indian potentate and the gals were his harem beauties. June Haver brought her beau, Dr. John Dusik, over to introduce to me, and I'm surer than ever that they'll marry one of these days. June looked very fetching in a Colonial costume, and the doctor was a fine-looking Paul Revere.

A cute idea was Anne Baxter and Mrs. Zachary Scott as silent day stars Clara Bow and Lilyan Tashman. But the biggest hand for originality went to Dorothy Malone and her boy-friend, Dr. Phillip Montgomery, who walked in under a shower bath, complete with real water. Fittingly enough, Esther Williams and Ben Gage happened to walk in right behind them, daringly dressed in 1920 bathing suits.

My favorite, I think, was that sweetheart, Kay Kyser, who strutted in as Gorgeous George, the famous wrestler, with his beautiful wife, Georgia Carroll, in the role of valet to the "grunt and groan" artist.

Piece de resistance of the entertainment bill was the hilarious imitation of Kay Thompson and the Williams Brothers staged by Danny Kaye as Thompson, and George Burns, Jack Benny, Van Johnson and Jack Carson as the Brothers. Even the "Brothers" laughed so hard at Danny's antics they darn near broke up the act.

Another big surprise was Jane Russell's parody song—"Feudin' and a Fussin' and a Focusin'." The snappy way Jane put the song over made all of us realize we've been overlooking an important talent in the girl. Winding up the bill was the duo of Frank Sinatra and Gene Kelly in a song and dance number that had every foot at the ball a-tappin', including mine.

* * *

Did Joan Fontaine arrive in a state at the recent baby shower given for her by a group of close friends!

Joan was donning her best bib and tucker for the party when she happened to look out the window of the lovely Dozier home, and to her horror saw the entire bath house by the swimming pool in roaring flames!

What happened next was almost a nightmare. First the fire department couldn't find the Dozier house, and then the firemen couldn't find a hydrant for the hose.

A connection was finally made, but not before the entire bath house had burned to the ground and the main house itself had been threatened.

No wonder Joan was jittery when she arrived at the party, but the lovely presents given her by the hostesses, Mrs. Al Blooming-

Home from London, Betty Hutton is greeted by doughters Condice ond Lindsoy Dione. Betty smoshed oll previous records ot the Pollodium.

Another "Best" from the Producer of "The Best Years of Our Lives" Academy Award Winner!

USE

NOREEN

SUPER COLOR RINSE

Glorifies your hair with ABUNDANT TEMPORARY COLOR.
Smart, new, convenient, easy-to-apply

We sincerely believe that NOREEN will really do what you have always wanted a color rinse to do.

Because Noreen bountifully augments the natural color of your hair with added glamorizing shades of gold, bronze red, deeper brown gold, coppery brown, deep dark brown, or lustrous black.

Because Noreen lusterizes white or gray hair, takes out yellow, and adds cool tones of steel-blue, blue-gray, or deeper gray.

Because Noreen amazingly blends in to the natural shade the unwanted gray in graying hair.

Millions of discerning women now know the superb COLOR qualities of NOREEN ... there's always a NOREEN shade to beautify and glorify your hair.

14 COLORFUL SHADES
Sold in 4 and 8 rinse packages...Each rinse in an easy-to-use capsule. Price 25¢ and 50¢ (plus tax)

At Leading Cosmetic Counters or Beauty Salons Everywhere

NOREEN Dist., 450 Lincoln St., Denver 9, Colo.

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your favorite photo

NEW SILK FINISH • GOLD TOOLED FRAME

Just to get acquainted, we will make you a FREE 5x7 enlargement of any picture or negative and mount it in a handsome gold tooled frame. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes, and clothing for information on having this enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil.

SEND NO MONEY. Send your most cherished photo or negative now, accept your beautifully framed enlargement when it arrives, and pay postman only 19c for frame plus small handling and mailing charge. If you are not completely satisfied, return the enlargement within 10 days and your money will be refunded. But you may keep the handsome frame as a gift for promptness. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. M-57, Hollywood 38, Cal.

Rita Johnson is well again, after a delicate brain operation. Rita fell into a coma when she was accidentally hit by a hair-dryer.

Mel Tarme tossed a 23rd birthday party for himself and was rewarded by a kiss from Susan Perry (nee Candy Toxtan), his best girl.

dale, Anita Louise and Minna Wallace, and the other girls, including Rosalind Russell, Greer Garson, Mrs. Ray Milland, Loretta Young and about 40 others, soon calmed her down. Or, maybe I should say, made her forget about the fire, because she certainly was excited about all the lovely gifts for the new baby.

* * *

Have you ever had someone ring your doorbell in the middle of the night and ask for a maraschino cherry, a dog collar, a fancy bottle, and a worm from the back yard?

That's what happened to me, and, yep, it was all part of the scavenger hunt staged by the town's small fry at the fun party given by pretty Betty Sullivan, daughter of the well-known columnist, Ed Sullivan.

Fortunately, I was able to supply all four articles, so Barbara Bebe Lyon, my doorbell ringer, romped in for third prize. Poor Elizabeth Taylor didn't fare so well. One of her "orders" was Jack Benny's violin, and for a gag, Jack insisted on playing "Love In Bloom" for her before he would lend the instrument. It was a fine performance, Elizabeth said, but it made her come in last in the race!

* * *

I was the first person outside of her immediate family to talk to lovely Rita Johnson after she got out of the hospital. The poor girl still wasn't strong enough to explain to me what had caused the mysterious accident that sent her into a coma on Labor Day, and from which she didn't rouse for almost six weeks.

There were times, during those weeks, when her life was despaired of. She underwent a couple of brain operations, but now I am happy to tell you that she looks well on the way to recovery. Her mother and brother are with her, and while she is living at a quiet beach a little way from Hollywood at the moment, later they expect to bring her back to her home. I brought her a bottle of French perfume, and she was happy as a child over it. She kept saying: "How did you remember it was my favorite kind?" She also kept admiring my suit and my hat—and you know as well as I do that when a woman sits up and notices clothes, she's getting well.

The long-expected Jennifer Jones and David Selznick marriage is set for early next year. David's divorce from Irene Selznick becomes final January 8th, and he and his star will marry shortly after that.

Jennifer has been madly in love with her boss for a long time, and has let him guide her career completely. She was a quiet, naïve girl when they first met. Now she is chic and charming, and very much the woman of the world.

I doubt if hers and David's plan to honeymoon in Switzerland materializes. Jennifer has so many pictures lined up, the first of which is Madame Bovary at M-G-M. But time will tell, and so will I.

* * *

Bits and Pieces: Merle Oberon decided that money was more important than love: she left Count Cini in Italy and flew back to America for Operation Malaya at RKO before her contract at RKO got a chance to expire. . . . The hottest new male name around Hollywood is Stephen McNally, the very bad boy of that very good picture, Johnny Belinda. But, instead of getting the romantic build-up like Montgomery Clift, Universal-International is giving him the Crosby treatment. I mean, photographs of him bathing his four small children and such like. Well, if Steve, who used to be called Horace on Broadway, does as well as Bing, that will be terrific. . . . They are whispering that Yvonne de Carlo has a new mysterious beau—a Count, yet, somewhere in Europe. . . . Dick Haymes is dieting like crazy. When I asked him why, he said, "I saw myself in One Touch of Venus. I looked like two touches of pecan pie." . . . The two girls seen most often together around Hollywood right now are Jeanne Crain and Georgianna Young Montalban. Both are expecting, and both delighted over it. . . . Newest fashion note: blue flannel underwear. That's right, blue flannel! They designed it for young Joan Evans, Samuel Goldwyn's discovery, for Roseanna McCoy. She's wearing it right now on location for the picture, if you can bear it. I can't! . . . And that's all for this month. Please keep writing! I so enjoy hearing from you, my readers of MODERN SCREEN. Tell me what and whom you like to read about.

IT'S THAT BIG PARADE OF 'SEC'S'!..

P.S. She got the job!

...and what a job she does on her boss!

HARRY M. POPKIN presents

LARAINE DAY · KIRK DOUGLAS

KEENAN WYNN · HELEN WALKER

in

The funniest 100 minutes on film!

"My Dear Secretary"

with

RUDY VALLEE · FLORENCE BATES · ALAN MOWBRAY · GALE ROBBINS · IRENE RYAN · GRADY SUTTON · Produced by LEO C. POPKIN

Written and Directed by CHARLES MARTIN · A Harry M. Popkin Production · Released thru United Artists is mason kidding? he says:

of bobby-soxers
"vile, loathsame, wretched barbarians, for the most part, morons."

of the movies
"made for half-wits and certainly not for intelligent people."

of his marriage
"yes, I beat my wife."

the truth about james mason

by morgan macneil

Scenes of violence between the Masons occur only in films. James and Pam will be parents by the time you see this.

During their first year in America, they've made one film—Caught. James plays a doctor; Pamela appears briefly.

■ A few months ago when Cecil B. DeMille began casting Sampson and Delilah, one of his assistants submitted to him, in a list of possible leading men, the name of James Mason. When Mason heard about this he quickly announced to the press that his price to appear in any Cecil B. DeMille film was $250,000.

Mason's heretic announcement, relayed to Paramount (where DeMille produces his epics), occasioned a furrowing of foreheads, some consternation, and much pithy indignation.

"Just who does this Mason think he is?" one of DeMille's boys demanded. "What's he ever done to be asking for that kind of dough?"

Mason's agent, who happened to be standing by, offered a ready reply. "To begin with," he explained, "Mason has been the number one movie star in Great Britain for the past three years."

"A lot that means!" challenged the assistant. "They use foreign money in Great Britain."

Ignoring the retort, the agent continued. "In addition," he said, "Mason has been averaging 6,000 fan letters a week. One third of these come from American women. He's been in the United States for over a year now, and wherever he goes the girls give him the Sinatra treatment: they tear his clothes, they ask for locks of his hair; they claim he 'sends' them; and the fact of the matter is that right now he's more popular than ever."

The Paramount man shook his head. "Why?" he asked. "Please tell me why?"

Now, this is the very question that many other people have been asking about Mason ever since his arrival in America. His undeniable appeal for the public has been a source of widespread wonder, for Mason, sneering superbly in all directions, has appeared to be striving to make himself the most unpopular Englishman in (Continued on page 92)

"Just remember...
A WOMAN'S BULLETS KILL AS QUICK AS A MAN'S!"
Blood and thunder saga of the West's most savage days! ... Sweeping this lone wolf into the gun-sights—and the arms of a blonde spitfire—and right into the turbulent heart of the bloodiest range war ever to explode on the screen!
RKO PRESENTS
ROBERT MITCHUM
BARBARA BEL GEDDES
ROBERT PRESTON in BLOOD ON THE MOON
with
WALTER BRENNAN • PHYLLIS THAXTER
FRANK FAYLEN • TOM TULLY
Executive Producer SID ROGELL
Produced by THERON WARTH • Directed by ROBERT WISE Screen Play by LILLIE HAYWARD
RKO RADIO PICTURES
Straight from the rip-roaring pages of the famous Saturday Evening Post serial story!

Orphon Deon Stockwell wakes up one morning to find that his hair has turned bright green. At first his schoalmotes regard the change os on enviable novelty, but prejudiced porents persuode them ta turn oway fram the boy.

MOVIE REVIEWS

by Christopher Kane

THE BOY WITH GREEN HAIR

This is the story of a sensitive little boy named Peter Frye (Dean Stockwell) who's shunted around from relative to relative until he comes to live with Gramps (Pat O'Brien), an ex-circus performer now working as a singing waiter. Peter's happy with Gramps; he listens to stories of the old fellow's past glories, he begins to feel secure. Then his school teacher (Barbara Hale) enlists his aid in a clothing drive for war orphans. One of the other children at school points out that Peter himself is a war orphan. Peter checks, and discovers the fact to be true. His parents were both killed in England, while doing war work. (He'd thought they were away on a long trip.) The plight of the world's children begins to prey on his mind, and one morning, when he awakes, his hair has turned bright green. For a while, the kids in the neighborhood think green hair is fascinating; Peter himself is pretty proud. But the community's grownups have prejudices. They don't want their children exposed to green hair. Peter's jeered at, and left alone. He comes to believe his green hair is to remind people that he's a war orphan, and that war is very bad for children. He realizes people are tired and busy and don't want to hear any more about war, but he's willing to fight the battle alone, until even Gramps seems to turn against him. Under pressure from the rest of the town, Gramps decides that perhaps it would be best if Peter's hair were shaved off. Brokenhearted, Peter runs away. I must admit I didn't understand the movie's ending. Because after Gramps has found Peter and made his peace, and Peter's agreed to come home and continue his work on behalf of the world's children, we hear two doctors discussing the boy. They say it doesn't matter whether Peter's hair was really green or not; all that matters was whether Peter believed it was. Since Peter's hair was green as grass, and you and I and all the townspeople believed it, this is awfully confusing. Still, it's a nice picture. It hits at bigotry, it pleads for war's forgotten victims, and certainly, Dean Stockwell's a most appealing young actor.—RKO.

Red River: Montgomery Clift, Joanne Dru and the hazards of cattle-raising in early Texas days.

RED RIVER

Across the Red River, a long time back, there was an untenanted stretch called Texas. All a man had to do was ride out from the East, stake a claim, kill any Mexican who came sneaking across the border to say he'd seen the land first, and start to work raising cattle. Which is the course of action John Wayne takes in the movie under discussion. He builds himself a regular beef empire, only to have the Civil War interfere with his plans. A wrecked South is no market for meat, and Texans have to find a way of getting their stock East, or see the work of years go for nothing. This picture is supposed to be a chronicle of the first long, painful trip driving cattle across country (via the Chisholm Trail) to a place in Kansas where a railroad to the East began. It's also the chronicle of Dunsan (John Wayne), a hard man whom the years have made harder; Matt (Montgomery Clift), the boy who's been a son to him, and the cold and terrible feud which grew between them. Long before the cattle reach the railroad, or Wayne and Clift face one another with guns in their hands, you've had your money's worth of entertainment. You've seen cattle stampedes, and Indian fighting, and a cast including toothless Walter Brennan, Noah Beery, Jr., and the late Harry Carey. —U.A.

GALLANT BLADE

Couple of hundred years ago, France was in bad trouble. She'd been at war with half the countries in Europe, and her soldiers, tired of blood baths, were clamoring for peace. Fortunately (since men were deserting from the army at a good clip), the wars had about resolved themselves. The good general in charge of France's troops, as our story opens, is just about to send those troops home, when a certain Marshal (Victor Jory) convinces the Queen that France ought to make war on Spain. Spain hasn't done anything to warrant such action, but the way Victor's mind works, if you can't give the peasants bread, you've got to give them war. Fill their minds, and you won't have to fill

ANN BLYTH, STARRING IN UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL'S "RED CANYON". COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

Ann Blyth got me my first date

I never had even a blind date.

THEN—these words in a magazine caught my eye . . .

Ann Blyth believes soft, feminine-looking hands have tremendous appeal for a man. Says Ann, "I smooth my hands with Jergens Lotion."

That very night I started using Jergens.

SOON—it happened—my roommate's brother asked me out! Now we've a date for every evening! And I've noticed, Paul loves to hold my Jergens-smoothed hands!

Your hands can be lovelier—softer, smoother than ever—with today's richer Jergens Lotion. Because it's a liquid, Jergens quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. And Jergens Lotion is never oily or sticky. Still only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

Hollywood Stars Use Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 Over Any Other Hand Care

Now Yours— Jergens Beauty Kit!

Contains generous samples of Jergens Lotion, Powder, Face Cream and Dryad Deodorant. Send 10¢ to cover handling and postage to The Andrew Jergens Co., Box 6, Dept. 34A, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.
Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only, expires Dec. 31, 1949.

their stomachs. Besides, the people are close to hating their own government (namely the Marshal) and the Marshal's willing to have them hate something else (namely Spain). The good general, whose heart is with his men, doesn't see it that way. He thinks there's been enough war, too much war. Obviously, he's a man to be put out of the way. But Marshal Victor reckons without Larry Parks, the general's aide, and the best swordsman in France. Larry dashes through the picture, avenging all the right people, and he even ends up with Victor's girl friend (Marguerite Chapman). In Technicolor, she's very nice to end up with. The general is ultimately freed from the prison where Victor stuck him, the queen is made to see the error of Victor's ways ("This means peace!"), Victor himself is run through by Larry's gallant blade (the very sword the general gave him after ten loyal years, and the peasants go home and eat grass, I guess.—Col.

BLOOD ON THE MOON

The ethics in Blood on the Moon are a little unresolved. First of all, there's a conflict between a man named Lufton (Tom Tully), a cattle owner who feels that a large part of Texas ought to be grazing land for his beef, and a lot of homesteaders who're fighting for their small patches of land, and who think men have as much right to live as cows. Ordinarily, you'd be on their side. But it seems Lufton's a good soul, in his capitalistic way, whereas the homesteaders are being led by a big crook, Tate Riling (Robert Preston). Truth is, Tate doesn't care about the homesteaders being over-run; he just wants to fix it so Lufton won't be able to find any graze for his cattle, and will have to sell it dirt-cheap (to him, Tate, of course). Up until now, Lufton's had his stock on the Ute Indian reservation (he's been selling beef to the government) but Tate's in cahoots with the government agent (Frank Faylen) and they've given Lufton his walking papers. That's when Lufton starts planning to move in on the homesteaders. Jim Garry (Bob Mitchum), an old friend of Tate's, comes riding up to the whole mess looking for a job. Tate's already got one of Lufton's daughters (Phyllis Thaxter) in love with him, and he's using her to further his own shifty ends; another Lufton daughter (Barbara Bel Geddes) falls for Mitchum, and before the picture's over, half the people involved are shot quite dead. Walter Brennan, in a small part, is wonderful, and as taut, exciting Western drama goes, so is Blood on the Moon—RKO.

Tape it easy!

Good-looking gift packages are easy with transparent "Scotch" Tape—even seals metal foil wrappings firmly.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND
Cellulose TAPE
SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS
Buy It At Your Favorite Store

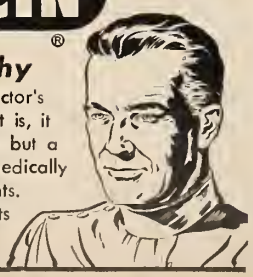
Lots of clever ideas on gift wrapping, party favors, holiday decorating, in the "Scotch" Tape booklet, Tricks and Trim. For your free copy write to Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 933 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

©1948 3M CO.

PAIN

of headache, neuritis and neuralgia

RELIEVED



incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

You'll love our February cover with Esther Williams on it. In fact, you'll love the issue—because you're the people who help us write it. Really! You've been telling us whom you like and we've taken it from there. Now we're coming back for more advice. The first 500 of you who mail in the questionnaire below will get the February, March and April issues of MODERN SCREEN—for free. So hurry!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our January issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd and 3rd CHOICES.

The Truth About James Mason ☐
The Ten Greatest Myths of Hollywood by Hedda Hopper ☐
Mother Was Never Like This (Joan Bennett) ☐
The Christmas I'll Never Forget by Alida Valli ☐
The Gang's All Here (Ann Blyth) ☐
Robert Walker: Tragic Figure ☐
The Mocambo Affairs ☐
Why Jimmy Stewart Won't Marry ☐
This Secret Power by Greer Garson ☐
And Baby Makes Three (June Allyson-Dick Powell) ☐
She's A Big Girl Now! (Elizabeth Taylor) ☐
He Got What He Wanted (Larry Parks) ☐
Parting Is Such Sorrow (Gloria DeHaven-John Payne) ☐
Picture Of The Month (Enchantment) ☐
Perpetual Emotion (Cyd Charisse-Tony Martin) ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What MALE star do you like least?.....

What FEMALE star do you like least?.....

My name is.....

My address is.....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Return of October: Professor Glenn Ford becomes involved with a horse-lover, Terry Moore.

RETURN OF OCTOBER

James Gleason is Terry Moore's uncle, as the Technicolored Return of October opens. But the poor fellow has a heart attack when his horse loses a race, and this leaves Terry alone in the world, with nothing to do except go and live at her rich old Aunt Martha's house. Up until now, she's bummed around with Uncle Willie, and all she knows is horses. She knows some touts, too. They're a docile bunch; they just love little Terry, they allow her to stay up late shooting craps with them, and they even allow her to walk off with the pots in a way no nice-mannered girl would do. However, I'm quibbling. Trouble is, I found very little to admire in Miss Terry. For instance, she hitches a ride with Glenn Ford (who's a Professor Bassett at a nearby college) and in the short time she's with him, she says sneeringly, "Phi Beta Kappa, what's that?" (she has a habit of acting snobbish about education, a little of which wouldn't have hurt her a bit), and she also tells him he's a "schnookle" because he doesn't know from horses. Anyhow, to make a long story, her rich Aunt Martha admires her for being such a spunky little critter (Aunt Martha's other dependents are a weak-kneed lot) and Terry is indulged more than you'd believe possible. Ultimately, she has another run-in with Glenn Ford, when they both show up at a horse-auction trying to buy the same sad horse, a wind-sucker called October. Ford wants it for some scientific research at the college; Terry wants it because she thinks it's her Uncle Willie. Believe it or not, she's noted a resemblance. That, coupled with the fact that Uncle Willie'd always said if he ever came back, he'd come back as a horse and win the Derby, decides her. From there, it gets really wild.

Glenn Ford is fine; Albert Sharpe, late of Finian's Rainbow, is more or less wasted in a small Irish part; Jimmy Gleason is swell, and Terry Moore is a round-faced blend of Deanna Durbin and Joan Leslie.—Col.

THE RED SHOES

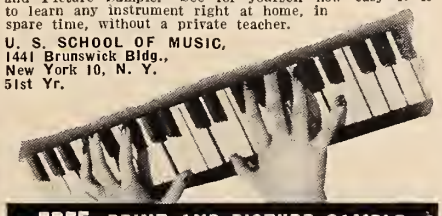
Hans Christian Andersen, in one of his grim little tales for children, told of a girl whose shoes would not stop dancing, and who died (presumably of exhaustion) when

LITTLE LULU

"Blow hard, Alvin—KLEENEX can take it!"*

Little Lulu says: From sniffle to gesundheit, your nose knows Kleenex is your best buy in tissues. Soft! Strong! You pull one double tissue (not a handful)—up pops another!

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



Earn Extra Money! Full, Spare Time!
YOU can make many EXTRA DOLLARS with our new, sell-on-sight Plastic Line! Tablecloths, Aprons; also many other beautiful, fast-selling items, novelties. Postal brings free details. Write today. Hurry!
Royalty Sales Co., Box 748, Passaic 15, New Jersey

EVEN IF YOU DON'T KNOW A NOTE OF MUSIC NOW...

You Can Learn Your Favorite Instrument This Easy A-B-C Way

No special talent, no previous training needed. This U. S. School home-study method is so successful because you learn to play by playing real tunes by note, right from the start. And just think, you can learn your favorite instrument for only a few cents a day. If interested, mail coupon for FREE Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. See for yourself how easy it is to learn any instrument right at home, in spare time, without a private teacher.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
1441 Brunswick Bldg.,
New York 10, N. Y.
51st Yr.

FREE PRINT AND PICTURE SAMPLE

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
1441 Brunswick Bldg., New York 10, N. Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).

Instrument .....
Have you Instrument?.....
Name .....
(Please Print)
Address .....

BUY NOW!
52 PIECE SERVICE FOR 8
STERLING INLAID SILVERPLATE

STILL ONLY $68.50 WITH CHEST (no fed. tax)

CHOICE OF 3 DESIGNS!
BUY ON BUDGET!
AT JEWELRY & DEPT. STORES

HOLMES & EDWARDS STERLING INLAID* SILVERPLATE

YOUTH
DANISH PRINCESS LOVELY LADY

All made in U. S. A.

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good groaming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1

FREE TO ALL WHO NEED MONEY

I'll help you get extra cash to fill your pocketbook—to live on. Supply my food and household products to regular customers. No previous experience or capital needed. I'll send FREE an assortment of fine, full-size products to test and show. Start near your home full or spare time. Gift premiums, big monthly premiums. Rush your name and home address today for free outfit. Hurry!

BLAIR DEPT. 360-EA, Lynchburg, Va.

High School Course at Home — Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, H114, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

LIKE to DRAW?

Use spare time at home preparing for profitable art career. A complete home study course with money back agreement. For details and talent test give age and occupation.

AMERICAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL ART
DIVISION D, BOX 8066 • DALLAS 5, TEXAS

she couldn't get the fatal booties off. This picture is based on Mr. Andersen's invention. It starts in London, where a man named Lermontov (Anton Walbrook), who's the head of a very famous ballet company, hires two new people. They are a young man named Julian Craster (Marius Goring), who writes music, and a girl named Victoria Page (Moira Shearer), who wants to dance. Lermontov's passion for the ballet entirely rules his life. When his première ballerina announces that she's going to be married, he takes this for a reprehensible sign of human frailty, and so far as he's concerned, she's all washed up. He starts training Victoria, in whom he detects signs of more than ordinary ability, coupled with a dedication equal to his own. She says she lives to dance, and he believes her. The company travels, and Julian and Vicky both grow. Julian writes a ballet called "The Red Shoes" about a girl whose dancing shoes keep her from finding peace until she dies. Vicky dances the lead; the role makes her a star. But Julian and Vicky fall in love, and this enrages Lermontov, who claims that the work of both is sure to suffer. To a sharp eye it's apparent that Lermontov himself is in love with Vicky. There's a quarrel, and Julian leaves the company. Vicky goes with him; they get married. Julian writes an opera—he's busy and happy—but Vicky misses her dancing. When Lermontov schemes to get her back, he succeeds. "Nobody else has ever danced 'The Red Shoes'," he tells her. "Have you forgotten your ambitions?" The way things work out (or don't work out), Julian's opera and the ballet are both scheduled to open the same night; Vicky refuses to give up her dancing just to stay by Julian's side; Julian leaves her forever, and there's nothing for the poor girl to do but go leaping off a parapet to her death, thereby carrying out the symbolism of "The Red Shoes." The ending is too melodramatic, even if it was inevitable. You keep thinking that stubborn couple might have effected some sort of compromise and lived happily ever after. The picture's two and a half hours long, contains a full-length ballet, exquisite Technicolor, and superb performances by everyone concerned, including the great dancer Leonide Massine.—Eagle-Lion

THE PALEFACE

Jane Russell, that gorgeous, gorgeous creature, is cast here as Calamity Jane, famous lady hotshot of Injun fightin' days. Governor somebody-or-other gets her out of the clink where she's been languishing for some unnamed sin, and promises her a full pardon if she'll take a job as a federal agent. He wants her to go West and find out who's been selling dynamite and other messy playthings to a feller named Chief Yellow Feathers. (In the end, it turns out that one of the governor's own sneaky little aides done it, but we've got a while to go yet.) Jane takes up with a dentist called Painless Peter Potter (Bob Hope) because he's conveniently dumb, and she can make him marry her. (A lone woman traveling West in a wagon train might arouse some attention.) When the rumor spreads that a federal agent is with the caravan, Jane manages to shift suspicion to Bob. Whoever kills Bob, she figures, will be the villain she's after. The logic of this is immediately apparent. Bob, however, shows a stubborn inclination to keep breathing. He scrambles through the picture, never quite sure what's going on, the swaggering, bragging hero, often cut down by his own rare candor. There's the time Yellow Feather's boys attack a log cabin, and Bob's locked outside. He leaps into a rain barrel, and heroically aims his gun over the top. "All those Indians," he sighs, "against one coward." The Paleface is hilarious, exciting, lovely to look at, and the song, "Buttons and Bows," started there. If you miss it, have your head examined.—Para.

The Paleface: Federal agent Jone Russell uses dentist Hope as a decoy for her sleuthing.

UNFAITHFULLY YOURS

You get a little bit of everything here, and it's all Preston Sturges'. He wrote, produced, directed. To begin with, Sir Alfred De Carter (Rex Harrison), a baronet who leads a symphony orchestra, is married to Linda Darnell. Linda's sister, Barbara Lawrence, is married to Rudy Vallee. Rudy's a millionaire, a stuffed shirt—oh, you know the kind of parts they give Rudy Vallee. Well, Rex comes home from a concert tour and finds that Rudy's been looking out for his interests; in fact, he's had a detective trailing Linda. At first, Rex is enraged, but the more gossip he hears about Linda, the more curious he becomes. One night he's conducting Tschaikovsky, and, as the music swells, you (the audience) see into his (Rex's, not Tschaikovsky's) mind's eye, where he's neatly plotting Linda's murder. Everything goes smoothly, Rex's secretary (Kurt Kreuger), the man under suspicion of being Linda's boyfriend, burns for the murder, and it's a highly satisfactory dream. But as the concert continues, Rex's mood changes. We see him conjuring up a scene in which he gives Linda a huge check, and forgives her. "Youth cries to youth," he whispers, tragically. The movie turns into high (or low) farce, when the real-life Rex, attempting to re-create one of the scenes he'd executed so perfectly in his imagination, very nearly executes himself. Anyhow, Linda wasn't guilty in the first place, and you should have known it right along.—20th-Fox.

Unfaithfully Yours: Rex Harrison suspects his wife, Linda Darnell, and secretary Kurt Kreuger.

MACBETH

Life Magazine gasped itself into a convulsion over this production, the Luce critics thought it was so funny. And the audience tittered the night I saw it, too. Which leaves me nowhere, because I thought it was fine. Furthermore, I thought Orson Welles, as the ambitious but tortured Macbeth, was both impressive and moving, even if he did carry funny looking pike-staffs (and what's the matter with authenticity anyhow?). Some liberties were taken with Shakespeare, but name me a Shakespearean production where some weren't. The story's still about the General, Macbeth, whose ruthless wife urges him to kill Scotland's king, and take the crown for himself. Murder leads to murder as the fearful Macbeth attempts to insure his new power, and eventually even Lady Macbeth splits under the strain. She goes pitching off a cliff, quite unhinged. (Shakespeare didn't specify how the wicked female died, so Orson just picked a way which pleased him.) The music for Macbeth is thrilling, Jeannette Nolan is the same as Lady M., and two of the most wonderful performances are given by Dan O'Herlihy and Peggy Webber as Macduff and Lady Macduff, victims of Macbeth's treachery. Roddy McDowall seemed to me miscast as Malcolm, son of the slain king, but surely that's a matter of taste. The three horrible witches prophesy in their croaking fashion, an army marches on Macbeth, justice moves to its inevitable victory, and the beautiful words of the old play lose nothing because they're spoken with Scottish brogues. After all, the thing happens in Scotland.—Rep.

ROAD HOUSE

Road House has to do with Richard Widmark, a sweet young fellow who happens to be a homicidal maniac by avocation; Cornel Wilde, his oldest friend; Ida Lupino, a girl who can't sing, but makes a living at it; and Celeste Holm, everybody's stooge. Widmark owns a road house—he's a very rich boy, due to his having had a very rich father—

(Continued on page 96)

One Permanent Cost $15...the TONI only $2

Make your first New Year Resolution—a Toni Home Permanent! Yes, decide right now to give yourself a Toni and have lovelier, more natural-looking waves than ever before! But first you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?

Yes, Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?

Amazingly easy. Instructions in each Toni Kit show you how with simple step by step pictures. It's easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. No wonder more than 2 million women a month use Toni.

Will TONI save me time?

Toni puts half-a-day back in your life. For you give yourself a Toni wave right at home. You are free to do whatever you want while the wave is "taking".

How long will my TONI wave last?

Your Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as any $15 beauty shop permanent—or you get back every cent you paid.

How much will I save with TONI?

You save money not just once with Toni—but every time you give yourself a lovely Toni wave! For the Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the plastic curlers again and again. So, for your second Toni wave, all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs only $1 . . . yet there's no finer permanent at any price!

Which twin has the TONI?

Attractive Frances and Bernadette Hanson live in New York City. Frances, the twin on the right, says: "My Toni Wave was soft and natural-looking right from the start." Bernadette says, "We're Toni Twins from now on!"

NOW over ~~1~~ 2 million women a month use Toni

It was a moment for being a woman for only a woman's weapon could keep her alive...now!
Gregory Peck
Anne Baxter
Richard Widmark
YELLOW SKY
with
ROBERT ARTHUR · JOHN RUSSELL
HENRY MORGAN · JAMES BARTON · CHARLES KEMPER
20th CENTURY-FOX
Directed by WILLIAM A. WELLMAN
Produced by LAMAR TROTTI
SCREEN PLAY BY LAMAR TROTTI
BASED ON A STORY BY W. R. BURNETT to the winners!

Dear Champions of 1948:

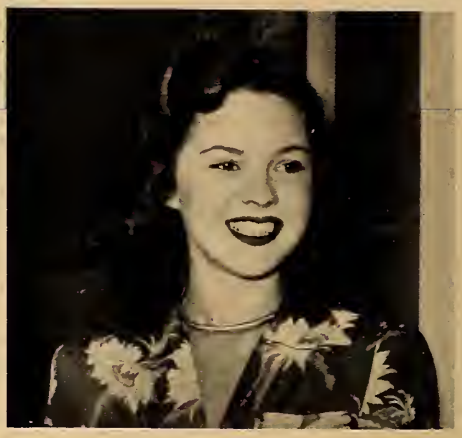
A roll of drums and a flourish of trumpets!

On the following two pages, we are honored to announce you as the winners of MODERN SCREEN'S 1948 star-popularity poll—the most extensive survey of fan preferences ever conducted by any magazine. You've been voted their favorites by our more than four-and-a-half million readers in every part of the country in every age group. You're entitled to feel pretty proud about it.

Our heartiest congratulations go to you, Lana Turner, for emerging as top star among the ladies. You've done it despite a really savage working-over this year by certain portions of the press. But your constantly gracious attitude toward the fans, your honest, whole-hearted performances in screen roles, and the courageous dignity you've shown under stress have been rewarded by rich dividends of loyalty from friends old and new.

We're also very happy about you, Alan Ladd, for being first among the males. You're another who, in your personal dealings, seems always to achieve a warm, easy friendliness. And while your films this past year have established no cinematic milestones, you've unfailingly projected in them one of the most clean-cut and arresting personalities in screen history—a personality solidly backed by the sincerity and dependable professionalism which from the beginning have marked your work.

To you, Misses Temple, Grable, Bergman and Allyson, and to you, Messrs. Crosby, Power, Gable and Rogers—who have earned the great distinction of crowding your Hollywood colleagues for top popularity—to all of you we join our readers in extending congratulations and best wishes for continuing success in the careers that have given us so much top-notch entertainment, beauty and enlightenment.



You're the winners. It couldn't have happened to nicer movie stars.

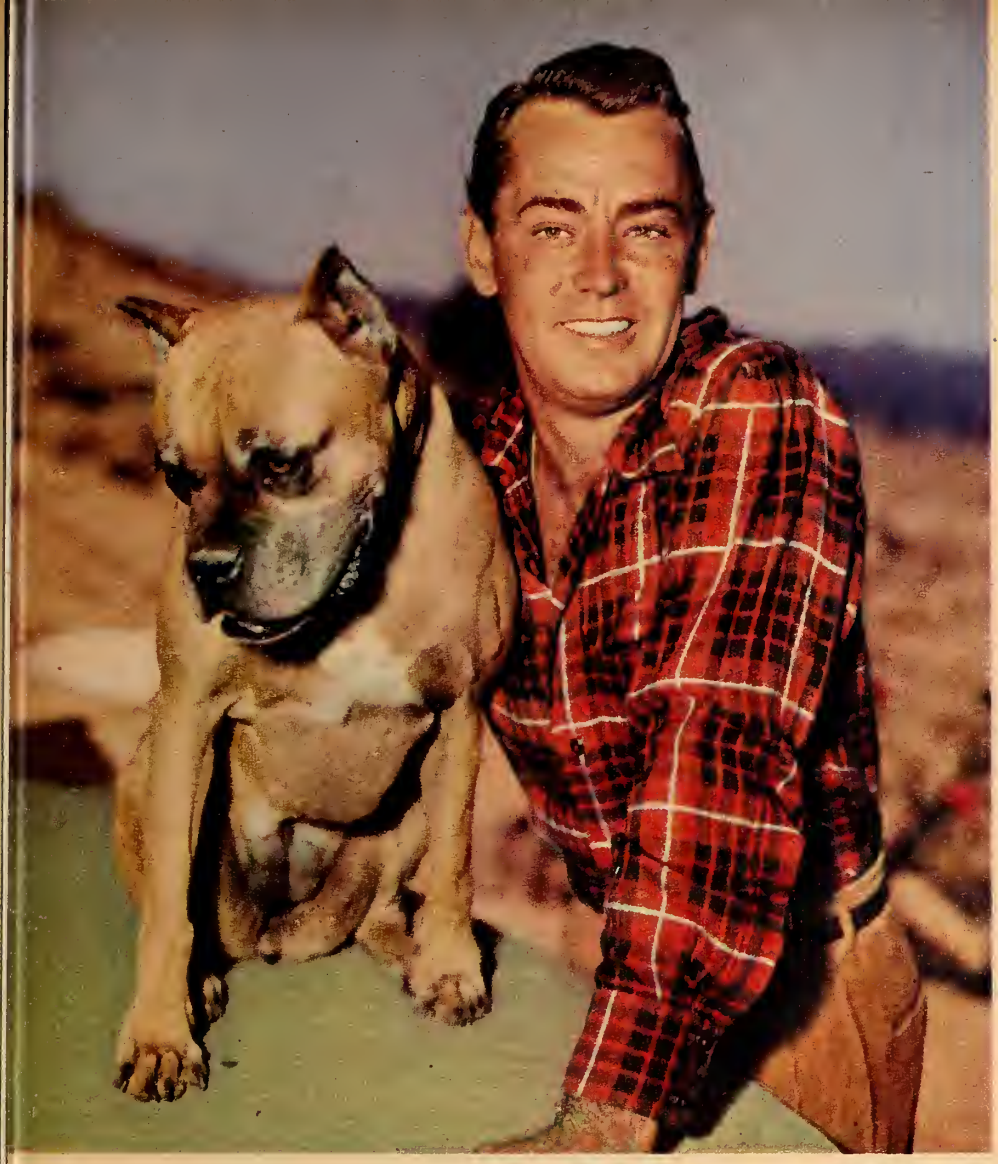
Quadett H. Nichols

EDITOR

to the winners!

2

3



4

5

You Voted Lana Turner Top Actress Of 1948 In Modern Screen's Popularity Poll

■ Lana Turner became a household word in 1948. Tons of newsprint were devoted to her engagement and marriage to Bob Topping and their honeymoon abroad—during which she drew violent attacks when the press decided she was behaving too independently. But you voters stuck by Lana, the friendly person, the sincere actress. . . . You voted Shirley Temple second only to Lana. Certainly the birth of Linda Susan endeared Shirley to us more than ever—if that's possible! . . . Betty Grable, who came in third, made little news—she just kept on being the one-and-only wonderful Betty. . . . Ingrid Bergman, No. 4 on your list, remained "the first lady of Hollywood"—a simple, beautiful personality, still touched with mystery. . . . June Allyson, in placing fifth, continued to demonstrate the strong attraction of her sparkling qualities of freshness and youth.

2

3

4

5

You Voted Alan Ladd Top Actor Of 1948 In Modern Screen's Popularity Poll

■ MODERN SCREEN readers first made us Ladd-conscious back in 1942. We've been featuring four Ladd stories a year, or better, ever since—by popular demand. And now you've voted Alan your top male favorite in 1948. . . . As for Crosby, the guy must have no enemies. Yep, everybody loves the character, and it's no surprise to find you've voted him into the No. 2 slot. . . . Neither are we startled to see Tyrone Power only a few votes behind the Groaner. There's a movie idol as is a movie idol—handsome, suave, but perennially boyish. . . . That Gable man, whom you voted fourth, had only one film in 1948, and it wasn't too sensational. But to you and you—and us—he's still Mr. Hollywood. . . . Maybe your fifth choice, Roy Rogers, deserves a citation for proving that a cowboy can marry the girl and still keep his fans. But he's Roy—and she's Dale!

PEOPLE BELIEVE ALMOST ANYTHING ABOUT HOLLYWOOD. FOLLOWING ARE TEN MOST CHERISHED FABLES:

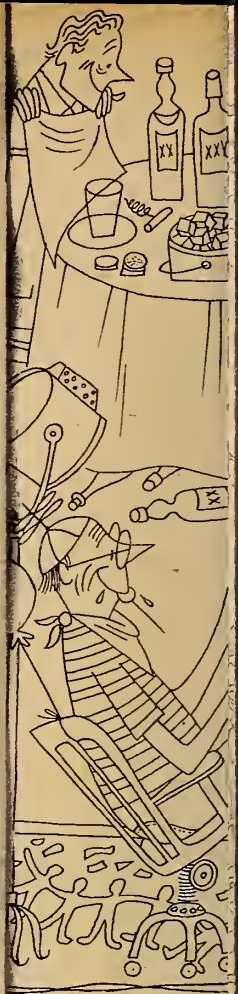
1. All stars are rich as Croesus and spend their millions like sailors on a spree.

2. All Hollywood parties are sin-soaked orgies.

3. Stars guzzle whiskey and sniff dope for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

4. Studios arrange all star romances.

5. You have to be the boss's girl friend to get ahead.



6. You have to play lots of politics to stay on top.

7. All producers have I.Q.'s two grades below a moron.

8. All child stars are spoiled brats.

9. Stars change wives and husbands every hour on the hour.

10. All stars hate Hollywood like poison and are dying to shake its stardust from their feet.

the ten great myths of hollywood

by hedda hopper

There isn't a Hollywood fable
Hedda Hopper doesn't know.
Now this astute reporter takes up her pen to explode ten of the most frequently circulated myths . . .

■ "Hollywood must be such an awfully weird place," the lady quivered. "Imagine Shirley Temple and that Mickey Rooney posing as child prodigies when everyone knows they're really midgets."

I put on my most confidential expression. "And my dear," I stage-whispered, "think of Clark Gable and those artificial ears!" I could see her vibrate like a harp.

That was some years ago, of course, at a party back East, and I'm ashamed of myself now for kicking along a gag with a gullible gal, but she had it coming to her. Yet today, when you'd think people would know better, I still hear just such crazy convictions about Hollywood and its stars wherever I go, told to me with strictly straight faces and sincere belief.

Well, let's go to work and turn up some facts about these fictions. The first puffed-up myth I'd like to explode is the one that says Hollywood stars live like Roman emperors gone money-mad.

Pooh—and pooh again! I can show you palaces and estates on Long Island, Grosse Pointe or even staid old Philadelphia's Main Line that outshine anything you can find around Bel-Air or Beverly Hills. The difference is, you don't see their pictures every time a printing press rolls.

Maybe you'll be shocked to know that a good half of Hollywood's gold-plated guys and gals figuratively hock the family silver along about February of each year so they can pay their income tax. Then they spend the next 12 months catching up and paying back! How come —with salaries in the four figures and all that? Well, the way it works out, if you make $5000 a week, around $800 of it stays in your pants pocket or alligator purse. That's scarcely enough to live like the Nizam of Hyderabad.

Hollywood's lords and ladies aren't dining on humming birds' wings off gold plate or having attendants holding their trains these days. Servant staffs have dwindled almost to the vanishing point; rare is the star who has over two. The Bob Taylors, Irene Dunne, Claudette Colbert and Joan Crawford get along with couples where there used to be at least four well-paid hired hands. Paulette Goddard recently sold her house, and now lives in an apartment with one maid. (At least one paid helper is a Hollywood necessity—someone has to be on hand to handle telephone calls, housework, babies or what ails you when a picture's shooting.)

Now what about those fine feathers? Well, Hollywood's stars are on display every minute. A legend of grandness surrounds them, and who puts it there? You and you. What's more, you want it there. That's why I say to every young star I meet, "Learn how to dress. Dress well, expensively. It's the best. (Continued on page 62)

At 18, she was lovely. But 20 years and four daughters can do things to a woman—they've made Joan Bennett more beautiful, more glamorous than ever!

BY ARTHUR L. CHARLES

Mother was never like this

■ It happened at the wedding reception. Joan Bennett's oldest daughter, Diana, had just been married to a tall blond lad named John Hardy Anderson, and both families stood grouped in the garden, chatting.

One of the late-comers to the reception, a non-professional who couldn't tell Greer Garson from Betty Grable, was a little shocked by the proceedings. Cuddling close to her escort, she whispered, "Of course I must be wrong—but the bride looks very much pregnant to me!"

The escort smiled. "Mmm, hmm," he said. "Only that's not the bride. That girl you're staring at is the bride's mother!"

A month later Joan Bennett gave birth to her fourth daughter and thus became the only active actress in Hollywood with four children of her own.

Shelley Wanger was born on July 4th, 1948, and immediately following her earthly arrival, the movie colony's feline contingent began clawing away at her mother's career.

"It's amazing!" I heard one old witch explain to a friend at Romanoff's. "It really is. I always thought Joan Bennett was a smart little cookie. I thought she'd have the baby on the q. t.—you know, maybe in Santa Barbara or some place like that. But no! Right here in Hollywood. And four children! I mean she's supposed to be a glamorous screen siren—and what man wants to see a screen siren with four daughters? And another thing—marrying her daughter off in public like that. Doesn't she realize she can get to be a grandmother that way?" (Continued on page 93)

The star of Blank Wall, at 38, is the only active movie siren with four daughters. Oldest, Diana, expects her baby in March.

Joan, holding baby Shelley, with Stephanie, five, and Melissa, 14.

by alida valli

■ I was shivering and barely awake when my mother came into the room. That winter in Rome you didn't need to get out of bed in the morning to get cold; you were cold all night. You awoke cold, even if it were Christmas Day. I heard my mother calling.

"Il Giorno de Natale, Alida," she was saying. "Or have you forgotten?"

I hadn't forgotten. Nor was I forgetting something else that wasn't so pleasant to think about. It was on my mind as I slipped from under the blankets into my clothes, with no freezing seconds lost in between, you may be sure.

Christmas of 1944. There was no fuel for heating. There was enough electricity to operate a small electric heater for a few hours—no more. There was almost no food. You either had it saved up, grew something of your own, or else stood endlessly in long lines with your silly ration card in your hand; silly because even the few ounces of edibles it entitled you to were rarely to be had. There was no business, no factories running, no work to be done. There were just houses in which people lingered and starved, and in the streets German military—the angry and fearful German military. They had excellent reason for feeling nervous. This was the winter after Italy had officially surrendered and gone over to the Allied cause. (Continued on page 82)

Mother and I were alone in the cold room, remembering the sounds of other Italian Christmases . . . and then came the dreaded pounding on the door.

the christmas I'll never forget

Always, she'd dreamed of a home of her own. So when the dream came true at last,
Ann Blyth couldn't wait another minute. She invited the whole gang over for a rollicking house-warming party!

the gang's all here!

by reba and bonnie churchill

Jone Powell ond Lon McCollister get Ann Blyth's house-worming porty storted with a be-ribboned gift. The house is o five-minute drive from the studio, which ollows Ann 10 extro minutes of sleep in the morning.

The bubble gum came in six colors, but Jonet Leigh hod trouble with even one kind. Success wos brief, for Donny Scholl come olong ond burst it on her foce, sending her off to repoir domoges.

■ It was Ann Blyth on the telephone.

"The paint isn't quite dry on the walls and the movers are just bringing in my new piano—but you're invited to a house-warming party tonight . . . Yes, tonight—right away! I can't wait."

No more apartments for Ann! No more thumping on the walls when the dog got playful. It was eight rooms of beautiful space and all hers—and the first house she'd ever lived in. Her impatience to get going was really understandable.

By 7 p.m. the hostess and house were ready. A fire glowed in the living-room and gay balloons (filled with helium) hugged the ceiling. The aroma of roast turkey drifted in from the kitchen.

Outside, tacked over the door, was a sign bidding all "WELCOME to Casa de Ann." And standing beneath it were we. We being Jane Powell, Elizabeth Taylor, Lon McCallister, Arthur Loew and ourselves. A step behind us were Mel Torme and Susan Perry.

Lon gave the doorbell his familiar ring—two longs and a short.

The door of the Spanish stucco swung open. There was a confusion of "Greetings, Señorita!" . . . "Buenas tardes!" . . . and some "Hi, Ann's!" from the less bi-lingual.

Janie and Liz didn't bother taking off their jackets. They just had to see the house first.

Ann wore the grin of a proud owner as she conducted the tour of inspection. "There's cross ventilation here . . . and pegged hardwood floors there . . . and unit heat . . . and linen closets . . . and a music room . . . and . . ."

"It's a shame," Art Loew dead-panned. "A beautiful spot like this and no yard!"

"Ah, so you want the fifty-cent tour," Ann smiled. We followed her to the patio, which overlooks the large backyard. It's a typical California setting. The grounds are dotted with flowers and fruit trees. There's a barbecue grill and plenty of space for that "hoped for" swimming pool. The garage is extra large. It houses the deep freeze as well as many of Ann's film stills.

Our invasion of the backyard proved to be a mistake. Ann has a dog named Chad. He's a huge Afghan whose ancestors guarded the pyramids in Egypt. To Chad, Ann's the pyramids. When his barking subsided, we could hear laughter coming from the house.

It was late-comers—Douglas Dick, Gloria Jean, Danny Scholl, Janet Leigh and Dick Moore. They'd let themselves in and were happily munching on dill pickles and celery stalks. (Continued on next page)

A highlight of the evening was a game called "Let's pin the balloons on Lan," with Liz Taylor, Scott Brady and Dick Moore the chief participants. Afterwards, Liz took a ribbing about her beau, Lieut. Glenn Davis.

Mel Torme coaxes Jane, Scott, Susan Perry, Bonnie and Lon to record their housewarming sentiments for posterity. Lon's were quite lyrical: "It's grand, Ann," "It's zonie, Janie," etc.

Upstoirs, Ann shows Jonet, Liz and Jonie her doll collection, storted when she wos three. The bedroom is the one Ann's dreomed of for yeors—except for o bed-conopy, which had to be discorded becouse the ceiling's too low!

Jonie, Lon ond Doug give the spinet o whirl, while Danny Scholl, Janet Leigh, Liz Toylor, Ann ond Art Loew egg them on. Loter, to prove her sang in Mr. Peabody wosn't dubbed, Ann song the eerie mermoid woil.

(Continued from preceding page) "Hey, where did you get those?" demanded Susan Perry.

"Snitched them from the table," they confessed.

"Never mind, Susan—you can chomp on this," suggested Ann.

"This" turned out to be Edgar Bergen's new bubble gum, which comes in six colors and makes king-sized bubbles. Gloria Jean immediately chose a licorice piece which she saw fit to pep up with occasional nibbles on her pickle.

Lon and Doug Dick were busy christening Ann's new spinet piano, so Janie Powell took a piece for herself and for each of the boys. She selected red, yellow and green—and made rainbow bubbles, which she promptly began snapping in Lon's ear.

This was more than Janet Leigh could accomplish. At first she simply couldn't blow bubbles. And when she did manage to puff out a baby-sized one, Danny Scholl burst it on her face. With a series of sputtering threats, she departed for Ann's bedroom to repair the damage.

Ann's bedroom is papered in a riotous rambling-rose print which enlivens the mahogany period furniture. The four-poster bed has a pale-blue satin spread, skirted with stiff white organdy. On it is displayed part of her doll collection, which Ann started when she was three. In one corner of the room is a specially lighted makeup mirror, which is dandy for applying cosmetics—or repairing bubble gum casualties. Sooner or later every girl had an opportunity to try it out.

When Gloria Jean came in, she sighed, "Ann, your room is beautiful! Did an interior decorator help you?"

"No," said Ann, "but I've always dreamed of a room like this. When I was off the screen with my back injury, I used to lie in bed planning where everything would go." It was during this period of convalescence that Ann took up sewing and made many of the doilies and cushions that now decorate the room.

"The only thing lacking," confided Ann, "is a canopy over my bed. I bought one all right—and then discovered the ceiling was too low for it. It's currently beautifying the garage."

Ann's discourse was interrupted by Scott Brady's loud off-stage whisper from the living room: "Well, men, since the girls have deserted us, guess we'll all have double portions of everything."

We ran in to join 'em! (Continued on page 85)

Bannie, Susan, Mel, Reba, Liz, Lan and Jane help Ann make the faad disappear. Belaw: the kids squat camfartably an the rug—all except Dick Maare, whase dinner's being threatened by a runaway ballaan.

Ta ga with the raast turkey, there were bawls af steaming spaghetti, hat patata salad, caakies and apple cider. Far same af Ann's special party recipes, see MODERN SCREEN's new Fan Fare column an page 91.

What are the real reasons behind Bob Walker's bewildering behavior? One of Hollywood's foremost reporters cuts through the headlines to tell you what they are. . . .

Robert Walker: TRAGIC FIGURE

■ "Cut your lawn for fifty cents, sir?" The little eight-year-old boy was very appealing. The owner of the big house—one of the biggest in Ogden, Utah—smiled down as he hurried out to his car. "Sure, son, if you want to," he said.

So the ambitious little boy spent all that Saturday morning in mighty toil, shoving the heavy mower back and forth, back and forth across the big lawn. And then—

"He never paid me," said Robert Walker just the other day, with as much bitterness as if the incident had happened yesterday instead of 21 years ago. "I'll never forgive him," he added in dead earnest.

Sensitive, suspicious, filled with unforgotten heartache, Robert Walker seems to be going through life with the self-indulgent conviction that every man and woman is his active or potential enemy. Some of his friends think it all began in just such little incidents in his childhood as that busy house-owner's forgetting to pay him the fifty cents. Others explain it by the oft-advanced theory that he has never recovered from the shock of his divorce from Jennifer Jones.

In any event, his friends were given fresh cause for sorrow a few weeks ago when the unpredictable young man made headlines—and news photos—by being arrested and fined in Los Angeles (Continued on page 84)

Bob as he appeared in a Los Angeles police station, when he was booked on charges of being "drunk, noisy, loud and boisterous."

by sheilah graham

■ People have parties at the Mocambo on the slightest provocation. People such as Judy Garland and Cary Grant and Clark Gable and Joan Crawford. Sometimes these affairs are so big our walls bulge—and sometimes we have four or five such jumbo gatherings in the room at once. But often the party will be strictly a table for two. Maybe this kind is the most interesting.

The Mocambo, in case you don't know, is a Hollywood night club on Sunset Boulevard. The name comes from a little cantina in Vera Cruz. The decor we dreamed up by ourselves. The room is a splash of bright colors. One whole wall is a glassed-in bird cage in which some 200 parakeets, macaws, rice birds and love birds flit back and forth. We've had people say, "Good grief, the wallpaper's moving!" But most of our guests are used to the tropical birds by now.

Some people say until you've been partied at the Mocambo you haven't arrived. I don't know about that. But if you're on the way up, and if you're a nice person we'll be partying for you sooner or later.

The romantic parties are the most fun. I'm getting so I can detect the approach of wedding bells—usually before the anxious swain has phrased the question. When Tony Martin started courting Cyd Charisse, he would call us to make sure we had table flowers of the right color for a little party he was by charlie morrison proprietor of the famous Mocambo

Dreams for two,
and cocktails, dinners that say goodbye—
these are the Mocambo affairs, these are the evenings that should never end . . .

Mocombo-goer Peter Lowford stops for cigorettes (above) on his woy in for o goy evening (left). Burt Loncaster and his wife Normo (below) rarely step out but do so here.

kodachromes by bert parry giving Cyd. Right away I marked Cyd and Tony down as altar prospects.

Beautiful Jane Greer was a certainty for a gold band when Ed Lasker first saw her in Mocambo and started dating her there three times a week. You could tell by the smile on Ed's face. Anyone at Mocambo could see that Marie McDonald and Harry Karl were slated for domestic partnership. But some people laughed when I told them my perennial bachelor friend, Mike Romanoff, was soon to move off the singles list. Well, just the other day he married Gloria Lister and confirmed what I'd been saying. And it was clear after Mocambo date number three that Eleanor Parker was going to say yes when Bert

the mocambo affairs

Parties at the Macambo are given far any and na reason. This ane was in Jae Pasternak's hanor the night he left an a Hanalulu vacatian. Jimmy Durante bids Jae a fand farewell far the camera.

Erral Flynn's tiffs have accasionally put the Mocamba an the frant page. Owner Marrisan daesn't like this kind af notoriety, but he likes Errol and Nara Flynn. Here, he escarts them ta their car.

There can be twa ar twa hundred at a Mocambo affair—they all get the same svelte service. Shirley and Jahn Agar usually sit home by the fire, but even they can't escape the lure af this night club.

One of Charlie's favarite and best-dressed guests is Clark Gable (here with Nancy "Slim" Hawkes). Clark usually thraws big parties —an easy and gala way of paying off his many social obligations.

Van Heflin and his wife usually rough it in slacks and sweaters, but they dress up far the Macamba. Family couples like the Heflins come ta Charlie's place often. Here, they're with the Marrisans.

Before his marriage to Lita Baron (abave), Rory Calhaun was high an Morrison's list of unattached men. As saan as he started asking far special flower arrangements, Morrisan knew it meant romance.

(Continued from page 41) Friedlob got up enough steam.

Our largest headaches in the party line happen once a year. On schedule.

That's on Academy Award night.

About a week before, the trouble starts. Some big studio executive gets Albert, our mâitre d'hôtel, on the phone. "We can't miss winning the Award, Albert," he says. "I want to give Mary the biggest and nicest party she's ever had."

"Certainly, sir," Albert replies. "Will do."

What he doesn't, and can't, tell him is that just a few minutes before he had approximately the same conversation with a man from another studio, and the name was Betty. Yesterday it was someone from still another studio ordering festivities for a girl called Dorothy.

What do we do? Besides going quietly nuts, I mean. We'll go ahead and stage parties for everybody. Thank heavens, we've never met a movie personality (Continued on page 95)

Diana Lynn and Bob Neal were a steady Macambo duo before her engagement to architect John Lindsay. Here she and Bob await their table (below).

Bachelor Jimmy often dates the recently divorced Gloria MacLean.

why jimmy stewart won't marry

■ The way Jimmy Stewart is becoming more and more the confirmed, self-possessed bachelor seems a little sad to many of his friends.

The girls who are escorted by Jimmy nowadays find him interesting, humorous (in his own dry, hesitant way) and attentive (his gaze never strays away from his partner to see who might be coming in the door, or to scan the people at other tables, nor does he table-hop). He is even quite willing to talk about marriage—but he likes to talk about it impersonally.

His preference is for girls who can take to the subject in the same spirit. Sooner or later that is made pretty clear to any girl who indicates to Jimmy that she has specific ideas on the matter.

When the outside world—in the form, say, of a columnist or magazine writer—tries to pry romantically, Jimmy turns the questions aside expertly or pokes fun at them cleverly. Nobody can banter better than Jimmy. Just now the queries seem mainly to concern Gloria Hatrick MacLean, recently divorced from the wealthy Ned MacLean. Does he plan to marry her?

"She hasn't asked me yet," he comes back blithely.

Or someone will want to know how it feels to be going out with a girl like Gloria MacLean (Continued on page 78)

Do shadows stand between Jimmy and marriage . . .
shadows of a small town boyhood . . . of a secret love that knows no ending and no fulfillment?

BY JACK WADE

Margaret Sullavan,
married three times,
is the girl Jimmy met at Princeton eighteen years ago and never forgot.

Myrna Dell (upper left) and Anita Colby (above) keep Jimmy busy, but he hasn't proposed to either.

Before she married Jack Briggs,
Ginger Rogers was frequently seen with Jimmy—as were so many others.

It was predicted that Olivia De Havilland would marry Jimmy—whom she colled
"super-shy." But Olivia is now Mrs. Marcus Goodrich.

Luck? Ability?

They often help.

But there's something else to getting what you want—

this secret power that makes things so . . .

this SECRET POWER

by Greer Garson

■ One day, two years ago, I was playing a scene for Desire Me on a shelf of ragged rocks that reached out into the Pacific Ocean. The coast at Big Sur in California is wild and fierce with high, sheer cliffs and the surf comes in like a cavalry charge to shatter and retreat in roaring confusion out to sea.

I didn't see the huge comber until it was too late. The next thing I knew the sky blotted out with a roar and I rolled over the flinty edges toward the edge of our precarious picture stage.

I don't remember being frightened. But I certainly do remember hugging those sharp rocks with all my might even though they cut and bruised. Suddenly, painful as it was, that jagged ledge was the most precious thing in the universe. I was on the brink when strong arms caught and pulled me back.

After I got out of the hospital some days later, I celebrated my rescue with a little party at a cottage I have at Pebble Beach, nearby. Over steak, chips and beer, we talked of my narrow squeak. The Big Sur fisherman who had grabbed me in the nick of time to save my life was there, of course, and I remember saying to him: "How do you suppose I ever managed to stay on that ledge long enough to be rescued?"

"Miss Garson," he smiled, "I guess it was because you just wanted to like the devil!"

So many times in my life I've asked myself: Why does what happens to you happen? So many times I've had no better answer than that which the fisherman gave me. Anything that happens—especially a narrow escape from drowning—you can explain in thousands of ways. Providence, of course; luck, if you will; the intricate meshing of time and conditions. In my case, the width in feet and inches of the rocky ledge, the spent wave, a fisherman's strong arms.

But there's always something else, too: Wanting.

Every day I get letters from people anxious to achieve something—such as a Hollywood career. "Miss Garson," they ask me, "how can I become a star?" I can't answer their questions. I don't know the answers. If I did, I'd broadcast to the world the magic words. But all I know about getting anywhere you want is that there are three very essential things: wanting, trying—and getting the opportunity, the breaks. None works alone without the others. Wanting is basic. Trying is up to you. And the breaks—I do know this—they always happen.

One evening some years ago, I was having dinner (Continued on page 86)

and baby makes three

June and Dick rifting? Plainly preposterous.

"Congratulations!" said a voice on the phone, "you're a mother." "Dick," gasped June, "our baby's here!"—And the family had begun.

BY CYNTHIA MILLER

Home from Little Women set, June hangs out part of her baby's laundry.

Six months old, Allyson (she's there on the bathinette) has a tooth about ready to show and delights her folks with gurgles.

■ Outside the nursery door June stopped and squeezed her hands together until the knuckles turned white. She'd rushed home like a crazy girl the minute that dragging day at the studio ended. The phone on Lot 2 had rung between every take, it seemed, with Dick at the other end saying, exasperatingly, "Hello, Honey? She's not here yet."

"Keep calling! Don't forget! Tell me, tell me the minute it happens! . . ." And then, finally, Dick's excited burst: "She's here and she's wonderful! Hurry home, hurry!"

And now she was home and this was the moment, the time she'd see that baby at last. June Allyson felt suddenly all gone and tiny and little-girlish, weak and scared as a rabbit. Beside her, Dick grasped her waist with one hand and clamped a handkerchief over his face with the other. She'd always thought they'd do this together—bend over their adopted baby for the very first time. But now Dick had her cold—the one she'd been in bed with when the terrific news had come that the baby was on the way—and Dick didn't dare step a foot in the nursery where the seven-weeks-old baby lay. "I'll be out here, Honey. You go on in with Olie."

June turned to Miss Olsen, the nurse. "Do you mind?" she said. "I'd like to go in alone. I'm afraid of what I'll do. I don't know what I'll say, or how I'll act. I might cry . . ."

Olie smiled and waved June in to her greatest, most important entrance.

A half hour later, or maybe more, Miss Olsen had to knock discreetly. "Mrs. Powell—I think perhaps it's time the baby . . ."

"I'm coming," replied June—but it was another half hour before she backed out, away from that awesome bundle in the pink and blue basket, the amazing, incredible bud of life she'd tip-toed up to and stared at with her own little-girl mouth open and her head tilted sidewise, adoringly. Then she'd whispered, "Jo— (Continued on page 88)

by sara sothern taylor

This is such a wonderful time for Elizabeth,
standing on the brink of womanhood . . .
a time for pearls and perfumes and parties—and some very embarrassing moments!

she's a big girl now!

Controst the Elizabeth of Little Women with the somewhot less glomorous photogroph, next poge, token in '46.

Mrs. Taylor has okoyed Liz' beou, Lt. Glenn Dovis, who is with the Army in Korea. Liz waits for the doy he'll return.

This heart-warming portrait of Elizabeth Taylor on the threshold of maturity is made especially timely by the current reports of her "romance" with Lieutenant Glenn Davis, the ex-West Pointer of football fame. With good-humored understanding and delightful frankness, her mother—as only she could—here gives the answers to that and to other questions concerning Elizabeth.—THE EDITORS

■ One noon Elizabeth and I went to the studio commissary for lunch. Elizabeth was wearing pedal-pushers, because slacks or pedal-pushers are the easiest thing to climb into mornings, when you're in a hurry. But that day we were under the eyes of experts. Walter Plunkett, who made the lovely period costumes for Little Women, was sitting with Helen Rose, designer of those sensationally beautiful clothes in Date With Judy. As we passed their table, Mr. Plunkett waylaid me.

"Mrs. Taylor—I hope you'll understand what I'm about to say, and if you don't—just skip it. But Helen and I have decided that Elizabeth isn't the type for pedal-pushers."

"I wish you'd tell her that," I answered.

So they did.

"Oh, I can take a hint," said Elizabeth. "You mean I'm a little too plump." (Continued on page 74)

"Enchantment"

SEVEN-YEAR-OLD GIGI PERREAU AS SHE APPEARS IN ENCHANTMENT. HER AMAZING PERFORMANCE IS A MAJOR ASSET OF THIS FINE FILM.

■ If Samuel Goldwyn's Enchantment had no other claim to distinction, it would still be a notable motion picture because of the brief appearance, early in the story, of an actress named Gigi Perreau. Gigi Perreau is seven years old. Her performance is only one of the many charms of Enchantment, but it is safe to assume that what numerous movie-goers will recall most vividly in this unforgettable film is the performance of this astonishingly competent little actress.

Gigi Perreau appears in Enchantment for not much more than a dozen minutes. During this short period, something very curious happens on the screen. With no more than a few lines of dialogue to assist her, the young lady out-performs some extremely talented adult co-workers. Further, she establishes the mood of the picture—a mood so fragile that it could have been smashed by any lax moment of acting or direction.

Despite her tender years, Gigi is already a veteran, having appeared in 17 movies since her debut, at two, as Eve Curie as a child in Madame Curie. Enchantment may well make her a star.

Enchantment, made from Rumer Godden's novel, "Take Three Tenses," is the sort of love story that could have been hopelessly mawkish if handled without good taste. As it happens, Enchantment has been done superbly. This beautiful production shows everywhere loving care in its making. Irving Reis's direction is top-drawer. John Patrick's script is practically flawless. The photography is remarkable. And, besides that of the aforementioned Miss Perreau, there are excellent performances by all concerned—especially by David Niven, who here achieves new stature, and by Jayne Meadows, who turns in one of the most frighteningly vivid portrayals of a vindictive woman in screen history.

Enchantment, to sum up, is one of the most memorable motion pictures of recent years. On these pages, MODERN SCREEN tells the story in pictures.

1. Told largely in flashbacks, Enchantment opens as Sir Roland Dane reluctantly takes into his wartime London home his American grand-niece, Grizel Dane (Evelyn Keyes), an ambulance driver. She wins his affection.

2. She reminds him of Lark. . . . He recalls that night in his childhood when he, his brother Pelham and his sister Selina met Lark (Gigi Perreau), the orphan his widowed father had adopted. Only Selina resented her. . . .

3. Grizel is completely unaware of all that has happened in the old house. Driving her ambulance, she meets wounded Canadian RAF officer Pax Masterson (Farley Granger). They are immediately attracted to each other.

4. Soon Pox comes to the house. Grizel is surprised to find thot Pox knows for more obout the house thon she—his ount used to tell him all obout it when he was o smoll boy. Her nome, he soys, wos Lork. . . .

5. Yeors betore, as the children in the house grew up, the resentment of Selino for Lark deepened. By the time Lark wos a lovely yaung womon (Tereso Wright), Selino (Joyne Meodaws) was bitterly jeolous.

8. Two yeors loter, Rollo returned—and reolized he wos desperotely in love with Lork. Selling his horse to get funds, he visited o pown-broker (Melville Coaper) and chase o neckloce for Lork to weor to a boll.

9. At the ball, a gay and splendid offoir, Rallo wondered sodly to whom Lork's heart belanged os he watched her doncing with the Morchese—wha hod been urging her to morry him ond live in Itoly.

12. Lork, upset, went upstoirs, leoving Rolla and Selino hotly discussing love vs. career. Rollo, deciding ta resign, rushed off ta do so. Selina then went ta Lark ond lied to her that Rolla had left—for Afghanistan.

13. Lork, ot first refusing to believe this, woited oll night. Then, leoving o letter, she departed to occept the Morchese. Rollo wos crushed on his return. Pelham turned an Selino for the evil she hod done. . . .

6. When Roland—or Rollo, os he was called—came home on leove as a young officer, he was struck by the beouty into which Lark had grown. Selina, realizing this, kept them apart as much as she could.

7. After Rollo left to rejoin his regiment, Lark began to be paid great attention by Pelham (Philip Friend—left) and the Marchese del Loudi (Shepperd Strudwick). Lark clearly seemed to fovor the Marchese.

10. Eventually, late in the evening, Rollo succeeded in getting Lork alone—and learned his fear thot she hod already committed herself to another wos groundless. Together, they went back to the house.

11. Before the fire, Rollo and Lark declared their love. But Selino entered to announce that, to further Rollo's career, she had used influence to get him ordered immediately to Afghanistan for five years.

14. Now Selina and Pelham and Lark are dead. Grizel, declaring she prefers her independence, has sent Pax oway. But Rollo—now Sir Roland—urges her to go after him, not to repeat unhappiness.

15. So Grizel sets forth to find Pax as an air-raid begins. Finolly, as bombs crash about, they meet on a bridge. Sir Roland is killed—but Grizel and Pax will agoin fill the house with wormth ond love.

He got what he wanted

The neighbors marveled at the quiet, the dog loafed on the lawn, even the trees seemed to put off growing. And Larry Parks waited for word of failure—or success.

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

His studio battle over, Larry's ready to do Jolson Sings Again under his new five-year Columbia contract. Right: At home with wife Betty Garrett.

■ It was a quiet and not particularly happy home for more than a year. There was an attitude around it that the neighbors detected—an attitude of waiting for something to happen . . . that somehow didn't happen.

The young couple in it came and left quietly, greeting those they met the same way. The big red dog mooned around the yard, occasionally yowling as if he remembered when days were brighter around there and wished they would hurry and return.

There were bald patches in the front lawn and the grass in the back wouldn't catch. Even a small new fig tree wouldn't take hold. Even the dog appeared to get disgusted with it—one morning he dug it up altogether and there wasn't a word out of his master when he came to drag it away to the rubbish heap.

But then, suddenly something happened. A group of men sat down at a studio desk in the city not far away and put their signatures on a sheet of paper. That did it. You could tell the difference right away . . . in all things.

The holes in the lawn got an intensive going over and began disappearing forthwith. Whatever the defiant grass in the back needed to make it dig in with its roots was applied in generous manner . . . a spread of green became apparent. Inside, in the master bedroom, there was set up a new Hollywood bed—a fourth wedding anniversary present from the young wife and husband to themselves. In the clothes closets were hung three new suits for him and a whole armful of additional wardrobe for her. On her vanity was placed that bottle of perfume that she'd asked for last Christmas and . . . well, he'd almost fainted at the price last Christmas when things looked black as far ahead as he could see.

Yes, it was now a home busting out all over with good fortune.

But that's only a part of what's going on in and around this little Hollywood house which stands at the beginning of one of the Santa Monica Mountain canyons and is lived in by Larry Parks and his wife, Betty Garrett; by their Irish Setter, "Mister"; and by an average of two cats (there are actually three cats (Continued on page 80) he wants home life. "Some girls can handle careers, too," he says. "But not Gloria." Above, John with Julie, 8 (by first wife, Anne Shirley), and Kathy, 2.

she wants to resume the career that began so brilliantly with Two Girls and a Sailor (below). Remembering her mother's struggles, she fears insecurity.

And now it's goodbye again for Clo and John Payne, these two who belong together, these two who are ever battling the strange forces that keep them apart . . .

parting is such sorrow

by florabel muir

■ Often when a guy and a gal fall madly in love and are obsessed with an overwhelming urge to become Mr. and Mrs. with as little delay as possible, they are oblivious to fundamental differences that, like hidden mines, are waiting to explode along their matrimonial road.

This seems to be what happened to John Payne and Gloria De Haven.

Twice after explosions they managed to pick themselves up and go back into each other's arms swearing to love forever. But the third time it happened, the blow-up came with such devastating force that they haven't to date been able to get over the shock.

I have talked to both of them and each has tried desperately to rationalize the emotions that brought them together and then tore them apart. I always feel pity for a man and wife who are trying to explain why they can't go on living together when their reasons are made up of little intangible things they really can't understand themselves, much less explain to the world.

How can you explain a scornful glance, a tilting of the head, a stony silence? But these are the things that so often add up to a broken marriage.

"I think I shall always love and respect John," Gloria told me over a lunch table at the Strip's swank Players. "And I'm sure he is the best friend I'll ever have—if I needed advice or anything I'd call on him. But we just can't stay married on the terms that existed before. I tried it long enough to be convinced that it won't work."

As she talked, I couldn't help thinking that she is still just (Continued on page 94)

perpetual

■ Tony Martin and Cyd Charisse behave like a couple of honeymooners. They are.

Fact is, their marriage has been one long series of honeymoons. The first one occurred, naturally enough, right after their wedding last May. They spent it in Monterey, California, and it lasted all of three days, for Cyd was called back to M-G-M to do her "Blue Room" number in Words and Music. In June, they flew to London. There they combined business with honeymooning while Tony was making the biggest hit ever scored by a singer at the Palladium, renowned variety theater. (They kept the guy on the stage two hours the opening night. Before he left London, one hears, they tried to give him Australia, but Tony had no place to keep it.)

Next, the Martins popped over for a bit of honeymooning in Germany, where they entertained the troops. After that they went to Paris for ten days. Felt they needed a honeymoon.

Then back to the U. S. via the Queen Mary—for, said they to themselves, what better place is there than a luxury liner for having a honeymoon?

Well, there's Las Vegas, the stylish Nevada resort. So there they journeyed following Tony's carolling stint at Slapsie Maxie's, famed Los Angeles eatery and rumpus room.

During their three-week Las Vegas sojourn, they stayed at the gold-plated Flamingo Hotel, where Tony nightly exercised his baritone fascinations on the clientele. (For further details on this colorful chapter, see the pictures to your right.)

But all good things must come to an end and, far too soon, their honeymoon in Las Vegas was over. So bidding reluctant farewell to beautiful Las Vegas, Pearl of the West, they rode off into the sunset . . . Come to think of it, it must have been the sun*rise*, since they were headed for Detroit—and a glorious honeymoon. (Tony, you see, was singing at the Fox Theater there.)

By this time, people were saying they were in love. The suspicion was confirmed when, a short time later, they showed up in Boston on their honeymoon.

After breakfasting each morning in the Flomingo dining-room, Tony and Cyd spent lazy hours in the sun, saving the evenings for window shopping and wandering through colorful Las Vegas streets.

Although no one could call them newly-weds after seven months of marriage, Cyd and Tony still engoged in long hond-holding sessions. She has an importont role in Metro's Words and Music.

emotion

It's a lovely life
if you can manage it, and
Tony Martin and Cyd Charisse do—a life together in which fun goes on . . .
and on . . . in one honeymoon after another.

Cyd and Tony took advantage of Tony's three-week singing engagement at the Flamingo to keep up their tans. They combined another honeymoon with this job—as they did when entertaining overseas.

Tony, who can break 90 (if he's lucky), tried to give Cyd a few helpful hints. He helped her into the sand-trap—and here, with the niblick's aid, he's trying to help her out. She lost nine balls.

Cyd dragged Tony into a voice-recording booth and disrespectfully suggested he needed practice. He made a few discs to send to her folks after she consented to record a couple of duets with him.

Tony did two shows nightly and scheduled his more throbbing ballads for the midnight show. Most special requests came from the ladies—but the men also kept the willing Martin working overtime.

THE TEN GREAT MYTHS OF HOLLYWOOD

(Continued from page 29)

investment you can make at the start."

It costs money to have Adrian or Howard Greer or Irene dress you but I'll never admit it's extravagant—not for a Hollywood star. You'll never catch canny Claudette Colbert or foxy Joan Fontaine meeting the people without the newest, latest or most expensive. Or Joan or Connie Bennett, Greer Garson, Roz Russell, Marlene Dietrich or Paulette Goddard. Paulette has a gorgeous diamond necklace which must have earned back the thousands it cost by now in building up the Goddard legend. Everyone I know is always drooling to know just where Paulette will hang her elegant sparkler next—around her neck, over her shoulder, circling her waist or in her hair! But you'll never miss Paulette in a crowd.

Yep, we're professional show-offs out here, let's face it. But that's not reckless extravagance; it's good business. You've got to live up to your illusion if you're a star. That's what's expected. Extravagance? Hollywood can't afford it!

Now there's another favorite fable I'd like to see bite the dust. It's this: "All Hollywood parties are bacchanalian orgies, riotous carnivals of wine, women and song." Ha! Hollywood parties are something I know a thing or two about—I trot around to them practically every day. And I'll let you in on a letdown: In 20 years I've never been to one orgy.

parties with a purpose . . .

Today, any Hollywood party of any size is a party with a purpose. Either someone wants to entertain a visiting potentate and impress all his Hollywood pals, or something is being launched—like a picture, or a new star—something where the big party check can bring returns either in prestige, publicity or good old box-office silver. Guests go to see and be seen. Contacts make Hollywood hum, just as they do an airplane motor.

Now I ask you—what star in her right mind is going to get squiffed and fall on her pretty face when the eyes of Opportunity are upon her? I know a girl who, not so long ago, hocked everything she had to invest in a gorgeous Adrian evening gown for a very special party like that. She gambled on meeting a certain producer there, dazzling him and getting a contract—and her gamble paid off. That party was her Big Chance—was she going to dull her wits for it? Hardly.

Maria Montez couldn't have been more undiscovered and unknown when she first came to Hollywood, a little girl from Central America with screen ambitions. Maria dressed to kill and went to every party she was invited to. People saw the ravishing creature and buzzed, "Who is that lovely girl?" Maria knew producers would get ideas from those gasps. They did—and she won her Universal contract strictly by being seen around.

Even if you're set and settled in the Hollywood heavens, is it reasonable to think you're going to risk a career and all that goes with it for a brief Roman holiday? Big parties are spotlighted parades, complete with inquiring reporters and frank flash bulbs—and publicity can be bad, and bad publicity fatal. Waiters glide around seeing all and telling most of it. Old smoldering enmities lie waiting for a foot to slip. Uh-uh—you couldn't ask for more decorum than you'll find at a grand Hollywood affair. Well, what about the small ones, where the hair comes tumbling down—or does it?

I like small Hollywood parties best myself. You have a chance to talk, laugh and have some fun. But if I were a fly on the wall spying I'm afraid I'd fall off at last from dozing in disappointed boredom—that is, if I expected to see sensational goings-on.

The wild goings-on, nine times out of ten, boil down to this: After cocktails and dinner, the men disappear to play poker and the women sit around and make like magpies. Those two Hollywood Babbitt habits have fizzled more than one affair that was planned to be grand.

I've never seen Errol Flynn with his Irish so white hot as the night he threw a party in the patio around his big swimming pool. Errol was crazy about swimming then and he'd collected a host of professional swimmers and divers to put on a show for his guests. But when they came out to perform the guests wouldn't look. They were too busy jabbering and dishing the dirt among themselves. I admired Errol that night more than I ever had before or since, because he turned his back to his rude guests and stuck with his snubbed entertainers. But he was icy with anger and he never gave another party.

Embarrassments, guests out of line, a tiddly guy or girl, flirtations and fights—sure they take place at Hollywood parties, and at parties all over the land. Doesn't that happen in Iuka, Illinois, too?

If you're looking for champagne baths and scantied houris in my home town, you'll have to look closer than I can and there's nothing wrong with my eyes. If you hear of a good Hollywood orgy going on, will you let me know? I'd like to see one myself.

Part of that lingering, old-fashioned "Horrible Hollywood" pipe dream brings up another cluster of cockeyed convictions that get a boost with banner headlines ever so often. First—that stars are jaded and dissipated; they drink too much, play around too much, puff "reefers" like cookstoves and so sensationally forth.

Hollywood has always been a set-up for scandal. I could write a book (and maybe I will) about the stream of shocking headlines datelined "Hollywood," since the first studio opened its doors. Recently the Robert Mitchum marijuana incident has fanned the flames anew and there are "I told you so's" in all the smug sections of the world. The purple spectrum of the spotlight tints the whole town, unfairly.

you'll go overboard for esther williams on the february cover of modern screen
on sale
january 7

Sure, we have some drunks, some playboys, some irresponsible boys and girls here—but not for long. Fact is, they've got a better chance to last out a boozy existence anywhere but Hollywood. It costs too much here. The cardinal sin of Hollywood is holding up production, and that's what you do sooner or later if you're really nursing a bottle. Faces and figures easily fade and puff out of shape.

The myth-buster is this: Hollywood is not a hard-drinking community. Actors shun drinks during the day like poison; they get sleepy. And they seldom drink after dinner for the dread fear of a hangover on the long set day. Hostesses consider soft drinks, tea and coffee as essential hospitality items instead of liquor—if they're having successful, busy movie-makers in.

Now comes up the subject of romance and love life—and when were they ever Hollywood monopolies? But anyway, let's plant a few ghosts. Number one: Studios dictate the love lives of their stars.

Boy, how they wish they could! Did they order Greer Garson to marry Richard Ney or Esther Williams to be Ben Gage's loving wife? Nope, they frowned on those, as did Darryl Zanuck, quite fiercely, when his fresh girl star, Jeanne Crain, defied him and mama, too, to team up with her true love, Paul Brinkman. Warners didn't burst with pleased pride when their prestige star, Bette Davis, wed struggling painter William Grant Sherry, nor was Harry Cohn at Columbia jumping with joy to see the Mad Genius, Orson Welles, romp off with his meal ticket, Rita. But love laughs at locksmiths—and iron clad picture contracts too. Not that the studios don't try.

judy's double . . .

I remember when Judy Garland was going with Dave Rose, her first husband, head over heels in love and planning to marry him. M-G-M didn't approve of that, either. (It's hard for any studio to watch a man step in and wean away an important young star. She has someone else to listen to then, besides her bosses.) Well, one night my telephone rang and it was a publicity man from Metro. He had some hot news for me: Judy Garland was at such and such a place that night dining and dancing with So-and-So—and it wasn't Dave Rose.

"Interesting," I said, "if true."

"But it is true. They're there."

"Then Judy must be twins," I sighed, "because she's sitting right here at my dinner table holding hands with a guy named Dave Rose."

Now, there's no myth whatever to the fact that studios plant publicity romances. You bet they do—always have and always will. And for a sound reason. I don't care how handsome a boy or how beautiful a girl starlet is, the photographers will pass them so fast they'll get pneumonia from the breeze unless the name means something. That is, unless a popular star is hooked alongside. Nobody was too excited about skater Sonja Henie, in a screen-star way, until she and Ty Power went stepping out to the night spots. It was a deliberate studio-inspired romance, and it helped launch a Number One box-office champion. M-G-M helped prove Van Johnson's appeal for the gals by framing his dates for a long time. Recently Peter Lawford had the time of his young life beauing famous stars here and there—and it didn't hurt his romantic appeal either.

You don't have to look farther than the nearest column (maybe my own) to see hand-holding for headlines. It's an old Hollywood custom and it works.

I'm as cynical as the next reporter, believe me, but since Hollywood's my beat, I happen to know that a lot of the spicy rules of the game in this particular dog-fight for fame aren't rules—they're exceptions. Take the age-old myth that a girl has to be a producer's sweetie if she wants to get anywhere. I ran into that one 'way back when I was on Broadway; it's a hoary old chestnut they tag on all theatrical and movie people.

I know a talented producer who fell madly in love with and married a young dancer. He had a rush of belated romance to his usually intelligent head; through his rose-colored love he saw great ability in her. He starred her in a picture, and he usually turned out nothing but distinguished films. The only flop worse than this one was the flop of his lady love: she was awful. They're still married, but she's not in pictures.

I don't mean to imply that having a producer for a boy friend is the kiss of death for a star. Hardly. I just mean that it has nothing to do with solid success on the screen. Lizabeth Scott got her first break through Producer Hal Wallis, but Lizabeth had good looks that would have got her there anyway, and she's loaded with ambition and drive. Jennifer Jones is about to marry her boss, David Selznick, but he didn't make her a star—Darryl Zanuck did. Do you think Joan Bennett needed career insurance when she married Walter Wanger, or Joan Fontaine when she wed Bill Dozier, her producer-spouse? Don't be absurd. Do you think Roz Russell was hunting more and better picture parts by marrying Fred Brisson, her manager? Don't be silly.

You win acting fame and fortune in Hollywood because you have the spark, the ambition, the ability—and since the town began, producers have helped unearth that, develop it, exploit it—that's their business. You don't ever get to the top or stick there by making goo-goo eyes.

another myth exploded . . .

A first mythical cousin of that florid Hollywood fiction is that stars must "play politics." Well—who doesn't play politics? You play politics if you work in the dime store, belong to the Parent-Teachers Association or the Ladies' Bridge Club. Playing politics is just another phrase for spreading your personality around, making friends, getting somewhere with people like yourself. I play politics every day; so, I'll bet, do you. The Hollywood implication is that stars have to court favors and knuckle under, wallow feverishly in a hotbed of intrigue to keep on the screen. Bosh!

The answer to that bogey is easy: you don't if you're big enough. Ingrid Bergman has had nothing but the best parts, best directors, best cameramen, best everything since she first set foot in Hollywood. She wouldn't know how to campaign if she had to. Jean Arthur has always done as she pleased, even to staying off the screen and going to college smack in the middle of her career. She isn't glamorous, she isn't social, in fact, she's down right anti at times. I had to fight my way through frightened Paramount press agents to reach her dressing room and interview her when she made A Foreign Affair. People give Jean a wide berth and vice versa. Yet every studio in town is hunting a script for her after that picture. Why? She's good.

Betty Grable doesn't toss and turn worrying about her popularity graph in the directors' room at Twentieth-Fox these days because she's the gal who pays the dividends. But Betty trotted obediently to the Paramount gallery for several straight years and did nothing but what they told her; to wit, strip to a one-piece bathing suit and pose for leg art. If you're just starting out, you have to conform to the pattern. Every youngster who has come up unknown through the Hollywood mill has done what the rest did, what they were told to do: fashions, leg art, ad endorsements, publicity dates, "queens" of this and that corny festival and what not. It's the ordeal of Hollywood's knighthood.

I talked to an anxious girl on her 18th birthday once a few years ago. I met her at the late Evalyn Walsh McLean's house. Sir Charles Mendl introduced us saying, "Hedda, this young lady's going to be a screen star."

The girl gave me a level look, "What do you think?" she said.

"I think 'Yes'—if you can act," I said. She said she could handle that, she was sure, but what worried her was all the Hollywood monkey-business she'd heard about. "I'm not going to pose in any bathing suit," she told me. "I'm not going to do a lot of things like that. I'm kind of stubborn." I noted the firm lower lip.

"Work hard and tend to your knitting," was the best brief advice I could give her.

Well, she still hasn't posed in a bathing suit and she's still around and doing very nicely. Her name's Lauren Bacall.

It's so easy to make out the producers, the bosses of Hollywood, heavies—because stars are the heros in the limelight and there's a natural tug-of-war between them. But I'm pretty bored myself with the persistent picture of all producers as illiterate dumbells with I.Q.'s of minus zero.

Fact is, the big bosses of the movies today are the people who made Hollywood what it is, made jobs for the stars, built a mammoth industry from scratch and took a big gamble that bankers wouldn't take. In my book they deserve their winnings. Look at the Warner brothers. It took real vision—and guts—to pioneer the talking picture and revolutionize the industry that they had been leaders in building up from scratch. And again, the Warners were far ahead of their time when, two years before Hitler plunged the world into war, they made Confessions of a Nazi Spy. That, too, was an example of clear-eyed intelligence and—in view of the then-still-asleep state of the Union—courage.

It used to be a popular pastime to guffaw at Sam Goldwyn's twisted figures of speech (no one enjoys seeing them printed more than Sam himself) but Sam has fought stubbornly for the highest type of pictures since he first stacked his shrewd judgment against long odds. He makes only one picture a year, but if it doesn't win an Academy Award, it's generally a candidate. And if it's not right the first time, he'll toss it all in the cutting can and start over and over until it is right. Halfway through The Bishop's Wife, Sam wasn't satisfied. He changed writers and directors and started over. It cost him $900,000 but he made himself a picture. That, say I, is being dumb like a fox.

Is it a moronic sign when Louis B. Mayer makes the highest salary of any one in the high-salaried U.S.A. for heaven knows how many years? Okay, so it's only money—but money is a vast power and, by and large, Hollywood's producers have no apologies to make about how they've used it. Louis B. is a philanthropist and prime mover in many charities and civic campaigns. So are the Warners, each of whom put away a $5,000,000 trust fund when they struck it rich with talking pictures.

Far from being dumb and provincial, Jack Warner, Darryl Zanuck, Louis B. Mayer, Sam Goldwyn, Henry Ginsberg, Howard Hughes and dozens more like them are cosmopolites who get around and know a darned sight more than the box-office returns on their movies. Do you think Archbishop Spellman, General Mark Clark and General Hap Arnold, who, like many other prominent world figures, are close friends of Louis B. Mayer, Darryl Zanuck and Jack Warner respectively, would waste their time on nitwits? Take it from me, the dumb, bumbling Hollywood producer is an extinct vaudeville character. Forget him.

There are a couple more spooks I'd like to banish with a quick uppercut in passing. One, that all kid stars are spoiled brats and precocious pains in the neck. This notion is almost too silly to deny.

What any kid is you can trace right to his parents, anywhere. For example, the greatest child star of all, Shirley Temple,

(Continued on page 73)

YOUR BUDGET AND YOU START THE NEW YEAR RIGHT!

Make a New Year's vow to buy these 4-inch high High-Heelers. For style and quality they're priced right! Shoes and Bag Available in RED · GREEN · BROWN Also Black or Brown Suede Finish Sizes 3 to 10, B width, 6 to 9, AA width

Matching Handbag $1.99 PLUS TAX

Mary Jane

Mary Jane stores in principal cities

ORDER BY MAIL

MARY JANE SHOES, 119 Beach St., Boston, Mass., Dept. MSC-1

Please send me.....prs. of High Notes at $3.99 pr.

Style Name	Color & Material (1st choice)	Color & Material (2nd choice)	Size	Width
A. ARIEL
B. VARGA

Please send me.....matching bags at $1.99 plus tax ($2.39 total)
Color.....

Name.....
Address.....
City.....Zone.....State.....
When ordering C.O.D. customer agrees to pay all charges.

☐ Check
☐ Money Order
☐ C.O.D.

Send check or money order and we'll pay postage

fashion resolutions for 1949

CONNIE BARTEL, FASHION EDITOR

■ Who can tear the last crumbled page off the calendar, without making vows for the crisp new one coming up? Certainly not MODERN SCREEN's Fashion Department! Here we are chock-full of resolutions for the new year—and most of them are about you!

Our chief resolve is to stretch your fashion dollar farther than ever. As you know, we've always been a champion of high style at low prices. But now, with the high-cost-of-living taking bigger and bigger bites out of your budget for just plain necessities, how are you going to afford the pretties that every girl needs for her morale? Good question! For 1949, we resolve to help you find the answer.

So we begin the new year with a group of winter cottons with tremendous appeal and tiny pricetags. Did you know winter cottons are absolutely it in the fashion world? They are. Of course, everyone has always doted on cottons for summer. Then there is the annual mid-winter fuss about cottons for the swanky resorts. On top of that, more and more girls have got into the habit of snapping up cottons in winter, and hoarding them for vacations much later.

Now the fashion designers have suddenly decided to relax and enjoy it. Since everyone is so crazy about cottons so much of the time, they've decided to design them for all year round. The new winter versions are intended to be worn under your coat—and of course they're always cute and fresh at home. We've picked five for you, beginning on page 66.

jane greer gets set for auld lang syne

■ Jane Greer, who is currently starring in RKO's Station West, swishes around putting the finishing touches on her New Year's Eve decorations—wearing a dreamboat of a housecoat.

It's yellow printed cotton with a ruffled yoke edged in black, a deep hem flounce, and the world's tiniest bustle in back (you can see back view on page 71). And it zips to fit.

It's the kind of glamorous get-up you'd love to have unexpected guests catch you in—and the kind of Christmas gift your best friend would love to get!

Comes also in blue or red. Sizes 12-20. By Lazy Day, $5.95.

For where to buy see page 71.

modern screen fashions movie date

Winter cottons are the big news—cottons to wear under your coat! The one leaving New York's swanky Park Avenue Theater is one-piece with checked top, black skirt, gold buttons and belt. You can also have it in red. Sizes 9-15. By Monte Carlo Fashions. $2.98. For where to buy see page 71

cottons

Waiting for tickets to Laurence Olivier's Hamlet, a one-piece winter cotton with weskit front and ruffled hem. In Dan River's Starspun plaid. Red and grey or blue and brown. Sizes 9-15. By Jean Leslie. $5.95. For where to buy see page 71

date at home cottons above: A fellow appreciates being invited to sit around your living room once in a while—especially when you look your prettiest in a bright at-home frock! This button-to-the-hem sweetheart is Sanforized cotton in silky tones of green, grey, navy or brown with contrasting trim. Sizes 14-20; also 40-42. By Rose Lee Frocks. $3.98.

right: Never underestimate the power of the sweet and feminine look—it works! He's obviously taken with this crisp striped cotton with gay red border, curved neckline and cap sleeves. And see how date-ish it looks with jewelry! Red, blue or green border. The stripes are multicolored. Sizes 9-15. By Junior Clique. $6.98.

For where to buy, see page 71

Sophisticated cotton

How to look like a fashion model: make sure your shoulders are round and sloping—and that your collar stands high to frame your pearls! The dress is grey Sanforized chambray with stripes in your choice of green, yellow, raspberry or cocoa. Sizes 12-20. By Kay Whitney. About $8.95.

For where to buy, see page 71.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices on merchandise may vary throughout country)

Back view of housecoat worn by Jane Greer (page 65)

Printed housecoat with deep hem flounce worn by Jane Greer (page 65)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, 420 Fulton St., Downstairs

Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus & Co., High & Town Sts., Front St. Level.

Checked top one-piece dress with black skirt (page 66)

New York, N. Y.—Hearn's, 5th Ave. & 14th St., 2nd Fl.

Plaid dress with ruffled hem (page 67)

Columbus, Ohio—F. & R. Lazarus & Co., High & Town Sts., Front St. Level

Minneapolis, Minn.—L. S. Donaldson Co., 601 Nicollet Ave., Downstairs

Button-to-the-hem dress with contrast trim (page 68)

Hartford, Conn.—G. Fox & Co., 960 Main St.

New York, N. Y.—Macy's, Herald Square, 2nd Fl.

Striped dress with curved neckline, cap sleeves (page 69)

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. N. Adam Co., 383 Main St.

New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 W. 42nd St., 3rd Fl.

Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop, 10th & G Sts., 2nd Fl., N. Bldg.

Grey striped chambray dress with high standing collar, sloping shoulders (page 70)

Boston, Mass.—Filene's, Washington St., 6th Fl.

Dallas, Tex.—Green's, 1616 Elm St., 7th Fl.

Des Moines, Ia.—Younkers, 701 Walnut St., 1st Fl.

St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Locust, Olive & 6th Sts., 5th Fl.

HOW TO ORDER MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

1. Buy in person from stores listed.
2. Order by mail from stores listed.
3. Write Connie Bartel, MODERN SCREEN, Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y., for store in your vicinity.

CHARMING SCREEN STAR, JOAN BENNETT, SAYS...

"For dream hands, cream your hands"

Try her method for just 3 days...a 12-second hand massage with non-sticky, non-greasy morning . . . night . . . whenever hands are rough or chapped.

Pacquins Hand Cream

TRY IT yourself . . . the hand beauty secret of so many Hollywood stars. Massage your hands with snowy, fragrant Pacquins for just 12 seconds . . . night . . . morning . . . whenever skin needs softening. You'll see why Pacquins is the largest-selling hand cream in the world!

If household tasks roughen your hands, smooth them, soothe them with Pacquins. For truly dream hands, do as Joan Bennett does . . . cream, cream, CREAM them regularly—with Pacquins!

ELIZABETH WILKINSON, R. N., says: "We nurses scrub our hands 30 to 40 times a day. Pacquins was made for us. I use it faithfully. Pacquins was originally formulated for nurses and doctors."

Also: For extra dry Skin, Red Label Pacquins contains lanolin

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins are: GERTRUDE LAWRENCE • LYNN FONTANNE • VERA ZORINA GLADYS SWARTHOUT • RISË STEVENS

ON SALE AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA

fur* skirt fur* stole

with no neckline to speak of

* Fake broadtail—star in the big fashion fuss over pretend furs. The skirt, $19.95. The stole, $5,95. The wool jersey blouse, in all colors and pastels, $10.95. By Ciro.
At Bloomingdale's, New York—Second Floor.

a modern screen fashion

THE TEN GREAT MYTHS OF HOLLYWOOD

(Continued from page 63)

had the guidance of parents with good taste, good sense and a determination not to let Shirley's fame spoil her precious child years. Shirley was always, and still is, a joy to be around. Her kiddie rival, Jane Withers, had the same normal, loving care. Both have grown into fine young women, happily married not for their glamor or riches but for their love. Both are new mothers of darling baby girls. And look at Elizabeth Taylor and Peggy Ann Garner and Lois Butler and Roddy McDowall and Margaret O'Brien. All of them nice, balanced youngsters. And there are dozens more.

Another spook I'd like to lay is the old Hollywood divorce indictment: that all stars shed their husbands and wives with the seasons. Well, for every divorce-happy star you can find a Bob Hope, a Bing Crosby, or a Jeanette MacDonald who's never told it to the judge. As with so many other things in Hollywood, divorces just make more noise when they happen out here.

one more murder . . .

I've got one last made-in-Hollywood myth to murder—one nourished, oddly enough, by my star friends who no more mean what they say than the man in the moon. That is: all Hollywood stars hate Hollywood and pine to get the heck out—like back to the Broadway boards. Nuts!

Some years ago I made a bet with a dark young man burning with zeal for the legitimate drama. He'd just come to Hollywood and John Garfield told me, "In six months I'm going back and do a play."

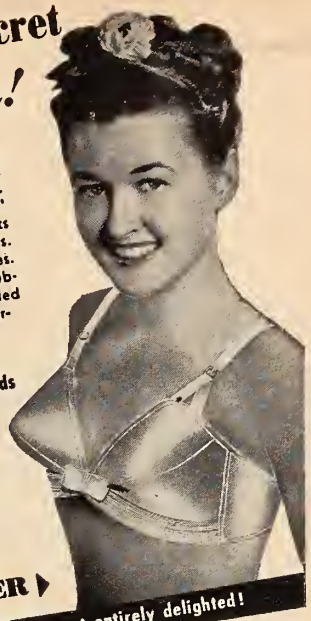
"Want to bet?" I challenged. He said yes, so we shook. I won.

John didn't go back for more than six years, he didn't depart our shores until he was well padded with Hollywood money, security and fame. I've heard Joan Crawford, Bette Davis, Doug Fairbanks, Bob Montgomery and Ray Milland all sigh for "the real thing"—but a sigh is just a sigh.

The simple truth is that since the world began there has never been such a paradise for actors as Hollywood, and the smart ones know it.

Let's admit it—the living's easy in Hollywood, with a way of life a stage actor never dares dream about—Palm Springs, Carmel, Sun Valley, leisure between pictures for recreation and the outdoors—most of all a real home.

The first Lady of the Theater, Ethel Barrymore, moved out to Hollywood a while back. I don't know how many years of top trouping Ethel has behind her but plenty—years of trunk living, train catching, making the show go on in the glorious but grinding tradition.

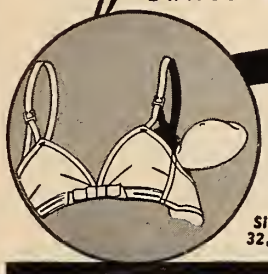


I saw her not long ago and she said she was here in Hollywood this time for keeps. "I never knew what life offered an actor out here before," she marvelled. "I have my home, my family, my friends, my leisure and still my work . . ." The great Barrymore on her quick trips before never really believed such a thing was possible. But Hollywood makes it so.

Yes, there are plenty of mighty myths about this storied town called Hollywood. But when you look sharp they pop, go "Pouf!" and drift away in an unsubstantial mist. What you see, I'm afraid, when all the hip-hooray and ballyhoo is gone, is a town not too dazzlingly different from your own.

THE END

Discover this secret of Loveliness!



• For romance, or wherever fashion gathers, the perfect bust-line is first to attract the spotlight of admiration. It can be YOU! With "Disguise" your bust contour instantly presents the very peak of feminine loveliness. Correctly styled . . . perfect lines. Featherweight, removable foam rubber pads are ingeniously concealed to create the illusion of figure perfection. Added features are:

• Removable Foam Rubber Pads
• Deep-Plunge Neckline
• New Front Clasp
• 2-Way Forked Strap
• Elastic Front and Back
• Rubber Pads Can't Slip

"DISGUISE" by Pat. #2421561
Exquisite Form BRASSIERES

$3.00 complete AFTER

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE . . . Money back if not entirely delighted!

Luxurious SATIN in White, Black and Tea-rose

Sizes: 32, 33, 34, 35, 36

HEDY OF HOLLYWOOD
6253 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

HEDY OF HOLLYWOOD Dept. 1543
6253 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

Please send me_____"DISGUISE" BRAS at $3.00 each.
BUST SIZE: 32, 33, 34, 35, 36...(Draw circle around bust size)
COLORS: Tea-rose ☐ White ☐ Black ☐...(Mark 1st and 2nd color choice)

Name_____ (Please Print Plainly)
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State____

SAVE MONEY and TIME by sending payment with your order. We pay postage. Or, if you prefer WE MAIL C.O.D.

Yes, you. An important picture.

Part of your Christmas Seal money buys X-ray units for chest "pictures" . . . to detect tuberculosis so that it can be checked.

Since 1904, the whole program has helped cut the TB death rate by eighty per cent. Yet tuberculosis still kills more people between 15 and 44 than any other disease.

So please, send in your contribution today to your Tuberculosis Association.

Buy Christmas Seals

Because of the importance of the above message, this space has been contributed by Dell Publishing Co.

NEW REDUCING AID for Slenderizing at Home

This new reducing aid is a roller designed to fit your hand. When used in conjunction with salon treatments or your regular reducing program, it helps you to work off not-so-slim hips, thighs, ankles and arms—right in your own home. Use as often as you wish on the very spots where you want to eliminate bulges and fat. This roller works on the same principle as the roller machinery used in many beauty salons. When rolled gently, it soothes tired, tense muscles, providing an effective body massage.

Mailed anywhere—postpaid, $5.00. No. C.O.D.'s please.

THE SLENDAROL COMPANY
BOX B8, STATION A • FLUSHING, N. Y.

SHE'S A BIG GIRL NOW

(Continued from page 51)

"Well, you do have to be pretty streamlined—"

"Mr. Plunkett, don't you know that ladies have hips?"

"Miss Taylor, don't you know that ladies with hips don't wear pedal-pushers?"

She thought that one over, and laughed. "You've just done me the most wonderful favor, Mr. Plunkett. Now Mommy'll have to buy me an entirely new wardrobe."

Yes, Elizabeth's a big girl now—16-going-on-17—and oh, what a difference one year can make! At 15, she was dazzled by the glory of lipstick, so that I had to go tagging her with a tissue: "Blot it down a little, Elizabeth." Suddenly, of her own sweet will, the rainbow reds vanished. Now it's pale pink lipstick and nail polish to match the ribbon round her hair. At 15, she craved black formals and off-the-shoulder blouses. Which didn't bother me especially. People would say: "Don't let Elizabeth change." Then they'd see her in one of these little Mexican numbers, and sigh: "There she goes."

not so different . . .

Being little different from any other high-school girl in any other town, she was going nowhere except through the same phase. As she pointed out accurately enough: "Everyone was wearing them long before I was allowed to." Now she doesn't even like them any more. Her taste has grown so much more conservative this past year, that I now let her choose her own clothes. Oh, of course I go along, because she likes to have me. It's fun. But she invariably picks the kind of thing I'd pick for her myself. She's passed through the spectacular period, and likes simple clothes. The cry used to be: "I want to look older." At 17, she's content to look her age.

I'm not saying she doesn't have her lapses—who of us ever grew up overnight? But the lapses don't really bother me either. If you want the truth, I find them rather consoling, since they're all that's left of the little Elizabeth.

Take Elizabeth and jewelry. She loves to bedeck herself in pearls and earrings. Or wait—with my fingers crossed, I'll change that to the past tense. I think Elizabeth's been cured the hard way. In any case, it was the hard way for me. Never will I forget that night at the Players Club. Once a year they have Ladies' Night. As my husband's a member we'd taken a table for 12, and told Elizabeth and her brother Howard they could each invite a date. My mistake was in leaving home before she was dressed, but as hostess I had to be early.

She was planning to wear what she calls her Young Bess dress—that's the part of all parts she wants to play, and the dress reminded her of the period—gray, with gold rope 'round the neck, and a little bustle. It had come home from the cleaners with the bustle awry, and I left Elizabeth frantically trying to fix it, and her hair not done yet.

Our guests arrived. Howard arrived with his date. We waited and waited and waited, till finally someone said: "There's Elizabeth!" I looked up—and gasped. There was Elizabeth indeed! Hair piled on top of her head, plus two false braids that she'd worn in a picture, and false bangs that all but grazed her brows. Not only that. Ropes of pearls twined through the braids, more ropes dangling from her neck, and earrings that dripped pearls. Somewhere in all this welter, a couple of orchids. Her date, Tommy Breen, had brought her two. She was wearing both.

First I wanted to cry, then laugh, then I felt sick all over lest somebody else should laugh and hurt her, which I couldn't have borne—she was obviously feeling so gracious and elegant—so unconscious of anything wrong. Then—Mack Sennett couldn't have timed it better—came the crowning touch. As she walked up to greet our guests, one side of her bustle slowly deflated. I'll never stop being grateful to those people. They must have been suffocating with laughter—I was myself, along with other emotions—yet there wasn't a sign from anybody, bless them, that Elizabeth didn't look the way she felt.

Next day I tackled it. "Honey, do you know you were very overdressed last night?"

She couldn't have been more astonished. "D'you really think so?"

"Well, stop and remember all the things you had on. Just the gold rope on your dress and plain button earrings and maybe one orchid would have been lovely. But all that false hair and those ropes of pearls! It wasn't very good taste."

We talked it over, and she saw my point. The pearls are less in evidence than they were, and I don't mind telling the story now, because she tells it herself and laughs about it. You can always talk things over with Elizabeth. She'll never go sulky or rebellious on you. Oh, she'll protest at times and try to get round you—I wouldn't give two cents for the girl who didn't—but when you explain, she listens. And when mother and daughter can discuss things reasonably, it's a wonderful protection.

Only I think you have to build for such a relationship—it doesn't happen by chance. My mother and I were very close, and I made up my mind, if I had a little girl of my own, that I'd try to be just as close to her—not a prying closeness but an understanding one. As a child, for example, Elizabeth adored pets and wanted a lot of them all over the house. From one viewpoint, they might have been considered a nuisance. Instead of taking that view, I enjoyed the pets with her. It's a question of putting yourself in their shoes. Make a great gulf, and naturally they're going to be on the other side.

Not that I don't believe in discipline. There's got to be a certain amount of it in the early days, so they'll know you won't take any back-talk. Apart from that, I've always shown my children the same courtesy I expect from them. I've never grabbed Elizabeth, nor corrected her in front of others. I've tried never to harm her dignity as an individual. If anyone comes to me with a complaint, I don't prejudge. "I've heard so-and-so's side of the story, Elizabeth, now give me yours"—and I do my best to be fair to both sides.

I don't mean to set myself up as a child psychologist—only to indicate that I feel my daughter trusts me. What pleases me beyond measure is that she tells me all the things a lot of girls tell their girl friends—about boys and dates and what happened at the party down to the smallest detail. She loves to gab, and of course I love to listen. I do not sit up for her. A vision of Mother-watching-the-clock never helped a girl's evening. But she comes in and wakes me, because tomorrow's not soon enough to get that load of excitement off her chest.

When she's working, she goes out only on Saturday night. Even when she's not, I don't like her to be out late two or three nights running. That you have to govern for her health's sake. But I'm not inflexible. When Glenn Davis was in town, Elizabeth met him through Doris and Hubie Kerns, who work at M-G-M. He spent a day with us down at Malibu. One afternoon came this phone call. Could Elizabeth attend the exhibition game as Glenn's guest? Well, she was working next day, but I couldn't say no, I couldn't do that to Elizabeth. She went with the Kerns and sat in Glenn's box, and when she got home that night, her eyes were like stars.

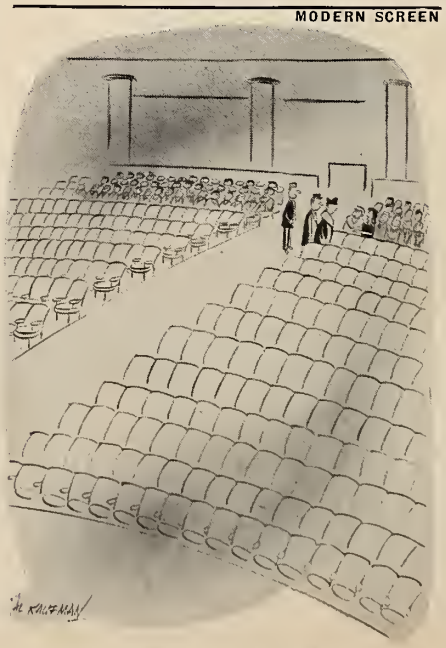
so proud . . .

I'd told her to be in by 12:30, and it was one o'clock, but there again I'm willing to listen to reason. It seemed that practically every time Glenn walked out on the field, he made a touchdown, and after the game people went crazy, crowding around him, so that he couldn't get within 10 feet of Elizabeth.

"I felt so proud," she said softly. "You know what I wanted to do? I wanted to shout, 'I'm with Davis, I'm with Davis!' "

When he finally did get through and took her arm, nobody recognized Elizabeth. But one of the boys yelled, "When you pick a girl, Glenn, you pick a beaut!"

There's a night Elizabeth will remember all her life. In my book, it was worth the loss of a few hours' sleep.



I know that Elizabeth likes Glenn more than any boy she has ever known, and as a matter of fact, we all do. We could not possibly like or approve him more. She is wearing his gold football, and is so proud of it that she has not taken it off since Glenn fastened it around her neck on a little gold chain just before he left for Korea.

The other day Elizabeth was showing it to a columnist on the set, and he said, "When I was your age it was considered really serious when a girl wore a boy's football!" "It was?" said Elizabeth, with a twinkle in her eye. "Well, times haven't changed much, have they?"

Now Elizabeth won't make dates with any boys until she has told them about Glenn and the football. I have never seen her so happy—really happy—and she is living for the day when he will return from his assignment with the Army.

Elizabeth has always kept her friends—she still goes out with the kids she knew at school—likes the feeling of old days and

(Continued on page 76)

"He's o former bus driver, keeps putting everybody in the reor."

new faces

BETTY GARRETT is Larry Parks' better half but she got to be famous before anyone ever heard of him. A legitimate stage actress, she made her debut with Orson Welles' Mercury Theater. She was born in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1917 and met Larry at the Actors Lab. in Hollywood. They were married in 1944 and both like to collect all kinds of real and fake cats. You'll see her in Take Me Out to the Ballgame.

DONALD BUKA heard that Lunt and Fontanne were going to appear in Pittsburgh and sent them a note asking if he could come and read for them. Not only did they like him, but he was immediately offered a job. Later on, Donald made his screen debut with Bette Davis in Watch on the Rhine and has been active in radio, too. Cleveland-born (in 1921), Donald is 5' 10" and has brown hair and eyes. Besides Street With No Name. he's in Vendetta. He's a bachelor.

RON RANDELL whom you saw in The Mating of Millie, hails from Sydney, Australia. He decided on an acting career early in his youth, when he noticed miners tossing pouches of gold at some actors in a stage show. He made his legitimate stage debut in 1938. Later, Ron appeared in My Sister Eileen and Voice of the Turtle. He's now under contract to Columbia. Ron has brown hair and eyes, weighs 165 pounds, stands 5 feet 10. He is unmarried.

JOANNE DRU'S theatrical career actually started when she was three years old! Joanne used to entertain the townfolk of Logan, West Virginia, from the ticket booth of the local theater while her parents enjoyed the show. Now, at 25, Joanne is married to Dick Haymes and is the mother of three children, Skipper, 7; Pidgeon, 4, and baby Barbara, or "Nugget." Although Joanne had been in retirement since her marriage to Dick she has been very actively studying dramatics. In July of 1945 Howard Hawks recognized a coming star and put her under contract. After intensive training Hawks loaned her to Bing Crosby for Abie's Irish Rose. You'll see her in United Artists' Red River.

Before your daughter marries... should you tell her These Intimate Physical Facts?

BY ALL MEANS! And here is scientific up-to-date information You Can Trust—

The time to speak frankly to your daughter is before she marries. She should be fully informed on how important vaginal douching two or three times a week often is to feminine cleanliness, her health, marriage happiness, to combat odor, and always after menstrual periods.

And she should be made to realize that no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested for the douche is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues as modern ZONITE!

Warns Girls Against Weak or Dangerous Products

How unfortunate is the young woman who, through ignorant advice of friends, uses such 'kitchen makeshifts' as vinegar, salt or soda. These are NOT germicides in the douche! They never can give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

Won't you please realize how very important it is to use a germicide definitely intended for vaginal douching—one powerfully germicidal yet one safe to tissues as ZONITE has proved to be for years.

ZONITE positively contains no phenol, no bichloride of mercury, no harsh acids—overstrong solutions of which may damage tissues and in time even hinder functional activity of the mucous glands. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury. It's positively non-poisonous, non-irritating.

Truly A Modern Miracle!

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Leaves you feeling so sweet and clean. Helps guard against infection. ZONITE kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure amazing ZONITE DOES KILL every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Buy ZONITE at any drugstore!

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published—mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MR-19, 370 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Continued from page 74)
old companionships. Once she met a new boy she liked, and I suggested she ask him to one of our Malibu parties.

"No, I'd rather invite someone I know. It's so much easier to be with people you know well."

One rule remains the same. She doesn't go out with boys unless we know them. We ask her new friends to dinner, and they seem to enjoy the feeling of being part of the family. If the boys can't get Elizabeth on the phone, they'll tell me what they want to ask her. By that time you're all friends, and everything's on a good basis. The advantages seem to me obvious. To mention just one, you can always explain to the boys that Elizabeth has to be in by a certain hour. If they understand—and they do, when you're friends—they'll accept the responsibility, which saves Elizabeth the embarrassment of asking every few minutes like a little girl: "What time is it? I have to go home."

Elizabeth doesn't go to night clubs. A favorite evening with the young folks is dinner at the Scandia and dancing at the Cocoanut Grove, which caters to teenagers. There's no cover charge, there's a soft-drink bar, the music is always good, and it doesn't cost the boys a small fortune.

mob scene . . .

On Sundays the crowd collects at Malibu. In fact, they start collecting Saturday night. Elizabeth and a girl friend take over Daddy's room, which has twin beds, and he comes in with me. I never know how many there'll be, and I don't care. One morning I woke to find five pairs of feet sticking out of sleeping bags on the porch under my balcony. Howard had two boys in his room, two more were on the big couch in the living room, and another snoozed peacefully in the back seat of our Buick. Only when there's a gang like that for breakfast, I announce to the boys that they'll have dishes to wash, and send the girls upstairs to make the beds. By trial and error, I've discovered it's best to separate them at their labors. Fewer dishes get broken, and they spend less time clipping tea towels at each other.

All day they're in and out of the water, riding these rubber lifeboats and eating hot dogs on the stand for lunch. By 6:30 a buffet supper's on the table, then it's charades and guessing games for the rest of the evening. I've often been asked: "But don't the youngsters want to get off by themselves to play records and dance?" Apparently not. They have other evenings for dancing, and our Sunday parties seem to suit them down to the ground. Maybe it's because we've always done things as a family, never excluded the children from our adult parties, never thrown up a barrier. They enjoy our friends, feel a sense of comradeship with them, call them by their first names—none of this aunt and uncle business. From the way we act, there's no apparent difference in age. And if you could see the hilarity that goes on, you'd agree it would sound pretty pointless to cut in and ask: "Wouldn't you kids rather be doing something else?"

I hesitate to plunge into print on the subject of my daughter's looks. It smacks of the indelicate. But another question that's put to me constantly is whether Elizabeth realizes how pretty she is. So let me answer it now once and for all.

I can best begin by telling you what happened when a magazine man came to interview her. "I think you're the most beautiful girl in the world," he said without more ado. "How does it feel?"

She was utterly taken aback. Flushed to the roots of her hair, turned to me with a kind of helpless little look, and finally came out with: "People say that to everyone."

"Now, wait a minute. When you look in the mirror, you must see what we all see."

"All I see," said Elizabeth, "is another face to put lipstick on." And that was the last word he could get out of her till he changed the subject.

I'm sure she's as conscious of her appearance as any personable girl—neither more nor less. But in some remote way she feels it has nothing to do with herself, and direct compliments upset her.

Recently she said to me: "Mother, you know when it'll be wonderful? When I get good parts, and they say I was good in the parts, not just how pretty I was. If you feel you've done a job well, then you've sort of earned the praise and it means something. But I didn't make my face."

(Editor's Note: While I was reading this, Van Heflin dropped by the office and we got to talking about Elizabeth Taylor. A dreamy look came in his eyes. "Elizabeth," he said softly, "has the face of an angel, and a figure that's—well, it's just out of this world.")

On two counts, our big Elizabeth hasn't changed. She's still untidy. She still takes her clothes off and tosses them on a chair. Fifteen thousand times I've said: "Hang them up, Elizabeth," and she hangs them up like a lamb, but not till she's told. I used to tack notes on the door to remind her—till the door got so full of holes it looked wormeaten. Her room's never in order except for half an hour after the maid's straightened it. Ever since she was born, I've been telling her, but it still doesn't seem to occur to Elizabeth to tidy her room. Under other conditions, I'd be more insistent. But with everything else she has to do, I can't keep on nagging—life would be unbearable.

Besides, it's a pet theory of mine that most girls need a certain amount of time just to do nothing. When Elizabeth comes home from the studio, I'd so like her to get her makeup off right away. She'd rather stretch out on the bed and relax. After working all day, of course, you just want to let go. I'd rather stretch out on the bed myself, so I make allowances for Elizabeth.

And she's still a dreamer—time still slips away from her. I remember discussing this a year or so ago in Modern Screen, and getting suggestions from several mothers who'd gone through the same thing with their own daughters. I'd like to thank them for their kindness in writing, and tell them regretfully that so far nothing has worked. The day could be 40 hours long, and it still wouldn't be long enough for Elizabeth. Never have I known her to be on time for a date. One Sunday a boy was to pick her up at 2:30 to go to a party. At 2:30 she was still on the beach in her bathing suit. I'd grown tired of reminding her, and decided to let matters take their course.

When her date arrived, I caught a glimpse of Elizabeth scooting up the backstairs. Maybe, I thought, this can be an object lesson. "I wish you'd be very firm with her," I said to the boy, "and let her know you don't like her being late."

"Okay," he said with a smile, "I sure will"

"In about 15 minutes or so, call up and tell her you're in a hurry."

I allowed 20 minutes, and went back to the living room. He was reading a book.

"Are you being firm?"

He grinned." What do you think?"

can't stay mad . . .

The trouble is, it's hard to stay cross with Elizabeth. She's always so sorry—so sincerely sorry. "I just don't know what happens to the time," she'll say. Or she'll come down kidding and clowning, and that's the end of it. Even as a child, she was a natural comedian. You'd go to punish her, and she'd do something to make you laugh, and you'd wind up not punishing her. If we scolded her brother, she'd pull the same stunt. Those two stick together like peas in a pod. If I'm ever annoyed with either, they'll alibi and make excuses for each other. I may be right all the way through, but in Elizabeth's eyes Howard is always right. And as far as he's concerned, she can do no wrong. Basically, this pleases me, however irksome I may find it at the moment.

But here's a final confession and a flat inconsistency, and heaven help me if my daughter reads it. In spite of all my plaints, I hope she can keep her dream world yet for a while. The day will come soon enough when she'll have to be big enough to read a clock. But right now, this is such a lovely time for Elizabeth. The End

sweet and hot

by leonard feather

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

FROM THE MOVIES

KISSING BANDIT—What's Wrong With Me; Love is Where You Find It: *Kothryn Grayson (MGM). Senorito; If I Steal a Kiss: *Johnnie Johnston (MGM). Siesto: Jack Fina (MGM).

Maybe it's more than a coincidence that Johnnie Johnston and Mrs. J. (Kathryn Grayson), both MGM Records stars, have both recorded songs from Kathryn's new picture. They didn't cut any together, however. Best side is Senorita, on which Johnnie might well be singing to his spouse.

NIGHT HAS A THOUSAND EYES—Title Song: *Eddie Heywood (Victor).

SO DEAR TO MY HEART—Title song: *Peggy Lee (Capitol); Dinah Shore (Columbia); Freddy Martin (Victor). It's Whatcha Do with Whatcha Got: Pied Pipers (Capitol); *Gene Krupa (Columbia); Freddy Martin (Victor).

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME—What Did I Do: Harry James (Columbia).

POPULAR

PEARL BAILEY—*Say It Simple (Columbia).

FRANKIE CARLE—*Roses In Rhythm Album (Columbia).

FRANK SINATRA—Album of Christmas Songs (Columbia).

Aided by the Ken Lane singers, Frankie makes this the best of a flood of Christmas releases.

JAZZ

COUNT BASIE—*Just a Minute (Victor).

BLUE RHYTHM BAND—Blue Rhythm Bebop (MGM).

Good solos by Charlie Shavers' trumpet and Lucky Thompson's tenor sax, but the arrangement's not authentic bebop.

DUKE ELLINGTON—*Suddenly It Jumped (Victor).

WOODY HERMAN—Four Brothers (Columbia) Sensational solos by four sax stars and a terrific, swinging bop arrangement. One of the year's greatest jazz sides.

RED NORVO—*Bop! (Capitol).

Yes, Red's another swing veteran who's come out for the New Look in jazz. This all-star group features some of the finest and most neglected bop stars in Hollywood. Why doesn't some smart movie producer forget those all-star bands and feature a few cheaper, musically outstanding outfit like this?

your letters...

WILDE OVER POWER

Dear Editor: In your November article, "Why Stars Fight Their Bosses," Hedda Hopper states that Cornel Wilde has surpassed Tyrone Power in popularity. Since when? In the latest official box-office poll, the nation's exhibitors named Power ahead of Wilde. Why not keep the facts straight?

Janis Eltin; Chicago, Ill.

(There are various box-office and popularity polls, Janis, no one of which is "official" in any sense. Miss Hopper's statement was based on fan mail received at the studio—which is but one of many criteria which might have been applied. In MS's own poll, Wilde ranks ahead of Power among readers 20 years of age and younger, but behind him in appeal to all other age groups. For Power's cumulative 1948 rating, see pages 24-25—Ed.)

SORRY, WRONG STATE

Dear Editor: Ouch!! Just finished reading "Guy Madison in Person" in the October issue, in which you state that "Guy put in a hurry call to Deer Lake, New Jersey." Deer Lake is in Pennsylvania, about twenty-five miles above Reading.

Mary Fisher, Orwigsburg, Pa.

(Why the "Ouch," Mary? This hurts us more than it does you—Ed.)

MORE ABOUT LIZ'S AGE

Dear Editor: I would like to answer the question which appeared in the Your Letters column for October: "Why doesn't Elizabeth Taylor act her age?" Since we are all individuals, all of us don't necessarily grow up or mature at the same time. Some girls mature much earlier than others. I think Liz looks older than her 17 years and also acts older—but maybe she just grew up faster. You can't expect her to act 13.

Bette Ann Lyons, Yeardon, Pa.

(See Mrs. Sara Sothern Taylor's story about Liz' approaching womanhood on page 50 of this issue—Ed.)

PRAISE FOR REBA AND BONNIE

Dear Editor: The best article in your October issue in my opinion is "Let's Have a Hayride" by Reba and Bonnie Churchill. That kind of reading matter is so good for our growing youth—clean and wholesome. Let's have more of the same.

Frances Williams, First Methodist Church of Hollywood

(An attitude supported by 29 others who wrote in this month—Ed.)

This Turbulent Novel of Love and Hate

now brought to you by

DELL BOOKS

for only 25¢

THE MADONNA OF THE SLEEPING CARS

by Maurice De Kobra

This is the vivid and compelling story of a capricious world-famous beauty and her desperate attempts to sell herself for the kind of security she believes she must have. It is a novel of love contrasting with hate, of tenderness and savagery, of gentleness and cruelty, set against a background of excitement and political intrigue in London, Berlin and Russia. With mounting excitement, it builds to a dramatic and satisfying conclusion. No. 256

Other recently released Dell Books

Enchanted Oasis by Faith Baldwin

Lovely Cynthia Stoddard has been brought up in strait-laced fashion, and the gay and carefree life of Palm Springs was almost more than she could cope with. When she meets Slim Ramsay her problems become even more agonizing—and more delightful. No. 255

The Upstart by Edison Marshall

All his life, young Dick Fingers, a foundling, has wondered who he really is. Though the leader of a gang of ruffians, he longs to be a gentleman. So he joins a company of strolling actors where he meets sweet Penny with the pagan heart and Annie, who doesn't pretend to polite morals. No. 233

Alfred Hitchcock's ROPE

The movie version of the famous play by Patrick Hamilton, starring James Stewart, and directed by Alfred Hitchcock, is drawing raves from critics and audiences alike. Now here it is in book form—and only 25 cents! This is a sensational story of suspense that mounts to a crashing climax. Don't miss it! No. 262

DELL BOOKS ARE ON SALE EVERYWHERE ONLY 25c

MAIL THIS COUPON if you cannot obtain the titles listed at your newsstand. Send 25c for each book ordered. This offer good in the U. S. A. only.

Dell Publishing Company, Inc. MS-19
261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Please send me the Dell Books checked below. I enclose .....

☐ No. 256 ☐ No. 255 ☐ No. 233 ☐ No. 262

Name .....

Address .....

City, Zone, State .....

WHY JIMMY STEWART WON'T MARRY

(Continued from page 44)

and a girl like Anita Colby, at the same time. He'll extend a forefinger as if about to impart a valuable tip. "Fine," he'll say. "Just fine."

With amiable yet distant pleasantries of this kind (so reminiscent of the sort of roles he plays), Jimmy wanders away impressing everybody with the fact that he is a happy man who wants for nothing—everybody, that is, except those who know him best. They don't believe it. They think that Jimmy as a lone bachelor always was, and still is, just a performance—a performance that could be ended by the right girl. The question they now ask themselves, rather worriedly, is—has Jimmy stopped looking?

plain talk . . .

There is Hank Fonda, acknowledged to be one of Jimmy's best friends. One of the last parties Hank attended on the Coast, before going East to star in Mr. Roberts on Broadway, was at Anatole Litvak's home at Malibu. The talk turned to Jimmy, and Hank made himself plain.

"There's a guy I'd like to see get married, who should get married," Hank said. "I hate to think of him sitting in his little house looking at the telephone and wondering whom to call, what to do—when all the time he belongs in his own home with his own wife."

One can even get a better authority than Hank—Jimmy himself. There have been times in his life when he has talked very unlike a bachelor—at least, unlike a willing one. It's never been told in print before, but what are believed to be his most honest and revealing words on the subject were spoken one night aboard the Queen Elizabeth when he was on his way home from his three-years' service in Europe.

With seven other homebound, war-weary soldiers, he was playing cards and all were discussing what they planned to do with their lives, now about to be handed back to them by the Army. For most of the eight, there were wives and families waiting. A few of the others had plans for marriage—with either a girl known or a girl yet to be met. It went on like that, each man laying himself bare, until Jimmy, too, found himself talking—quietly, seriously, as he had never talked before.

He told the men that he knew happiness for him could have its beginning only with a woman to love, but that he faced an inability to make a choice. You go out with a great many girls in Hollywood but when you start looking at each as a prospective wife something happens. It was being a star, a public figure that stood in the way somehow . . . somehow that was it.

"Sometimes," Jimmy had gone on, "you get periods out in Hollywood when you are terribly discouraged. You think it would be best to give it all up and go back home. Go back, and buy the folks a better house, maybe build one for yourself on a lot of acres and lead the sort of life that was yours to start with. Maybe a girl will turn up who belongs to that life. Maybe not. That's what you think. But you never do anything about it. . . ."

When Jimmy stopped it was in some confusion—as if he couldn't think of a proper way to finish. But he had made himself very clear. It was obvious to the soldiers sitting around the card table that this lanky officer whom fame had touched, and who was so boyish despite a scratching of grey to his hair about the temples, was lonely—and facing the prospect of that loneliness continuing.

From his words, a few of those present had the impression that the shadow of a woman stood between him and his happiness—a woman he loved but had never been able to attain. The rest sensed something else. They got this from what they thought to be a quality of uncertainty. It seemed to weaken his voice whenever he tried to describe his reactions to those girls, many of them stars, whose names had been coupled with his. It was almost as if he'd never quite know what to make of them—when to believe them, when not. Was there something in this that might be Jimmy's main stumbling block?

Whatever the whole truth may be, his friends feel that this much he has made plain—his failure to find the sort of happiness he has admitted seeking is a problem to him. And thus their glumness over his strengthening espousal of bachelorhood. They cannot help wondering if it isn't a sign that Jimmy has given up hope of solving it.

As a matter of fact, when one considers his activities since his return to Hollywood, one begins to wonder if Jimmy's really been trying to solve it. His post-war romances have followed the pattern of his pre-war romances: attachments leading to gossip-columns mention, but no further. Where before there was a Ginger Rogers, a Betty Furness, Simone Simon, Virginia Bruce, Eleanor Powell or Sonja Henie (plus various society girls usually introduced as "Miss Brown" or "Miss Smith"), there is now a Myrna Dell, an Anita Colby or Gloria MacLean (plus more "Browns" and "Smiths" of course). Once more he is everybody's Romeo—and nobody's.

that's hollywood!

A movie director accompanied by his wife, sat at a table in the Brown Derby, admiring a young actress at a nearby table.

"Look how modestly she's dressed," he commented. "She doesn't even wear a trace of makeup."

"Some women," his wife sneered, "will go to any extreme to attract attention."

Irving Hoffman in
The Hollywood Reporter

Does the thought or memory of a certain woman stand between Jimmy and the others he meets? If so, a backward look at his life reveals one whom he met nearly 18 years ago and for whom, ever since, he has had a strong attachment—although her heart has three times gone to other men.

They first looked at each other at Princeton, which his father and grandfather had attended before him. A play came to town, The Artist and the Lady, and Jimmy, not an actor but a member of the university's theater group because of his accordion-playing hobby, saw the play and was later introduced to the "Lady," a blonde girl who had grey eyes and a husky-edged voice.

Can it be that he still hasn't got over that first meeting with Margaret Sullavan?

He is often asked that question—sometimes by girls he takes out who have heard the story and are intrigued by it. He always laughs as if tickled by the foolishness of the idea. Yet, marriage with Margaret is an idea he certainly entertained; and, from the viewpoint of what that meeting meant to his life, he hasn't got over it. The truth is that if he hadn't met Margaret Sullavan he would have been, instead of an actor, an architect. Architecture was on Jimmy's mind when their paths crossed, but that was not Margaret's world. Jimmy dropped architecture. Jimmy went where Margaret was—into the theater.

It was never announced then that they were in love, or even just that Jimmy was in love with her. But they were a close duo, and later part of as close a trio, in summer theater, when Hank Fonda joined them. During those days on Cape Cod when the three rehearsed their parts on the beach afternoons and performed nightly in the playhouse that jutted out from shore on creaking piles, there were many who conjectured romance between Jimmy and Margaret. But when she married she married Hank, not Jimmy.

Success came to Margaret and Hank before it came to Jimmy—but so did divorce. And these two were both in Hollywood when Margaret gave Jimmy's career its greatest impetus by inducing Universal to let him star with her in Next Time We Love. Tests had to be made of Jimmy first, of course, but Margaret took no chances: she played opposite him in the tests herself.

If anyone wants to know how Jimmy felt about Margaret (or "Peg," as he calls her) in those days (and wonders why he laughs at questions recalling this romance), a short conversation he had with one of his sisters who was visiting him then is enlightening.

"Why don't you marry Margaret Sullavan?" she asked. "You're always talking about her."

Jimmy's reply was, "I would if I could."

They made more pictures together. Over at M-G-M everybody remembers Jimmy's excellent spirits when, in 1938, he heard that his "Peg" had been signed to play opposite him in Shopworn Angel. On the set at that time it was taken for granted that Jimmy's world held two interests, Margaret Sullavan and his career—in that order. And thoughts of marriage, and of marrying Margaret, had by no means left him. That Christmas he went home for a visit and his father asked how he was getting along.

a little lonesome . . .

"All right," replied Jimmy, "but life is getting a little lonesome for me. A man shouldn't live alone. It isn't natural. I think I'd better get married."

That was also the year he told the world, via a MODERN SCREEN interview, that he thought the ideal girl should have blond hair, grey eyes and be not too tall. In case that description weren't recognizable he added "like Margaret Sullavan." And, as if that didn't tie it down, he continued on to say that he wanted "another Margaret Sullavan."

It would have had to have been "another Margaret Sullavan." The original one was hardly available to him except as a subject for his romantic discussions and interviews. She was busy acquiring a second husband—and then a third. Her second one was Willie Wyler, the director. Her third was Leland Hayward, the latter not only a close friend of Jimmy's, but his agent as well.

Yet, all through the period of these marriages, and in between, Jimmy was ever near his "Peg" if only as a figure in the background—and his devotion to her today is still undiminished. When she was last in Hollywood he paid faithful attendance, felt impelled to phone her often, occasionally even while he was out with another girl!

So it may well be that Jimmy cannot see beyond Margaret Sullavan, even if there can be no Margaret Sullavan in his life. He once said, only a few years after coming to Hollywood, that he is the sort of guy who really takes a spill when he falls in love. He went on: "When I'm crazy enough to ask a girl to marry me she's going to be more important to me than anything else in the world. What she says will be law."

But back in 1938 he said something else that is regarded as even more significant by those who remember his shipboard confession that he had difficulty making a romantic choice. He frankly admitted that the first rush of girls, after his success was established in Hollywood, scared him. Everyone remembers that Jimmy was long considered a shy fellow. Olivia DeHavilland, when members of her family were freely predicting she and Jimmy would marry, gave as her opinion that he was "super-shy." Can this be the real key?

It is along the line of what a number of girls who have gone with Jimmy are said to think. That they have talked and puzzled over him for years is hardly news. And the sum of their thinking is perhaps best boiled down by one girl, a beauty whom the columnists have had altar-bound with Jimmy dozens of times, but who is intelligent enough to know much better herself.

search abandoned? . . .

"Take his whole story," she has pointed out. "A shy boy from a small town overnight finds himself the center of a group of girls more glamorous than he had ever thought existed. Nothing in his life has ever prepared him for all this adulation. Now, everybody knows that Jimmy's outstanding traits are honesty and dislike of sham. This honesty tells him that he is still the same boy he was yesterday so he knows it isn't that fellow they are clamoring for; it's the new one. But he cannot sham, so he cannot pretend to himself that he is anything else but himself—a boy, he sometimes feels, they wouldn't turn around twice to look at. Unconsciously, maybe, he's been looking for a girl who would—and hasn't found her. Maybe he has decided he never will. If that is so—well, it's kind of a tragedy, because he does want her."

Has Jimmy so decided?

This would account not only for his bachelorhood, but also for the ever more pronounced air of detachment that characterizes his personality now, a personality remarkably close to the Jimmy Stewart he is on the screen—a philosophical sort of fellow, slightly bemused and always a little remote from what is going on about him.

When you look at this fellow, it is difficult to see the other one—the boy who talked about girls and marriage when he first came to Hollywood, who loved the home he was raised in and was home-conscious for his own future way of living. It is difficult to see that boy, but there are some who claim they can, that Jimmy hasn't been able to submerge him completely—that doing this is going to be a tougher job than Jimmy realizes. THE END

The screen story of You Gotta Stay Happy, Jimmy Stewart's latest picture, is to be found in the January issue of SCREEN STORIES.

Love-quiz ... For Married Women Only

WHY IS HER HUSBAND SO CRUELLY INDIFFERENT?

A. Jim adored her when they married. But now—so soon—he almost ignores her. Unfortunately, this wife is not even aware of her one fault which has caused his love to cool.

Q. What is that one fault she is unaware of?

A. Failure to practice sound feminine hygiene with a scientifically correct preparation for vaginal douching, such as "Lysol" in proper solution.

Q. Aren't soap, soda, or salt just as effective?

A. Absolutely not. Because they cannot compare with "Lysol" in germ killing power. Though gentle to delicate membranes, "Lysol" is powerful in the presence of mucus. Destroys the source of objectionable odors . . . kills germs on contact.

Q. Do doctors recommend "Lysol"?

A. Many doctors advise patients to douche regularly with "Lysol" brand disinfectant just to insure daintiness alone . . . and to use it as often as they need it. No greasy aftereffect.

KEEP DESIRABLE, by douching regularly with "Lysol." Remember—no other product for feminine hygiene is more reliable than "Lysol". . . no other product is more effective! No wonder three times more women use "Lysol" than all other liquid products combined!

For Feminine Hygiene rely on safe, effective

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Easy to use . . . economical

A Concentrated Germ-Killer

NEW . . . INTIMATE HYGIENE FACTS

FREE! New booklet of information by reputable gynecological authority. Mail coupon to Lehn & Fink, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

D.M.—491 Product of Lehn & Fink

HE GOT WHAT HE WANTED

(Continued from page 57)

but one is always sure to be off on a wandering trip somewhere). There are great plans under way, plans to make up for the misery of that 14-month period which began when Larry and his studio, Columbia Pictures, disagreed on the proper course for his career, and he took the decisive step of calling a halt to it altogether.

It was a tough decision to make. It meant he was sending himself into enforced idleness at a time when his star had begun to soar. It meant he had to stand for criticism from others and, even worse than this, be the victim of his own fears. Was he strong enough to take the outside blows and had he inner courage enough to overcome his own doubts?

The answer is yes, to both questions—and it's official now with the settlement of his contract in an agreement which provides that he will make one picture a year for five years for Columbia but is otherwise his own master.

exciting victory . . .

That's an exciting victory and it's no wonder that right after all papers were signed Larry went straight home to Betty and announced, "From here on it's action for us. This house will be hopping."

"You mean we might go to New York and do a stage show together?" she asked.

"Yes, we might."

"And you are going to start your own independent picture company?"

"It's started. We're looking for a script."

"And," Betty wanted to know, "how about your habit of jumping on your motorcycle and going off riding up the hills all alone? Are you going to keep that up?"

"No," said Larry. And she sighed with relief—but too soon. The next moment Larry was adding, "I'm going to get you a motorcycle and you can ride with me."

One of the reasons Larry isn't giving up his motorcycle is that he credits it with helping to bring about a happy ending to his troubles. When he didn't like the three pictures he was cast in after The Jolson Story and his refusal to do any more became a court matter, the judgment finally handed down was a kind of stalemate. He could work for himself—but not in pictures and not for any other studio. Trying to figure out a solution, Larry went riding on his wheel one Sunday morning and hit for the top of a hill overlooking Hollywood. There, standing high above the town which had given him a great start—and then tripped him—his mind went over the possibilities before him. When he started back down he knew what he wanted to do. A few weeks later he was on his way East to engage in summer theater.

The play, A Free Hand, by Norman Panama and Mel Frank ("Kind of fits the situation, that title, doesn't it?" he smiles), taught Larry a lot. But more important, he thinks, is what it taught his studio: Larry Parks could make a living without pictures—and what's more was prepared to, from then on, rather than do roles he didn't like.

The nature of Larry's sudden film success was such that there was a tendency to overlook his background of training in the legitimate theater field. When the famous Group Theatre was turning out some of the most successful actors and playwrights in the entertainment field today, Larry Parks was very much in the center of its activities. For that matter, his wife, Betty, was a contemporary of his at the time in the New York show world even though they didn't know each other at the time. Betty trained with the Neighborhood Playhouse in New York and took dancing under Martha Graham. You can even credit Larry with a dancing background acquired in a group taught by Anna Sokolow, a disciple of Martha Graham.

"And because a lot of people still think I am an overnight wonder," suggested Larry, when he was talking about this phase of his troubles, "it might be noted that in seven years after coming to Hollywood I played in more than 30 pictures. And if anyone wonders why I got a little impatient, why I'm a bit finicky about my roles—well, in some of those 30 pictures there were animals with whom I would gladly have exchanged parts. Their roles were better and longer."

Perhaps because of Larry's demonstration of independence, or maybe because the whole country has been asking for a sequel to The Jolson Story and the studio is more than willing to grant its wish, a more amicable mood began to be noted in the dispute. It resulted in the recent agreement—and now Larry acts again, starting with Jolson Sings Again.

But that's an awfully short way of dismissing one of the most tense and emotional periods in Larry's life. He thinks he lived five years during the four-hour meeting it took the lawyers for both sides to get together—four hours which he spent at home alone waiting for his attorney and personal representative, Lou Mandel, to phone him from the studio where the settlement wrangling was going on. "When he finally phoned me from the studio and I knew everything was okay, I felt like a life-termer getting an unexpected pardon," says Larry.

That night Larry and Betty celebrated by buying four bottles of champagne and riding out to the beach home of their closest friends, Lloyd and Dotty Bridges, just north of Malibu. Larry felt so good that though the others complained the water felt cold when they went night swimming, he declares it seemed actually balmy to him.

None of the other people who live in the canyon where the Parks' home is located needed to be told thereafter that Larry's troubles were over and that he was back at work rehearsing for Jolson Sings Again. They all have to pass the house on their way to work or market, and all day long Jolson records were being played to help Larry with his difficult synchronization performances which he had to perfect before he could go before the cameras. It wasn't a matter of a half dozen songs, but 18 numbers in which he had to look and act as if he were doing the singing.

"So, with the constant repetition of the songs, it's a pretty safe bet that in no other part of the world is so much Jolson music heard as in our canyon," he comments. "When the wind is right the music floats right up to the top of the hill and the houses up there get mammy songs with their views."

But the neighbors are tickled that Larry is back in harness. He has received their congratulations along with letters from all parts of the country—and one notable letter from out of the country. That letter was from Mexico, was written in Spanish and was signed just "Manuel." It took Larry some time to remember Manuel, but he did. He'd met him, a ten-year-old Mexican farm boy, on a studio publicity trip to Rosarita Beach down below Tijuana two years ago. Manuel had a little piglet whom he called Consuelo under his arms. As Larry and Betty were talking to Manuel, Consuelo wriggled free suddenly and scampered away. Everybody joined in the chase but it was Larry who caught her. He dropped down on his knees and put everything he had into a fervent Al Jolson gesture of appeal. It was too much for Consuleo and she came racing back to jump into his outstretched arms.

"Manuel kissed his little piglet on the forehead and then he kissed Larry," remembers Betty.

"With the price of pork today, it was a wonder that Manuel even gave me a thought," says Larry.

When Larry completes his role in Jolson Sings Again, he plans to go right into a picture to be made by his own company. It's just being formed and it's known as Louis Mandel Productions, Inc., with Betty, Mandel and himself as controlling officers. Following this, if a suitable musical comedy can be found, he and Betty would like to open with it on Broadway. After that comes a little idea that Betty has been nursing for some time: that the two of them work up a routine which they can present on a combination vacation and professional tour abroad. When this is set, the world is going to hear Larry Parks singing with Larry Parks' own voice.

hush-hush voice . . .

What kind of a voice is it? Larry won't say. But Betty knows and as far as she is concerned she'd rather listen to him than she would even to . . . you know who. (Please, Mr. Jolson, you're supposed to appreciate Betty's wifely loyalty!) Both agree there is a bit of a problem involved and that the first time Larry sings, as Larry alone sings, it's going to be a ticklish moment.

"But we'll make it," thinks Betty.

"She has confidence," says Larry. "She has so much confidence that she started shopping for all the things we needed even before the settlement was signed."

"I was certain about it," she replied.

"See?" asked Larry. "That's the only difference between us. I thought that maybe I was out of pictures for good—but she knew I wasn't. We don't have the same kind of thoughts, but we're together on the general idea of things."

One of the things they're together on the general idea of is—children.

They think they should have some. They would like those columnists who occasionally hint they're having quarrels and partings to know that that's how things are with Larry Parks and Betty Garrett.

THE END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

When I was on vacation, my little brother John went into a drug store one day and got us some cokes. When I'd finished I called John to take back the bottles. He was standing near the door of the store as I called, "John, be a darl and come here." Imagine my surprise when John Garfield stepped up.

Irene Fish
Plainview, Texas

bow meets curl

Boy meets girl whose hair is set gaily in pert, colorful ribbon curlers. Boy thinks girl very cute!

By Carol Corter,
Beauty Editor

Audrey Long, Eagle Lion stor, curled up in bows!

■ Now you can put your hair up in curlers whenever you like without being prepared to duck into the hall closet when your favorite boy friend whirls up the front steps! Somebody with imagination has just invented the trickiest ribbon curlers in a rainbow of shades—you can get them in one color, or assorted shades. The hair-curling principle is completely sound, being the beauty-wise, modern off-spring of the rag-curler of funny-paper fame. Simply roll a strand of moist hair up on each ribbon curler and tie it into a pert little bow. Just think of being able to go down town Saturday afternoon, looking as cute as punch with a head a-bobbing with little bows and all the while your hair is curling frantically for your exciting date in the evening!

Being able to set your hair and still look presentable plus makes it possible to shampoo your hair just when you feel like it. Every few days isn't too often if you want your hair to be silky, with lively high-lights. When there isn't time for a regular shampoo, or you plan to go out immediately in cold weather, give yourself a ten-minute dry shampoo to renew hair glamor. Nothing takes the place of regular brushing—treat yourself to a new nylon-bristled, Lucite-handled brush which, faithfully wielded, is a wonderful invigorator for your hair. Determined brushing brings nourishing blood to the scalp, removes dust and makes hair more willing to curl.

Corol Corter, Beouty Editor
MODERN SCREEN MAGAZINE, P. O. Box 125, Murroy Hill Stotion, New York 16, N.Y.

I'd like to lose o little weight sofely. Pleose send me your reducing booklet, "Through the Looking Gloss." I'm enclosing o stomped, self-oddressed envelope.

(Please print) NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____ STATE _____

Avoid underarm irritation...

...use

YODORA

the deodorant that is
ACTUALLY SOOTHING

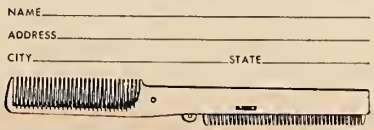
Looks bad, feels bad, when underarm skin gets red and irritated. That's why more women every day. turn to Yodora, the gentler cream deodorant. Yodora stops perspiration odor quickly, safely... it is actually soothing to normal skin, because it is made with a face cream base, with no harsh acid salts to cause irritation. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢.
McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

a comb that CURLS!

Simple! Efficient! Fast! Makes "professional" curls in a jiffy!

only $1

Tress Roll



Tress Roll Company
1214 Fourth Street, Berkeley 2, California

Send me _____ Tress Roll Combs at $1 EACH postpaid.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

THE CHRISTMAS I'LL NEVER FORGET

(Continued from page 32)

But the Americans were still only at Salerno and Anzio; the Germans held everything else.

The Nazis had been our "friends" up to this time. Now they were against us. It was hard to tell the difference. There was a saying in Rome then that if you had a Nazi friend you didn't need any enemies, and if you had a Nazi enemy you could find friends anywhere in the world.

Soon after getting up I was in the kitchen with mother having my Christmas breakfast. It was a simple meal. It was coffee, black coffee, and just that. Yet we were lucky. There were thousands in Rome that Christmas morning who had not even that. And we would have a lunch and a dinner. It would be potatoes from our own garden for lunch—boiled potatoes. For dinner we planned to use a last ounce or two of flour and make a sort of potato pancake. And with this, an extra dish—sardines!

As I drank my coffee I tried to dispel from my thoughts an unpleasant prospect that lay before me. It had been fortunate for me that I had chosen the ground floor apartment when I moved into the building several years before. The fact that a garden plot of pretty flowers went with that apartment was what had determined my choice. I didn't suspect then that soon I would be practically self-imprisoned in the apartment and that I would be forced to dig out every last pretty bloom in my garden and put in vegetables instead. That is what happened when the movie studios in Rome were closed and all operations shifted to the north of Italy, principally in Venice. I didn't go north. I voluntarily left the business because of the fear that I would be "asked" to make propaganda pictures by the Germans. And on this Christmas morning I knew the danger of this had not been circumvented by my leaving. I would be asked anyway; asked first, and then forced. This is what was worrying me—this and my plan to overcome the difficulty.

For three months after I left the studio I was alone in the apartment, never even showing my nose outdoors. I didn't want to be seen. I wanted the name of Alida Valli to be forgotten, so that no German film head would think of me. Once in a while friends would drop in, but not often. It was possible to go about, but it was difficult and dangerous. There were curfews which were always changing without notice so that you weren't sure whether you could be out until ten at night or whether you should have gone "in" at dusk. And, regardless of curfew, you were apt to be stopped and questioned anytime by the patrols. And if in any way you indicated that you were an Allied sympathizer, any fate from being detained overnight to never being heard from again could be yours!

desperate trading . . .

The friends came to talk, but mostly to bring, get, or exchange food. I had my potatoes, a few other vegetables as they came in season, and I had sardines and a little coffee which I had saved from my more plentiful times. Others would occasionally procure flour from which "pasta" or spaghetti dishes could be made, and, most rarely, a bit of sausage. These are what we would send back and forth to each other, in a desperate effort to get a little substance in our lives.

All this time I was a girl sitting all alone in a six room apartment, fighting against loneliness and melancholy. Those first months were awful. I read everything I had on my book shelf and then I read and re-read the shelf all over again. Not long ago in Hollywood I met a man who used to be a writer for Italian pictures and who, during the war years in Rome, had given me a script to read just before he was called into the army. We were delighted to see each other again, and soon, like all writers, he thought of his story. Had I ever read it? What did I think of it?

Before I could answer he clapped his hand against his forehead and called himself a fool. "What a stupid thing I am asking!" he said. "How could you possibly remember that script? It is four years since I gave it to you and what haven't we all been through since then!"

I laughed. "Not only do I remember it," I replied, "I think I could recite it for you, word by word."

"Impossible!" he cried. "In the theater only Shakespeare is ever memorized and I know I am not that good. Or am I?"

"You were to me," I answered. And then I told him how many times I had gone over his picture play, not only reading it, but speaking the lines of all the characters, just to pretend that they were there with me and that I wasn't so horribly, horribly alone.

This was the way I lived before my mother miraculously made the trip from our home town of Milan and came to me just a few months before Christmas; reading and re-reading; peering out from behind my blinds at someone walking in the street and fervently hoping, with him or her, that no German motorcycle and side car would careen around the corner to let a soldier jump out and start a long, interminable questioning; turning on my little radio to the merest murmur when the B.B.C. broadcast was due to come on (I shall never forget the deep, table-pounding noise that was its opening signal theme and the English tones of the announcer saying, "This is the Voice of London calling."); or else sitting at my back window watching my garden of vegetables, which meant life itself to me, against being stolen.

So you can imagine that my mother's company had meant a great deal to me. And as poor as our existence had been the past few months, we were together at least. But now, on this Christmas Day, I faced something that gave me a sickness at the very idea of it. This night I would have to leave the apartment, leave my mother and go into hiding in a friend's house.

There were two reasons why we had decided on this move. First of all, I was in danger. Just a few days before word had come to me that another group of film players were about to be "invited" north and there was strong likelihood that my name was on the list. If I refused to go, if I refused to cooperate after they forced me to go, my life wouldn't be worth much. Secondly, my mother and I were both in danger of starvation. We didn't have to make an inventory of our larder to know that the stored potatoes would last only a few days more, there were just a few tins of sardines left, and nothing more than an ounce or two of coffee. It might be possible, if I were out of the house, for mother to live a week or ten days more, and by that time, with the aid of my friends, I was sure I could send her more food.

christmas spirit . . .

And we had selected this Christmas Day as the best day on which to leave because, with more people on the street than usual, there was less chance of my being stopped and discovered. We counted, too, on a general spirit of Christmas in the air to make the soldiers more lenient in their questioning in the event I was hailed by a patrol.

So this is what was in the minds of my mother and myself as we finished breakfast and looked ahead to a day, that, ordinarily, would stretch long and dull—but this morning was different. Because we both dreaded the coming of night when we would have to part, without knowing when we would see each other again, we became conscious of the fact that time seemed to be just speeding along. And in order not to be left behind with things on our mind and heart not yet said, we found ourselves talking faster than usual.

Mother had planned to brave a visit to Christmas church services; now she changed her mind, was afraid to leave me alone. It would not be unlike the Germans to do their summoning on Christmas.

The afternoon before we had done some washing (we laundered and dried right in the apartment) and now mother expressed concern because the clothes were still wet and therefore I would not be able to pack them. She wouldn't believe me at first star hunt

Can you recognize a star anywhere? In the paragraphs below we've hidden the names of quite a few. See how many you can find. Then turn to page 87.

★ It was March. A crisp wind blowing north by west cut across the waters of the lake and then across the fields. Soon the rains came. It was a good day to garner dreams, especially if you were young and your heart was full of hope.

Mary relaxed on a sofa by the window and toyed with a few tufts of brown hair that curled over her right ear. She watched the little brooks made by the rain run to the shore and eddy against the tide, and as she watched, she dreamt. She dreamt what almost any girl might dream on a rainy afternoon. She dreamt that some day a great power, some king, perhaps, would grant her every wish. Like Cinderella, she pictured herself at a ball in the main hall of a wonderful palace. Soon, a handsome knight discovered her, and approaching, placed a garland of flowers around her neck. Then he asked her to dance.

There was nothing meek about him, and his voice had a deeply resonant and mature tone which thrilled her deeply as he revealed how much he loved her, and how he'd had to hunt high and low to find her. As he spoke he put a gold band set with a stone of great price on her finger, and the next thing she knew he was leading her through a lane in the royal parks to what, as far as she could judge, appeared to be a temple—where they were married.

Mary sighed and stared out of the window. The downpour continued. The land was becoming a marsh. You would have needed a raft to have been able to get about in that weather, she reflected. She wondered if her father would be able to start the Ford when the rain stopped, or if he was in for the usual peck of trouble. Well, he would have to make the best of it, she decided, and returned to her dreams.

when I told her I had decided to take nothing with me, not even a toothbrush, for fear that if I were stopped and questioned, such articles would indicate that I was running away.

"I can send for some things later on," I told her. "It is just that I must not be caught carrying them myself."

"But if the Germans come here and ask for you?" she wanted to know.

"Tell them that I have gone north to grandmother's in Milan."

"But they will search there for you," she pointed out.

"Grandmother will say that I was there but left to come back to Rome. I will get word to her," I replied.

"So the Germans will return here looking for you. What then?"

"Then . . ." I began, putting my arm around my mother, ". . . then, mama mia, you will outdo your daughter in acting. You will cry and say that I must have disappeared. Maybe you will even accuse them of having spirited me away."

"Oh, it should be the other way. You are the actress," she complained—but joined me in my laugh.

We talked on about what might happen, and about the future generally, right through the morning and were still talking after lunch when a knock came on the door. I started forward to open it but mother caught my wrist and motioned it would be best if she went. I nodded. As I walked back to my room I noticed it was a little after two o'clock and there was something about this that seemed odd . . . though I couldn't make out why at the moment. A moment later I heard the front door open and heard something that made me start—something no Italian ever heard during the war without cringing—the thick, guttural sounds the Germans make when they try to speak our language.

I couldn't understand what was being said but got a sense of fright from the pitch of mother's voice. Then there were heavy footsteps . . . through the living room . . . into the kitchen . . . then, after more talk, back down the hall. The front door closed, leaving only the sound of my mother's quick returning steps to me. When I stepped out she was raising her hands in a gesture of thankfulness.

"It was the radio patrol," she said. "And see what time it is!"

Then I knew why I had felt odd when I looked at the clock. Each day at two in the afternoon we faithfully turned on the B.B.C. broadcast from London. But the Germans had monitors who went through apartment houses at such times eavesdropping at doors to discover those who might be listening to it. These men who came to our apartment had heard mother and I talking and had become suspicious. Had our radio been warm—a sign that we had had it on but had turned it off when they knocked—we might have been in serious trouble. And for months we had never failed to have it on at this time! But only today, because we were so busy discussing my leaving, we had forgotten about it!

small consolation . . .

One spent little time cooking in Rome those days because there was really nothing to the meals—the one "consolation" the women of Italy had during the war, and for which they were not grateful. But for the remainder of this afternoon mother spent most of her time in the kitchen. Even though there was precious little there to prepare, it was Christmas and in her eyes had come the same holiday cooking gleam of yore. I felt sorry for her; I felt she could meet with nothing but frustration in our kitchen!

We had one more visitor at dusk, this time a friend, an elderly neighbor who had gone to church service at St. Peter's and wanted to tell us about it. Usually I used to find her garrulous, but this evening I listened to her every word, and her story was so complete that it was almost as if I had ventured out and attended St. Peter's myself.

When I had let her out I watched through the window as she crossed the street to her home. Turning away, my eyes fell on a pedestal on which we kept an urn with flowery decorations—greenery and red berries—worked into its sides. It was missing. I called the fact to mother who had gone back to the kitchen but she made some reassuring reply that seemed to indicate she knew about it. I forgot about the urn and went to my room for a nap to fortify my nerves against my flight later.

Mother awakened me an hour or so later and told me to hurry and bathe as dinner was ready—"Christmas dinner," she said—and she had just poured a kettle of hot water into the tub. With some cold water added there was hardly two inches of water altogether yet you may be sure I appreciated every splash of it. I dressed quickly and went to the dining room. I took one look at the table before vision dimmed because of the tears that rushed up into my eyes. I groped my way to mother and held on to her. . . .

mother comes through . . .

Somehow or other she had made a Christmas dinner. There was no tree, but in the center of the table stood the missing urn, its red berries and coiling greenery gleaming from a vigorous shining. Around it lay a circle of small but vivid garnet roses with long, stiff stems. The potato pancakes were on a platter but what made me catch my breath was something in a little dish next to them—something that looked, and later tasted, like jelly! And then there were not only so many sardines that I knew mother had extravagantly opened two tins, but there was also a platter, on which was a smaller platter, on which was an even smaller dish, in which I could see white, steaming macaroni!

Before we sat down I pinned one of the roses in mother's hair and she placed one in mine. We ate happily, taking our time with each dish, and with mother even falling into her old habit of "stuffing" me at meal times. I used to object to this as do all young girls—but this time I said nothing, of course. I knew she was making sure that I did not have to leave on an empty stomach, perhaps feeling faint and not up to my trip.

For once there were really some dishes to wash in that apartment after a meal. Mother had made up for lack of food with as many platters and plates as she could get on the table. There were so many that we told each other the very act of washing them sold you on the idea that you had had a big meal. We worked slowly but eventually we were finished. It was quite dark outside. It was time for me to go.

I had put on a coat and was ready to leave when mother asked me to wait a moment. She went to my bedroom. A minute later she came out with something rolled up in shelf paper. She handed it to me.

"But I told you I'm not taking anything, mother," I told her. "What is it?"

"At least you must take a nightgown," she said, looking troubled. "At least that."

I could only nod. We kissed and pressed our farewell and then I was out in the street. I would have ten blocks to walk to get to the apartment of my friends. I started out. From somewhere, faintly, came the thin snaps of revolver shots being fired . . . from even beyond that I could hear church bells tolling . . . marking the closing hours of Christmas in Rome, 1944 . . . and the beginning for me—of what?

THE END

the stocking buy of the year

15 DENIER
ONE THREAD EQUIVALENT
51 GAUGE

DU PONT NYLONS

Deluxe First Quality with Fine Pencil-Line Seams

$1.10 PR.
3 prs. for $3.25

Here are the stockings that are proving America's favorites . . . because of their wonderfully outstanding value. You'll love their sheerness, their fine pencil-line seams, their delicate shadow heels. They are truly the nation's outstanding buy—order several at this special Gaylord low price. Newest shades: Honey Almond (Light), Autumn Dusk (Medium), Deep Dawn or Brown Toast (Dark). Sizes 8½ to 10½.

GAYLORD Dept. H, 404 5th Ave., McKeesport, Pa.
Please send ..... pairs of Pencil-Line NYLONS, I will pay postman $1.10 (or 3 pairs for $3.25) plus small C.O.D. Charges.
SHADE ____ SIZE ____
If prepaid we pay postage. Money-back guarantee
Print name and address along margin

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. © I. P. Inc.
KLUTCH CO., Box 4987A, ELMIRA, N. Y.

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR

TEMPORARY RELIEF IS NOT ENOUGH
Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure unwanted hair is gone FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the Mahler Method safely and efficiently. Used successfully all over the world for 50 years.
Send 6c coin or stamps TODAY for booklet, "NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU."
Mahler's, Inc., Dept. 36-A, East Providence, R. I.

"Look! I can walk again"

Join the MARCH OF DIMES
JANUARY 14-31
FIGHT INFANTILE PARALYSIS
THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR INFANTILE PARALYSIS
FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, FOUNDER

ROBERT WALKER: TRAGIC FIGURE

(Continued from page 39)

on charges of being drunk and disorderly.

This is what happened: Motorcycle police chased Walker's car, being driven furiously down the wrong side of Pico Boulevard, for three blocks before they forced it to the side of the road. In the car with him was 22-year-old actress Pat Dane, Tommy Dorsey's former wife. She was at the wheel. She gave her real name, Thelma Patricia Byrnes, and pleaded guilty.

At the station, said the dispatch, Walker became belligerent and tried to fight five officers while being booked as "drunk, noisy, loud and boisterous." He told of meeting his companion at a party, after which they'd stopped at a bar and "had a few drinks."

"Why, I've been drunk for 25 years," Walker was quoted as telling the police. "This lady isn't drunk, though. Don't pick on her. I'm to blame."

Thus was achieved a new climax in the personal difficulties of Robert Walker—difficulties which seemed to have reached their peak last August when he separated from Barbara Ford after six weeks of marriage.

Whatever it is that has caused an intelligent, talented and attractive young man to become such a tragic figure, his friends (with, it must be said, rather shaken faith) are still hoping that some miracle will transform him into a well-balanced, uncomplicated person.

For a little while, it appeared that young Barbara Ford possessed the magic key. She and Bob had known each other only five or six weeks before they were married, but in that brief interval Bob seemed a changed man. He looked and sounded as he had in his early days in Hollywood, before his marriage with Jennifer Jones exploded in his bewildered face. He was keeping regular hours. He was eager to work. He even talked to the press—and for publication!

The date for the wedding was set, the plans all made. The ceremony was to take place aboard John Ford's yacht. (And, by the way, I don't believe that Mr. Ford disapproved the marriage, as reported. I think he liked Bob and wanted him for a son-in-law.) Then suddenly, on one of his unpredictable impulses, Bob said to Barbara, "Let's not wait! Let's get married—now!" And two hours later, without Mr. Ford in attendance, the wedding took place.

marry in haste . . .

There were many reasons why Bob and Barbara should never have rushed into marriage that way. They had known each other so very briefly, and even a few more weeks of learning to know each other better might have made a tremendous difference. Bob was scheduled to start a picture, which made impossible the long and leisurely honeymoon they had planned. The house he had bought was not yet furnished. Barbara, who has always been very close to her father, had naturally wanted him to be at the wedding.

But Bob and Barbara, on a romantic impulse, went right ahead. So two strangers, in an atmosphere of haste and strain, found themselves man and wife.

Who was to blame for the tragic marital fiasco? Most people say Bob. I'm not so sure.

Of course it was cruel and wrong when he brusquely ordered his young wife to leave him after three unhappy weeks. I'm not condoning that—it was a terrible thing on the face of it. But remember that he is a man who has been babied by women all his life— a man who always says, in effect, "No one understands me."

Barbara, a fine girl, was very inexperienced. She's never been much around men, except the men in her family. She just didn't know how to handle her very difficult and emotionally unstable husband. And as he was disappointed in her, she was disillusioned with him. I'm told that Walker didn't leave his room for four days following the honeymoonless wedding.

Bob's sometimes-adolescent behavior is supposed to stem from a heart-hangover he carries for Jennifer Jones. Every time he gets in a jam—which is often—someone explains it by saying he's still in love with Jennifer. (At the time of his arrest, the Associated Press reported, he asked that someone call her.) Even the time when he "disappeared," we heard "He's carrying a torch for Jennifer," from the people who always seem to know.

Walker laughs now—a little bitterly—when you mention that time when he ran away from it all. He was in the middle of a movie. One morning, instead of going to the studio, he got in his car and drove to Santa Barbara. Radio news reports at once announced his disappearance, and expressed the fear that Bob was dashing off somewhere to kill himself! "I just went to see some friends," Bob told the studio heads—when he decided to return. "Try telling us in advance next time," they suggested coldly.

MODERN SCREEN

"Listen dear—yes, this is where we came in."

But that's the way it always is with Walker; he hates to tell. He has never yet told the story of what went wrong with his marriage to Miss Jones. And Jennifer is just as non-communicative.

Before they came to Hollywood, they were happy in the apartment in New York with their two boys. Bob was doing all right with his career, bringing home something like a thousand dollars a week from his radio soap-opera jobs. Between times they worked together in stock, and life looked pretty successful after their early struggles to make good on the stage, and in Hollywood, where Jennifer had worked in Westerns as Phyllis Isley.

(I've heard that Bob and his wife were very poor at one time, starving on a bench in Central Park, etc. That isn't true. Bob is closely related to millionaire Floyd Odlum, and his family has always been prosperous.)

I rather believe that if Bob had remained in New York with Jennifer, perhaps the early kinks in his character might have straightened out in time. But who can say? In any event, Jennifer came to Hollywood ahead of Bob to star in Song of Bernadette. A few weeks later, Bob was called by Dore Schary for a test in Bataan. Richard Widmark was also tested for the part. Bob won. I wonder what would have happened to Bob and Jennifer if Widmark had won the part instead?

For a while in Hollywood, Jennifer denied she was married. It wasn't her fault, but it hammered the first crack into her marriage. She was playing the role of Bernadette, a virgin who had visions, and a married woman with two children would sound like wrong casting. Bob agreed to keep up his part of the pretence, but he winced every time his wife was referred to as a single girl. No man wants to be a secret husband and father.

truth will out . . .

The marriage and family slipped out in an interview Jennifer gave me during the making of Bernadette. She begged me not to mention it. I didn't—until others did. Bob also let the truth slip out to another interviewer in an unguarded moment. The story was printed. "What an ideal situation," everyone cooed. "She's a big success. He's a big success. Their marriage is a big success. They have two lovely children. Who could ask for anything more?"

Jennifer could and did. At about the time of the release of Bernadette she separated from Bob.

To understand Bob's behavior at this time, you have to realize that the strongest of all his strong dislikes is the press. Before he signed with Metro, Bob had it written into his contract that he does not have to give any interview unless he wishes. He can't understand why anyone would want to know about what he does when he is not making movies. I've seen him walk away in the middle of a columnist's question.

Well, there was no walking away from the furor of his broken marriage with Jennifer Jones. Every day reporters called him for details and photographers ambushed him for pictures.

He holds the press partly responsible for the actual divorce. "We were trying to work things out," Bob has said sadly. "But I couldn't read a paper without finding something that widened the gulf between us." So he went further into his shell, became more aloof, more suspicious of motives.

Between the Jennifer and Barbara marriages, Bob had a couple of near weddings—with Florence Pritchett and Lee Marshall, the divorced wife of Herbert Marshall. Florence was even talking of getting a job in Hollywood—to be near Bob, I presumed at the time. He always insisted that he and Florence—and he and Lee—were friends only.

To me it seemed to be the unfortunate case of an unhappy man who wanted to be in love and to marry—and who was desperately yearning for a firm foundation for his very shaky personal house.

I once overheard him reply to a woman acquaintance who had asked him, "What do you really want in life, Bob?"

"I want to remarry," he said sincerely and seriously. "I want a nice girl who knows movies, but not necessarily an actress."

Bob really does need understanding. For all his strange, impulsive behavior he is essentially a family man. He adores his two boys and I know no one in Hollywood who is better to his parents. Bob moved into his studio dressing room when his mother and father visited him recently, so they could have complete freedom in his house.

He teaches his kids to hunt and fish. They go on terrific rabbit hunts, from which they come home with a lot of imaginary adventures and no rabbits. He reads stories to them by the hour. All the unhappiness leaves his face and voice when he talks of his plans for the boys. He was going to take them to South America, just before he met his second wife. He will probably take them now in the spring. He rented a house at Malibu last year because he wanted to teach the youngsters to swim. He bought his present ranch next to the late Will Rogers' home, so the boys could have their own horses. He is trying, and quite sincerely, to give his children the security and emotional stability he misses in his own life.

Two years ago Walker suddenly announced to Metro that he was quitting motion pictures. This was immediately following the great praise given him for his performance in the Sea of Grass.

"I'm just tired of pictures," he explained. "No more movies for me. I'm going to New York to rest." He wound up with his family in Utah. He said he would stay there for the rest of his life.

In a week he came back to Hollywood.

Bob's marital crack-up with Barbara gave him, naturally, a great emotional shock. For a time thereafter he was in the hospital as a result of not eating or sleeping. "How about drinking?" I asked. He was not drinking, either—at that time.

Shortly before his recent arrest, he had said that he was eager to get down to hard work again and get going with his career. I do know that his acting means a lot to him and that he always gives honest performances. But Hollywood is currently, whether deservedly or not, very much on the defensive against charges of loose living. Though M-G-M has given him "one more chance," it does seem probable that, unless he undergoes a radical and convincing change, Bob Walker's screen days are numbered.

And yet—if only somehow Bob can get over his deep-seated belief that every man's hand is against him! If only he can believe that the human race, on the whole, can be pretty nice! If only he can forget the past and find a way of fitting himself inside the everyday pattern of human relationships! Then, perhaps, there will come a day when Robert Walker will no longer be on the outside looking in—at other people's happiness.

And, still hoping for that day to come, there are a lot more people than you think, Bob. THE END

THE GANG'S ALL HERE

(Continued from page 36)

The Tobins, Ann's Uncle Pat and Aunt Sissy, were just placing the turkey on the table. It was surrounded by steaming platters of spaghetti, bowls of hot potato salad, slaw, tomato rings, tiny whole beets, and a punch bowl of apple cider with sprigs of mint and diced peaches floating on top.

Everyone lined up around the table, Army fashion, while Ann donned a chef's cap and apron and doled out heaping platefuls. Jane, Lon and Liz were the first in line. Then they planted themselves on the living-room floor, taking over the piano bench as a table. Dick Moore and Doug Dick favored a half-reclining position on the rug. They propped their heads against the divan and balanced their plates on their knees. (This comfort was quickly abandoned when they discovered that the tufted gray rug was transferring itself to their blue serge suits.)

Everyone sat around stuffing and chattering away. Danny and Janet took turns explaining how they had lost Ann's address and spent 45 minutes telephoning all their friends to get it. "And all the time we were just a block from the house," they wailed.

The ice-cream cake was a masterpiece. It was a replica of Ann's house—complete to tiny welcome mat and picket fence.

By the time we had tamped this into ourselves, we were starting to come apart at the seams.

Scott (where does he get that energy?) Brady was the first to revive.

He tried to interest us in group singing.

No response.

"Well, how about a game of darts?"

All groaned at the mere mention of physical exercise.

Soon Scott found a better use for the darts. He slipped up behind Mel Torme and deftly popped the balloon Mel was holding by its string.

Hearing the pop, Mel jumped up.

Scott immediately thrust the microphone of Ann's home recorder into Mel's hand. "Thank you, Mr. Torme!" said Scott. "We appreciate your volunteering."

So Mr. Torme sang a song. He sang several songs. Then he turned the mike over to those three cut-ups, Doug, Danny and Dick.

Making like news commentators, they gave out with last-minute news flashes from around the world, concluding with a special salute to Korea—which just happens to be where Liz Taylor's "very good friend," Lieut. Glenn Davis, is stationed. Liz blushed.

Most of us recorded housewarming sentiments. Those who didn't sing, signed Ann's guest book. Susan Perry composed a sonnet (honest!), Art Loew drew a mermaid, and Lon McCallister waxed lyrical. He wrote a page of things like—"It's been grand, Ann . . . it's been ickie, Dickie . . . it's been zanie, Janie . . ."—and would have gone on for pages, but Ann managed to lure him away. She did so by singing that slightly eerie, slightly bewitching mermaid wail from Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid.

Ann then announced that she couldn't wait any longer: she was going to open her housewarming presents.

The bumper crop of gifts ran the gamut from the peculiar to the practical. MODERN SCREEN presented her with a philodendron totem-pole plant. Ann was amazed that the greenery fitted so perfectly into her living-room alcove. (Little did she know we'd spent half a day measuring plants to find the precise one.)

Ann lined the gift cards along the mantel, while Susan and Gloria gathered up the wrappings and put them in the fireplace.

The rest of us propped marshmallows on forks and waited for them to turn golden brown.

The fire was "just right" for toasting marshmallows. In fact, the entire housewarming had been "just right." THE END

Any time late hours and overindulgence bring on a spell of acid indigestion, try Tums for sweet relief. Taken like candy mints, Tums neutralize excess acid and settle upset stomach almost instantly. You feel better fast! No baking soda (bicarbonate) in Tums. No danger of overalkalizing; no acid rebound. Get Tums today!

Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS FOR THE TUMMY!

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

QUICK RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION

NR TUMS are antacid, not a laxative. For a laxative, use mild, all-vegetable NR Tablets (Nature's Remedy). Get a 25-cent box today.

FINEST SELECT GENUINE

EGYPTIAN HENNA

for that glamorous Titian, Auburn, Red or Henna hair shade. Avoid uncertainties. See the difference.

One pound $1.50
(plus 3ac Fed. tax.) postpaid

Money back if not satisfied. No C.O.D.'s please.

JOSEPH STARLEY
Apothecary and Chemist
509 Fifth Avenue New York 17, N. Y.

Here's MONEY for You!

Sell EVERYDAY CARDS

Get quick cash showing gorgeous greetings for Birthdays, Anniversaries, other year 'round occasions. 15 card Assortment sells for only $1—you make up to 50c. Name Imprinted "Charmettes," Personalized Napkins, Stationery, Gift Wraps. Start earning now. Samples on approval.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

ARTISTIC CARD COMPANY
102 WAY STREET, ELMIRA, NEW YORK

DRAW for MONEY

Be An Artist!

Trained Artists are Capable of Earning $60, $75 and more a Week. It's pleasant and interesting to study Art the W.S.A. way. COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING, CARTOONING all in ONE complete home study course. No previous Art experience necessary—hundreds have profited by our practical methods since 1914. TWO ART OUTFITS furnished. Full information in FREE BOOK, "Art for Pleasure and Profit." APPROVED FOR TRAINING UNDER G.I. BILL.

FREE BOOK gives details

WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
Studio 801 R, 1115 15 St., N. W.
Washington 5, D. C.

Name.....
Street..... AGE.....
City..... Zone..... State.....

THIS SECRET POWER

(Continued from page 46)

alone at the Women's University Club in London. A chic, smart-looking woman came up to my table. "I'm Sylvia Thompson," she said. She was a famous novelist. I had read her books and enjoyed them and I said so.

"I've just written my first play," she told me, "and it's being produced. I've been watching you all evening. Have you ever thought of acting? You're ideal for the girl's part. Could we have coffee together in the library and talk it over?"

If I had tried, I couldn't have picked a more implausible setting for such a welcome overture. By no stretch of the imagination could you connect the sedate Women's University Club with anything theatrical. The University Appointments Bureau, located in the club, helped to place college graduates and, reluctantly facing the fact that it was desirable to eat, I was seeking a teachership somewhere, perhaps a librarian's job at a university. I didn't really want those jobs. I wanted a chance to act. But illness had nipped my budding stage career rather disastrously and apparently there wasn't a second chance for me. Stage producers around London had been pretty convincing about that—and recently. In fact, under the table my feet still ached from pounding pavements and climbing office stairs.

dream come true . . .

Yet— "Would you read the part for me and Laurence Olivier, who'll direct and play the lead?" I heard Sylvia Thompson saying. She was offering me exactly what I'd been thinking longingly about over my dinner as she came up.

Of course I read the part—and I got it! I spent my last shillings for lodgings near the theater where I started rehearsals immediately. Before that play ended, I was rehearsing for another, and then another. I played eight shows in a row for my first success as an actress. Why did it come about? And in such an incredible place in such a fantastic out-of-the-blue way? Because, I'm convinced, I wanted it to.

I know you get whatever you want in this life if you want it badly enough, Now, far be it from me to turn into Greer Garson, Girls' Guide and Friendly Philosopher at this late date. Those are roles I've never played and I don't fancy myself the type. But only a wooden Indian could fail to notice what's been demonstrated to me so many times through some fairly high—and fairly low—spots of fortune.

Looking back, I think I always wanted to be an actress, because I dramatized desperately everything that happened to me, everything I thought about and heard and read. I had to. I had little real drama in my childhood. I was an only child and a lonely one. My father died when I was four months old, and unfortunately, he didn't believe in life insurance. My mother raised me with one loving hand and with the other managed the few properties he left to keep us going. I was often alone and on top of that practically always cursed with some juvenile pip or other, which meant I spent most of my play days in bed.

Parties weren't for me, because every time I started off to one, it seemed, I got bronchitis. And at school, just as I'd finally work my way on to the hockey squad or the fencing team, a doctor would listen, shake his head and say, "No—bad for your heart." I grew up swathed in mufflers, I carried pills and lozenges wherever I went. I suppose I could have fitted right into a page of Freud on juvenile frustrations if I hadn't lost myself in reading and study, diverting my restlessness to cramming my head.

As a result I was a top scholar—no prodigy, thank goodness, but precocious. The education I wanted so badly I earned throughout my school days with prizes and scholarships. At 14 I tutored young gentlemen for their entrance exams to Oxford and Cambridge.

I'm not tooting my own horn as a Girl Brain—just showing how really much of an introvert I was because of my shut-in life. And I longed to break out of it, to do something exciting for a change, something glamorous, something to throw me in contact with thousands of people, the people I was starved for. That's why I'm sure I always wanted to be an actress.

Not that I knew it exactly at the time. All I really knew then was that I wanted desperately to be something special. I felt a bit on the spot about that. I was not just the only daughter of the family but, in a sense, the son as well. Two wonderful grandfathers doted on me. I'm named after them both. Grandfather Garson was a Scottish elder of the kirk, the very soul of integrity and kindness, a wonderful man who taught me my letters when I was only two. Grandfather Greer was Irish, a prop of the Presbyterian church, the factor of a huge estate in County Down who knew all about animals and growing things and imparted the love of them to me as a child.

I worshipped them both and felt I had to live up to them, and to my mother, widowed so early and alone. She had left Queens College in Belfast to take one of the first civil service appointments ever opened to women; she was one of the first women magistrates in England, starting on a brilliant career herself. Then she'd fallen in love with my father and when he died there she was saddled with the care of me. Often it was nip and tuck, but she always managed to give me what I needed. I felt an especial debt to her to make something of myself, to make myself worthy of her.

I wonder how many of us would hunt and struggle for some sort of success if it weren't to make the people who love us proud?

I don't regret the heartaches and discouragements I suffered (and so many have had so many more than I!) trying to break out and get what I wanted. After college I was off to a fortunate acting start with the lead in a Shaw play on tour. The salary was minute and the part physically rugged, but I knew that if I made good I'd have a contract with the Birmingham Repertory at the end of the tour. Well, acting through the provinces in drafty theaters, pretty soon my old bronchitis acted up. I came out of it with a throat red, swollen and dangerous. The doctor took one look and ordered me to rest and then have my tonsils out. I had to be replaced at the Repertory, my contract went glimmering.

mountain of woe . . .

I'd counted heavily on that contract. Now, instead, I had a mountain of medical expense, more of my girlhood sickbed frustrations, a block in my ambitions a mile high. On top of that, my back started acting up. When I was at Grenoble University in France, I'd spanked the water the wrong way once in a dive and come up with some damaged vertebrae which have plagued me off and on ever since. My anxieties and disappointment didn't make me feel any better.

After my operation, I recuperated at Brighton, England's Atlantic City. It was out of season and deserted. There's nothing more dismal than any beach resort in winter, especially Brighton. The rows of gray, weatherbeaten shacks, the even grayer sea, the cold wind, the loneliness. Nobody was ever lower in luck, funds and spirit than I was.

One day I decided to brave the cold spray for a stroll down the sea walk. I even considered spending money recklessly for a cup of tea to buck up my spirits. I was dressed in black, I remember, wearing no makeup, walking with a cane and bent over like Grandmother Grump. No one in his right mind would ever have tagged me an actress—pardon—ex-beginning actress. Yet in that dreary setting and mood I received reassurance, encouragement, even inspiration—in the most outlandish possible way.

The swinging sign over her shabby little booth said "Madame Stella—Fortunes Told By Tea Leaves, Cards, Crystal Ball and Modern Miraculous Methods—One-Half Crown." I had one, a precious one, and why I popped right in with it extravagantly I'll never know. Who knows why we do all the things we do?

Madame Stella's booth smelled of onion and so did she. She came to me through a tent flap, wiping off the crumbs of her lunch from her shrewd lips. She was a big, frowsy, shapeless woman, but she had common sense and a certain mother wit shining out of her dark eyes. She took my palm.

She picked out a year when I'd been ill as a child and told me what it was. She described accurately my home, my schooling, my maidenly milestones. She won my interest so that when she said, "I see you in public life, I see large crowds around you listening," my hand trembled on the velveteen cover of her tiny card table.

"Music—no," she said. "Speech—that's it—acting. I see success, a happy, successful career and life. . . ."

She talked on, saying words I needed to hear, telling me to arise, Phoenix-like, from my own ashes of despair. There were the critic's corner

WHAT PAPER DO YOU READ?

Danny Kaye's admirers, than whom there are none more intense, are likely to strain their eyes looking for their boy in A Song Is Born. For the Danny who ambles through this picture is but a shade of the scintillant comedian whom the screen fans have come to love. Indeed, he is something of a specter amid a hodge-podge of animated acts. And, to make it thoroughly depressing, he doesn't sing one song.

Bosley Crowther
The New York Times

Danny Kaye, now bouncing back and forth between Hollywood and London, also bounces forth this week in a lively comedy called A Song Is Born. . . . This is a film tailored for the Kaye talents just as, back in the days when the title was A Ball Of Fire, the same story and the same role were as carefully arranged for Gary Cooper.

Eileen Creelman
The New York Sun

star hunt solution

Well, how did you make out? There were 40 hidden names on page 82. If you got them all—you're terrific. If you found 30—you're good. Less than 25—you're no movie fan!

March	Brooks	Tone
Crisp	Shore	Hunt
North	Eddy	Stone
West	Power	Price
Waters	King	Lane
Lake	Grant	Parks
Fields	Ball	Judge
Rains	Main	Temple
Day	Hall	Marsh
Garner	Knight	Raft
Young	Garland	Ford
Hope	Meek	Peck
Tufts	Mature	Best
Brown

other usual things, too—heart lines, dark men in my life and what not. I don't know about the dark men, but everything else came true and, the funny part was, I was sure it would come true even as I listened. All, that is, except one part which seemed fantastic to me then. "I see you crossing deep waters," predicted Madame Stella, "to America, for fame and success." I had no thought of America then at all. My eyes were on London. Somehow after this strange palm-reading, which my reason told me was sheer nonsense, I felt much better and I packed up and left Brighton for the city. Soon after, there was the amazing good luck with Sylvia Thompson and the part in her play, the eight plays that followed and my first real start.

Now, I'm not psychic at all. Tables don't tap for me and Ouija boards sit sullen and dormant. I don't think there was anything supernatural about Madame Stella's divinings. I just think she read my mind—and what I wanted was so ever-present at the front of my mind. And because I wanted it so badly, of course I got it, bad back, sore throat and damp spirits notwithstanding.

The last play on my lucky London stage run was one called Old Music at the St. James. I had finished the show one night and gone to my dressing room when Jimmy, the stagedoor guard, knocked at my door. He was hopping with excitement and the news that Louis B. Mayer would like to see me. "From 'Ollywood," exulted Jimmy. "Big gintlemen from 'Ollywood. Wot luck—eh?"

Mr. Mayer was on the tag end of a London stay. By rights of his schedule, he should already have departed, but for a business delay. He would never have gone to see Old Music but for a misunderstanding. The title led him to believe it was full of old Viennese music, Strauss waltzes and things, which he loves. Actually, there wasn't a tune in the whole show; it was straight drama. Five minutes after I came on the stage, he asked, "Who is that girl?" and he got this reply from two M-G-M London men, "Oh, she's a girl who isn't interested in pictures." It was true. I'd had picture advances and turned them down. But Mr. Mayer insisted on meeting me and inviting me to join his party after the theater at the Savoy Grill.

It wasn't an evening you'd expect great things from. I was tired and, frankly, more interested in my pillow than any Hollywood producer. I was dressed in a red sport jacket and my hair was frightfully mussed by the wig I'd taken off. All the executives' wives were splendid in dinner gowns and I felt out of place. When Mr. Mayer asked if I'd like to sign a contract and go to Hollywood, I said, "I don't think so. I'm lucky here. I'm not for pictures."

My whole attitude was negative when he persisted. I said I'd have to take a test, of course, and he said, "Oh, don't bother." But I insisted and the test was awful. I said "No" and kept saying it—but a week later I gave in and agreed to a contract over the long distance telephone with Mr. Mayer who'd gone on to Paris. Why? Well, I liked Mr. Mayer and told myself he was the first person I felt I could trust a career to. But I already had a career in London and I didn't know another soul in Hollywood; I'd never seen the place. I think I said "Yes" basically because I'd wanted to go to Hollywood for a long time, whether I really knew it or not. Madame Stella had dug that out of my subconscious three years before. I also think that because I wanted it, all the intricate hit-and-near-miss events that brought it about happened. Call it fate, luck, opportunity—I believe the wish is back of it all or it doesn't happen.

My first year in Hollywood was one long, nightmarish wish for a job to play. I did nothing. The only pictures I made were X-Rays. My leading men were doctors, dozens of them. I had consultations and conferences involving, not scripts and characters, but ominous projects like operations, harnesses, plaster casts and such. You see, my old back injury kicked up on me the minute I arrived and put everything else, practically, out of whack. If I wasn't being jabbed by a needle I was being tapped, tested and explored by all sorts of surgical contrivances.

The physical pain wasn't half as bad, though, as the disappointment of my now burning desire to make a movie. I'm not keyed to leisure. That was the longest idle spell I'd had in my life—15 months. Complexes, inhibitions and frustrations piled up on me like smothering pillows. (I was also going slowly broke!)

Everyone was awfully nice—people are always nicer when you're down, I've found, than when you're on top—but obviously my studio couldn't keep me hanging around idle and useless forever. I no longer added up as a prospect for pictures, but for a wheelchair. I went into the hospital for an exploratory operation—just to see what major remodelling I needed. The day after they carted me home, weak and wobbly, my agent arrived with flowers and bad news.

"The studio wants to settle your contract," he said. "I'm sorry."

row, row—to your boat . . .

Suddenly I knew what I had to do. When you can't wait for your ship to come in, you've got to row out to it. "Don't worry a bit about it," I heard myself telling Mike Levee. "I'll take charge of this tomorrow."

I don't know how I wiggled out of my wheelchair next day, but I fixed myself up and got down to the studio, packing my scrapbook under my arm. All of my best friends at M-G-M were away, Louis B. Mayer was in Europe. The only one I knew even slightly was Edward Mannix, studio production head. I marched into his office, like any green, stagestruck girl. Imagine, hoping to influence a veteran Hollywood executive with a scrapbook! Especially when you're up to be fired! But I knew what I wanted. I wanted my chance.

Although it was half-past seven o'clock and I'm sure Mr. Mannix was dying for his dinner, he listened to my sales talk and actually inspected my scrapbook of London stage triumphs from beginning to end. And I left with the assurance that I wouldn't be dropped, that I'd have my chance. And soon I did. Soon I travelled back to London to make Goodbye Mr. Chips.

And here is something for what it's worth: The results of my "exploratory operation" were added up shortly before I

RING BARGAINS

6-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
An exciting 10 Kt. GOLD mounting with 6 Guaranteed chip Diamonds. Both No. D-36 Each 5.95 $9.95

4-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
Treasure of Love! 10 Kt. Gold settings with 4 Genuine chip Diamonds. Both No. D-60 Each 4.95 $8.95

10-DIAMOND CHIP BRIDAL PAIR
10 Kt. Gold Wedding & Engagement Ring with 10 Genuine chip Diamonds. Both No. D-38 Each 6.95 $11.95

STERLING SILVER
12 imitation DIAMONDS with Brilliant on STERLING SILVER. Adorable! No. 2R-417 Only . . . $1.98

STERLING SILVER PAIR
Wedding & Engagement Ring set with Gorgeous, Brilliant Imitation Diamonds. No. 2R-508 Both . . . $1.95

BIRTH-MONTH RING
Gleaming, Individual Fancy Birth month Ring in Sterling Silver. Send Month. No. R-425. Only 98¢

LOVE BRIDAL PAIR
25 Exquisite Brilliants in STERLING SILVER filigree pattern. Order Both No. R-405 Each 2.95 $3.95

MEN'S IMITATION DIAMOND RING
Men's, On Brite Sterling Silver. Looks so Very EXPENSIVE. No. 2R-426 Price . . . $1.98

STERLING SILVER BRIDAL SET
11 Gorgeous imitation Diamonds. Sterling Silver. Both No. R-442 Each 1.95 $2.95

STERLING SILVER SIGNET RING
Brilliantly flanked initial on Ebony Color Base in STERLING SILVER. Order one now! Price No. R-448 $2.98

"BIG TIME" GOLD FILLED MEN'S RING
Hinge White Brilliant and 4 Red Brilliants on Genuine 1-20-14 Kt. Rolled Gold Plate —Bargain! No. R-555 $3.95

MEN'S MASSIVE RING
1-20-12 Kt. GOLD Filled Ring set with 3 Large, Brilliant Fiery White Sparklers . . . Order by No. R-511 $3.95

SEND NO MONEY! Just pay postman C.O.D. on delivery the amount plus 20% Tax and postage. Write Name, Address & Order Number. State finger size or send string or strip of paper. Money Back Guarantee. Send all orders to WORLD WIDE DIAMOND CO.
Dept. A-911, 2451 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

PREMIUMS GIVEN!

BOYS! GIRLS! LADIES!
SEND NO MONEY NOW!

Just send name and address. Ladies! Girls! Men! Boys! Wrist watches, pocket watches, alarm clocks, food choppers, blankets—many others in catalog, or choice of Cash Commission. SIMPLY GIVE beautiful art pictures with well known White CLOVERINE Brand SALVE sold to friends and neighbors at 25c a box (with picture) and remit amount called for under premium wanted in catalog sent with order postage paid by us. Write for order Salve and pictures sent on trust to start.
WILSON CHEMICAL CO., Dept. 10-64, TYRONE, PA.

STAMMER?
GET THIS FREE BOOK!
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 48 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 4910, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

Happy, Profitable Hours in PHOTO COLORING

EASY TO LEARN Fascinating hobby and vocation learned at home by average man or woman artistically inclined. Modern method brings out natural, life-like colors. Many have earned while learning. FREE BOOKLET tells how to get started doing this delightful home work for photographers, stores, individuals, and friends. Mail coupon below.

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2361, Chicago 5, Ill.
Send Booklet "Photo Coloring for Pleasure and Profit" and full particulars.
NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY..... STATE.....

left to make Chips. The verdict: a serious spinal operation, one that would keep me in bed for months, perhaps a year. I couldn't consider it because I didn't have the money. Three weeks later, I was back at work and happy—and not a touch of a pain anywhere. People said I never looked better than I did in Goodbye, Mister Chips. That was after the most agonizing, sick and bedridden year in my life! But I was back at work, you see, and I was happy—and work is a great cure for a great many things. (I haven't had that operation yet. But today I can swim, ride, play tennis, climb a rope—even stand on my head.) And I've been pretty busy ever since.

I was happy, busy and well throughout Mrs. Miniver, Random Harvest, Madame Curie, Mrs. Parkington and Valley of Decision. I was nominated three times for Academy Awards and won my "Oscar." I recouped my shaky finances and realized many of my deep personal desires, like giving my mother a home such as she would have had if my father had lived. I've made wonderful friends. I've been in and out of love. I've lived and I've developed as a person.

Is that the live-happily-ever-after end to my tale? No, not quite!

A couple of years ago, along with the whole Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, I wanted something too much. Clark Gable, our friend and home-lot hero, was back from the wars and everybody wanted to make his first return picture a bang-up hit. I played opposite Clark. Maybe we all tried too hard. Adventure wasn't good at all.

That was strike one, to mix a metaphor. Then a friend of mine sent me an Enoch Arden story I thought particularly good and timely for those post-war days. But it wasn't made until two years later, very much out of date, and censorship robbed it of what punch was left. I loved doing it (although that's when I almost drowned at Bib Sur) but Desire Me was a sad mistake. No alibis, though. Just strike two. I steeled my red head for the blows and they came, the cracks by the columnists and critics. I was a setup.

It was all very salutary and, I'm sure, exactly what I needed. I even had some

MODERN SCREEN

"Go to the movies? Where d'ya think I've been for the last 3 hours."

fun out of it with a friend of mine, Deborah Kerr, just over from London herself to make a movie career. It was good for a titillating gossip hint in one column that "Deborah Kerr is being groomed at Metro to take Greer Garson's place as First Lady" —something of the sort. We had a lot of fun out of it, Deborah and I. I think I invited her over once for arsenic sandwiches.

But seriously, there are compensations even to setbacks. A good healthy check-up on yourself, for one thing. And expression of loyalty from the people who like you.

I've always loved the letters I get from fans. They come from all over, even from natives in New Zealand. One little package, without a name, arrived when the brickbats were flying thickest. It said simply, "To the finest actress I know and the most lovable person." That did me no end of good, that thought, absurd though it was. So did the note from some tiny town that read, "Don't worry, Greer, I am writing a Western for you that's sure to bring you back."

Well, it wasn't a Western I wanted (thanks, pal, just the same) after my Humpty-Dumpty. I wanted a rip-snorting comedy to play. No more "first lady" parts. No more queens; the queen's crown had slipped slightly. Besides, I've always been dying to clown on the screen. Well—I got it: Julia Misbehaves.

I've never had so much fun making a picture. In it, among other perils, I'm sunk in a leaky boat, rolled in a mud bath in a swamp, chased by a bear and—this makes me pretty proud—tossed about like a beanbag by a troupe of acrobats. I hope audiences like Julia as much as I do—and I think they will. M-G-M calls it "The New Look on Garson" and nobody's kidding. One good picture and I'm happy as a lark again!

I've always fancied a little song Irene Dunne sang a few years ago in Love Affair. I hum it every now and then to myself, and I hope that pleases Leo McCarey, who wrote it, because I know he'd rather write songs than direct pictures although they don't make him nearly so rich or famous.

It was called "Wishing," and the lines I liked went—

So if you wish long enough, wish strong enough,
You'll come to know
That wishing will make it so . . .

It's not that easy or simple, of course. There's a whole lot more to getting what you want out of life. But that's a good thing to start with and never let go of. I'm convinced, too, it's what makes the good things happen. At least, that's how they've happened to me. THE END

(Editor's Note: Greer Garson has been prominently mentioned in the news of late with Bud Fogelson, the Texas oil millionaire. For information about this, read what Louella Parsons has to say on page 8.)

AND BABY MAKES THREE

(Continued from page 49)

Jo," using the name of the old-fashioned girl she'd been playing that day on the set in Little Women.

Because somehow there was something old-fashioned and wistful about her feelings as she watched, lying under the pink coverlet, what she herself had been long ago, what now was hers to love and raise and mould and care for.

June closed the door softly and then leaned in Dick's arms. "Oh," she said. Just "Oh."

"Want to send her back?" grinned Dick.

June didn't answer; she didn't hear. "Oh, darling," she said, "she smiled right at me!"

That's when Olie had to grin, too.

"I'm afraid that was gas," she said.

"She smiled," repeated June stubbornly, "she smiled at me."

Miss Allyson Powell has climbed considerably up the ladder of babyhood since the day Dick and June first gazed in awe at their adopted baby daughter. She was only seven weeks on this earth then and now she's pushing six months. From seven insignificant pounds she'd padded herself in rosy bumps and folds to a solid 16. She downs her pablum, orange juice, strained fruits and vegetables like a big girl; she coos and "talks," rolls over, kicks and crawls—and her smiles are not necessarily inspired by burps. In short, Allyson is a strictly advanced baby, take it from Dick and June.

But neither Dick nor June will ever forget the happy, hectic time when Allyson made her three-point, hurry-up landing on their Hollywood home.

Ever since she can remember June had wanted a baby. Always she has overflowed with warmth and affection, enough to cover her own family, her husband, and the children they both wanted so much. When two years of married life passed and there still wasn't a promise of a baby to hold in her arms, Dick and June decided not to wait any longer. Over a year ago they put in their request for an infant—boy or girl—at an Eastern adoption home. They said nothing about it to anyone. They knew the waiting list was miles long, that their blessed event was months away. They knew it took time to investigate carefully their fitness and responsibility as parents, to find just the right baby to fit their own backyard and blood-ties and even the way they looked. June sighed and resigned herself to wait forever if necessary.

Then one night the telephone rang. June had one of those miserable, stuffy colds. She'd worked late on the set of Little Women and she intended to go back and keep working next day without telling anyone she felt so punk, because it was so lonely and dismal sticking in your empty room with the sniffles while Dick was away all day running around on business to get off on his personal-appearance tour.

So she answered the phone a little groggily and when she heard, "Hello, Mrs. Powell? . . . Well, hello, Mother!" she just didn't get it at all.

"You bust have the wrog dumber," croaked June, before she heard the long distance voice go on—

"Congratulations, Mrs. Powell. Your baby's here, your little daughter's here."

And then it registered. She wobbled in her chair and felt her temperature shoot up to at least 103. June managed to squeak, "Oh, how wonderful—wonderful" and then she dazedly passed over the receiver to Dick, gasping "Our baby!"

Eight days they had to get things ready. Only eight days, and every day crammed with things to do to the rim of the clock. Dick winding up Station West and packing his bag for the East and his Pitfall appearances. June, deep in her toughest Little Women scenes and battling a flu bug, too. Tack and Teru, their Japanese couple, newly gone to Japan to work again for

(Continued on page 90)

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION

SHIRLEY FROHLICH
director

GLORIA LAMPERT
associate

Fan Club Clinic: "Dear MSFCA: Here's my answer to the question, 'Are fan clubs rackets?' A fan club can be a powerful organization for good; it can be just a waste of time (if it hasn't any activities and if members spend their time just dreaming about their star) or sometimes it can be a selfish racket. (There are some prexies who make a business of fan clubs. They write their stars for pictures, autographs, etc., and then sell them. Do you wonder studios object to clubs!) Anyway, whether the club is a worthwhile organization, waste of time, or outright racket depends entirely on the members. (signed) Marie Dotteresse, Perry's Rambling Roses." (Editor's Note: Thanks, Marie, for summing up the problem and for pointing out what we've always believed: that a good club depends on ACTIVE members!

Remember the question that came up a few months back? What to do when you've sent your journals to your exchange member regularly and you've received only that first journal in exchange? Nelda Clough of the Charles Korvin club has an easy solution: When two club prexies agree to exchange memberships, they simply have a friendly understanding beforehand that it's to be on a journal-for-journal basis. In other words, you are not obliged to send any new journal, until you receive one in return.

News of the clubs: Eva Shapiro, new prexy of the Bob Mitchum Club, tells us that everybody's anxious to support the club and Bob . . . Want to join the Ella Raines Club at reduced rates? The first hundred fans to apply to prexy Robert Breslin, 1933 East 18 Street, Brooklyn 29, N. Y., will be accepted at 75 cents per year . . . Betty Jane Engler says we neglected her club for Macdonald Carey when we plugged new clubs. Okay, Betty Jane, and have you heard of the new ones for Art Mooney, Dorothy Shae, Herbie Fields, Stewart Granger, Ralph Lewis and Richard Walsh? Write MSFCA for name and address of prexies . . . Addie Gushin announces that due to the pressure of personal affairs, she's forced to give up her club for John Tyers. Also, she has a perfectly good "Speed-O-Print" mimeograph for sale. For further info, write Addie at 61 Milford Ave., Newark 8, N. J. . . . Clemon N. Poor, Jr., prexy of the Frank Latimore Club, would like to buy clippings about Frank. If you have any, write to Clem at 3105 Avenue N, Lubbock, Texas . . . Hermina Levitt was campaigning for members for her Stuart Foster Club in her high school when the school paper editors heard about it and invited her to be "interviewed" for the paper . . . Vinnie Lubrano interviewed her star, Vic Damone, on station WNYC, N. Y.

June Allyson Club (Lois Carnahan) is selling snaps for a cause. All money taken in from the snap sale will be used to sponsor foreign members in the club . . . Janet Miller offers free membership in her Alan Ladd Club to anyone bringing in two new members. And a half-price membership to the first five girls named Sue who write her at 1310 St. Johns Pl., Brooklyn, N. Y. . . . Dick Contino Clubs are sending out an urgent call to all members to trek to Washington, D. C., for the finals in Horace Heidt's great talent contest—and, of course, support Dick for that grand prize of $5,000 and a career in music. The night: December 12. The place: Uline Arena, 3rd and M Streets, N.E., Wash., D. C. . . . The first member from any State (except Illinois) who writes to Marceline Sonenberg, 1548 N. Honore Street, Chicago 22, Ill., will receive a year's free membership in her Lloyd Bridges Club . . . Pat Seminetz, prexy of the Janis Paige Club, spent a day on the One Sunday Afternoon set and had a wonderful time . . . If you have any of those scenic view post card folders you don't want anymore, why not send them on to Beverly Hackett, Morris Memorial Hospital, Milton, W. Virginia. Bev, a member of the Club Friendship, has been in an iron lung for two years. She makes a hobby of collecting picture post cards. She'd especially like some foreign ones.

Special offer to fans: If you plan a visit to New York and would like to see a broadcast especially designed for movie fans, we recommend MODERN SCREEN's own show, Movie Matinee. It's a fascinating movie quiz, and you'll have a chance to win beautiful prizes, too! The show goes on Monday to Friday, 1 to 1:30. Write MSFCA, P. O. Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y., for tickets. Be sure to state how many tickets you'll require.

8TH SEMI-ANNUAL MSFCA TROPHY CUP CONTEST (5TH LAP)

If we do say so ourselves, prizes are something we do have! Colorful HELENA RUBINSTEIN Four Cast lipstick sets to suit your own individual hair coloring. EBERHARD FABER Pen and Pencil sets that come in a variety of shades and write so-o-o smoothly. Subscriptions galore to all Dell publications, like Front Page Detective, Radio Album, Screen Album and Screen Stories. TANGEE TRIP-KITS, packed with Tangee cosmetics and especially for club artists. If you don't know how to qualify for these prizes, drop us a note. We'll tell all!

This Is My Best: (100 points) "Freedom Train," Shirley Walsh, Golden Comets. "What Price Prejudice," Leona Rosenthal, Mason Manuscript. "Lest We Forget Too Soon," Diane Rye, Alan Ladd (Gerry Kee). "The Step," Catherine Moylan, Danny Scholl journal. "A Sunday with Bing," Jean Maher, Bingites. "Warmer Valley," Ginnie Martin, Sinatra Times. Best Journals: (500 points) League 1. None qualified. League 2. (tied) Golden Comet, (MacDonald-Farrington), James Stewart journal. League 3. (tied) Joseph Cotten, Stewart Granger journals. Best Editors: (250 points) League 1. Margaret and Joy Nicholin, Nelson Eddy Golden Notes. League 2. Marionne Oppenheim, Bette Davis. League 3. Ginger Bagnall, The Whistler (Jack Berch). Best Covers (250 points) League 1. Gene Autry journal. League 2. (tied) Alan Ladd (Kee) journal, Musical Notes. League 3. (tied) Dick Haymes journal and Joseph Cotten journal. Best Artist: (150 points) Clover Hutchings, Gene Autry journal. Worthwhile Activities: (250 points) League 1. No entries. League 2. MacDonald (Farrington; donated $120 to World Church Service). League 2. Jimmy Stewart Club (sent 200 books to hospitals). League 3. Alan Ladd (Bain; gave dance to aid the blind). Membership Increases: (100 points) League 1. No entries. League 2. Mel Torme Club. League 3. June Allyson Club. Best Correspondents: (50 points) League 1. None qualified. League 2. Marion Hesse, Ginger Rogers Club. League 3. Ginger Bagnall, Jack Berch Club. Condid Camera Contest: (100 points to first prize winner, 50 points to others.) Sarah Ann Kennedy, Bingites. Helen Pollex, Rise Stevens, Kay MacGowan, Pierre Aumont. Betty Baker, Dennis Morgan. Maude Summerfield, Sinatra of Staten Island. Gladys Halbach, Joan Crawford Club.

ENTIRE FAMILY (2 to 4 Persons) INSURED! ONLY 3¢ A DAY

Genuine Legal Reserve
LIFE INSURANCE
Insurance for every member of your family (2 to 4 persons) . . . only 3¢ a day (not per person, but for all!)

Pays You for death of any member of your family group. Pays your family should you die. Unusual protection at unbelievably low cost! Send for sample policy today! No cost, nor obligation. No salesman will call. Write—

SERVICE LIFE INS. CO. Dept. 24, Omaha 2, Nebr.

TINY RADIO!
FITS IN YOUR HAND
REALLY WORKS TOO! RED plastic Cabinets. NO TUBES, BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG-INS"! Works on new "Permacrystal" and Roto Tuner! EASY TO USE! SHOULD LAST FOR YEARS!
GUARANTEED TO WORK
ONLY $3.99 Postpaid or send only $1.00 (bill, money order or check) and pay postman $2.99 plus postage on delivery. COMPLETE READY TO PLAY ON SIMPLE ATTACHMENT—MARVELOUS GIFTS—BARGAIN PRICED! GET YOUR TINY RADIO NOW!
MIDWAY SALES, Dept. TMM-I, Kearney, Nebraska

Secret..... of Longer HAIR!
IMPROVE APPEARANCE OF YOUR HAIR IN "ONE" APPLICATION OR YOUR MONEY BACK!
All men adore girls with Longer Hair. Amazing method imported from Paris sold exclusively by us, helps make your Hair Longer. HAIR MIRACLE adds body, brings new life to hair injured by sun, wind, dyes or bleaches. Stops dry brittle ends from breaking allowing hair to grow longer. NOT GREASY OR STICKY! Sensation of the Age. Thrill to new joy of romance & Love with beautiful Longer Hair. SEND NO MONEY! Order now. 2 months' supply $1.49 plus C.O.D. postage & tax. Pay postman. Money refunded in one week if not satisfied.
KAY EVANS of Calif., 150 Powell St., Dept. D-2, San Francisco, Calif.

"Good-Luck" Bracelet Given Away

Girls believe it "good-luck" to wear this charm bracelet. It has fancy chain in 14-k electroplate finish with sure grip clasp. The charms are most attractive—consisting of a Four-leaf-clover, Bluebird, Wishbone and Horse-shoe. GIVEN for selling only 4 Rosebud Salve at 25c a box returning the $1.00. Order 4 salve—Send No Money. (We will mail your Bracelet and 4 salve NOW if you send $1.00 with order).
ROSEBUD PERFUME CO. Box 20, WOODSBORO, MARYLAND.

"How to Make Money with Simple Cartoons"

A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address
FREE BOOK
CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 431 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

Get on "UNCLE SAM'S" Payroll

Start As High As $3,351 Year

MEN-WOMEN
Thousands appointments being made. 40-pg. Book FREE
Mail Coupon Today. SURE.

COUPON

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
(Not Gov't Controlled)
Dept. J108, Rochester 4, N. Y.
Sirs: Rush without charge, (1) 40-page book with list of U. S. Government Jobs; (2) Tell me how to qualify for one.
Name.....
Address..... Yet?.....

(Continued from page 88)

General MacArthur and not a servant in the house. Nothing in the house to take care of a baby and their baby already with reservations on the Chief coming West with a nurse from the Home. Eight days.

Eight sacks . . . eight shirts . . . eight pads . . . eight sheets . . . eight diapers—no . . . migosh . . . eighty diapers! June sat bolt upright in bed at night and counted not sheep but sheets, nipples, evenflow bottles, cotton wrappers, blankets, booties . . . Heavens! Baby-oil, bottle warmers—a crazy, anxious rhyme raced in her head: "a bassinette, a bathinette . . . to keep her dry, to make her wet." . . . Eight days!

Well, there were enough spare minutes to get things done, of course. And there were friends: "I know everything to get and I'll get everything—leave it to me," said Bunny Green, June's close friend who has three kids of her own. "I've the perfect nurse and I've already told her you'll be needing her," assured Paul Granard, their decorator friend. "Name's Miss Olsen and she's a jewel and she's been calling me every week asking about this baby, so stop worrying."

common affliction . . .

Still, worry warts blossomed all over June because, for one thing, she's June Allyson and a perfectionist; and, for another, because that's been a common affliction of new mothers since the world began. On the hour, she'd come up with a new horrifying thought. Once, Miss Olsen lodged the bathinette strategically under a cabinet. June shot an anxious look at the door swinging out overhead. "Oh," she objected, "we can't put it there. Why, every time she sits up and the door opens it'll bump the baby's head!"

Olie sighed. These new mothers. "Mrs. Powell," she explained, "babies don't sit up at seven weeks."

Germs June had never considered. Billions of them suddenly loomed like menacing monsters with fangs, snapping viciously at the nursery from all angles. June mopped everything in sight with antiseptic solution until the new paint threatened to fade away She chased Dick away with his runny nose and fretted about the lingering microbes of her own vanished sniffles. "Babies," soothed Olie understandingly, "are immune to practically everything for six long months." June didn't believe it.

She hoped she'd be cured of the ghastly awfuls when the baby arrived and the suspense was over, the terrific suspense. What if the Chief had a wreck? What if the change of climate proved too sudden for a new-born babe?

But somehow these disasters failed to materialize. Somehow the third member of the Powell family arrived safe, sound, and beautiful.

And quickly June adjusted herself to her new real-life role, the role that comes and comes right by instinct to every girl, whether she realizes it or not. Olie had the baby under perfect care control from the time June pressed a goodbye peck on her downy top and flew to the studio; but when she flew home in the evening she could spend every spare moment taking over, doing and learning. And there was plenty to do and learn:

Licking the awkward business of getting diaper ends to meet over a fat little tummy, for instance, and poking the safety pins through securely without stabbing her fingers. Rolling Little Jo toward her gently so she wouldn't get scared with that natural baby fear of falling. Hoisting her up and patting her back to "burp" her, slipping shirts on and off without reaping a protesting cry. Rotating her round and round so the little head wouldn't flatten out and grow lopsided. Oiling, powdering, Q-tipping, dropping oleopercomorphum. Squeezing nipples that stuck . . . straining, sterilizing, making formula . . . changing . . . changing . . . changing . . .

June went through a stack of diapers like a farmhand through a stack of wheat. One touch and "We've got to change her, Olie!" One pull at the nipple . . . almost . . .and up she cuddled that saucy doll on her shoulder.

"Mrs. Powell," sighed Olie, "you know I believe you're burp-happy—and I think I understand why." She smiled. "As for changes—well—it's been my experience that no matter how often you put on a new diaper—babies are always wet!" She'd have to cough discreetly then and suggest, "I think maybe we'd better put her back in her crib now." But it was so hard to give Little Jo up. "I know you're right," June admitted,"but I just hate to let her go."

HOW TIME FLIES!

■ Cary Grant said, when asked if a guy should and could be absolutely truthful with a gal: "I think people make too much fuss about being on the level and straight-from-the-shoulder and all that. I mean, as soon as love enters the picture, so many are apt to take themselves sternly by the ear and say, 'Now, this here is serious! This is love!' And they lean over backwards about confessing all past romantic experiences and expect the other party to do the same, instead of acting as one would with a good friend —being kind of casual and easy and not burdening the friend with heavy confidences to weigh down his loyalty and liking and not seeking too deeply into the friend's confidence. . . . I don't think that a man can be brutally frank to a woman Not to most women, anyway. I don't hold with spinning up a tissue of lies to whisper into a shell-like ear, but I do feel that a little sugar-coating is not only nice but necessary. Heck, I shouldn't want a girl to be too grimly frank with me. Why shouldn't I respect her feelings —her vanity, if you like—to an equal degree?"—From a 1938 issue of Modern Screen

Three thousand miles away, back in Washington, D. C., Dick just had to keep in on the act, too. On the hour, practically, at the studio and at home, she got telephone calls loaded with Papa P's expert advice and counsel and when the operator couldn't find June she got wires. One midnight the phone jingled beside her bed and a weary Western Union voice inquired,

"Is this Mrs. Powell? I have an important telegram for you from Washington. Shall I read it?"

June felt her heart pound. "Yes," she gasped, "go ahead."

"DARLING," the voice read, "HOLD THE BOTTLE UP STRAIGHT WHEN YOU FEED HER SO SHE WON'T SWALLOW AIR. LOVE DICK. That is all. Good night."

"G-good night," sighed June.

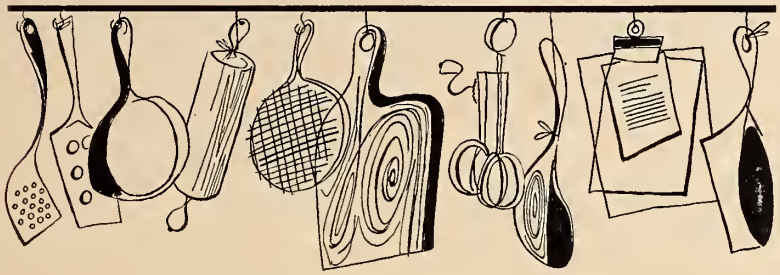
Then there was the matter of a name. If she was ever prone to underestimate the power of a papa, June knows better by now. They'd talked over the baby's name for a year, of course, thumbed through and pondered every possible combination, male and female, because they didn't care which sex came along first. June's favorite was "Leslie"—boy or girl; and Dick's—well, he couldn't see anything wrong with June's last tag. "Allyson," for a first one, boy or girl either.

But after Little Jo's arrival. Dick said he thought "Leslie" was wonderful if June really liked it. And June said, well, if Richard honestly wanted "Allyson" . . . so they called her "Leslie Allyson Powell." Official. But it was very strange—when Dick got out of town his wires and letters and first month's "birthday" greeting all came addressed to "Miss Allyson Powell"—no Leslie. "MISS ALLYSON POWELL—KISS YOUR MAMA GOOD NIGHT FOR ME." "MISS ALLYSON POWELL—DID YOU BLOW OUT THE CANDLE ON YOUR CAKE? I'LL BE HOME SOON TO HELP." Miss Allyson Powell. "Leslie," like all unused appendages, withered and dropped away. By the time Dick got back to Hollywood, even June was calling her "Allyson."

Now there's a christening coming up, with Dick and June's good friends, the Justin Darts, slated for godparents, and there's a new expression on Little Jo every day to bring a thrill. There are new silken curls to stroke, there are significant gurgles and gasps that can—with vivid imagination —be interpreted as "Da-Da" and "Ma-Ma" and a tiny white wedge in a pink gum that says a tooth will be popping through any day. There are the streams of beautiful baby presents—that were too lovely and fragile to use on a tiny mite—that now can be taken out of sachet-fragrant drawers. Pink organdie dresses with embroidered rosebuds, satin bonnets, capes and sacks with ribbons and fine laces, baby dress-up duds that a six-monther can handle without too much chance of spoiling forever.

It's even time now to let Little Jo slam a rattle around, squeeze a woolly lamb and wonder what that funny little yellow thing is her mama dangles before her now and then with a big grin. (It's a little gold pottie that Dick's secretary sent).

temper, temper . . .



The only thorn in June Allyson's rosy family picture at this point is the distressing fact—she admits it—that Miss Allyson Powell makes quite a noisy fuss over her cereal and hates apple sauce like poison—also (June will confess under the greatest strain) there's a sign of a temper; she holds her breath at times until she turns royal purple and when she lets go at last—Wow! —it's enough to raise the dead. But by now June is broken in to even that, and a squawk, a hiccup, or a burp when Allyson is peacefully resting in her lap leaves her as nonchalant as a cigarette ad. In fact, if June sighs at such times, it's for more of the same: three more, to be explicit, another girl; two boys. Yep, that's the quota. (And she wouldn't be surprised if the stork got busy soon. It seems to happen that way when you start a family deliberatelv.)

There are for June a million moments impossible to measure in a cup of joy as Little Jo turns from a precious problem into a more precious little personality, one which will bear the mark of June's heart and mind as long as she lives.

There are dreams and plans and sacred little thoughts As Dick tells June and Little Jo every now and then—"There's a great future in being a baby!" THE END

The screen story of Words and Music, in which June Allyson in featured, appears in the January issue of that most entertaining periodical, SCREEN STORIES.

fan fare

With this issue MODERN SCREEN introduces a new department which we hope you like. In it you'll find tips on home-making and recipes of your favorite stars. Below are the recipes Ann Blyth used when she gave her housewarming party. (page 34)

neapolitan spaghetti

- ½ cup solod oil
- 2 onions, thinly sliced
- 3 cloves gorlic, moshed or finely minced
- 1 chopped green pepper
- 1½ pounds ground beef
- 4 cups conned tomotoes, pureed
- 1 con Itolion tomoto poste
- 2¼ teospoons solt
- ¼ teospoon pepper
- ⅛ teospoon bosil
- 2 teaspoons sugor
- 1½ pounds spoghetti
- Groted Pormeson cheese

■ Brown onions, garlic and green pepper in oil, add meat and brown slowly. Heat tomato mixture in deep kettle, add meat mixture and seasonings. Simmer 2½ to 3 hours. Boil spaghetti in one gallon or more salted water 9 to 15 minutes, until tender. Drain and serve with sauce. Pass grated Parmesan cheese at table. Serves 6.

hot potato salad

- 3 pounds smoll pototoes
- 8 strips bocon, cut in ½ inch pieces
- ⅔ cup reol moyonnoise
- 6 toblespoons vinegor
- ⅔ cup diced celery
- 6 toblespoons chopped scollions
- 2 toblespoons chopped pimiento
- 2 teospoons solt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 1 teospoon dry mustard
- ½ teospoon sugor
- Solod greens
- 1 tomoto, cut in wedges
- Porsley

■ Scrub potatoes and cook until tender; peel and dice while hot. Sauté bacon until crisp and light brown; drain. Combine real mayonnaise, vinegar, celery, scallions, pimiento and seasonings; heat for two minutes over a low flame. Add to potatoes and bacon, mixing carefully so potato pieces are not broken. Arrange in salad bowl lined with salad greens. Garnish with wedges of tomato and parsley. Serves 6.

chocolate pinwheels

- 2 cups sifted coke flour
- 1 teospoon double-acting boking powder
- ½ teospoon solt
- ½ cup butter or other shortening
- ⅔ cup sugor
- 1 egg, unbeoten
- 1 toblespoon milk
- 1 squore unsweetened chocolote, melted

■ Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add egg and milk and beat well. Add flour, a small amount at a time, mixing well after each addition. Divide dough in two parts. To one part, add chocolate and blend. If necessary, chill until firm enough to roll. Roll each half on floured waxed paper into rectangular sheet, ⅛ inch thick. Turn plain sheet over chocolate sheet; remove waxed paper. Roll as for jelly roll. Chill overnight, or until firm enough to slice. Cut in ⅛-inch slices. Bake on ungreased baking sheet in moderate oven (375°F.) 10 minutes, or until done. Makes about 5 dozen pinwheels.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE) Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-s.aining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c, (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 392S Strathmoor Station, Dept. 2109, Detroit 27, Michigan.

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB

HEMSTITCHER

Hemstitch on any sewing machine with this handy attachment. Does two piece, criss-cross, inlaid, circular and hemstitching for pleats; also tucking, smocking and picoting. Makes rugs, comforters, slippers, etc. out of any material. Easy directions included

Both for $1.00

BUTTON HOLER

Makes button holes on your sewing machine instead of by hand. Also darns stockings, sews buttons, zippers; and can be used for quilting. Sews in any direction—front, back or sideways.

SEND NO MONEY—Merely send your name, address and pay postman $1.00 plus postage on arrival. Or, send $1.00 with order, and we mail attachments postage paid. You risk nothing. Satisfaction guaranteed or $1.00 back

LELANE CO. Dept. DM-M Box 571 Kansas City 10, Mo.

Relieve Misery of ITCH

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Quiets itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D.D.D. Prescription.

Get Well QUICKER From Your Cough Due to a Cold

FOLEY'S Honey & Tar Cough Compound

Marvel

$3.50 WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women

AT DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

FreeBooklet,MarvelCo.,601EastSt.,NewHaven,Ct.

Design Smart Fashions

Fascinating work. Originate your own distinctive clothes. Our basic training provides excellent starting point for career. Learn at home—spare time. Send for FREE booklet today.

NATIONAL SCHOOL OF DRESS DESIGN
1315 So. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2361, Chicago 5, Ill.

BE A Nurse
LEARN AT HOME

Practical nurses are needed in every community... doctors rely on them... patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 50th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 231, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name _____

THE TRUTH ABOUT JAMES MASON

(Continued from page 16)

the United States since King George III.

His enemies—and he has many—declare that Mason is a cold, spoiled, calculating fellow whose withering opinions are carefully designed to make good reading and rewarding publicity.

On the other hand, his numerous friends, who are closer to the subject, know him as a kind, modest, and unpretentious guy. They say he happens to be equipped with a wonderful sense of humor which often makes it irresistible for him to kid the public by issuing statements and performing gestures in keeping with the haughty, sardonic character of his screen roles. And that screen character, they further aver, is wildly at variance with his true one.

Whatever his true and inner nature, his public utterances seldom fail to make intriguing reading. Here, for example, is Mason on bobby-soxers: "They are vile, loathsome, wretched barbarians. They are ill-bred, badly-mannered, and, for the most part, morons." (But he is continually writing warm, entertaining letters to the members of his own huge fan club.)

Here is Mason on Hollywood before he ever visited the place: "In Hollywood the only reading material they consume willingly is a local newspaper called the Hollywood Reporter. Like all residents of small towns, they are tremendously impressed by its flattering references to themselves and exult in its edgy comments about their friends." (But in Hollywood he has completely won everyone, from top producers to messenger girls.)

And here is Mason on American movies: "Most of the motion pictures here are made for half-wits and certainly not for intelligent people."

credit where credit is due . . .

(But he told Louella Parsons: "I think England has been very unfair to American pictures. I actually got in very wrong in England because I said that Hollywood was to be thanked for having made the first good pictures.")

After these various critiques—and they're relatively mild for the 39-year-old Englishman—many imagined that when Mason arrived in Hollywood last summer, he would be avoided like the plague.

Instead, dozens of film producers rushed to him with fabulous offers. Mason, in fact, was deluged with so many scripts and profit-sharing deals that one radio commentator was moved to remark, "You'd think the man was another Betty Grable!"

In any event, Mason surprised the film colony by agreeing to do the second lead in Caught, a motion picture starring Robert Ryan. In this film Mason plays a country doctor. He was told that he ought to cut his too-long tresses for the part since American country doctors don't ordinarily go around looking like Broadway saxophonists. Mason replied simply: "My interpretation of this doctor is that he is so poor that he cannot afford a haircut, and that's how I shall play him."

The director, an easy-going Viennese named Max Opuls, did not argue with the shining star, because (1) the detail was too trivial to argue about and (2) he knew full well that, long-haired or short-haired, Mason would attract to the box office hundreds of thousands of women—women hoping to see the tall, broad-faced Englishman inflict punishment upon other members of their sex.

This is the basis of Mason's startling popularity. The more brazenly he criticizes movie-goers off-screen, the more attracted they are to him. The more intensely he beats heroines on-screen, the more he arouses the ardor of the lady customers. This is especially true of British women, one of whom recently explained Mason's magnetism in these wistful words: "There is something in every woman that cries out to be tamed, to be mastered, to be dominated. It's this something that makes us like to see a mean, powerful man in brutal action. On the screen James Mason is that man."

Apparently there's much truth in this analysis, because Mason's fan mail tripled after the release of such films as The Man in Grey, in which he sadistically beat Margaret Lockwood with a riding crop, and The Seventh Veil, in which he savagely caned Ann Todd, who played the part of a concert pianist.

Every time Mason acts the brute in a film (he has actually done so in only four of his 36 pictures), he wins new fans and his wife gets snowed under with hundreds of letters from anxious women who want to know "if your husband beats you at home and if so, how do you stand it?"

As a matter of fact, so many movie-goers have inquired about the possibility of Mason's being a sadist in private life that a few years ago he sat down and wrote an article entitled, "Yes, I Beat My Wife!"

"Since our marriage," he wrote, tongue-in-cheek, "she has complained of a torn scalp, scars on the shoulder and arms, a fractured hip and several minor displacements of the spinal column."

Much to Mason's amused astonishment, hundreds of his fans believed he was telling the truth, and vowed to stand by him through thick and thin.

The truth, of course, is that Mason is very much in love with his currently pregnant wife, Pamela, daughter of British banker Isadore Ostrer, and the only kind of beatings he metes out to anybody are of the verbal kind. He has one of the most forthright tongues in the world and its constant exercise has frequently earned him the active dislike of many persons in the motion picture industry.

Outside the industry, however, his frank statements have earned him reams of invaluable publicity he would never have obtained if he had acted the ordinary polite and charming visiting English actor.

For example, a few months ago Mason was in Boston with his wife, whose fifth novel, "Lady Dispossessed," had just been published. Mrs. Mason was seated in a book store autographing copies of her work. Now it so happened that most of the customers had come to see her husband, and it was his autograph they wanted, not hers. Whereupon Mason promptly denounced these film fans as "ill-bred idiots," and Mrs. Mason later explained to a reporter that she thought most of the bobby-soxers followed James around because consciously or subconsciously they wanted him to make passes at them. Naturally, the whole incident made superb newspaper copy—which, no doubt, the Masons read with hearty laughter.

When Mason isn't making good copy by voicing his opinions, he sits down and puts them on paper. He's an excellent writer with a sharp, biting, incisive pen. It occasionally leads him into a lot of hot water.

In 1945, for instance, he wrote an article for a British magazine in which he stated: "I find precious little glamor in British pictures"—a remark which quickly brewed a violent storm. The British producers were on the verge of suggesting that all Mason films be banned, and a union of film employees known as the Association of Cine Technicians declared that the statement smacked of treason.

Thereupon Mason decided to stop making pictures in Great Britain. He wrote Arthur Rank, president of the A.C.T., and notified him that "I have just written to my manager, Mr. Al Parker, instructing him to discontinue negotiations for future engagements in British pictures on my behalf. . . . I have made this decision as a protest against intimidation. . . ."

change of heart . . .

This letter announcing his intention to quit British pictures, was written by Mason in 1945. A year later he made Odd Man Out in England with director Carol Reed.

In short, much of what Mason puts in print and what he says in public must be taken with the proverbial grain of salt.

He says and does what he likes regardless of any seeming inconsistencies. For example, when he was in England he wrote for a British magazine a piece entitled "Why I Am Going to Hollywood."

Having arrived in New York, he wrote an article for an American magazine entitled "Why I Don't Want to Go to Hollywood." (This prompted one wit—who could have been, but wasn't, James Mason—to ask why British and American magazine editors didn't get together and economize by having Mason write one article, to be called "Why I Do and Don't Want to Go to Hollywood.")

The background of the matter is that when Mason wrote "Why I Don't Want to Go to Hollywood," such a trip would have done him no good. At the time he was embroiled in court litigation with a producer named David Rose, and the court had enjoined him from starring in any American pictures. But as soon as the courts declared him a free agent, he seemed to see things in a strange new light. He and his wife took the first train westward. They rented a palatial house with a swimming pool in Beverly Hills. James accepted $100,000 from Enterprise Studios to play in Caught.

In England this action was looked upon as hypocritical. When Mason was there he had said countless times that he never relished the idea of having his pictures shown in the U.S. and used as a commercial product to bring badly-needed dollars to Britain. "I feel," he once wrote, "that in the minds of our great traders I enjoy the same status as a range of worsteds or a brand of synthetic flour. And I feel that in this status I am being used for commercial aggrandizement. I don't like it."

"Miss, would you kindly let your hair down?"

When British film fans objected to his quitting England, pointing out that he would be used far more for commercial aggrandizement in the U.S. than he had ever been at home, Mason, never at a loss for words, came up with this one: "If an Englishman leaves England and goes to another country and builds a bridge or a dam or some monumental structure or work of art, he is lauded, his work is respected and everybody is proud of him. The same thing should apply to an actor or actress. I think that acting, stage and screen, should be international and not bound by any barriers, except perhaps language." This from a man who years earlier had said with great passion, "I have a strong faith in the future of the British film industry and wish to devote myself to it."

Mason is glib, shrewd, intellectual, and he has a statement to fit every occasion. What is more important, however, is that he has both the financial security and the strength of character to make his statements flatly, plainly and without fear of any occupational reprisal.

As a proof of his warm nature, his friends like to point to the well-known fact that Mason for years has been a major philanthropic institution for stray cats on both sides of the Atlantic.

His enemies report that one of these cats was recently interviewed and was asked how he liked having Mason as his master. The cat thought for a moment and then smiled. "We don't look upon James as a master," he explained. "We like to think of him as one of us." THE END

MOTHER WAS NEVER LIKE THIS

(Continued from page 31)

When the conversation was reported to Joan the following day, she laughed. "Gentlemen used to prefer blondes," she quipped, "but Marlene Dietrich and I are out to prove that they really prefer grandmothers."

Dietrich has already proved her point in A Foreign Affair. Joan Bennett isn't a grandmother as yet, but is scheduled to become one in March.

In a community where the preservation of youth is a fetish, Joan Bennett's frank approach to life and nature is a refreshing rarity. Unlike sister Constance, for example, Joan will tell you her age at the drop of a hat. "I'm 38," she says flatly. "I'm married to a producer named Walter Wanger. He's my third husband. Shelley is my fourth child, and—please don't faint—I'd like to have a fifth."

In short, you can see that this Joan Bennett is a truly prodigious person. You can also see that she's an honest, candid, witty, intelligent woman.

However, what you cannot see at any quick glance, is what this fourth childbirth, and her own way of life, have done to her. She is now more beautiful, more desirable than ever before. Here is a woman with no inner conflicts, no neuroses, no past that cries out to be hidden, no denials of nature, truth, or the sweep of time. She has become a mature woman on very intimate terms with her environment. She understands, for example, the workings of the histrionic masculine mind, which is why actors find her just about utterly irresistible, in a mental sort of way. Michael Redgrave, the very talented Englishman who starred opposite her in The Secret Beyond the Door, told director Fritz Lang, "One day after I met Joan Bennett, she had me turning the pockets of my soul inside out."

Of her experience with women, we need say little. She has guided her daughters through childhood, adolescence, and in one case, at least, into adulthood. She can read the average female mind as easily as other people read the top line of an optometrist's chart. And she's just as attractive to women as to men.

As for her experience with men, that too, has been rich, diverse, rewarding and—to coin a phrase—the secret of her success both in films and real life.

That experience began when she was 15. Her parents, Richard and Adrienne Bennett, both well-known in the theatrical world, sent her to L'Ermitage, a boarding school on the outskirts of Paris. Aboard the Homeric en route to Europe, Joan met a handsome, 26-year-old charmer named John Marion Fox. He came from Seattle, he had plenty of money, he was known as an "angel" (a financial backer of plays), and Joan, being young and impressionable, fell for him like—well, a ton of bricks.

A year later, when she was 16—despite her mother's admonition, "Joan, never marry a man to reform him!"—she married John Fox in London. The couple returned to the States. The marriage endured two years and provided Joan with one daughter and the undeniable evidence that mama—Joan's mama, that is—had been right.

In need of money, Joan then decided to go on the stage with her famous father, Richard Bennett. The two of them starred in Jarnegan, and the father taught the girl many of the theatrical tricks it had taken him a lifetime to learn.

On the strength of that theatrical know-how and the potential box-office pull of her beauty, Joan was brought to Hollywood. Here, she made her cinema debut opposite Ronald Colman in Bulldog Drummond. To put it mildly, she wasn't too good. But she knew what was wrong.

"I was self-conscious in front of a camera," she says, "and I was also unsure of myself and relatively inexperienced. But I practised posture, and posture gave me poise, and poise, I discovered, was something that men like in women."

Certainly it was something that Gene Markey, the producer-writer, liked. He married its owner. With Markey, Joan had another daughter, Melinda, and also came to the realization that the most fatal error any wife can make is to fail to grow—to lag culturally behind her husband.

When Joan Bennett married Walter Wanger in 1940, it was her third trip to the altar, she was 30 years old, and she had evolved a philosophy of life born of her own experience, a philosophy in which the following basic tenets were implanted: (1) there is more to any man than his looks; (2) the primary purpose of women on earth is to reproduce; (3) happiness and youth are states of mind; (4) in order to have a successful marriage, a woman must grow with her husband and children; and (5) if an actress must choose between career and home, home always should come first.

The Wanger-Bennett entente has resulted in two daughters, Stephanie (1943) and Shelley (1948). Joan regards childbearing as not at all the incredibly difficult feat most actresses make it out to be. When Wanger, following Shelley's birth, asked Joan what she wanted for a present, she blew him a little feather of a smile, held up the red-faced infant in her arms, and said, "Thank you, darling, but you've already given me a present—the baby."

When a fan wrote Joan recently and said, "I admire you so much for having a baby in your old age," the actress wrote back: "Thank you so much, but I'm not really that old. I'm only sixty-three."

That readiness to trade punch-line for punch-line is what in part has made Joan Bennett such a successful mother. "My daughters," she says, "have developed a sort of alertness and selflessness in me. I'm so busy trying to understand them and their problems and the new words they bring home that I don't have time to worry about growing old. I've got to keep pace with them."

Joan has also got to keep pace with her husband, a man of very broad interests—which is one reason why, a few years ago, she managed to budget enough time to write a book entitled, "How To Be Attractive." It sold fairly well and her publisher, Alfred Knopf, wanted her to do a sequel.

Instead of that, however, she decided to form a production company with Wanger and director Fritz Lang. It's called Diana Productions, and this company produced The Secret Beyond the Door.

At the moment, having moved one daughter out of the house and another daughter in, having just remodeled and repainted the nursery, Joan is just about ready to resume her screen career. (Her current film, Hollow Triumph, was completed before she took time out to have Shelley.) Now she's scheduled to appear in Blank Wall, and she hopes that it will give her career a new impetus.

If it doesn't, she won't wail. Over the years she's achieved peace of mind, youth in that peace of mind, and a calm detachment about her screen work. "A career," she says, "is a very nice thing. Only you can't run your hand through its hair."

And Joan Bennett's hand has an awful lot of hair to run through: There's Diana's, Melinda's, Stephanie's, Shelley's—and of course, Walter Wanger's, which isn't nearly as luxuriant as it was when he was a freshman at Dartmouth, but is still pretty satisfactory to Joan. THE END

Earl's Pearls

■ One of this year's most naïve statements came from Yvonne De Carlo, who said to a British newspaperman: "I'm tired of being pursued by men. What on earth are they after?"

■ Orson Welles (quite a while back): "When you're down and out, something always turns up—especially the noses of your friends."

Chuck Barnett: "A wolf believes in life, liberty and the happiness of pursuit."

—Earl Wilson

PARTING IS SUCH SORROW

(Continued from page 59)

a child although she is the mother of two children—Kathleen, two, and Thomas, born a few months ago.

I was remembering her background. Born practically in a theater trunk, she has show business in her blood. Her father, Carter De Haven, and her mother were in the theatrical big time for years.

Gloria doesn't talk much about her father but she'll launch into a paean of praise over her mother at the drop of a hat.

"My mother was a big star," she told me once. "She could have gone lots farther on the stage but she quit to have children. And what did it get her? She was left behind with her babies while my father went on to hear the applause and listen to the flattery of the world. It turned his head and our family was broken up. Mother had to struggle along to get food and clothing for us. This wouldn't have happened to her if she had stuck to her own career."

haunting memory . . .

And this memory could very well be the key to the whole trouble between Gloria and John. In those weeks and months when she was being just a wife and having her babies, was she haunted by the thought that what happened to her mother could very well happen to her?

When she and John were married in the Christmas holiday week of 1944, she was so infatuated that she thought she'd never want anything else but his love.

"She told me when we were married that she didn't care any more about a career," John said. "Being older and more experienced than she, I should have realized that she didn't know what she was promising. I was amused at first when she began to talk about growing old and getting out of things. Then I discovered that this fantastic fear was a reality to her. Five weeks after our first baby was born she began to talk about going back to work. This came as a great shock to me because I thought she ought to be so happy with the new baby and our pleasant home life.

"I'm not stubbornly set against the idea of a married couple having separate film careers. Some women can manage it. But I didn't think Gloria could.

"Picture work is very hard. You have to be up early to get your makeup on and be on the set in time for the day's shooting. Then at night you're so tired you don't want to do anything but go home and to bed. Married couples see very little of each other when either is working. Both are nervous and irritable from the strain. They're apt to snap at each other without much cause. I wanted to avoid this in my home."

But staying home was worse for Gloria than all the hard work called for in making a picture. She saw herself standing still while the kids who started at M-G-M when she did were climbing up the ladder to fame and fortune. She saw her good friend June Allyson, with whom she had worked in Two Girls And A Sailor when they were both beginning to get a foothold, being starred. It is understandable that June's success especially would affect Gloria, since in that picture it was little Miss De Haven who had been considered by the studio bosses as having the greater starring promise.

"I told John I had show business in my blood," Gloria exclaimed. "He said that was just silly, that there wasn't any such thing. He thinks that all this talk about the background and tradition of the theater is just so much conversation.

"Well, I can understand his attitude. He was brought up in a wonderful home in Roanoke, Virginia, and got into show business by accident. He can talk for hours about his old Virginia home with crisp waffles and white turkey meat for breakfast and a huge kitchen where there's always a spicy ham or turkey or something else cooking. But he doesn't have any memories of catching a train in the early morning or sitting up at a counter getting coffee and doughnuts while the gang around you are reading their notices written by the theatrical critics."

John, who is related to the Payne who wrote "Home Sweet Home," is a lad who sets great store by having a well-ordered house and a cozy fireside to sit around. Acting to him is a serious business, but only the means to something much more important: earning a nice living so he can enjoy his home life. When he was growing up, his mother thought he would write music like his illustrious ancestor, but instead he decided he wanted to be a journalist and took a journalism course at Columbia University. Then he switched back to music, studied at the Juilliard School, and sang on the radio for a while.

One summer, just to pass the time away, he did some work in a straw hat theater in Connecticut. This brought him to the attention of Hollywood and he settled down here to a job that has turned out to be exceedingly profitable for him.

He is a very logical young man who does nothing he can't map out by reason. (Except falling in love—he married two actresses.) Gloria is just the opposite. It's difficult for her to apply logic to anything her emotions prompt her to do. She loves the world of make-believe and can lose herself in it completely. Not so John. He can always stand back and look at himself as an actor. He is strictly a realist. It is this tendency to cut through to what he believes to be the truth that has earned him the reputation of being hard to get along with.

But on the set of El Paso, at the famous Iverson ranch where so many outdoor pictures are made, I found that the gang working in the film with him felt unanimously that he was strictly "regular." Gabby Hayes, the old-time horse opera character actor, told me he'd never worked with a nicer guy.

Gloria began her married life when she was 18 with very little idea of what it was all about. She was like a little girl playing house. Household budgets, managing servants, ordering food was all a game. She didn't know much about handling finances and had never written a check until she signed her name Gloria Payne. I saw her making out a check one day for $25. She wrote it $25,000. This was very cute at first, but it must have resulted in a few family squabbles by the time their first rift occurred in September, 1946. That was when she checked in at the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel with their nine-months-old baby and John stayed put in their home. With most couples it is the wife who stays in the home and the husband who goes to a hotel—but as I told you before, John loves his home, Gloria only wanted to escape it.

She told me at the time that she simply had to get away and think things over. "I'm not even considering a divorce or anything. But the adult thing to do is to separate until we can straighten out our disagreements. John and I are in love, but we don't see eye-to-eye."

But it wasn't long until they were back seeing eye-to-eye again. Things went along smoothly as far as the world knew until last spring, when it happened all over again. This time John moved out and took an apartment. It wasn't so easy for Gloria to move because there were two babies by that time, little Thomas having been born just four months before.

Gloria said they'd been having all kinds of arguments and attributed it all to the fact that John had made three pictures without a rest between and that he was tired and upset. He was working on Larceny for Universal-International and Gloria said that when he finished the picture they would "have time to sit down and talk it out."

John told reporters: "We've had a series of arguments and Gloria is distraught and nervous. I've been working steadily and rather than attempt a discussion now in an upset frame of mind we decided on a temporary separation. Later we will be able to talk rationally—and we hope then to arrive at a beneficial conclusion."

When he finished the picture, he went East to play in The Voice of The Turtle at Princeton, N. J., with Joan Caulfield, who was with him in Larceny. Later, Gloria joined him in New York, where they had their rational talks. And after six weeks of separation, they were back together with seemingly a smooth path. There was gossip then that Miss Caulfield had something to do with their separation, but Gloria said this "definitely was not true."

I arranged an interview with them late in August to write about their reconciliation and had a luncheon date at their home where I was to see how happy they were. But on the morning of the day we had our date, John telephoned and said the luncheon was off because Gloria and he had rifted again—"and this time it looks as if it's for keeps."

really for keeps? . . .

Will it really be for keeps? Gloria has filed for a divorce charging mental cruelty. But it will be a year before she is legally free and she is hoping that before that time she and John can resume their marriage on a new basis. She told me she doesn't want a divorce—that if there is any way in the world that she can persuade John that they can have a happy home life the while she furthers her career as an actress, she is going to do it. She recently signed a new long-term contract with M-G-M and, even should the divorce go through, she'll still have that year before the decree is final in which to prove to John that she can coordinate the jobs of being a mother of two babies and working in pictures. She might also be able to demonstrate to him that she could include in her design for living a contented husband.

John is staying in the house and Gloria has taken an apartment. However, the place is community property, and if the divorce does take place, it will have to be sold so that each can get half the money. But John thinks he will keep the place and pay Gloria the cash. She is not asking for alimony but wants reasonable support for the babies. At this writing, their attorneys are huddling over what is "reasonable."

In the meantime, John is going places with Shelley Winters and having lots of laughs. Gloria has been going out with Cy Howard, producer of the radio show, "My Friend Irma." But it's my belief that up to now, neither Gloria nor John is seriously interested in anyone else.

It's my belief that they are still very much in love and, having successfully surmounted their marital difficulties twice before, might do it again. THE END who isn't a good sport. The loser is always there with congratulations, darling, and the winner says shucks, she didn't deserve the Oscar and it should have gone to the loser. Sportsmanship rules the roost at Mocambo. And I say that with all sincerity.

THE MOCAMBO AFFAIRS

(Continued from page 43)

For instance, at the last Academy Award night we had parties scheduled for both Loretta Young and Rosalind Russell. It's no secret that Roz was an odds-on favorite to win, and didn't. Loretta's party was well under way when Roz showed up in the room. Loretta ran up to her competitor, embraced her and was embraced right back by Roz.

That's when I like my job.

But there's another kind of Mocambo affair, the very thought of which turns my gray hair white. That's when we make Page One. Mocambo's big star in this department has been a grand guy named Errol Flynn. Errol, in case you didn't know it, is strictly a clam-juice, soda-pop or milk boy in our place. When I want to make a hospitable gesture and send him over something with the compliments of the house, it has to be one of those three.

But Errol was never one to shun a fight. A couple of years back, he was getting pretty sore over the way he thought he was being needled by columnist Jimmy Fidler. And quite a few people thought the columnist was taking too many swipes at the picture industry. So Errol, with three clam-juices under his belt, decided to defend the industry.

It all happened kind of quickly. Almost before I knew it, Errol had walked over to Fidler's table and the then-Mrs. Fidler had sprung hot-eyed to the defense of her embattled mate by imbedding a fork in Brother Flynn's ear. I felt terrible about the whole affair. Later, of course, the boys made up. But at the time we made a big splash on Page One. With pictures!

wags have their day . . .

What made it even worse was that for months I was subjected to endless gags. Georgie Jessel would call up: "Do I have to wear boxing gloves when I come to your place, or do you furnish them?"

Bob Hope said to me: "Sorry I haven't been around. I left my fork in Detroit and I feel absolutely defenseless without it."

So what happens? A few months later, Errol is back in the place. His ear is nicely healed. He's feeling at peace with the world. Some girl—I don't recall her name and I haven't heard of her since—has ordered a coddled egg. She sees Errol and decides to take something out on him. Don't ask me what. Maybe she had a neglected childhood and blamed it on Flynn. He didn't even know her. In any case, the next thing Errol knows an attractive girl is standing beside him.

"Mr. Flynn?" she asks.

"Yes, ma'am," replies the gallant Errol.

"Mr. Errol Flynn?" the girl pursues.

Errol smiles. "The very same."

"Thank you," says she.

And lets him have a coddled egg smack on top of the noggin.

There we went again. Another Mocambo affair. Page One. And the gags started again. Errol's friend Bruce Cabot called to say wittily: "Just heard about Junior and the egg. I calls that egg on ham, hey-what, Charlie?"

By now I've gotten so that I can smell a tiff a hundred yards away. Prince David Mdivani—whose claim of royal princehood derives from the same country of Georgia which is the birthplace of a man named Stalin—and Prince Mike Romanoff, whose claim to royalty carries more weight around town, were in Mocambo one night. At separate tables, of course—but I was nervous.

Sure enough, there came the moment when Prince David was moved to stroll over to Prince Mike to express his doubts about Michael's princely lineage. Prince Mike argued haughtily that the other had no right to a title. The elegant repartee got brisker. I caught Prince David just as he had seized Prince Mike by the royal scruff. There was enough scuffling to make the papers—with pictures. (I must say that Mike, even though he is a competitor of mine, behaved with regal grace.)

Prince David was involved in another Mocambo scuffle one evening with Bert Friedlob. (This was before Bert won Eleanor Parker.) But it was scarcely a main event—just a little brush between hot-blooded gentlemen.

Another battler has been Lawrence Tierney. Twice now he has felt called upon to assert his virility by fisticuffing on our gay premises.

I love to give parties myself—usually for old friends of mine like Walter Winchell, Ty Power, Harry Karl and Bert Friedlob.

The business office likes to hear that Sonja Henie is giving one, too. Sonja we're very fond of. She is very fond of throwing parties and her parties are always terrific. Another party-lover is that good friend of Senator Brewster's, our own Johnny Meyer, publicity director for Howard Hughes. Bill Cagney, who produces pictures with his brother James, is another joy to the back-room accountants. His parties aren't big like Sonja Henie's, but there are more of them, bless his heart.

All I could say was that Ty was taking off in an airplane for distant parts and a farewell party was being held.

To my way of thinking, anything and everything should be an excuse for a party. Especially in Mocambo, of course. I like to have my bachelor friends like Cesar Romero, Cary Grant, Jimmy Stewart and Clark Gable pay all their social obligations at one fell swoop at the Mo. They invite all the lovely people who've been having them to dinner and house parties. I like people to give parties when an option is lifted, a story is bought, or a contract signed. I've even tried to persuade people that the time for a Mocambo affair is when an option isn't taken up.

There are some people especially whose appearance I always look for eagerly. Out in Hollywood we have some people who let the sun get in their eyes and dress sloppily. But when our best-dressed ladies come into Mocambo, life, as the radio program says, can be beautiful. Greer Garson is one of these, right at the top of the list. (Don't fret, girls—there's lots of room on top and just to show you how fair I'm going to be, I'm going to leave out my lovely wife Mary, who'd qualify easily on anybody else's list.)

Greer likes to dress when she comes to Mocambo and she does it superbly. Joan Crawford, who gets to be on anybody's best-dressed list almost automatically, can make a designer famous by wearing one of his creations when she makes an entrance. She's doing that nowadays for a new hat-man named Jamie Ballard, just as she did it once for Rex, to mention one. If she keeps coming into the place with enough Ballard lids, the man should be right up there with Rex and the rest of them in no time.

fashion show . . .

Sonja Henie makes the place look like a fashion salon the minute she steps in. Rita Hayworth—now there's a girl who really belongs on the Mocambo best-dressed list. I have to include Ava Gardner, Gene Tierney, Diana Lynn, and Noreen Nash. And Janet Thomas, Dorothy Jameson and Myrna Loy. Not all my people are picture people, but some of them go on the list too: Lorena Danker, the smart advertising executive; Pat Smart, socialite; Bettye Avery; Arlene Dahl; Felicia Vanderbilt, and Mrs. Louis Hayward all give the Mocambo the well-dressed look I like it to have.

When it comes to the men, I think Ty Power runs off with top honors. A well-dressed man, plain and conservative. As runners-up after him, I'd place Cary Grant, Clark Gable, Ronald Colman, Pat De Cicco, Peter Lawford, Bruce Cabot and Greg Bautzer.

Unattached girls make me think, of course, of unattached men. We have a number of these. I wish we had more. They're good for business. And those we do have have a knack of finding and bringing in really beautiful girls. And never the same girl twice. What, never? Well, as the man answered in the song, hardly ever.

Otto Preminger, the director; Fefe Ferry, and top-flight agent Charles Feldman lead my unattached-man list. They play the field—and what a nice field to play in! Running right along with them foot-loose and fancy-free, are Peter Lawford and Mickey Rooney.

The minute any one of them decides to narrow the field down, I'll know it. That's when they'll start calling Albert for advice on what kind of orchids or wine to have on the table.

The pleasant thing, however, is that the Mocambo affairs don't cease just because people get married. It's like this: We lose the newlyweds for a while—naturally. But they soon return.

Some people come to Mocambo three and four times a week, every week. We call them the Mocambo regulars. They're what I like about it most. They're the nicest people in town.

THE END

"This picture didn't seem nearly so interesting the last time I saw it."

near the Canadian border, and Cornel runs it for him. (Celeste is the cashier.) Cornel, having been born poor, is a practical soul. He hates it when Widmark hires entertainers at exorbitant salaries because Widmark happens to like their legs. Which is where Ida comes in. Widmark hires her in Chicago, and when she arrives at the road house, Cornel tries to hustle her off again. "He always gets tired of his women after a while anyway," he explains more or less crudely. "Go back to Chicago." Ida gives him a smash in the face for his advice, and then proceeds to show him a thing or two. She's such a terrific draw at the road house that business booms, and Widmark is eating canaries for breakfast. This time, he's really in love. But Ida has her cap set for Cornel, and there's nothing left for Widmark but to frame Cornel on a robbery charge, and have him sentenced to from two to ten years in jail. This accomplished, he gets the judge to put Cornel on probation in his (Richard's) custody. Very clever. One false move, and Cornel goes to jail for the full ten years. Now Richard has Cornel where he wants him. He can taunt him, ride him, enrage him, and Cornel can't do anything about it. Cornel and Ida are pretty upset, because up until Richard was crossed, he seemed to be a lovely person. Any lingering illusion they ever cherished about him is speedily dispelled when he forces them—and Celeste—to go to his cabin in the woods for a few days of hunting. As soon as it becomes apparent that what he intends to hunt is them, there's a fracas. Widmark dies, nodding toward Ida. "I told you she was different," he mutters. It's a surprising speech, considering the fact that he'd just tried to bean the girl with a 90-pound boulder. The acting is nice in this picture, and everybody gets an even break except, as we said before, Miss Holm—who has to stand around stopping bullets, and being hopelessly in love with Cornel. They're a couple of thankless tasks, but she does them fine.—20th-Fox.

THE DECISION OF CHRISTOPHER BLAKE

Why a twelve-year-old child with an offensively precocious vocabulary and an earnest desire to blow up the house (he manufactures atom bombs in his spare time) should be considered as heart-rending as everyone in this picture considers Christopher Blake (Ted Donaldson) I haven't even begun to understand. Because of him, his parents (Alexis Smith and Robert Douglas), who seem completely and painfully bored with one another, are made to feel like cads for having harbored the thought of divorce. It isn't as though they haven't assured little Christopher that they love him passionately (more than he seems to warrant, from the wretched way he behaves). He's convinced that neither of them wants him, and that after the divorce, he'll be just so much flotsam. Being overly dramatic, he goes off into long, painful dreams. (Lady in the Dark plus Walter Mitty) where he 1) is a famous director-actor-producer who causes Mr. and Mrs. Blake to reconcile for the sake of their wonderful boy, 2) goes to call on the woman he thinks his father loves, and asks her to lay off, 3) forces the President of the United States to forbid the Blakes to divorce. All of which gets him nowhere. His parents smother him with birthday presents, beg him to smile, and still he gives them a fishy eye. Right up until the very divorce proceedings, where he's called on to choose between them. Then watch the clever trick he pulls! And sure enough, there's the sweetest reconciliation you ever saw. Until Pop falls in love again, I guess. Admittedly, there's nothing amusing about children of divorce. They're a real and heart-rending problem. But not in this picture. Sure, you can make people weep if you show 'em a courtroom scene where a mother and a father who have once loved one another stand wrenching themselves out of a marriage, while their stricken child looks on. But the emotion generated by Christopher Blake is so far from honest it makes you tired.—Warners.

also showing . . .

AN INNOCENT AFFAIR (U. A.)—Fred MacMurray and Madeleine Carroll up to their old and expert tricks in a triflin' but funny comedy. Buddy Rogers makes you hope his return to the screen is permanent and Rita Johnson and the rest are fine too.

APARTMENT FOR PEGGY (20th-Fox)—Ex-G.I. Bill Holden goes to college. He and his wife, Jeanne Crain, find a place to live in the house of an old professor, Edmund Gwynn. The prof. has been contemplating suicide, but now he's got something to live for. A superb comedy-drama that will both entertain you vastly and stimulate your pretty head.

A SONG IS BORN (Goldwyn-RKO)—Danny Kaye is a professor who falls in with a group of jazz musicians, including Benny Goodman, Louis Armstrong and Tommy Dorsey. Danny does no specialties but you'll have a fine time at this even though you're not a hepcat.

CRY OF THE CITY (20th-Fox) — Another crime thriller, with Victor Mature as a cop pitted against criminal Richard Conte. Shelley Winters makes much of a small part. Very good of its melodramatic type.

GOOD SAM (RKO) — Gary Cooper as a guy who's too good for his own good and Ann Sheridan as his long-suffering wife do their darnedest to make this Leo McCarey number successful, but it's a bit dullish.

JULIA MISBEHAVES (MGM)—Greer Garson is turned into a slapstick comedienne with highly satisfactory results in this fine riot. Walter Pidgeon, Elizabeth Taylor, Peter Lawford and Cesar Romero aid and abet.

JUNE BRIDE (Warners)—Bette Davis will make you happy in this bright comedy. She's a magazine editor who, with assistant Robert Montgomery and the rest of her staff, moves in on an Indiana family to get an article. Very funny stuff.

KISS THE BLOOD OFF MY HANDS (Univ.)—Burt Lancaster, a murderous young drifter in post-war London, gets involved in lurid doings and involves a nice girl, Joan Fontaine, in them too. Brilliantly directed and performed, but one of the most shocking films in a long time.

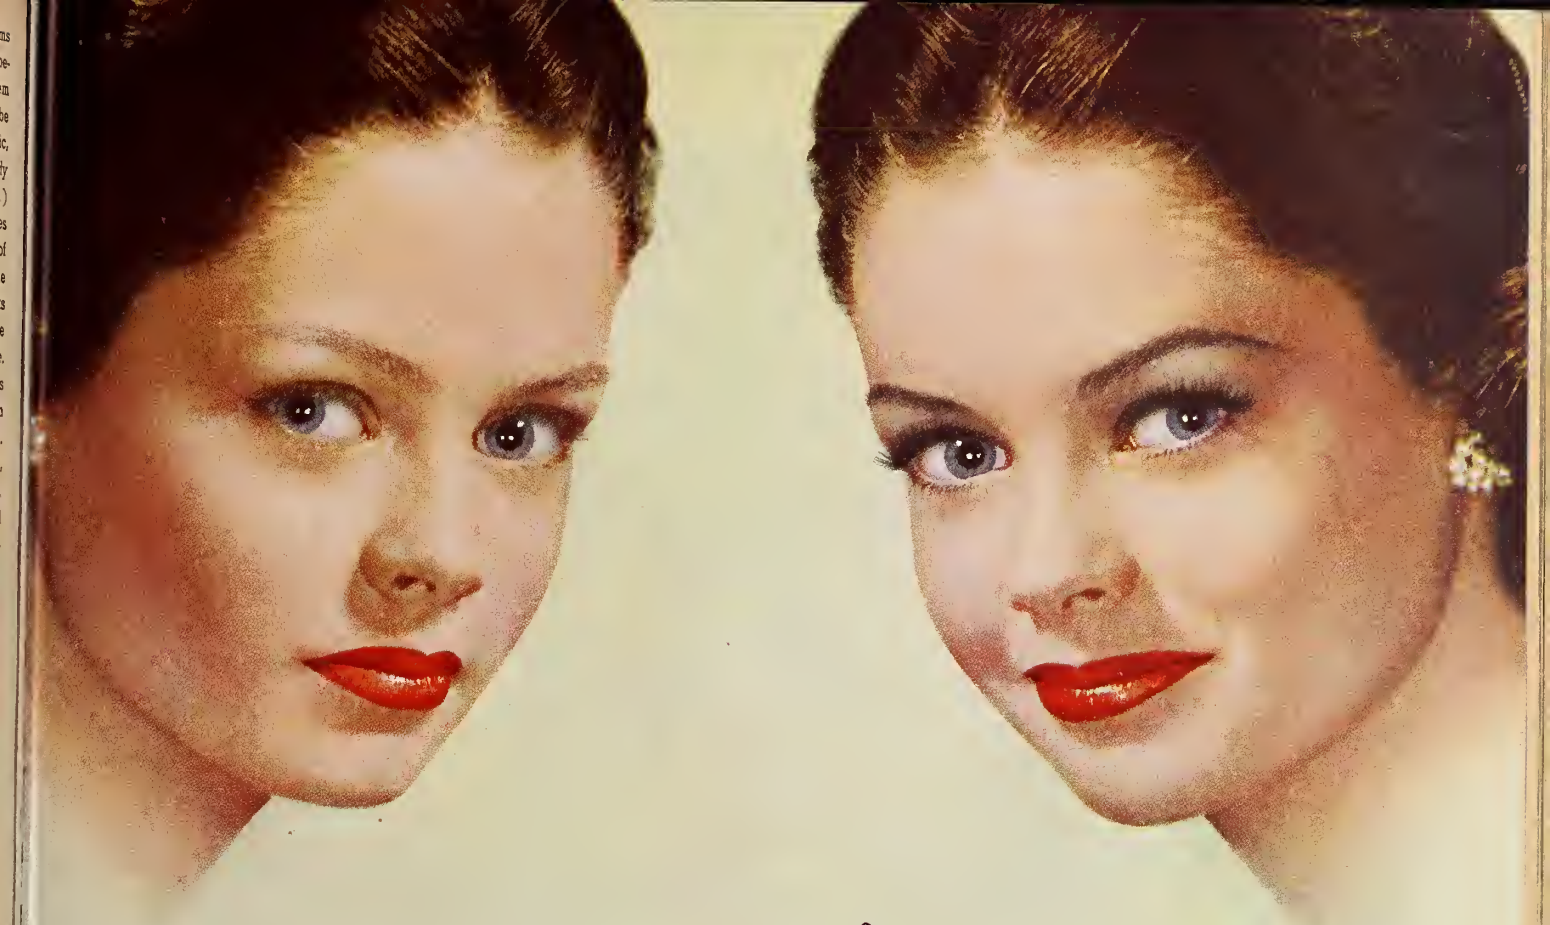
LUCK OF THE IRISH (20th-Fox) —Newspaperman Tyrone Power meets a leprechaun, Cecil Kellaway, and a colleen, Anne Baxter, on a trip to Ireland. After he returns to the U. S., they show up and battle to win him away from his fiancée, Jayne Meadows. Less expertly done, this whimsy could have been embarrassing. But it turns out to be a honey.

MISS TATLOCK'S MILLIONS (Para.)—Barry Fitzgerald, for complicated reasons, hires John Lund to impersonate a half-wit heir to millions. Hilarious developments develop. This comedy's got everything, including Wanda Hendrix and Monty Woolley.

MY DEAR SECRETARY (U.A.)—A typical bedroom farce in which novelist Kirk Douglas falls for secretary Laraine Day, who'll have none of his wild doings. Rudy Vallee and Keenan Wynn help give it many funny moments.

NO MINOR VICES (Ent.-MGM)—Dana Andrews, a nice but overbearing doctor, urges painter Louis Jourdan to paint Lilli Palmer, Dana's wife. They fall in love, of course. Sophisticated comedy with some charming touches.

ONE TOUCH OF VENUS (Univ.-Int.)—A statue of Venus comes to life and has vast influence in the lives of Robert Walker, Eve Arden, Dick Haymes and some others. Ava Gardner as the goddess is happy casting. Lots of laughs.



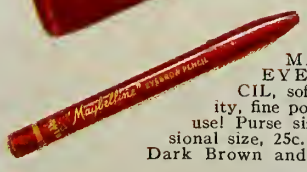
RACHEL AND THE STRANGER (RKO) — Loretta Young is a bondwoman—meaning slave—in the Old West to Bill Holden, who has married her but treats her strictly as a servant until Bob Mitchum wanders along and she goes for his pleasant ways. Then the Indians attack. Good movie.

SEALED VERDICT (Para.) — U. S. Army officer Ray Milland, after prosecuting and winning case against a notorious Nazi general, begins to suspect there was something fishy about the evidence. He uncovers curious things as he digs deeper. An involved but absorbing drama.

STATION WEST (RKO) — Dick Powell is an Army secret service man on the untamed frontier in this hard-hitting Western. Plenty of fights, chases and suspense. Excellent.

THE LOVES OF CARMEN (Col.)—Rita Hayworth is properly emotional as the famous gypsy, Glenn Ford and Victor Jory likewise heave their chests and all is most entertaining in this Technicolor display of good, clean passion.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS (MGM)—Metro has shot the works on this fine old adventure classic of 18th-Century France. Mammoth sets, Technicolor, roaring action, Gene Kelly, Lana Turner, June Allyson, Van Heflin, Vincent Price and 900 unidentified horses—what do you want, blood? There's lots of that, too.



Do the same for yourself — WITH MAYBELLINE!

MAYBELLINE CAKE MASCARA in beautiful gold-tone metal vanity, $1. Refills, 50c. Shades: Black, Brown, Blue. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.)

MAYBELLINE CREAM MASCARA (applied without water) comes in handy leatherette case, $1. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.) Shades: Black, Brown, Blue.

MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL, soft, smooth quality, fine point — so easy to use! Purse size, 10c. Professional size, 25c. Shades: Black, Dark Brown and Light Brown.

MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW in subtle shades of Blue, Brown, Blue-gray, Green, Violet, Gray.

Smart, modern girls and women are realizing that made-up lips make neglected eyes appear dull and drab by contrast.

It's so easy to give your eyes their full share of beauty-magic—with MAYBELLINE! A few simple brush strokes of this famous Mascara will make your lashes look naturally dark, long and luxuriant. And it's so easy to shape your brows gracefully with the soft, smooth Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Then behold the difference! Your eyes are so much lovelier! Your entire face is more attractive, for your make-up is perfectly balanced—completely flattering.

So never, never forget to accent your eyes, daytime or evening. Only be sure you use MAYBELLINE, the eye make-up in good taste — preferred by smart women everywhere.

Maybelline

WORLD'S FAVORITE EYE MAKE-UP

Camel Cigarettes

Camels are so mild . . . and so full-flavored . . . they'll give real smoking pleasure to every smoker on your Christmas list. The smart, gay Christmas carton has a gift card built right in — for your personal greeting.

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Prince Albert
Smoking Tobacco

The colorful, Christmas-packaged one-pound tin of Prince Albert is just the gift for pipe smokers and those who roll their own cigarettes. Long known as the National Joy Smoke, Prince Albert is America's largest-selling smoking tobacco.

Oh, Brother!"—Bob Crosby Unmasks Bing! page 30

modern screen

B.

5c

ESTHER WILLIAMS

Amazing New Scientific Discovery

Curls and Waves

without permanent waving!

No Machinery!
No Waiting!
not a Wave Set!

safe! The most sensational beauty discovery in years. Imagine! One tiny capsule . . . gives you lovely, long lasting, glorious curls and waves . . . in minutes, not hours. No fuss, no bother, no tedious waiting. Absolutely harmless . . . use after every shampoo . . . the more you use, the more naturally waved your hair becomes—the longer your wave lasts. Easy now to "control" your new shorter-styled hair-do! Independent Laboratory tests on the four leading waving capsules PROVED Minit Curl far superior in every way . . . in giving curl, lustre and longer-lasting waves.

Exciting, Safe easy way gives soft, natural looking, longer lasting CURLS and WAVES in MINUTES

EASY TO USE: Just empty contents of one capsule in 2 to 3 ounces hot water. Comb solution generously through hair (after shampooing, with hair slightly damp) and set in waves, pin curls or curlers. (Use any type curlers or pins—metal, plastic.) Allow to dry, then comb or brush. Minit Curl contains a special conditioning element Glorium . . . It encourages each silken strand to acquire the natural lustrous wave or curl—you have always dreamed of having.

1. Dissolve capsule in 2 to 3 oz. hot water

2. Comb solution through hair

3. Set hair . . . let dry

WONDERFUL FOR CHILDREN—who won't "sit still" long enough for permanents. Minit Curl is so quick and easy and leaves their hair natural and healthy in appearance!

MARLENE'S
Minit Curl
CURL CAPS

LASTS FOR MONTHS $1.25 plus tax

Conveniently packaged for use at home or when traveling

SEND NO MONEY! Simply fill out and mail the coupon. When your Minit Curl arrives, deposit only $1.25 plus tax and C.O.D. postage thru postman. Use as directed. If not completely satisfied with results, we'll refund full purchase price.

DO NOT BE MISLED BY SUBSTITUTE CAPSULES—Remember this formula was perfected by the same chemist who pioneered the first original SAFE home cold wave solution. Be sure you buy the original, genuine Marlene's MINIT CURL CAPS in the green and brown package!

HOW IT WORKS—Minit Curl contains a new scientific fixing or setting ingredient combined with a neutralizing agency . . . plus the high lustre element Glorium . . . which conditions your hair, restoring its natural sheen, leaving it gloriously beautiful.

THE FACTS:

- Safe, harmless, easy to use.
- Conditions as it curls.
- Fastest method yet.
- Curls and waves every type hair (actually conditions and benefits bleached or dyed hair).
- Makes permanents unnecessary (yet restores old permanents and "controls" new permanents).
- Laboratory tested and approved.
- Develops natural waves and curls.
- No experience necessary
- Each capsule makes 3 ounces

FILL OUT AND MAIL COUPON TODAY

MARLENE'S, INC., Dept. 3-H
205 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.
In Canada: 406 Hopewell, Ave., Toronto, Ontario

Send Minit Curl complete and I will pay $1.25 plus tax and C.O.D. postage on arrival on your guarantee of refund if not completely satisfied. Cash orders mailed postage paid. (Enclose $1.50 which includes tax.)

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

"Dentists say the IPANA way works!"

Junior Model Pat Barnard shows how it can work for you, too

Queen of the cruise ship, 17-year-old model Pat Barnard of Great Neck, N. Y., scores a terrific hit! Pat always finds her career and her date-life mighty smooth sailing—thanks to that dazzling smile!

Naturally, Pat follows the Ipana way to healthier gums and brighter teeth . . . because dentists say it works! Her professionally approved Ipana dental care can work for you, too—like this . . .

The Ipana Way is fun to follow, Pat tells her cabin-mate. Dentists say it works . . . and it's easy as 1, 2:

1. Between regular visits to your dentist, brush all tooth surfaces with Ipana at least twice a day.
2. Then massage gums the way your dentist advises—to stimulate gum circulation. (Ipana's unique formula actually helps stimulate your gums—you can feel the invigorating tingle!)

Try this for healthier gums, brighter teeth, an Ipana smile. Ipana refreshes your mouth and breath, too. Ask your dentist about Ipana and massage. See what it can do for you!

YES, 8 OUT OF 10 DENTISTS* SAY:

Product of Bristol-Myers

Ipana dental care promotes Healthier gums, brighter teeth

In thousands of reports from all over the country.*

P.S. For correct brushing, use the DOUBLE DUTY Tooth Brush with the twist in the handle. 1000 dentists helped design it!

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

FEBRUARY, 1949

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

I GOT MY MAN ..... by Diana Lynn 24
THREE LOVES THAT THRILLED THE WORLD (Temple-Agar; Gable-Lombard; Grable-James) ..... by Hedda Hopper 28
"OH, BROTHER!" (Bing Crosby) ..... by Bob Crosby 30
PROBLEM CHILD (Esther Williams) ..... by Bula Williams 32
SOMETHING NOT FOR THE BOYS (Jean Peters' Pajama Party) by Reba and Bonnie Churchill 34
SHE DID IT BEFORE AND SHE CAN DO IT AGAIN! (Deanna Durbin) by Erskine Johnson 38
THE GIRL HE CAN'T FORGET (Cary Grant) ..... by Sheilah Graham 40
LUCKY IN LOVE! (Jeanne Crain) ..... by Mary McSkimming 42
THE WOMAN NOBODY KNOWS (Jennifer Jones) ..... by Jack Wade 44
MEXICAN ESCAPADE (Rita Hayworth) ..... by Maxine Smith 46
HOUSE OF THE ONE-EYED GIRAFFE (Bob Hope) ..... by Viola Moore 48
SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY (Ingrid Bergman) ..... by Earl Wilson 52
HOLLYWOOD'S CRUELEST HOAXES ..... by Carl Schroeder 54
IS IT TRUE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT MONTY? (Montgomery Clift) by Cameron Shipp 58

features

TO OUR READERS 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
EDITORIAL: "The Case for the People" (Bob Mitchum) 27
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "The Snake Pit" 60

departments

MOVIE REVIEWS ..... by Christopher Kane 16
FASHION ..... by Constance Bartel 65
NEW FACES 75
YOUR LETTERS 76
MUSIC: "Sweet and Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 78
BEAUTY: "Don't Sit on Your Hands!" ..... by Carole Carter 92
FAN FARE 94
THE FANS ..... by Shirley Frohlich 115
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed) 116

ON THE COVER: Esther Williams Color Portrait by Nikolas Muray

WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
SHIRLEY FROHLICH, associate editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, associate editor
GLORIA LAMPERT, assistant editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
VIOLA MOORE, associate editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
BEVERLY OTT, associate fan club director
IRENE TURNER, research editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 38, No. 3, February, 1949. Copyright, 1949, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-President. Single copy price, 15c in U.S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U.S.A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

THE MOST UNUSUAL WESTERN EVER MADE!

Color by Technicolor!

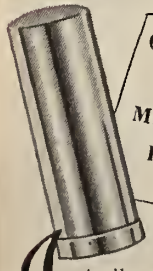
The thrilling story of three desperados who kept a promise to a woman!

Screen Play by LAURENCE STALLINGS and FRANK S. NUGENT • From the story by PETER B. KYNE

Produced by ARGOSY PICTURES CORPORATION • A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

the Lipstick you love has the "New Look" too!



Irresistible

NEW, LONGER

LIPSTICK

professional size... only 39¢

Feel like a make-up artist. Look like a society deb! So easy to use this softer, smoother, more flattering lipstick in its new, long glamour case of mock-gold metal. Try it today just to see how divinely shaped your lips can be!

Our famous Jumbo size NEW MOCK-GOLD METAL SWIVEL CASE LIPSTICK big value 25¢

At all cosmetic counters

Irresistible

WHIP-TEXT to stay on longer..... smoother

To our Readers

IF BOB CROSBY had known what he was getting into that first day he might have used his zweibach ration to buy back the birth certificate. Being alive was problem enough; being a kid brother was almost too much. First time he fell into the swimming hole it was Bing who pushed him. First time he snored it was big brother who cured him with a blow on the head. Bing had a twelve year advantage which he carefully preserved. It still hasn't got away from him. For further proof of this read "Oh, Brother!" on page 30. Bob wrote it with a smile—and a snicker. You see, Bing may have the lettuce and the golf score—but Bob has a daughter. And how many Crosbys can make that statement?

BOB HOPE, who is at least a friend of the clan, can make that statement twice. Linda and Nora are his girls' names. Along with Tony and Kelly they make up the Hope brood. They all laugh at his jokes and sometimes they help write the script. For this devotion the two older kids get a dollar a week. The babies can't count so they settle for love. There's plenty to go around in the Hope house—as you will discover if you turn to page 48 of this issue.

MAYBE WE OUGHT to call this our Valentine edition. . . . We're a pretty calloused crew, but once in a while something turns our stony hearts to water. Something, this month, is Hedda Hopper's story, "Three Loves That Thrilled the World." Remember the Gable-Lombard romance? Its sudden, tragic ending never blotted out the memory of their life together. . . . You've been reading about Shirley Temple in M. S. ever since she was knee-high. Now, on page 28, you can shed a tear with us for the little girl who grew up so soon—but so beautifully—and met John Agar. . . . Then there's Betty Grable and Harry James. They don't say very much about their marriage—but Hedda does. It's solid. It's terrific. It's . . . well, see for yourself. . . .

TALKING ABOUT LOVE—and who isn't? One of our editors has fallen. For three years she directed the fan club department with single-hearted devotion. For an equal number of years she graced MODERN SCREEN with her talented and lovely presence. Now, Shirley Frohlich, Associate Editor, is leaving us to marry a lawyer from Detroit. Daily commuters from that point to New York are practically unheard of—which is why Shirley is buying a one-way ticket. At any rate, she is Mr. Downes' (the charmer's) gain. We, on the other hand, were robbed, and can only sigh au revoir—with many tears and more best wishes. . . .

Obey that Impulse!!!!!
Tie one on with Ty and Gene... two charming people in a wonderful, wonderful picture!
TYRONE POWER
GENE TIERNEY
"That Wonderful URGE"
20th CENTURY-FOX
with
REGINALD GARDINER · ARLEEN WHELAN · LUCILE WATSON · GENE LOCKHART · LLOYD GOUGH
PORTER HALL · RICHARD GAINES · TAYLOR HOLMES · CHILL WILLS
Directed by ROBERT B. SINCLAIR · Produced by FRED KOHLMAR · Screen Play by Jay Dratler · From a Story by William R. Lipman and Frederick Stephani

Danny Kaye's take-off on Kay Thompson, with Jack Benny, Jack Carson, Van Johnson and George Burns as the Williams Brothers, was such a sensation at the Press Photographers' Ball last month, it was repeated at the Friar's Club Annual Dinner.

Shirley Temple and John Agar were among those present at the Kay Thompson-Williams Bros. opening at the Beverly Wilshire's Mayfair Room—a gala eve for all.

The lady herself—Kay Thompson—arrives at a party in her honor, with Jack Benny, Ben Gage and Esther Williams. The shindig, given by Arnold Kirkeby at his show-place in Bel-Air, was attended by 300, who sat down to orchid-laden table.

Peter Lawford squired a new girl, Molly Dunn, to the Kirkeby party, one of big events of the season. Host's home was designed by the man who built Hoover Dam!

Rory Colhoun ond his new wife, Lita Baron, cought Kay's routine, too. The act, called the most novel and funniest in years, originated in Hollywood a year ago, created a major stir. Recently, it's been on a nation-wide tour.

Among other guests at the party for Kay and her Williams boys were Mike Romanoff, Iris Bynum, Clark Gable and Cesor Romero. Iris is now No. 1 on Gable's date list. The two were the most photographed couple there..

LOUELLA PARSONS' Good news

It's been a month of jivin' jitters, if you ask me!

Some of the Hollywood antics have been amusing—some sad—some sensational. But if you believe in horoscopes, you must believe that the "sign" of utter confusion has been reigning over our town lately. To give you a rough idea:

Dan Dailey, usually a most sensible young man, gets his feelings hurt because his studio will not give him permission to appear in the Friar's Frolic show—and ups and disappears for three days. Even his wife did not know where he was.

I might never have received the "tip" that he was pouting it out in Texas if it hadn't been that a cook in a Seligman, Arizona, all-night restaurant, was a movie fan and a reader of my column.

He called me long-distance to tell me that he had been talking with Dan, who had stopped for a cup of coffee in his nitery.

"It was Dailey, all right," said William Osdeck—that's my pal's name. He was sure off Hollywood! When I told him I was a disappointed baritone with movie ambitions, he said: 'You're far better off where you are, in a restaurant washing dishes. Acting is a thankless job.'"

If his "mysterious disappearance" had not worried his wife so much, I would really have to look on Dan's antics as highly amusing. Just another case of an actor getting "tired of it all" and thinking he is abused. Well, it happens to the best of 'em. This boy comes from a long line of troupers and you couldn't drive him out of this business with a crowbar.

But all's well that ends well, and Dan's little delinquency ended with him right back where he belongs—hoofing and emoting in You're My Everything on the 20th Century-Fox lot.

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Don't be Half-safe!

by
VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush af wamanhaad many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nathing "wrang" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Twa dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause your apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deadarants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. In fact, more men and women everywhere use Arrid than any other deodorant. It's antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate pratectian is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears. This new Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, will not crystallize or dry out in the jar. The American Laundering Institute has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Arrid is safe for the skin—non-irritating—can be used right after shaving.

Dan't be half-safe. During this "age of romance" don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter—only 39¢ plus tax.

Judy Garland and her sister Jimmie were talking over old times, when snapped at the studio. She'll be starred with Gene Kelly, Frank Sinatra and Betty Garrett in Lovely To Look At, remake of Roberta.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

The second surprise of the month was when one of his old girl friends actually gave Clark Gable the cold shoulder and the go-by. I never thought I'd live to see the day.

The daring blonde who iced a shoulder in the direction of "The King" is Virginia Grey, once a big moment in Gable's romantic life. Perhaps she grew tired of being referred to as "the girl Gable always goes back to"—because here is what happened:

Clark saw Virginia getting out of her car before a store in the Valley and rushed up to shake hands. The lady looked right through him!

But Gable apparently is not taking it too much to heart. The lady in his life at present is Iris Bynum. They have been doing the night clubs together and she is a fun girl who makes him laugh.

Virginia, I might add, has also found another romance. She is being seen everywhere with Richard Quine, ex-husband of Susan Peters—and they appear very happy in one another's company.

* * *

Robert Walker continues to be the sad story of the Hollywood month. I have criticised him in the past for his remarks about the press, for the break-up of his marriage to lovely little Barbara Ford, and for not pulling himself together.

But, with many others, I am now beginning to know that Walker is a sick boy—not one to be railed against. There was nothing funny in his arrest on a "drunk-and-disorderly" charge while in the company of Pat Dane.

The things he said—the flippant attitude he assumed—should be forgotten because he was not himself. He is not himself.

I happen to know his studio is going to give him every opportunity to snap out of the nervous state he is in. Right now he is undergoing the "rest" treatment. But official patience is being sorely tried—and before anyone else can help him, Walker must make up his mind to help himself.

* * *

The final screwy situation is the marital status of the Errol Flynns.

I just talked with Nora and she tells me: "I love Errol very much—I'm still madly in love with him. But he has been ill and seemed to want to be by himself. It got to the point where life under the same roof became difficult for us. But when he comes back from his European trip—who knows? Everything may be all right again."

Meanwhile, Errol kept saying right up to the time of his departure he wanted Nora to go to Europe with him—wanted her to come home—and even sent her a key to their house just in case she had lost hers. But in spite of these interesting high-jinxes he certainly doesn't look to me like a man carrying a torch. Anyway, it doesn't show on him.

Nora is easily one of the best-looking gals in town and is having a fine time at parties dancing with most of the eligible bachelors with the gaiety of a deb with a full date-book.

At the Kay Thompson opening at the Beverly Wilshire (more about that gala shindig anon) she was a sensation in her pale blue, backless evening gown, with her fair skin and red hair.

Peter Lawford danced every dance he could get with her when other smitten gents weren't cutting in.

* * *

Now for that brilliant "first night" of the incomparable Kay Thompson and the four Williams Brothers. This act would "draw" in a wigwam—but believe me that swanky new Mayfair Room at the Beverly Wilshire is no tent!

I wish the people who claim the movie

Take your own true love to see

"My Own True Love"

A Paramount Picture Starring

PHYLLIS CALVERT

and

MELVYN DOUGLAS

with

WANDA HENDRIX · PHILIP FRIEND

BINNIE BARNES

Produced by VAL LEWTON

Directed by COMPTON BENNETT

Screenplay by Theodore Strauss and Josef Mischel

Adaptation by Arthur Kober • Based on a Novel by Yolanda Foldes

Lovely Phyllis Calvert

Do post-war morals allow this titian-haired beauty to accept a man's kisses while her lips still quiver with those of his only son?

Sensational Wanda Hendrix

"Tonight I saw my best friend in the arms of my brother, the woman to whom my father has given his love!"

FREE!

ALDENS NEW 1949 FASHION DIGEST

172 GLAMOUR-FILLED PAGES

Get Fashion's newest Spring triumphs now! Be first to wear the loveliest, the smartest!

Yours!.. FREE! Aldens thrilling Spring showing of today's most alluring styles—certain to make fashion history coast to coast! Be first to wear the newest, the most breathtakingly lovely fashions . . . discover a new enchanting you . . . radiant, confident, heart-teasingly desirable! Mail the coupon today—get your FREE copy of Aldens 60th Anniversary Fashion Digest. See style excitement to make you catch your breath. Everything for a glamorous wardrobe for teen, junior, miss or lovely lady, at the lowest prices in America! Fashions to wear from sun to starlight—the most adorable plaids and stripes, suave pastels, bewitching navies, sophisticated blacks in cottons, romantic taffetas, crepes, failles . . . even glamour ginghams and piqueiced calicos—news in buttons and bows, pegskirts, tier-skirts, billowing skirts, peplums, tunics, tiny nipped-in waists. Fashions for your home and all your family, too!Aldens guarantees every price lowest, guarantees your complete satisfaction or your money back! Don't delay—mail the coupon now for your Free Aldens Fashion Digest!

Make our 60th year your thriftiest year!

EST. 1889 Aldens CHICAGO 7

SEND FOR YOUR FREE COPY NOW!

ALDENS
Dept. 604, Chicago 7, Illinois
Please rush free copy of your Fashion Digest.

PRINT Name

PRINT Address or RFD

Post Office State

June Allyson and Dick Powell step out regularly these days, and finally squelched separatian rumors by being seen everywhere together. Dick is a praboble co-stor for Claudette Colbert in Love Is Big Business.

Roy Rogers, with Bill Boyd and Gobby Hoyes, organized gigantic Western shaw which was held November 28th at Olympic Auditorium. Proceeds will establish museum for relics of greatest movie cowboys.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

stars are dodging night spots could have seen the turn-out for Kay. Such stay-at-homes as the Ronald Colmans and the Fred Astaires were at ringside seats and apparently having the times of their lives.

When the above-mentioned Nora Eddington Flynn whirled by, Ronnie Colman leaned over to me and whispered, "Who is that perfectly beautiful girl?" Just goes to show you —not all movie people know each other.

A duet attracting attention were Merle Oberon and Greg Bautzer—but don't get too excited about that. Both Merle and Greg were the guests of the Jennings Langs and I still say the head girl in his life is Joan Crawford. She was not there because her doctor has ordered her to rest after she suffered a spell of nervous exhaustion.

Clark Gable with his current heart, Iris Bynum, was laughing and laughing at the witty things she said to him. That girl certainly knows how to keep a date amused—that's one way to get 'em, girls.

The Jack Bennys, Gracie Allen and George Burns, The Charles Vidors, Claudette Colbert and Dr. Pressman, the Bill Goetzes and the Van Johnsons were all at one big table—a field day for the photogs.

Oh, just about everybody was there. L. B. Mayer visited friends at different tables and I also saw the Dick Powells, the Johnny Greens, Ann Miller, Spike Jones, Shirley Temple with John Agar and the Rod Camerons.

Ginger Rogers looked "orfully" pretty in a black-and-white print—a really beautiful dress. And there was a time when people used to say Ginger didn't know how to dress! She and Jackie Briggs were with the Arthur Freeds and their table was next to that of Bebe Daniels, Wynn Rocamora, Mervyn Le Roy and yours truly.

* * *

And speaking of Kay Thompson—I could think only of the song "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls," when I walked into the lavish, flower-decked home of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Kirkeby for the party they gave in honor of Kay. This house—which Kirkeby, who is a wealthy hotel magnate, bought from a man named Atkinson—is fabulous. After spending three million dollars on it, Atkinson and his wife separated. It is probably the most luxurious house in America—and I am not excepting the homes of the millionaires in the East.

Three hundred guests were invited for dinner and sat at tables decked with orchids. Gardenia hung trees gave the effect of a movie setting, and not a real party.

Curiously enough, there were very few of

Says RHONDA FLEMING:

"Sheer Excitement... that's New Woodbury Powder!... it gives skin the most heavenly Satin-Smooth Look!"

RHONDA FLEMING
David O. Selznick's star, co-starring with Bing Crosby in Paramount's
"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT"

SEE WHY WOMEN CHOSE WOODBURY OVER ALL LEADING BRANDS!

The moment you try New Woodbury Powder you'll know why women all over the country preferred it to their own favorite face powders. Fluff on Woodbury and instantly your skin looks beautifully, Satiny smooth! An exclusive Woodbury ingredient gives this flawless Satin finish—a finish never possible with powder alone before!

See how "perfect" your skin can look! Woodbury's new secret ingredient covers tiny blemishes amazingly. See how this perfect look lasts... and lasts! New Woodbury Powder stays on hours longer.

And 'round you, clinging like a spell,
the enchanting
New Woodbury fragrance!

For Every Beauty Quality
Woodbury Wins!

In a dramatic Nation-wide test women compared New Woodbury Powder with their own personal face powders. They voted Woodbury better for texture, cover, cling... for every beauty quality! Actually Woodbury won by the tremendous average of 4 to 1 over all other leading brands of powder!

New Woodbury Powder

in 7 Glow-of-Color Shades

Medium and "Purse" sizes 30¢ and 15¢.
Large "Dressing Table" size $1.00. Prices plus tax.

Mon under blonket ond behind feothers is Bing himself. The Grooner wos nomed Chief Thundervoice by Squomish Tribe in Voncouver.

Pat O'Brien, o guest on MODERN SCREEN's radio show, Movie Motinée, tries o Boy With Green Hair wig on the m.c., Red Benson.

the younger set present. I saw Peter Lawford by himself. Clark Gable and Iris Bynum were at a table together, with Anita Colby several miles away at another table. The Jean Hersholts, old friends of the Kirkebys, were early arrivals. Diana Lynn was there with the man of her heart, John Lindsay. She is such a happy girl these days that it's a pleasure to look at her.

I couldn't possibly see all the people who were there, it was such a crowd. But it must have seemed like a Cinderella story come true to Kay Thompson, who started as Judy Garland's coach and friend at M-G-M. Everybody is delighted over Kay's success, as it hasn't changed her one bit.

It was very funny when Kay got up to sing at her opening—we all thought it was Danny Kaye. He had given such a good imitation of her at the Photographers Ball.

* * *

I rounded up the men this month and asked them what they particularly did not like in femme habits and traits—and came up with some interesting tips. (Next month—I'll ask the girls.) But read and heed:

Alan Ladd: "Sue's girl friends who get her on the telephone just as I walk in the door at night and keep yacking for an hour or so."

Guy Madison: "Girls who keep pulling at their skirts—or grabbing at their shoulders, continually pulling up straps. These continual-motion girls give me the jeebies."

Farley Granger: "A date who continually talks about the date she had the night before along the lines of 'I said to him and he said to me.'"

Cesar Romero: "Those 'cute' kids who spray you with a little whiff of their perfume, or borrow your handkerchief when their lipstick smears, or fix your tie. But the worst of all—losing half their makeup on your lapels when dancing."

Burt Lancaster: "Loud and conspicuous laughers. The 'Ha-Ha' guffawers in cafés or drawing rooms make the shivers go down my spine."

Peter Lawford: "The girl you take to a cocktail party—and then never see for the rest of the evening because she's off huddling with her girl pals or trying to promote some other guy." (Pete! Could that happen to you?)

* * *

Judy Garland's mother telephoned to say that all those stories that Judy started as a baby to earn money to carry her family along are ridiculous. Judy's father was a prosperous theater-owner in Grand Rapids and she told me that whenever Judy did appear in vaudeville as a child, it was in one of her father's theaters.

"I get so burned up," Mrs. Garland said, "when people say that Judy has had to support the family since she was in her cradle. She had a perfectly normal and happy childhood."

* * *

These bachelors certainly know how to give parties. Cesar Romero decided to "housewarm" the new apartment he has built for himself over the garage of the home he built for his parents, and it was also a welcome to his sister-in-law and his brother, Ed.

The whole town turned out, for Cesar is extremely popular.

I particularly noticed Mrs. Gary Cooper, dressed to the teeth at cocktail time, in an evening gown.

I stopped to talk to Loretta Young and Rosalind Russell—those two gay gals who had been an eyeful at the Photographers Ball when they dressed exactly alike as the Toni Twins. Those two pals may be dignified ladies on the screen, but they sure have their fun in private life. I'm so fond of both of them. I went on to dinner with them, their husbands and Johnny Miles, young Warner actor.

After the party, Claudette Colbert and the Jack Bennys decided they wanted Chinese food, so they went off looking for a chow mein parlor.

Reginald Gardiner, who has been entertaining his 81-year-old mother, brought her to Cesar's fun party. Reggie said that because of the waterfront strike, his mother had to sail back to England after being only a week in Hollywood. At 81, she made the trip on a Dutch freighter which took her over 30 days!

Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, who have left

Their Honeymoon for TWO... Was a Party of SIX!

When the Bride brings along her three kids.. and the Groom's ex-fiancee plays chaperone the Riot's On!

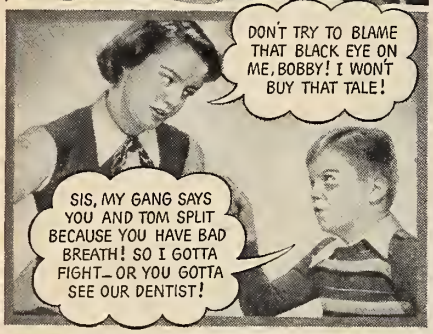
UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL presents

Claudette COLBERT Fred MacMURRAY

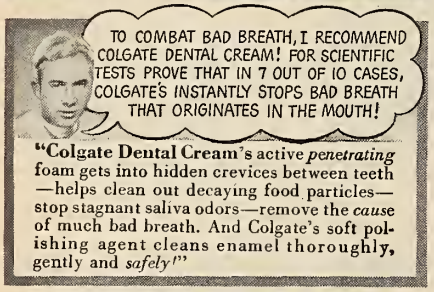
those grand "EGG and I" stars in

"FAMILY HONEYMOON"

with RITA JOHNSON · HATTIE McDANIEL · CHILL WILLS · Screenplay by DANE LUSSIER



Based on the novel by Homer Croy · Directed by CLAUDE BINYON · Produced by JOHN BECK and Z. WAYNE GRIFFIN



Universal International

DON'T MISS THAT OTHER GREAT COMEDY "YOU GOTTA STAY HAPPY"

Sis, I'm Tired of Fighting for You!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Always use COLGATE DENTAL CREAM after you eat and before every date

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Potricio Kothryn Johnston, born October 7, here mokes her camero debut. Kathryn and Johnnie were reported reconciled ofter he concelled his rood tour ond returned home.

to make their home in England again, were surrounded by a host of friends regretting their departure from Hollywood.

Anne Baxter joined the party late—she's very interested in politics and had been making a speech.

Maybelle Webb came without her son, Clifton, and was soon the center of attraction. I teased her because she passed on to me the news that Mrs. Ed Gardner was expecting a baby. She meant, I am sure, Mrs. Reginald Gardiner.

* * *

Personal Opinions: Paulette Goddard is not exactly my favorite screen personality—but I must say she knows how to make a good impression and get favorable publicity for herself. She created a lot of good-will in Mexico City and shared honors with the President's wife at a recent national charity event. . . . I'm sorry to say I cannot say the same complimentary things about another star—a girl I like very much—who was in Mexico at the same time. All I can say about her trip is, she should have "stood" at home! . . . Whichever way you happen to feel about the Robert Mitchum case, you must give him credit for his behavior recently. He has been very much out of the spotlight, and when he and Mrs. Mitchum do venture out for dinner they sit very inconspicuously in the background. I have noticed that many actors who did not know Mitchum particularly well before his trouble, frequently go up and speak to him and his wife. . . . Judy Garland is rapidly becoming the most popular "guest" on top radio programs. Her personality comes through beautifully—which is not true of all big movie stars. . . . Jennifer Jones and David Selznick will be married in Europe—or I miss my guess. . . . James Mason is definitely trying to "soften up." I believe he is sincerely sorry for the way he popped off about Hollywood before he ever came here. He and his wife have become close friends with the Glenn Fords and I think he would like to meet more people and be invited to interesting parties.

* * *

It may interest Lew Ayres—and you—to know that he was just about head man in my MODERN SCREEN fan mail this month. His performance in Johnny Belinda created a lot of interest and many fans are asking about him again.

Yes, I believe that his romance with Jane Wyman is serious. At one time, I think, they may even have been planning marriage when her divorce from Ronnie Reagan is final. However, now I am not so sure they are.

There is a girl who operates an art store in Hollywood who has been a close friend of his for a long time, and it is no secret that they still have dates.

Frankly, I'm not going to try to out-guess Lew on his possible matrimonial plans. He's the strong, like-to-be-alone type who may never marry again.

* * *

First, Deanna Durbin telephoned me the exciting news that she is going to Europe to make a picture for the great Italian director, Alexandrini—and then she dropped by my house to give me more details.

I am so glad to see Deanna looking happy and bubbling and herself again. Let's face it—the last two years have not been good for her. Her career at Universal-International, the studio where she was once queen-bee, hit an unexplainable snag and that can't be laid to "temperament" on her part, either. She's been a good girl for a long time—but sometimes it just happens that the right story can't be found for a star. (Editor's Note: For the story of Deanna's career troubles, see page 38.)

"I feel like the turning point in my bad luck has come," Deanna told me, her eyes sparkling. She looked so chic in a smart black street dress with one of those close-fitting hats with a jeweled buckle.

"Alexandrini is the director who made the wonderful Italian picture Furia," Deanna went on, "and I am so excited over making a movie for him. I'll play an American girl studying for opera in Rome, so I won't have to worry too much about speaking the language. Naturally, I understand and speak it a little from studying music."

As for her private life—I think Deanna is no longer undecided. It is my opinion that she will soon sue for divorce from Felix Jackson—probably before she goes away in January.

* * *

That's all for now. See you next month!

Mirror, mirror on the wall . . . is my hair fairest of them all ?

Even on shampoo day Rayve Creme Shampoo makes hair behave so beautifully!

In handy tubes or jars at drug and cosmetic counters.

Yet Rayve costs no more than ordinary shampoos!

See the miracle in your own mirror! Even on shampoo day your hair does just what you want it to—when you use wonderful Rayve Creme Shampoo! Rayve leaves your hair so silky soft, so clean and lustrous . . . so easy to manage. The pure lanolin in Rayve is specially blended with other important ingredients to make your hair behave!

Rayve billows into fragrant lather in the hardest water . . . even in cold water. It's not a soap. So its rich, active lather rinses away quickly, completely. No dulling film, no flaky dandruff remains. The perfect shampoo before and after home permanents.

To make your hair behave beautifully, use wonderful Rayve Creme Shampoo. See how Rayve, with pure lanolin, makes your hair lie softly obedient, shimmering with highlights. See this miracle in your own mirror . . the very day you use Rayve.

Another fine product of Pepsodent Division, Lever Brothers Company.

Dee Dee Dillwaad (Jaan Fantaine) persuades Marvin Payne (Jimmy Stewart) and his partner Bullets (Eddie Albert) ta take her fram New Yark ta Califarnia an their carga plane—alang with a chimpanzee.

Yau see, she's fleeing the guy she's just married. In New York, she'd escaped her bridal suite and then had talked Marvin inta letting her spend the night in his quarters.

Sa they all set aut far Califarnia an the plane. All kinds af camplica-tians ensue, including a farced landing, a mix-up with an embezzler, the lass af the plane and, natch, the dawning af a fine ramance.

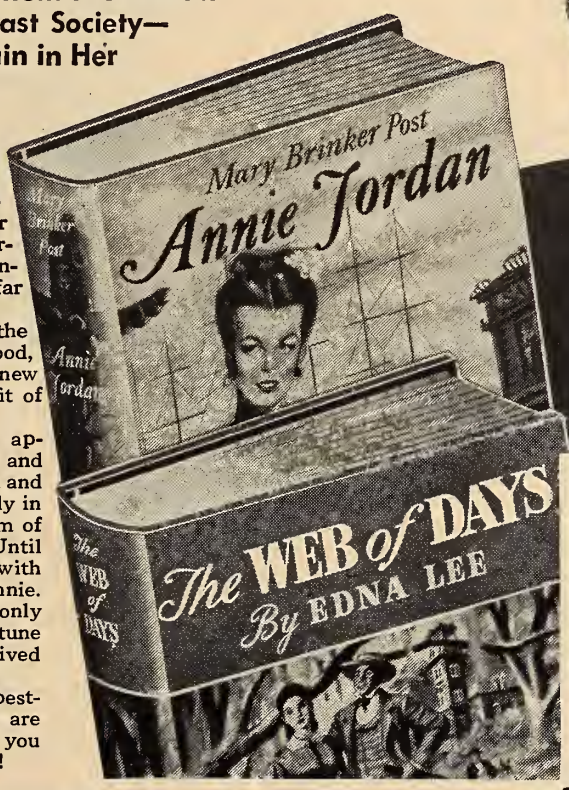
MOVIE REVIEWS

by Christopher Kane

YOU GOTTA STAY HAPPY

You'd know the Saturday Evening Post ran this first, even if nobody told you. It stands right up for home and mother, and it explains that money can't make a body content. Jimmy Stewart, a serious-minded veteran, and his pal, Eddie Albert, a veteran with hardly any mind whatever, have a two-plane airline when we meet them. They carry freight—not passengers—until the day they get stuck with Joan Fontaine. She's a very rich girl who's been talked into marrying a very rich boy (Willard Parker) but whose heart isn't in it. After the ceremony—or at least after she and her new husband reach their hotel room—Joan starts running. She runs into Jimmy's room, he thinks she's in terrible trouble, and lets her stay overnight, and the next day she fast-talks herself into a hitch to California on the Stewart-Albert plane. Nobody knows she's rich, which makes it okay for a manly soul like Jimmy to fall in love with her. Before the trip is over, the plane has several more passengers—all illegal, since a freight plane has no passenger permit—including an obnoxious honey-mooning Southern couple (Marcy McGuire and Arthur Walsh), and a sorrowful embezzler (Porter Hall). In the freight department, there's a chimpanzee, and a dead body. It's a remarkable trip, all right. The plane's forced down in Oklahoma, on the farm of Percy Kilbride, the truth about everyone aboard is made known, the embezzler starts home to give back the money, and Jimmy turns on Joan with loathing. ("A fella wants to support his own wife . . ."). He hates her right up until the day she buys him a Constellation (airplane) and then love conquers all. You could be crude and insist that love won't buy any constellations, but the picture's still pretty cute. Except for that honey-mooning baby-talking young couple. They made me sick.—Univ.

BOTH BEST-SELLERS YOURS FOR ONLY A 3-CENT STAMP!



THE MOST SENSATIONAL OFFER EVER MADE TO NEW DOLLAR BOOK CLUB MEMBERS!

Yes, 2 Thrilling Books—ANNIE JORDAN and THE WEB OF DAYS—Yours for only 3c when you join the Dollar Book Club! Mail Coupon Below!

The Red-Headed Cinderella

Who Made a Boom-Town Her Boudoir!

She Climbed from the Bottom of Skid Row to the Peak of Gold Coast Society—Only to Slide Down Again in Her Search for Happiness!

AT thirteen, Annie Jordan was dancing for coins on the tables of a sailors' cafe. At fifteen, she knew the first heartbreak of love, and at sixteen, her mother bullied her into a marriage she didn't want. Even Cinderella of the fairytale had a far easier lot!

By the time Annie had quit the sordid environment of her girlhood, she knew what she wanted and knew how to get it without the benefit of godmothers or magic wands!

Then her Prince Charming appeared. Hugh Deming, young and handsome heir of Seattle's oldest and most prominent family, fell madly in love with her, and Annie's dream of happiness was complete . . . Until the night of his abrupt farewell, with his parting words: "I love you, Annie. No matter what happens—I love only you." From then on, through fortune and disaster, Annie and Hugh lived the consequences of that night!

Both Annie Jordan AND the best-selling novel The Web of Days are yours for just a 3-cent stamp if you join the Dollar Book Club now!

and ALSO yours: Edna Lee's WEB OF DAYS

A Heroine "Seductive as Scarlett—Ambitious as Amber!"—Phila. Inq.

WHAT determined Hester to be mistress of Seven Chimneys, even if it meant risking the deadly rivalry of a beautiful ex-slave—even if it meant turning from the man she loved to become the wife of another man? This best-seller—PLUS Annie Jordan—yours for a 3c stamp if you join the Dollar Book Club now!

The ONLY Book Club That Brings You Best-Sellers for just $1

NO other book club brings you popular current books by famous authors for only $1.00 each. You save 60 to 75 per cent from regular retail prices!

Yet membership in the Dollar Book Club requires no dues of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year fulfills your membership requirement. In fact, for convenience, members prefer to have their books shipped and pay for them every other month.

More Than 700,000 Families Buy Books This Money-Saving Way!

Think of it! With book manufacturing costs at an all-time high; with most popular current fiction selling for $2.75 and $3.00 in the publishers' editions at retail, the Dollar Book Club continues to bring its members the cream of the books for only $1.00 each! And in attractive, full-size library editions, bound in a format exclusive for members!

Start Enjoying Membership Now

Upon receipt of the attached coupon with a 3 cent stamp, you will be sent the TWO best-sellers, "Annie Jordan" and "The Web of Days." You will also receive as your first selection for $1.00 your choice of any of these four best sellers:

- The Golden Hawk by Frank Yerby. Here's even more color, sweep and excitement than The Foxes of Harrow—the tale of a bold buccaneer and the wild-cat beauty he tamed!
- Light in the Sky by Agatha Young. In the dramatic setting of Ohio's roaring blast furnaces of 1870 a titan of industry and his beautiful, ruthless daughter fight for power.
- The Queen's Physician by Edgar Maass. What did the bewitching queen really want—the Doctor's cure . . . or the Doctor? Here is true history as lively as Forever Amber!
- Asylum for the Queen by Mildred Jordan. Love and adventure in the American wilderness of 1796, where, amid silks and satins, snobbery and intrigue, lived the last remnants of Marie Antoinette's pleasure-loving court.

EVERY other month you will receive the Club's descriptive folder called The Bulletin. The Bulletin describes the forthcoming two months' book selections. It also reviews about ten additional titles (in the original publishers' editions selling at retail for $2.50 or more) available to members at only $1.00 each. You may purchase either or both of the two new selections for $1.00 each, or neither. In any case, you may purchase any of the other titles offered for $1.00 each.

SEND NO MONEY

Mail Coupon — Get 2 Books for 3c!

When you see Annie Jordan—and Web of Days—which you get for 3 cents—and your first $1.00 selection; when you consider these are typical values you receive for $1.00, you will be more than happy to have joined the Club.

Doubleday One Dollar Book Club, Garden City, N. Y.

Mail This Coupon

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB
Dept. 2DMG, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member and send me at once "Annie Jordan" and "The Web of Days"—BOTH for the enclosed 3c stamp. Also send me as my first selection for $1.00 the book I have checked below:

☐ Queen's Physician ☐ Light in the Sky
☐ Asylum for the Queen ☐ The Golden Hawk

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin" telling about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered at $1.00* each to members only.

I have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during each year that I remain a member. I pay nothing except $1.00 for each selection received plus a few cents shipping cost.

Mr. }
Mrs. } .....
Miss }
PLEASE PRINT

Address .....

City, Zone & State .....

Occupation .....

If under 21, Age, please....

*Same Price in Canada: 105 Bond St., Toronto 2

DeLong
Bob Pins set the smartest
hair-do's
stronger grip—won't slip out

Your hair is short and to the point this season. The new brief styles are easy on the eyes easy to set, yourself, with DeLong Bob Pins. DeLong Bob Pins, with their new rounded ends, slide in easily, stay in indefinitely. Get DeLong Bob Pins on the famous blue card.

The Short Halo— created by Helen Hunt, famous Hollywood hair stylist. Make 3 rows of pin curls. Work clockwise from left part toward face. Pull hair slightly forward as you pin. Brush out hair upward, away from face. Let ends fall forward. Brush back hair upward.

You're always "set" with DeLong
Curl Setting Pins • Hair Pins • Safety Pins
Hooks and Eyes • Snaps • Pins
Hook and Eye Tapes • Sanitary Belts

JOAN OF ARC

In New York City, a whole theatre was re-built to house this movie, and press agents went around claiming it was the event of the century. Maybe it is. At any rate, there aren't two and a half hours of comparable pageantry anywhere this side of Cecil De Mille. The Joan of Arc story, told against beautiful Technicolored backgrounds, played out by a huge cast, and complete with exciting music, is bound to impress you. The story is basically Maxwell Anderson's Joan of Lorraine, adapted for the screen. Joan (Ingrid Bergman), a young peasant girl, is told by heavenly voices that God has chosen her for a tremendous task. She is to lead the armies of France to victory, even though England now occupies most of that stricken country, and the prospect of the tide's turning seems remote. Joan is also informed that she must crown the Dauphin (Jose Ferrer) King of France, despite the fact that the playboy-heir to the throne doesn't seem to be the best candidate for such high office. Naturally, Joan runs into trouble with officials, but gradually, people come to believe in her, they speak of an old prediction which tells how France will be saved by a maid from Lorraine, and in the end Joan goes off to lead her soldiers to triumph. As you probably remember, she's eventually betrayed by the very king she's worked to have crowned. He signs a truce with the English, refusing to allow Joan to finish the work she's begun (the work of driving the invaders from French soil) and when she's captured in an enemy ambush, he even refuses to ransom her. A French bishop (Francis Sullivan) in the pay of England, wishing to destroy Joan as a symbol (he knows how the French people idolize her) brings her to trial as a heretic, and she's burned at the stake, in due course. Miss Bergman does well with Joan; you have the feeling that she's very young, and terribly afraid to die, and because of these things her pain, and her faith, are particularly moving. All the acting in the picture is good, and as far as I'm concerned, J. Carrol Naish, John Emery and George Colouris can take extra bows.—RKO

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME

Bert Lahr brought the corny old play called Burlesque back to Broadway a couple of years ago, and nobody who saw him do it there (or on tour) will ever forget it. He made the baggy-pants, easy-going, hard-drinking character of Skid Johnson his own.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

We love Ava Gardner twelve months a year, but March is our month to have her on the cover of MODERN SCREEN. We're really more interested in the people you love, though, and that's why we're offering a three-month subscription to the lucky first 500 who send back the questionnaire below. Just tell us whom you'd like to see between the covers of MODERN SCREEN, and by golly, we'll try and get 'em for you. Remember, March, April, and May issues, absolutely free!!

QUESTIONNAIRE

What stories and features did you enjoy most in our FEBRUARY issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd, and 3rd CHOICES.

I Got My Man by Diana Lynn . . . ☐
Three Loves That Thrilled the World (Temple-Agar, Gable-Lombard, Grable-James) by Hedda Hopper . . . . . ☐
"Oh, Brother!" (Bing Crosby) by Bob Crosby . . . . . ☐
Problem Child (Esther Williams) . . . . . ☐
Something Not For The Boys (Jean Peters) . . . . . ☐
She Did It Before And She Can Do It Again (Deanna Durbin) . . ☐
The Girl He Can't Forget (Cary Grant) . . . . . ☐
Lucky In Love! (Jeanne Crain) . . ☐
The Woman Nobody Knows (Jennifer Jones) . . . . . ☐
Mexican Escapade (Rita Hayworth) . . . . . ☐
House of the One-Eyed Giraffe (Bob Hope) . . . . . ☐
Sentimental Journey (Ingrid Bergman) . . . . . ☐
Hollywood's Cruelest Hoaxes . . . . ☐
Is It True What They Say About Monty? (Montgomery Clift) . . ☐
Picture Of The Month (The Snake Pit) . . . . . ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News . . . . ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST? . . . . .

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference . . . . .

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference . . . . .

What MALE star do you like least? . . . . .

What FEMALE star do you like least? . . . . .

My name is . . . . .

My address is . . . . .

City . . . . . Zone . . . . . State . . . . . I am . . . . . years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

"I love to teach dancing

The New Arthur Murray Way

My pupils learn so much faster!"

Lola Arnaux, typical Arthur Murray teacher

"The Rumba's a great favorite," says Madeleine Murphy. "It's such fun to see a beginner do this gay dance after just one lesson. Teaching really is easy this new way, so satisfying, too."

"The Samba's such fun and looks so tricky that everybody loves to do it," says Joyce Lyons. "And, you can learn it in an hour thanks to 'The New Arthur Murray Way'... it's that quick!"

Even beginners become popular partners in a fraction of the usual time!

"I'm so excited about 'The New Arthur Murray Way' of teaching dancing. It seems like magic the way the Fox Trot, Waltz, Samba, Rumba, all develop out of his basic, new discovery — 'The First Step To Popularity'. You see this is the key to all dances and once you master it, and nearly everybody does in no time, you can lead or follow any type of music.

"Beginners are thrilled to find they can go dancing after only one hour . . . and amazed how little it costs to learn. And right now we have a special half-off price that saves you even more.

"But why don't you come in to the Studio for a FREE dance analysis and see for yourself what 'The New Arthur Murray Way' can do for you. Be a sought-after partner, the life of every party. Get set now for good times this winter."

PROOF YOU CAN DANCE AFTER ONE LESSON!

See how quickly you can learn to dance "The New Arthur Murray Way." Send for the "Murray-Go-Round" now! It contains fascinating, entertaining instructions on all dances. Clip coupon below—mail today.

Copr. 1949—Arthur Murray Inc.

ONLY 25¢

Arthur Murray

Dance Studios From Coast to Coast

VISIT THE ONE NEAREST YOU FOR A FREE DANCE ANALYSIS

ARTHUR MURRAY STUDIOS, Dept. 15B (Consult telephone directory for address of nearest studio, or write Arthur Murray Studios, 11 East 43rd St., New York 17, N. Y.) Please send me your magazine "Murray-Go-Around", 44 pages of pictures, dance news, instructions. I enclose 25¢.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE____ STATE_____

Mod.Sc.—Feb.

To My Favorite Blonde

Oh, lovely Blonde! My voice I raise,
Your tender, golden charms to praise.

When I am soiled beyond belief,
Your perfume heralds prompt relief.

Beneath your swift and gentle care,
I shun all washday wear and tear.

And when with me you've had your way,
I'm cleansed of 'Tattle-Tale-ish' Gray.

All substitutes I now decline,
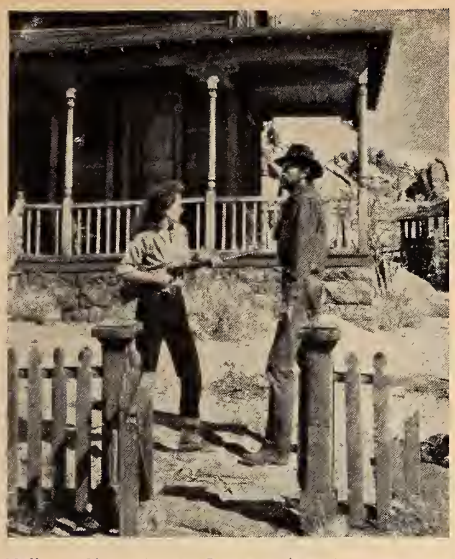
Dear Blondie, be my Valentine!

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"



When My Baby Smiles At Me: Burlesque comic Don Dailey needs wife Betty Groble's help.

For this reason, Dan Dailey was handed a particularly tough assignment when Fox cast him as Skid in the movie version of Burlesque. Dailey doesn't suffer too much by comparison, and you can't say more than that of any man. Story's about a burlesque comic married to a burlesque queen (in this case, Betty Grable) and working in a traveling burlesque troupe headed by a fellow called Lefty (Jimmy Gleason). The comic's talents are big-time, and when producer Sam Harris offers him a Broadway job, he heads for New York, after promising the little woman he'll lay off the bottle and ignore the blondes. Well, he's strong on resolution, but New York is full of speakeasys and beautiful women, and by the time wifey's free to leave the tank show and come join husband, husband's managed to cut a rug or two. Wife gets mad, and departs to marry a wealthy rancher. Husband starts down the road to ruin. Wife comes back and saves him. It isn't much, yet it manages to be enough. Bert Lahr's disintegrating Skid was a more pathetic figure than Dailey's (Dailey seems a little young and healthy to break your heart over) but on every other count, the movie tops the play. Betty Grable's good as the faithful, grieving wife; June Havoc and Jack Oakie are more than good as a couple of burlesque performers, Richard Arlen plays Betty's wealthy rancher, and there's lots of singing and dancing and Prohibition atmosphere.—20th-Fox

YELLOW SKY

Gregory Peck leads a band of men who've been so successfully uprooted by the Civil War they aren't ready to put their guns away, once the North-South struggle is over. Robbery seems easier than working. More exciting, too. The gang (including Richard Widmark, John Russell, Robert Arthur, Charles Kemper, Henry Morgan and Bob Adler—or, rather, "Dude," "Lengthy," "Bull Run," "Walrus," "Half Pint," and "Jed") holds up its first bank, and then heads across the burning Arizona desert. Suicidal, but what else can they do? The U. S. Cavalry is waiting for them if they turn back. Some days later, crazy with thirst, they arrive at the ghost town of Yellow Sky. There's water there. There's also a girl (Anne Baxter) and her old Grandpa (James Barton) in the otherwise empty community. Anne's so hostile the gang figures something interesting's going on, and sure enough, snooping reveals that Anne and Gramps have gold! $100,000 worth! They discovered it, they dug for it, they have it hidden. The gang's all for killing them, and dividing the loot, but Peck makes a deal. They'll split 50-50, half for his boys, half for the rightful owners. The owners' lives to be thrown in as a bonus. The noise begins when Widmark announces to Peck that he and the other fellows don't see any reason for kicking back to Anne and Grampa. Peck holds out for honor (among thieves, at that) and nearly gets himself shot to bits. He battles his whole former entourage, and emerges triumphant, rich, and married to Anne. She makes him go give back the money from the first bank he robbed, and there's the picture, tied up as pretty as you please. It's ever so Western—plenty of drawling, walking bow-legged and shooting from the hip—and Fox thinks it's as terrific as The Ox-Bow Incident. Podner, it ain't.—20th-Fox

Yellow Sky: Anne Baxter doesn't seem to realize Gregory Peck is really on her side.

EVERY GIRL SHOULD BE MARRIED

It is the contention of salesgirl Anabel Sims (Betsy Drake) that women have it terrible. Can they go up to a fellow and say, "What big brown eyes you have, what are you doing Saturday night?" No. That's what. No. They have to sit around and wait for some shmoe to ask them, and they never get the shmoe they want. Anabel's out to change things. She's got her cap set for Dr. Madison Brown (Cary Grant), a baby specialist, and she chases around to his club, his barber shop, his gymnasium, his office, collecting information about him. What he likes to eat . . . what his favorite flowers are . . . how many girl friends he's had, and why none of them hooked him. . . . Naturally, the doctor becomes aware of Anabel in due time; he can't help himself. He thinks she's an amusing—and irritating—kid, and he tells

I'm a safety-first girl with Mum

Smart girl, not to let lovely snug-fitting wool become a trap for underarm odor. You stay nice to be near because your charm stays safe with Mum!

Even in winter, there's a heat wave under your arms. Odor can form without any noticeable moisture. And remember—a bath only washes away past perspiration, but Mum guards against future underarm odor.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safer for charm

Mum safer for skin

Mum safer for clothes

Mum checks perspiration odor, protects your daintiness all day or all evening.

Because Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Snow-white Mum is gentle—harmless to skin.

No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

Every Girl Should Be Married: Cary Grant finally succumbs to tactics of Betsy Drake.

her so. Anabel attempts to make him jealous by pretending that Roger Sanford (Franchot Tone) who owns the department store where she works, wants to marry her. Cary asks why she doesn't leap at the chance, which isn't the exact effect she's working for. Sanford, incidentally, turns out to be a terrible wolf, and he's only too pleased to pretend he loves Anabel, until she clouts him over the head with a shovel, after he gets overfriendly. Anabel gets her man, in the end, though her tactics are purely harrowing, and anybody but kind old Cary Grant would have called the cops on her. Cary's wonderful in this picture—charming's still the word; as for Betsy Drake, she romps through her scenes terribly wide-eyed and eager-voiced, and the characterization of Anabel comes close to caricature. If you think that sort of girl is cute, you'll love Miss Drake; otherwise, she can get on your nerves. Diana Lynn's excellent as Anabel's fellow salesgirl and close friend, and Eddie Albert has a small chore which he works out more than smoothly.—RKO

SO DEAR TO MY HEART

So Dear To My Heart is sweet, and simple, and everything that's good. If you've got a quiet hour or so, and you feel like being charmed, here's the ticket. The story's concerned with a small boy named Jimmy Kincaid (Bobby Driscoll) who lives on a farm in Indiana with his grandmother (Beulah Bondi). He longs to own a race horse, but he settles for a tiny black lamb which has been pushed aside by its mother. Jerry brings the lamb up, bottle-feeding it, making a pet of it. Together, the boy and the lamb run in the woods, and when Danny (that's the lamb) gets into trouble (he's always breaking through screen doors), Jerry almost bursts making excuses for him. Jerry wants to earn enough money so he can take Danny to the County Fair, and win a blue ribbon, and he works toward this goal feverishly. Of such small, bright threads the picture is woven. There's a frightening scene where Jerry and his friend Tildy (Luana Patten) wander off into the deep forest, searching for a bee tree; there's a nostalgic scene where Granny and Uncle Hiram (Burl Ives) sing folk songs in front of the fire; there are funny scenes, and tender scenes, and here and there a Walt Disney cartoon sequence. The cartoon sequences are both cunning and very moral, designed to influence children along righteous paths. They feature songs called, "It's Whatcha Do With Whatcha Got," and "Stick-To-It-Ivity," which gives you some idea. Whether you were a country kid or a city kid, you'll enjoy this one.—RKO

LET'S LIVE A LITTLE

Robert Cummings, playing a young advertising executive named Duke Crawford, is lousy with troubles. The kind of troubles other guys wish they had. It seems that beautiful women simply can't resist him. Take Michele Bennett (Anna Sten) the beauty-preparations queen. Her creams and salves are worth a million dollars a year to Duke's agency, but she won't sign a contract unless he marries her. As far as Duke's concerned, Michele's charms have grown a trifle faded, but she's still got the power to drive him crazy, so to speak. He begs his boss to be given a job where he can deal with a man. The head of the agency, a kind old character, sends Duke to see a psychiatrist, a Dr. Loring. This doctor's written a book, and Duke's to plan the publicity campaign. Yeah, you guessed it; the doc turns out to be Hedy Lamarr. Now there's double trouble. Dr. Loring's as irresistible to men as Duke is vice versa. He elects to be her patient. She cures him of his complex (he hears bells ringing where there are no bells) by kissing him in the moonlight. Cures him!—she practically electrocutes him. But when he discovers she's just using him as a guinea pig, he decides to marry Michele Bennett. A million dollars is better than none, as the saying goes. Now—will Hedy realize she's in love with Duke in time to stop the wedding? Will Duke sock that Dr. Field (Robert Shayne) who's been chasing Hedy? Will the advertising agency go bankrupt? You'll find out. Over the years, Robert Cummings has developed from an animated stick of wood into a most charming and accomplished actor, Hedy's lovely as ever, and the laughs are numerous.—Univ.

THE LUCKY STIFF

It's possible that all murder mysteries are this confused, and I just don't see enough of them. Anyhow, I doff my hat—heck, I doff my whole head—to The Lucky Stiff. It had me so mixed up I'm still not sure who done it. Who done what? Why, the four murders. A shady operator named Childers (Charles Meredith), who owns the Casino Club, gets rubbed out first. Then the man that was hired to eliminate Childers, a thug known as Malloy, is shot when he's preparing to tell who hired him—but that's enough of that. There are about six plots running wild here. One concerns a singer, Anna Marie St. Claire (Dorothy Lamour), with whom lawyer John J. Malone (Brian Donlevy) is enchanted. Every night, he goes to the Casino Club where she's appearing, and he sits and moons at her. What he doesn't know is that she's the girl friend of Childers (the first corpse, if you remember) though she really loves Britt (Warner Anderson), Childers' right-hand man. To make everything adorable, Britt loves Mrs. Childers, and she cares for him too. Incidentally, since nobody (but the district attorney and Malone) knows about Malloy (the thug who really killed Childers) the general public and all the newspapers believe that Anna Marie went to the electric chair for killing Childers, and every time she appears, people run away screaming about ghosts. Fortunately, the louse who's behind all the murdering, is also behind the "protection racket" in town, and since that's what Malone's out to break up when we first meet him, he kills two birds with one stone. Everything else in the picture's already been killed. The most pleasing feature of The Lucky Stiff is Claire Trevor's playing of Malone's faithful secretary. She does a really wonderful job. "Cute," I regret, is the word for it. I wish there were a better one.—U.A.

THE KISSING BANDIT

Here's Frank Sinatra as Ricardo, a boy from Boston (that's the United States) who travels all the way to California (that's still a possession of the Spanish crown) in order to join his late father's old partner, Chico. Chico's been having bad times as an inn-

(Continued on page 116)

Let's Live A Little: Robert Cummings gets to be a patient of psychiatrist Hedy Lamarr.

The Kissing Bandit: Frank Sinatra thinks he has to be bold and reckless, but he's shy.

New!
Exciting Discoveries in Skin Care

Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams ...Never before such Beauty for YOU!

Your skin . . . ravishing! . . . with these new-formula Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams! Science's newest secrets . . . in six exquisite beauty aids. Incomparable cleaner cleansing! Superb richer softening! Veil-of-flattery finishing creams! Each of unsurpassed quality. Jars come dressed in pink-and-gold elegance, at welcome moderate prices.

Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream cleanses skin the cleanest ever.

Truly, Penaten is a miracle cleansing aid! Penaten penetrates—reaches deeper into pore openings. Quickly seeps through make-up tints. Amazingly thorough—thoroughly gentle. Your skin looks clearer, because it's cleaner. Your first jar will prove, Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream—with Penaten—truly glorifies your skin!

Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream smooths skin the softest ever!

Magically, Penaten aids the penetration of smoothing emollients. Carries lanolin's rich benefits deeper, softening tiny dry lines. Smooths flaky roughness—on the instant. Skin looks fresher, younger . . . lovely to see!

Introducing PENATEN New Skin Beautifier in

From trial jars 20¢, to luxury jars $1.39 plus tax.

Woodbury De Luxe Liquefying Cleansing Cream—contains Penaten! Particularly effective for cleansing oily or normal skin. Melts instantly. Loosens clinging grime, make-up, surface oil. Night and morning use helps keep skin clearer, younger-looking.

Woodbury De Luxe Vanishing Facial Cream—For Glamorous Make-Up: Greaseless, disappearing. A thin veil makes even oily skin look dewy. For a Beauty Pick-up: Apply lavishly to soften skin particles. Tissue off. Skin looks fresher, younger.

Woodbury De Luxe Powder Base Foundation Cream—Petal-Tinted: Adds glow to any powder shade. Veils dry or normal skin in satin-textured base that holds make-up. Helps hide blemishes. Apply sparingly—smooth over face, throat.

Woodbury De Luxe Complete Beauty All-Purpose Cream—Pink-Tinted: Penaten makes this De Luxe All-Purpose Cream more effective—for complete skin care, day and night. Cleanses deeper. Softens superbly. Provides a clinging make-up base.

Diana Lynn and 30-year-old architect John Lindsay, shortly before their marriage.

by Diana Lynn

I got MY MAN!

I'd been sitting pretty all my life—without a man. But after all, what could any man mean to me?
Mr. Lindsay, I soon discovered, meant—everything!

Diana Lynn became Mrs. John Lindsay on December 18th. When you read this, she and Johnny will have just returned from their honeymoon in Bermuda.—THE EDITORS.

■ Everything was fine. I had a career, a perfectly swell apartment, and excellent health. I was a very contented girl—and one of the things I wasn't at all interested in was marriage in a vine-covered cottage.

Well, that was last spring. Now, much to my surprise, I find myself looking for a house, a church to be married in, and the time to have a final fitting on my wedding gown.

The great change began one warm June evening. Stu and Angie Martin, my date—a casual one—and some other friends were at the Mocambo. After a while, we decided to go to Stu and Angie's to finish the evening.

Enter John Lindsay—whom up to then I'd never met. He'd been working late and, as he'd done many times before, he happened to stop by Stu and Angie's.

Naturally, I thought he was awfully attractive. (Who can blame me?)

Then, two months later—on August 17th, to be exact—Teddy Stauffer, whom I'd met in Mexico, took me to a party at L'Aiglon. I was wearing a plaster cast clear up to here on my arm. I'd broken it while I was at La Jolla appearing in a play. (Had I fractured myself going all-out for my Art? Not exactly—I'd slipped in the bathroom!) It was my first public appearance after the (Continued on page 85)

Modess .... because

Forget all other Beauty Care and use Palmolive Soap as Doctors advised for a Brighter, Fresher Skin!

DOCTORS PROVE you, too, may win a Lovelier Skin using Palmolive alone . . . regardless of age . . . skin type . . . or previous beauty care!

For a lovelier complexion—the kind men admire and women envy—stop improper cleansing. Instead follow the Palmolive Plan using Palmolive Soap alone the way 36 doctors advised 1285 women with all types of skin—young, older, dry, oily and normal. These leading skin specialists proved that Palmolive Soap used this way—with nothing else—brought lovelier complexions to 2 out of 3. Yes—lovelier complexions regardless of age, type of skin or previous beauty care. Start today to use Palmolive Soap—nothing but Palmolive Soap—this way:
1. Wash your face with Palmolive Soap.
2. Then, for 60 seconds, massage gently with Palmolive's soft, lovely lather. Rinse! 3. Do this 3 times a day for 14 days. This cleansing massage brings your skin Palmolive's full beautifying effect!

And for Loveliness All Over...

Get Palmolive Bath Size for tub or shower. It's big! Long-lasting! Economical! Gives you Palmolive's proved complexion care all over!

An open letter to Bob Mitchum

the case for the people

Dear Robert Mitchum:

Just about the time this issue of MODERN SCREEN will appear, your trial on narcotics charges is scheduled to begin. No matter what the trial's outcome may be, there's one thing about your case that should make you and every American feel mighty proud.

That thing is the great, good heart the American public has once again shown it possesses.

When you were arrested, charged with the possession of marijuana, it seemed to many that your career was hopelessly smashed, no matter how innocent you might eventually be proved to be. Even you, in your first confusion and despair over the damaging appearances, were reported to have said, "This is the bitter end."

But the pessimists and grave-diggers had reckoned without the simple, garden-variety kindness of people everywhere in this good land. You, the studios, the magazines, newspapers and radio stations were swamped with expressions of good-will which said, in effect: "All right, maybe the guy has made a personal mistake. We'll see. And if he is found guilty, he'll pay the penalty. So why kick a man when he's down? He's still a darned good actor and we still want to see him on the screen."

The greatest glory of the tradition in which America was founded is its tolerant concern with every man and woman as an individual, entitled to fair play and a "break." The expression of that concern in your case, Bob Mitchum, is a clear and valid proof that the national tradition is still tremendously strong and alive.

Maybe Americans are overly sentimental. Maybe it's best to be cold and cynical in a world that so often seems ruled by brutal selfishness and double-dealing. But—maybe not.

This turbulent globe would be in a desperate mess indeed if the American people didn't have their strong streak of "sentimentality." Tyranny would long ago have been firmly in the saddle everywhere.

Sentimentality? There's a far better word for it—a golden word that, in its true, Biblical meaning, is the keynote of all our moral values.

That word is Charity.

Audrey H. Nichols

EDITOR

Shirley could have had her choice of foreign titles, playboys ar millionaires. But all she wanted was love—and faund it in John Agar.

Three loves that thrilled the world

by Hedda Hopper

These are the love stories of three Hollywood couples—the stories of their deep and quiet passions which no earthly thing could ever mar . . .

■ Once I happened to ask a friend of mine named Irving Berlin, what the secret was for writing hit tunes.

"It's really very simple, Hedda," he smiled. "It's just saying the same old story, 'I love you,' over and over again to new music."

I've always thought you could say pretty much the same thing about the movies. The year-in, year-out fundamental stuff of Hollywood make-believe is love, love, love. And—as where does it not?—the same potent force prevails in movieland's off-screen life. Yes, indeed! There are plenty of times I can think of when "I love you" wasn't just a line in a shooting script.

So, as Valentine's Day approaches, let me tell you what I know about three great loves, all made in Hollywood, that thrilled the world—and still thrill it.

One is the love of a Hollywood king for his queen; another's the story-book romance of a golden-haired movie princess for her prince charming; and the other is just a quiet, deep passion quite as plain as John loves Mary. Among my romantic souvenirs, the love stories of Clark Gable and Carole Lombard, of Shirley Temple and her handsome John Agar, and of Betty Grable and her head man, Harry James, rate just as highly for real romance as do those big league love affairs of Beatrice and Dante, of Heloise and Abelard and—yep—of Wally and Edward.

Shirley Temple has had the world, and particularly Hollywood, at her feet all her life. Even as a mere moppet, Shirley accepted all this adulation and affection heaped on her curly head without losing it—or her heart, either. And that heart was (Continued on page 111)

Twa af the mast publicly spatlighted and privately plain peaple in Hallywaad are Betty Grable and Harry James. Betty says simply, "Harry and I cauldn't live withaut each ather naw."

The marriage af Carale Lambard and Clark Gable was perfect till its sudden tragic ending. Gable and the waman he laved were as vital a pair as cauld be faund anywhere.

When I was a kid, he treated me rough. Now I'm a big boy, and he doesn't treat me at all. But strangely enough, I like the guy—even if this does sound like flattery—which it is.

"oh, brother!"

by bob crosby

Bing rehearsing with me and my band—which can't compete with his—his has 37 pieces and four acres of Trotter.

■ I first met Bing Crosby when I was one day old.

At the time, I was the one with the receding hair line. Furthermore, I was asleep at the time, my handsome head on my mother's shoulder, looking for all the world like a blessed event. There has been some question about that in family circles, but Bing was highly interested in me at the time.

Mother says there was a strange light in his eyes when he came into the room. He looked at her intensely and demanded, "What is it?"

"Just what you wanted," Kate Harrigan replied gently, "a boy!"

"Huh!" Bing exclaimed. "It had better be!"

Then he walked out of the room, slamming the door behind him.

The significance of this moment was something that was to dawn on me later. It seems that for 12 long years Bing had been the baby of the family. Only the baby of a family can understand that statement. Now I was the patsy—and if I'd known what that meant I might have used my zweibach ration to buy back the birth certificate.

It's not that I have anything against Bing, or vice-versa. It's just that the life of the baby brother in any family most of the time is just plain hell.

We lived in a big brown frame house. The oldest children had their choice of bedrooms. That left Bing with the sleeping porch when there were no more bedrooms. It also stuck him with me. When I could get along without diapers they moved me out to the sleeping porch. I thought that was fine. He thought it was awful.

Weekdays he had to teach me how to tie my shoe laces. Sundays he saw to it that I genuflected properly at Mass. At night when I'd wake up and stagger around in my sleep headed for the bathroom he had to make sure I wasn't going to fall downstairs. Thinking it over, I can hardly blame him for assuming these duties with all the gracious charm of a hungry bear.

He snored. So did I. When I was awake and he was snoring, there was nothing I could do about it. When he was awake and I was snoring I got hit in the head with a pillow. Tiny Tim never had it so bad.

I was too small to be kicked around much, there being 12 years difference in our ages. So I was an ever-present nuisance, spending all of my time trying to get into the act. I was bright, though. I found out soon enough that if I didn't get to the table on time, that gang (Continued on page 103)

Problem child

By BULA WILLIAMS

My Esther was like any other girl. "Mommy, the boys didn't dance with me." "The girls don't like me." . . . There was no problem we didn't solve around the kitchen table.

Esther Williams at 13. She still seeks advice from her mother, who helped her so with teen-age problems. Below: With her parents and relatives at a recent birthday party.

Bula Williams says: "My combined life's work, major interest, hobby and profession has been young people's problems." A staff-member of The American Institute of Family Relations as a counsellor and lecturer, she has earned her qualifications through the first-hand experience of raising five children of her own. This modest, down-to-earth account of how, with humor and understanding, she helped her daughter Esther over the rough spots of growing up will, we feel, strike an instant chord with millions of readers.

—The Editors

■ The minute I saw Esther's face I knew something was wrong. A cloud shadowed the usual sunshine of her smile; she was too quiet when she came in the house. Esther was in junior high school then and about 14. She'd just returned from a holiday to the mountains with a crowd of her boy and girl friends.

"Hello, honey," I greeted her. "Have a good time?"

"No, Mommie," she blurted. "I had a miserable time."

I wasn't surprised. Her expression had telegraphed that news. "Well, what's the matter?"

"Oh," said Esther in a hurt and baffled voice "the boys didn't dance with me. And the girls were snippy. Nobody liked me. They left me out in the cold. . . . Mommie, what's the matter with me?"

"Not much," I told her. "But we've got a problem on our hands, haven't we? Let's see what we're going to do about it. . . ."

So many people who see Esther Williams' smiling, sunny face on the screen write me and say, "How lucky you are, Mrs. Williams, to have a girl so obviously happy and well-adjusted. What a blessing to have had no problems with your delightful daughter."

No problems? We had them practically every day in our home, where Esther grew up. Every child is a problem child. (And I had five children.) Life, it's been said, is just one darned thing after another, which is to say just one problem on the heels of the one before. Problems are the fibres of life itself and solving them is living.

Esther's problem at that point was friends—and that's a pretty important problem at 14. She needed help. We sat down at the kitchen table to talk. Our problem was not to be grieved and gloomed over—it was to be solved. And as usual, the minute we delved into (Continued on page 77)

something not for the boys

Recipe: Take six gabby gals and rapidly add food
Warm well before a fire and beat with pillows.
That's the way
Jean Peters cooks up a slumber party.

by reba and bonnie churchill

Slumber party was the sudden inspiration af Jean Peters, wha invited ather girls by phane. Kathleen Hughes and Vanessa Brawn farmed chaw-line far wienies and patata salad—but Reba was served first.

Na female party is complete withaut camparing lipstick and nailpolish jabs. Reba and Bannie watched with amazement as Kathy used a new shade an each tae. "Sa I can tell them apart," she averred.

After palishing aff hat dags, gang turned ta hame-made papcarn, marshmallaws and candied apples. (See the simple recipes far all these delectables in aur Fan Fare department an page 94.)

Jean Peters and Colleen Townsend, with her hair in rag curlers, munched on jelly apples and had a long talk (mostly about men).

■ The night was cool. The pajamas flashy. The gossip sparkling. The hostess Jean Peters. Perfect ingredients for a slumber party.

Jean has a sense of humor like an electric shock. It always startles you. Surround her with her girlfriends from 20th Century-Fox, like Betty Lynn, Colleen Townsend, Vanessa Brown and Kathleen Hughes—well, anything can happen and, as the old line has it, usually does.

We had heard rumors. There was that other time Jean had hostessed a pajama party . . .

She was attending Ohio State. It was one of those crisp fall days—just made for football. The leaves were turning burnt-gold and small gusts of wind would bring them shivering down to the sidewalk.

Jean and some of her dorm sisters were coming back to Baker Hall from the game. "This," she declared snapping a dry leaf under her foot, "is the ideal time to huddle before a fire and have a slumber party."

By the time they'd reached the hall, Jean had convinced the others. All except one girl. She never joined in on such undignified fun. And certainly couldn't be bothered that night, since she had a date.

Jean sat on the bed watching her get ready. Then an interesting idea suddenly popped into her head. What would happen to that dull, dignified creature if. . . ?

There was no use Jean's just sitting there when she knew she was going to do it anyhow.

The girl was a little late for her date. Two hours in fact. Seems someone had pushed her, fully clothed, into the shower.

But that had been three years, a 20th Century contract, and two pictures ago. Jean, we reminded ourselves, must have changed since then.

However, we hadn't reckoned with Betty, Colleen, Vanessa and Kathy. Although these girls have different backgrounds—one lived in Vienna, (Continued on next page)

something not for the boys

Slumber party guests did their own cooking. Colleen blackened marshmallows and Vanessa served up her frankfurters well-done-to-a-crisp.

Girls gathered on living room floor to watch Betty Lynn's fortune-telling exploits. She predicted great careers and stardom for all, after first finding out that Jean already had earned a good role in 12 O'Clock High.

(Continued from page 35) another toured the wartime CBI circuit, while the others came to Hollywood via Broadway or college—they all, we soon learned, share an identical urge. Behind those cherubic faces smolder the sardonic brains of practical jokers.

The evening began quietly enough at Jean's Westwood home. We were all in the den preparing a picnic-fashion snack. Vanessa and Kathy brought in the food from the kitchen. Betty did her utmost to get a blaze going in the fireplace, while Jean spread a tablecloth on the floor.

You'd never find another tablecloth like it. It's strictly a Peters original. "I only like to sew dramatic things," Jean confessed. We noted the red flannel spread edged in leopard skin—and nodded in rather dazed agreement.

Then Jean told us about something else she'd designed—a white brocade evening gown with a train. It was elegant. She wore it to the opening of the Opera. Only trouble was, she hadn't decided to make it until two days before opening night.

"My eyes were so tired from stitching I couldn't even see the singers. I hope they couldn't see me either, because the basting started to unravel after intermission—and not only that, the train of my gown soon resembled the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese—dotted with footprints. That little number certainly wasn't anything to have worn in that mob scene. If I'm going to design things, I do wish I wouldn't always do it on the spur of the moment."

"That's the way I do things too," volunteered Coke Townsend, who by this time was decorating the wienies with cheese and bacon. "I won't sew anything for months, then I'll see an exciting design—and out comes the Singer and some material I've been saving."

By this time Betty triumphantly had the fire crackling and Kathy was filling the plates with potato salad. There was a lazy-Susan revolving tray in the center of the room, just an arm's reach away from everyone, laden with pickles and olives and nuts and marshmallows.

We took turns roasting the hot dogs and popping the popcorn. Vanessa was exiled to the corner when she charcoaled the corn and set the popper on fire. (Continued on page 74)

photos by bert parry and bob beerman

This attack took place when Colleen refused to hit the sack. Pillow later burst and buried them all in down.

Time for bed, so girls tripled up on tooth- and hair-brushing chores. Vanessa (soon in The Fan) discussed decoration of her new hill-top home, "The Eagle's Peak," with Betty and Kathy, who is making her screen debut in Road House.

she did it before and

SHE CAN DO IT AGAIN!

by erskine johnson

■ A thirteen-year-old girl with soft brown hair and blue eyes lifted up her voice and, with confident ease, sang one of the most difficult of operatic arias.

As she finished, the Hollywood celebrities at the old Trocadero rocked the chandeliers with applause. And almost before the echoes had stopped vibrating, a producer had signed the little girl—Deanna Durbin—to a contract with M-G-M.

Six months later they dropped her option. In those six months the girl with the clear, lovely voice appeared in one short subject with a promising youngster named Judy Garland. Then they let her go.

They didn't believe she had a future.

That was 13 years ago. Since then, Deanna Durbin has gained international fame, has twice been married and has become a mother.

With her voice matured into a really glorious instrument of song; with her acting ability developed into wide range and depth; with great physical beauty, charm, and the driving ambition of the true artist, Deanna Durbin should be twice the success she was when she was half her present age.

And yet—Deanna Durbin's screen career is swiftly fading.

It's a crime—and a totally unnecessary crime—that this should have come to pass. And I believe with all my heart that she can come back to the top again, in exactly the way she reached it before.

Let's go back and see just how that crime occurred.

You've heard Deanna sing many times. And each song she sang gave you a thrill. But you couldn't have known the true significance of each of those songs to the girl who sang them. You couldn't have known the story behind them, the happiness, the heartache, the thrill or disappointment shadowing each melody or set of lyrics.

No, you couldn't have known, because Deanna showed to the world only the things she wanted the world to see. Locked inside her were the things that ate her heart out or made it almost burst with joy.

Those are the things (Continued on page 87)

what happened to Deanna?

only yesterday...

Newspapers and magazines told of Deanna's fabulous rise to fame, praising her for her one-woman contribution to the success of Universal.

NICE GIRL—"One of the screen's most interesting stories of the year and a picture that's guaranteed to please all."
—Oklahoma City theater manager in Motion Picture Herald, April 1941

IT'S A DATE—"Once again we scored heavily with Deanna, as has been the case with several of her other pictures. All of her pictures are so refreshing, it is difficult for one to fail to enjoy them."
—N. J. theater manager, Motion Picture Herald, Jan. 1941

. . . and later
"Each of Deanna's pictures meant another million in the thirsty tills of old Universal."
—N. Y. Sunday Mirror, Nov. 7, 1943

"Before she was 16 her pictures were solely responsible for pulling a major studio, Universal, out of the 'red' and into the pink of success."
—N. Y. Journal-American, Nov. 3, 1946

"Deanna Durbin, Top Salaried Woman, Draws $310,738."
—headline, N. Y. World Telegram, Jan. 8, 1947

but today...

Theater managers and critics complain about Durbin pictures. They still like Deanna, but protest poor material, weak casting, dullness.

SOMETHING IN THE WIND—"It is one of the dullest, most boring screen plays to come out of Hollywood . . ."
—N. Y. Herald-Tribune, Aug. 1947

". . . Used on midweek to fair business. Miss Durbin has lost much of her popularity, but she still has a great voice."
—California theater manager in Motion Picture Herald, Feb. 1948

". . . We certainly took a beating on this feature . . . Durbin is a dead duck as far as we are concerned."
—Canadian theater manager in Motion Picture Herald, Nov. 1948

UP IN CENTRAL PARK—". . . one of the dullest shows on record . . . Picture is utterly without charm, a stiff and static bore."
—N. Y. Herald-Tribune, May, 1948

". . . they just do not go for Deanna as they did years ago . . ."
—Vermont theater manager Motion Picture Herald, Nov. 1948

She was always blonde and beautiful—that girl of Cary's dreams—she was Virginia; she was Barbara; she was Betty . . . but now she's Betsy, Betsy alone . . .

the girl he can't forget

by sheilah graham

Cary was still an unestablished actor in '32 when he married Virginia Cherrill. Temperamental differences separated them.

At one time, Phyllis Brooks seemed to be Grant's sole interest, but Phyllis invited publicity so Cory stepped out of her life.

Cary had little in common with his ex-wife Barbara Hutton. She hated Hollywood; he loved it. She enjoyed Society; he disliked it. Divorce followed.

Betty Hensel cut short her serious-looking romance with Cory when he seemed to be falling for his leading lady.

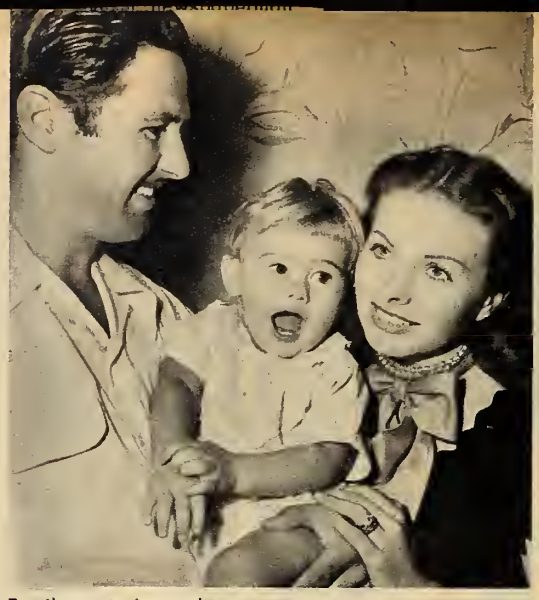
■ Cary Grant has been in love with the same girl all his life. She is beautiful, blonde, tall and slender. Not always, but usually her name begins with a B. She is Betsy Drake, Betty Hensel, Barbara Hutton, Phyllis Brooks and Virginia Cherrill.

Sometimes Cary marries this girl he loves. But whether he marries her or not, the history of each romance is always the same: It lasts a long time, it ends in disillusionment—and he never forgets her.

Will his present passion for Betsy Drake be just another repetition of the old pattern, or will she prove the answer to Cary's desperate prayer for a permanent mate?

To play prophet with Cary's very cautious heart, we have to break down Cary the man, Cary the lover, and the women he has loved and why.

To start at the end. Miss Drake, blonde, tall and willowy, is 24 years old. Cary is 44. She is younger than any of his former dream girls. But they have been inseparable almost from the moment when Merle Oberon introduced them to each other on the Queen Elizabeth bound for New York in the summer of 1947. From the beginning, Betsy has known how to handle Cary. She is simple, with no chi-chi about her at all. Her best attribute, as far as Cary is concerned, is that she knows how to be pleasantly discreet to inquiring reporters. Several women have lost Mr. Grant because they thought they had him hooked, and said so.



Phyllis Brooks, for example. The blonde beauty, who for many months had seemed to be Cary's main interest, decided to tell a waiting world that she was engaged to him. She was so sure of him, she ordered some lovely antique furniture for the home she believed they would shortly share together. Came the dawn! Cary, embarrassed by the publicity, begged to be excused. And found himself stuck with bills for furniture for the home he now wouldn't need.

Miss Drake, even when she was with Cary in Palm Springs and Germany and London with no other excuse for being there except that she loved Cary, always looked pleasantly blank when asked, "Are you getting married?" All she'd say was "That's something we haven't discussed." Unless she plays her cards wrong at the twelfth hour, it looks very much as if Miss Drake will be the third Mrs. Cary Grant—indeed, she may already have achieved that status by the time you read this story.

The good-hearted Cary is happiest when helping beginners make good in Hollywood. He was positively radiant while boosting beginner Betsy to the top of the Hollywood working world as his co-star in Every Girl Should Be Married. In this picture Betsy plays a girl who wages a successful campaign to win Cary for a husband. Her strategy isn't half as clever, and is a thousand times more obvious than what happened in real life. Because in real life, Betsy wasn't even sure she wanted to marry Cary. And for a man of his cautious disposition, where females are concerned, that attitude was the best come-on of all.

This is how Betsy bagged the gentleman who many consider to be the most attractive male (Continued on page 98)

Latest and possibly the most permanent of Cary's loves is Betsy Drake. The two have been almost inseparable since their first meeting in '47.

Family portrait on the Brinkmans' third anniversary. Jr.'s almost two; baby's coming.

Lucky in Love!

Three years? It might have been yesterday . . .
Jeanne and Paul and the marriage vows . .
Three years?
It might have been forever—
the way their love goes on . . .

BY MARY McSKIMMING

A year ago in MODERN SCREEN*—in January, 1948—we published "Anniversary Story," by Jeanne Crain. In it, Jeanne looked back on her first two years as Mrs. Paul Brinkman. And now, on the occasion of Jeanne's and Paul's third anniversary, we herewith bring you right up to date on what surely must be one of the happiest marriages ever made in heaven.*—THE EDITORS.

■ They stood together in the crowd before the big, gaily-lighted toyshop window, its seams almost bursting with the activity of its Christmas clowns and gnomes and dancing bears.

She was so pretty, even for Hollywood—and yet she could have been a girl looking in a Christmas window in Sioux City or Duluth or Kokomo. The woolly greatcoat made her look tiny and its warm purple brought out the smouldering lights in her auburn hair, banded with a soft lavender scarf that got lost somewhere in the curls.

He stood close behind her, with one arm protectingly around her shoulder.

"Look, Paul!" she exclaimed, pointing to the big white tree with its thousands of tiny white candles, "The angel on the top—isn't she beautiful?"

"I'll say she is," he (Continued on page 109) saintly role in Song of Bernadette made Jennifer a great star, led the public to imagine her as an angelic girl in real life, too.

sultry, fiery half-breed in Duel in the Sun was so convincing that the legend of her true personality was given a new twist.

sensitive, warm, delicately-shaded performance in Portrait of Jennie (with Joe Cotten) will gain her fresh plaudits—and myths . . .

Hollywood still puzzles over Jennifer Jones. Is she an ice-cream angel, a Madam X, a fragile flower—or someone entirely different, someone nobody knows?

By JACK WADE

The woman nobody knows

■ Not long ago, a friend of Jennifer Jones' dropped in for a visit and thought she missed something somewhere in the house. Pretty soon she knew what. She'd been all through the place and yet hadn't spied the gold "Oscar" Jennifer won for her first starring picture, The Song of Bernadette. She asked her where it was.

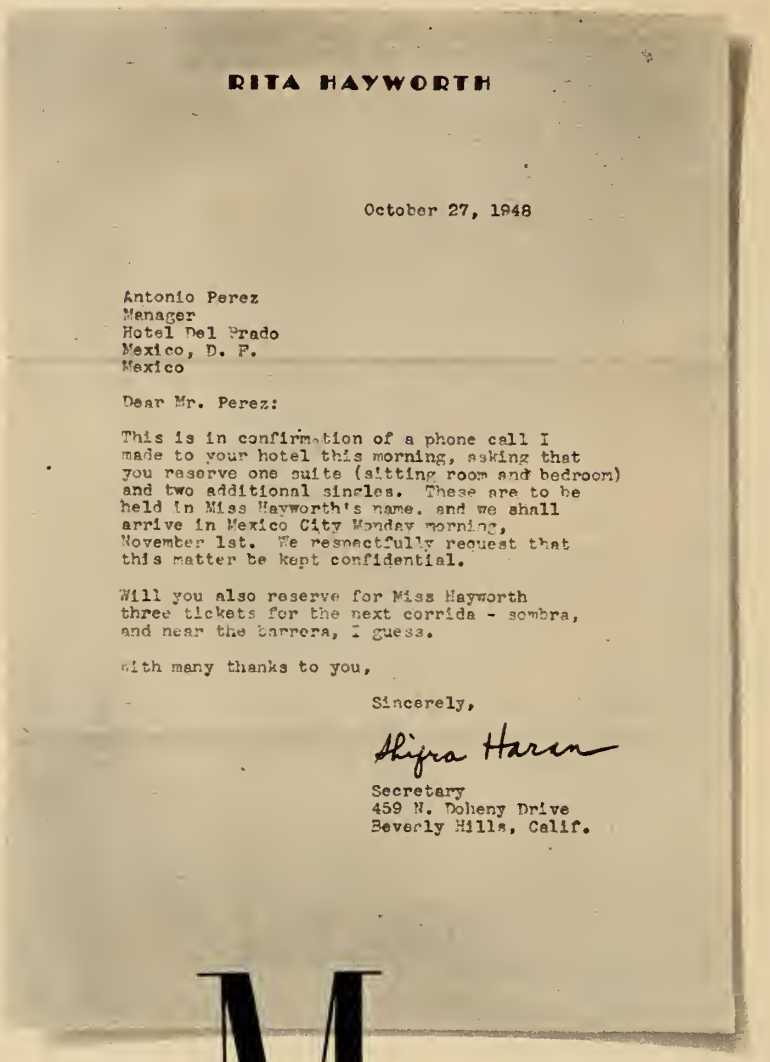
"I don't know," said Jennifer.

The friend almost keeled over. "You don't know where it is?" she repeated in amazement.

"Your greatest trophy? Your most precious possession?"

"No," said Jennifer weakly. "But it must be *some*where around. It'll turn up," she promised.

Before she left, the friend had another request. She asked Jennifer for a picture to take home to her little girl. Again she got a dismayed, apologetic look and a disappointing reply.



"I—I haven't any," she said. "I'm sorry."

"You mean you're a screen star and you haven't a picture of yourself in the house?"

"No," confessed Jennifer. "But," she brightened, "I'll get you one at the studio." (Continued on page 82)

This is the letter that threw Mexican reporters off the trail. While the press waited at the Del Prado, Rito and the Ali Khan checked into onother hotel.

RITA HAYWORTH

October 27, 1948

Antonio Perez Manager
Hotel Del Prado
Mexico, D. F.
Mexico

Dear Mr. Perez:

This is in confirmation of a phone call I made to your hotel this morning, asking that you reserve one suite (sitting room and bedroom) and two additional singles. These are to be held in Miss Hayworth's name, and we shall arrive in Mexico City Monday morning, November 1st. We respectfully request that this matter be kept confidential.

Will you also reserve for Miss Hayworth three tickets for the next corrida - sombra, and near the barrera, I guess.

With many thanks to you,

Sincerely,

Shifra Haran

Secretary
459 N. Doheny Drive
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mexican escapade

It was one titanic battle of wits when Rita Hayworth and Prince Ali Khan engaged in that all-out struggle for privacy against the ingenious Mexican press!

BY MAXINE SMITH

The spectacular story of Rita Hayworth and Prince Ali Khan began some months ago in France and was first reported in detail in MODERN SCREEN'S December, 1948, issue. Continuing its eye-witness reports, MS now adds another chapter covering incidents in Mexico. As this issue went to press, Rita and Ali had junketed briefly to Cuba and were en route to Hollywood—and perhaps to new adventures.—THE EDITORS.

■ MEXICO CITY—A heavy blue haze and "an air of expectancy" hung over Mexico City's Municipal Airport. It was just before nine on a Monday morning early in November. A horde of reporters and photographers, anxiously licking their pencils and counting their flash bulbs, awaited the arrival of the Pan American World Airways plane from Los Angeles.

A few minutes later the big silver transport dropped through the overhang, disturbing the haze and churning the air of expectancy to a pitch of hysteria as the gentlemen of the press, roaring hoarsely and holding hats, charged toward their quarry.

The rolling stairway was pushed through the mob as the plane snorted to a halt. The door was opened—and Rita Hayworth, looking perfectly exhausted, stepped out. Dozens of camera bulbs flashed . . . and flashed again . . . and again.

But—but where was the chief object of this lens-hunting? Where was Prince Ali Khan, reported to have been coming to Mexico with Rita? Obviously, none of the men near her could be the Prince, son of the world's richest man, the Aga Khan of India. There wasn't a turban in sight as the passengers made their way to the main building to go through the routines of immigration and customs inspection.

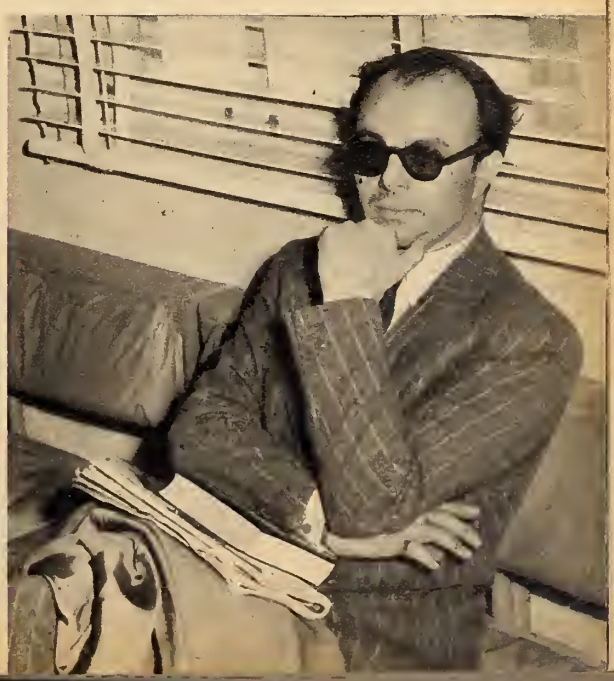
The officials, recognizing the celebrated Hollywood superstar, gallantly called her name first, and swiftly put her through the procedures.

"Ah," thought the press cunningly, "now we'll soon know which one is the Prince—surely his name will be called next."

But the crafty fellows were disappointed. As Rita waited outside the large customs enclosure, nervously lighting cigarettes, passenger after passenger entered the barrier—and still the Prince was not called.

Finally Rita, impatient at the delay, beckoned to one of the officiales and, in her fluent Spanish, asked a favor. Could a gentleman refuse her? At once Prince Ali Khan was called. The reporters at last got a good, identifying look at the Prince. But it was only a look. For, outside the barrier, they were too far away to ask questions.

Not, as it turned out, that it would have done them any good to have been right at Ali's elbow throughout the inspection. When it was over and Rita and the Prince strode rapidly to their waiting limousine, the reporters, running after them, received nothing but silence. As the pair drove off, the frustrated newsmen had scored a zero.



To its bitter fury, the press was destined to wind up with exactly that score. In a titanic battle of wits—and occasionally of more direct weapons—the famous (Continued on page 95)

After evading newsmen for days, Rita consented ta a press conference. It was a flap, for Rita showed up withaut Ali Khan, ignored all "personal" questions.

Rita and Ali were phatagraphed separately upon their arrival in Havana fram Mexica City. Throughaut the vacation jaunt, the pair refused ta pase tagether.

House of the

In the living room, lined with book-shelves, the children are allowed to rummage through bound copies of Bob's radio programs. Note tiny tot's chair set up for the evening's television show.

The Hope house abounds in cozy spots, like the combination bar and billiard room. Above, with Dolores as an audience, Bob struggles to beat son Tony. Hope's trophies decorate the walls.

■ The Bob Hope home is a house where children are regarded as all-important. You know this as soon as you enter the driveway. On the high white gates, a sign reads CHILDREN AT PLAY. (Beneath it there's one which says belligerently, DOG AT LARGE. This added thought is not to scare the tradesmen—it's merely to warn them to look carefully so they won't run over the lazy hound who is usually asleep in the very center of the driveway.) And reposing casually on an upstairs window-sill will be, like as not, baby Kelly's one-eyed toy giraffe.

The house is a white brick-and-wood "California Colonial." It nestles in a scene of peace and beauty among giant walnut and pepper trees. Its bow windows gaze across rolling lawns—lawns that are strewn pleasantly with children's painted swings, playpens, and merry-go-round.

And that's the way the house is on the inside, too.

A stately Georgian staircase looks down benignly upon the small boy who is racing a red truck across the gleaming floor. Tony Hope, aged eight, gives the truck a mighty push, and shouts to his sister in the living-room.

"Catch it, Linda! I'm sending you something."

A little girl with silver bands on her teeth, and flying blonde hair, crouches on her knees, and reaches out to catch the truck as it whizzes by. Carefully, she removes a small house plant and sends the truck back across the hall. Dolores Hope puts down her knitting, and watches as her daughter replaces the plant on the coffee table. If she caught her breath when her precious plant went zipping down the hall, Linda would never know. Though Dolores loves her collection of fine china and delicate antiques, there is no "hands off" sign in the Hope home.

Eight years ago, the Hope estate was an abandoned walnut grove. At that time Bob and Dolores lived in a small house in North Hollywood with their baby, Linda. The successful young comedian and his gentle, dark-haired wife often took long walks down the country lanes, bordered with hibiscus and flaming oleanders. As they walked, they planned their future and shared their dreams about (Continued on page 51)

one-eyed giraffe

The kids come first in the Bob Hopes' fun-filled home . . . painted swings and pepper trees to climb and lots of room for growing . . .

BY VIOLA MOORE

Tony, Linda, Kelly, Dolores, Nora and Bob in "the naak," favarite family gathering place. Here, same of Dolores' rare china is displayed.

Two-year-old Nora jabs at Daddy's chin, while Bob defends himself with the gag gloves he once used to "fight" Dempsey. Bob's an ideal father.

The star of The Pale-face finds built-in shelves and drawers are handy for quick packing jobs.

House of the one-eyed giraffe

(Continued from page 48) Linda. A dozen times they walked past the sloping lot with the walnut trees, then one day Dolores said: "Let's go in."

Hand-in-hand, like children entering a secret garden, the Hopes pushed open the creaking wooden gate, and went in. Immediately, they fell in love with the towering trees, and the feeling of peace and seclusion. They wandered all over the three acres, and as they started to leave, Dolores stumbled against an old well, almost hidden by moss and weeds.

"There must have been a house here at one time," she said, excitedly. "Bob—there should be a house here now! What a lovely place to bring up children! So much ground. So many trees to climb." In her mind's eye Dolores could see Linda a few years hence, her blonde hair flying as she clung to the ropes of her swing, and pointed toward the tree-tops with her tiny feet.

The Hopes sat down on the edge of the over-grown well, and began to talk about their future home. Bob took a green twig, and began to scratch a design on the damp earth. "Now, here's where we could put the house. . . ." And Dolores, her cheeks flushed, her Irish blue eyes two torches of excitement, added, "We'll leave that pepper tree right where it is, even if we build the house around it."

They bought the lot and, shortly after, architect Bob Finkelstein got to work and drew up plans for the rambling structure that now houses Mr. and Mrs. Hope and their brood of four. Out of those plans has grown the house you see today.

As you drive up to the house, and park opposite the flower-bordered entrance, the front door is opened by Tony—for this is the maid's day off—and a moment later you're standing by the high-backed settee in the hall, looking directly into the spacious living-room. Sunlight and clear colors are reflected in the hunting-print draperies that frame the bow windows, and are picked up in the Grandma Moses landscape on the opposite wall. You are likely to exclaim with delight over a majolica lamp in tones of blue—and then notice baby Kelly's red celluloid duck peering behind it. As you sit on the deep, print-covered couch, you're likely to rise in nervous haste. (Continued on page 91)

photos by bert parry

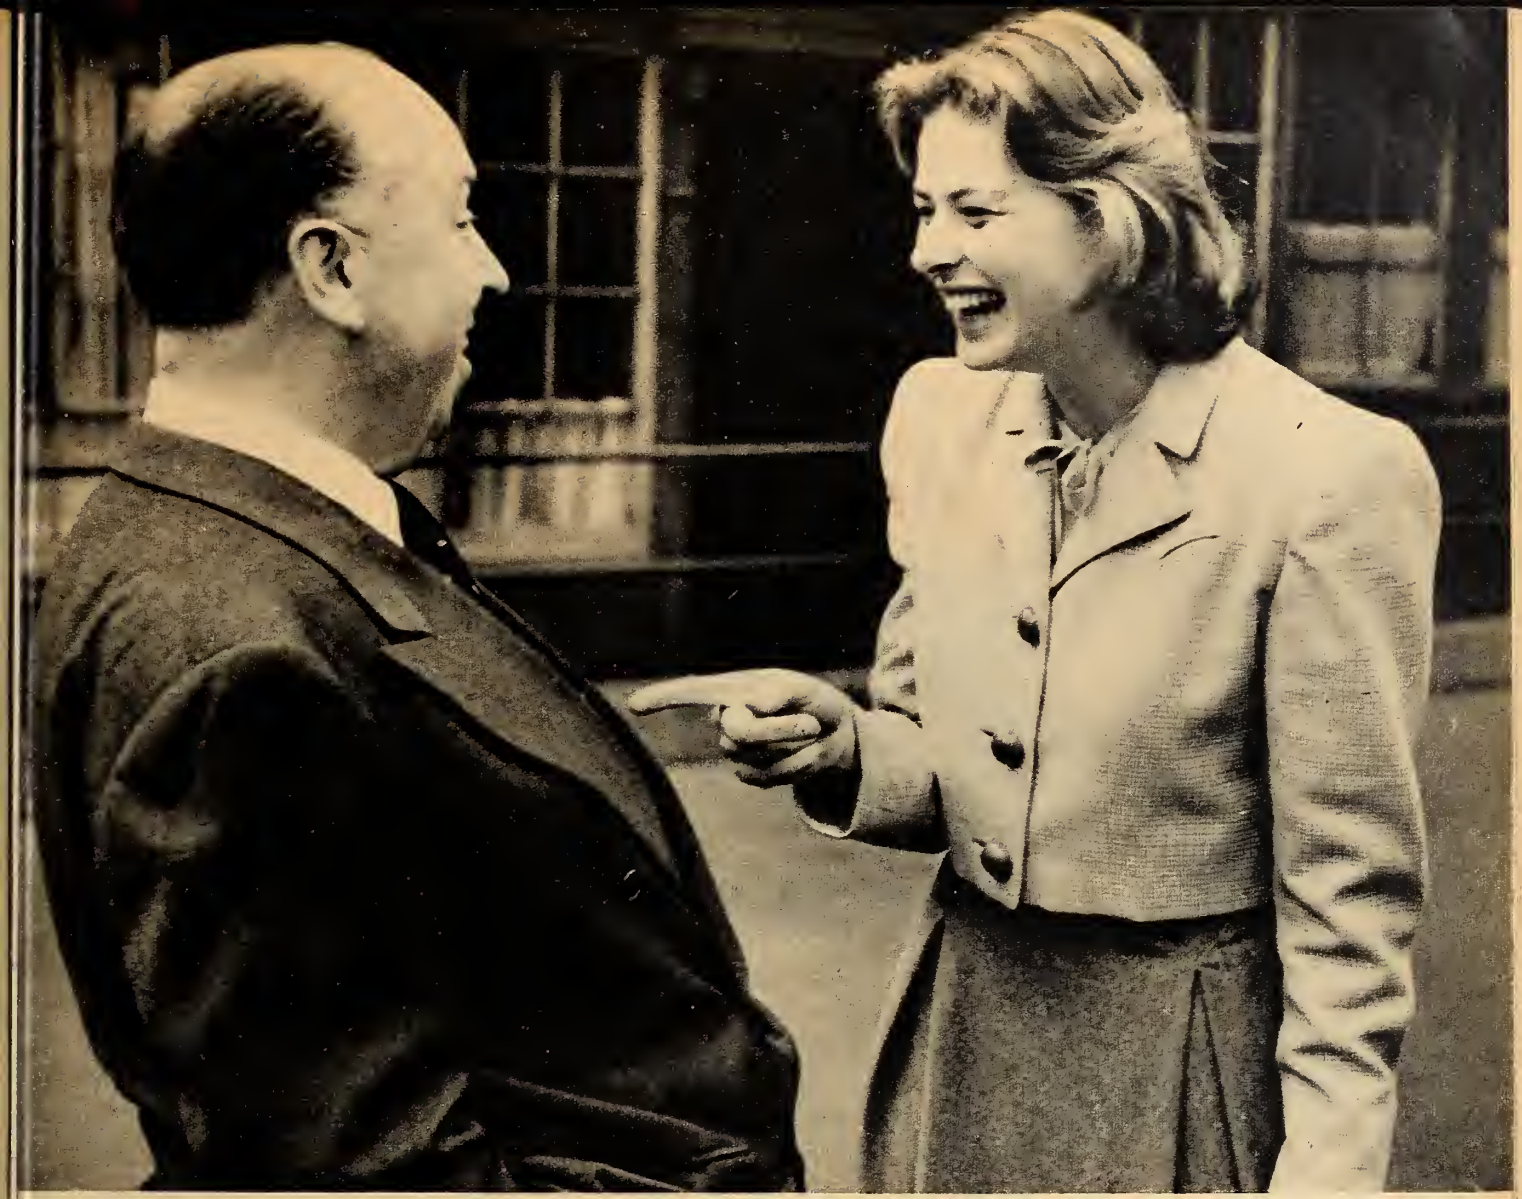
The Pennsylvania Dutch breakfast raam, a riot of calars, was converted fram a butler's pantry. Cupboard (left) is hand-painted in rich reds and blues. The kids lave to lunch here.

Dining raam walls are green and cream. Hast and hostess chairs give real camfart! When the Hopes dine en famille pink and blue high chairs are drawn up far Kelly and Nara.

The backyard is a pleasant place at the clase of day. On the flagstone patia, Bab catches up with the day's events, listening ta each child in turn—ar to all of them at ance!

SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY

by Earl Wilson



famous New York columnist

They'd stone her in Paris, Ingrid thought; in Sweden, they'd jeer. But this journey that began with fear ended in happy tears.

SCREEN JOAN VISITS THE TOWER OF ROUEN. in Fronce, where the reol Joon wos imprisoned ond from which she wos loter token to her fiery deoth. Ingrid was deeply moved by her visit to this historic shrine. Right: A prison scene from Joan of Arc, in which Joan proys for deliveronce from her tormentors.

One of Ingrid's favorite directors is Alfred Hitchcock (above). She went to England to appear in Hitchcock's Under Capricorn.

■ Ingrid Bergman has solemnly confessed to me that a few months ago she was shaking in her famous flat-heeled shoes.

"I was scared to death when I went to visit France because they'd written me nasty open letters telling me they didn't want me to play Joan of Arc," the Sweet Swede told me. "And I also was afraid to go back home to Sweden. I hadn't been back for nine years. They were pretty mad at me there for trying to become an American citizen. I read things in the Swedish papers about that and I thought, 'Oh, oh, they're sharpening their knives.' "

It's hard to imagine the tall, red-cheeked, competent Ingrid being trembly about anything. But it became thoroughly believable now as I sat with her in her 36th floor suite at the Hampshire House in New York City. She had the windows open, and the icy blasts of winter came through, chilling me but thrilling her. Yes, Ingrid certainly left me cold; not from her personality, but from her open window.

I had arrived punctually at 11 a.m. to see her. In seven years, I'd interviewed her seven times. Going to this one, I recalled the first, back in 1940, when she had cagily outmaneuvered my photographer who was trying, at my suggestion, to get her to pose for some "leg art."

"No-o-o-o," she had said, charmingly but firmly. "I want my face to be the most important!"

Who could say this hasn't worked? Strong men around my Broadway beat have whispered to me when their Beautiful Wives weren't listening that they believe she has more sex appeal than anybody else on the screen—and without the lifted skirt. (Remember that, girls!)

I remembered an interview in 1944, also, when she told me she roamed the streets and went to theaters in New York unrecognized. Her face wasn't yet well known. Sailors tried to pick her up, just like any other girl.

"Why didn't the French want you to play Joan of Arc," I asked her now.

"I could understand their feelings," she said. "Joan was French and Catholic. I was Swedish and Lutheran. And the movie was to be made in (Continued on page 105)

hollywood s

Joon Crowford, mother of four odopted children (here with Christine) wos once the victim of o cruel adoption hoox.

Flowers were tossed into Hedy Lomarr's cor during o war bond tour—bits of gloss were hidden in one bouquet.

When he was o child stor, there were obsurd rumors thot Mickey Rooney was o midget. They said the some of Shirley Temple!

Spreading vicious rumors . . . writing threatening letters . . . even making cowardly personal attacks . . . the hoaxers work relentlessly as they seek to make the stars their victims.

BY CARL SCHROEDER

■ Hedy Lamarr had never had such a day in her life. She was on a war bond tour, and the people in New Jersey had welcomed her like a queen. If ever she appreciated her adopted land it was now as an official car in which she rode pushed slowly through the mob of workers at a war factory, just outside of Trenton, New Jersey.

As the lane of human bodies opened ahead, the car inched its way toward the speaker's platform that had been erected in the factory yard.

"Roll your window down, Hedy," someone shouted.

Automatically, she obeyed the suggestion. Someone tossed in a bouquet of flowers. She smiled and waved. She saw a dark, swarthy man, standing with another huge bouquet of roses. He grinned at her and threw his tribute. It struck Hedy squarely in the face. She winced in pain and in an instant a trickle of blood streamed from a cut near her forehead. With a cry, she covered her face and the man beside her indignantly examined the flowers—red roses in which were tightly wrapped bits of glass and stones.

Moments later, tears in her eyes, she took the microphone before the thousands who had welcomed her. She told what had happened, and an angry murmur swept over the vast audience.

Hedy Lamarr broke a bond selling record that day—the day her career might have been seriously harmed. She wasn't badly hurt physically. But inwardly, she was agonized by the cruel, unexpected event—and she will never again face a huge audience without considerable protection.

What was this thing that happened?

The dictionary describes it as a "hoax—a deception (Continued on page 57)

cruelest hoaxes

A favarite pastime of haaxers is inventing wild tales of stars' "disabilities." There are even periadic rumars that Nelson Eddy is gaing blind!

hollywood's cruelest hoaxes

Ido Lupino ond her husbond Collier Young norrowly ovoided serious injury one doy os o bullet, fired from on unknown gun, come croshing through their window.

Vic Moture ond his mother were the intended victims of o cronk who wrote thot she wos the mother of Vic's child.

Home of Loretto Young ond husbond Tom Lewis was recently robbed of thousonds of dollors worth of jewelry. The crime wos executed by "servants" of former owners.

While Gene wos in the oir force, Ino Moe Autry wos owokened one day by o caller who swore he hod just identified Gene's body.

Hooxers copitolize on the foct thot rumors spreod like wild-fire. Even Clork Goble's best friend once believed him to be deod, becouse it wos repeoted so often.

Von Johnson wos forced to coll the police when pestered by o youth honging obout the house who insisted thot Von hod sent for him.

for mockery or mischief." And why had it happened? Either to discredit Hedy's efforts or merely for sadistic reasons that only a psychiatrist could explain. The truth was never discovered through investigation because the man could not be found, but there were rumors of talk about "that foreigner who tries to tell us Americans what to do."

In any event, extra precautions were immediately taken thereafter to prevent similar occurrences with other stars.

But no amount of protection will ever keep Hollywood favorites from the cruel scheming of the hoax artist, a vicious breed of human being who strikes without warning. Sometimes he is caught; more often he escapes to perpetrate once again a foul attack.

Consider the mysterious thing that happened to the Gene Autrys. In 1944, Gene was in the service—somewhere in Texas, his wife Ina Mae believed. As it would the wife of any other flier in the service, the sound of a telephone ringing at three in the morning was enough to strike a note of alarm in her heart.

Sleepily, one morning just before dawn, Ina Mae answered the telephone's frightening summons. The head of a Los Angeles news service bureau talked to her in anxious, consoling tone.

"I'm sorry to tell you this, Mrs. Autry," he said, "but we've just had a report that Gene was killed an hour ago in an automobile accident just outside Sedalia, Missouri."

Stunned, Mrs. Autry hung up the phone. In a matter of hours an airplane carried her to the little town. Here she entered a morgue to view the remains.

The man was not Gene Autry!

Imagine, if you can, the horror of the news. Then imagine what sort of human being would bother to perpetrate such a hoax. It was not "just an accident," or the telephoning of an unconfirmed news item by an inexperienced reporter. No, Gene had been definitely identified by a man who swore he knew him personally. Where was he? Who was he? Nobody knew, or knew the purpose of his cruel plot.

In this case there could be no hope of extracting money from the Autrys. After the first hysteria was over, both Gene and his wife agreed that someone who fancied himself an enemy had done this thing. And who could hate the popular movie cowboy?

Well, a number of people.

It might have been such a man as another hoax artist who once encountered Gene in Madison Square Garden. "You fancy cowboy in the white hat!" he sneered. "Why don't you go out and really ride a bronc instead of parading around for ten minutes. Huh, I've got a notion to knock that beautiful sombrero off your head—and kick your teeth in."

Gene stood the tirade for a few minutes. Then he knocked the offender down with a hard right hand. The next morning he was served with papers in a lawsuit for $10,000 on an assault and battery charge. Gene won his case, but he had been the victim of another type of hoax artist—the sort who schemes for big money.

There is hardly a star in Hollywood who has not at one time or another been the target for a hoax artist. Most recently, two nationwide news services were called upon to verify a sudden report that Brian Donlevy was dead. Brian had been in the hospital, struck down by the flu. Two telephone calls were made, one purporting to come from the hospital and another from a doctor. Two days later, Donlevy was out of the hospital and back working in a picture, the most serious thing happening to him having been that he had had a tooth knocked out in a movie fight.

The hoaxer who specializes in reporting movie star deaths is perhaps the most malevolent, for his victims are the friends and families of those against whom he strikes. And for some strange reason (Continued on page 100)

Crasby would have mare lives than a cat, if hoaxes were true. At least once a year there are reports fram "eye-witnesses" ta his death.

THE SEARCH, a drama of Europe's orphans, introduced Monty to the public, brought extravagant praise from fans and critics.

RED RIVER, with Joanne Dru, was the second of Clift's films to be shown. Howard Hawks, his boss, has since been deluged with requests from other producers to borrow him.

THE HEIRESS, with Olivia de Havilland (not yet released) is Monty's first romantic role. Insiders report he's sensational.

Is it true what they say about

MONTY?

BY CAMERON SHIPP

Montgomery Clift has appeared in only two films—The Search and Red River—but already the fans are calling him the most exciting screen figure since Gregory Peck. At the same time, there have been reports from Hollywood that he's uncooperative and conceited, that he's ruining his career at the outset by being difficult to get along with. Any truth to this? Well, here's a candid portrait of a candid—and highly interesting—personality.—THE EDITORS.

■ The battered alarm clock chattered its sudden signal as jarringly as a riveting machine. The long, dark young man in the Murphy bed jack-knifed to a sitting position, blinked his green eyes, regarded the clock morosely, rubbed his stubble of dark whiskers, turned the clock off, and with enormous will-power put his feet on the floor. It was 6 a.m., an hour at which some thousands of other young wage-earners arose from their Murphies in their one-room apartments; gulped their coffee; kicked at the starters of their eight-year-old, third-hand automobiles, and set off for work.

The young man we have in mind, a fellow named Montgomery Clift, gulped coffee at a drug store; chugged across Hollywood Boulevard, which looks dreary at 6 a.m.; turned North; bumped over to Melrose; parked his car in a gas station; saluted the cop at the gate, and entered Paramount Studio.

There, not many minutes later, he put his arms around Olivia de Havilland and kissed her soundly and expertly, a well-paid chore which inspired a nod of praise from taciturn William Wyler, director of The Heiress.

At the end of his day's work, which consisted chiefly of kissing Miss de Havilland many more times in close-ups, long-shots (Continued on page 107)

They say he doesn't know how to behave like a star—Swimming pools don't interest him and he'd rather be free than famous—Hollywood can't quite figure this phenomenal Monty Clift.

the snake pit

■ The Snake Pit is a film of which the motion picture industry may feel proud. It is a great social document that will inevitably lead to reforms in a shameful area of American life; it is highly educational in a field about which the general public knows little; it is technically brilliant; and from beginning to end it is absorbing, dramatic entertainment.

Based on the novel by Mary Jane Ward, The Snake Pit tells the story of one woman's experiences in a typical state mental hospital. In so doing, it manages to give a sharp and dreadful picture of the conditions and atmosphere of the entire institution—the many types of mental cases there incarcerated; the techniques used in attempts to cure them; the tragic neglect and incomplete treatments which result from the disgraceful fact that, in the wealthiest nation on earth, there simply aren't enough doctors and nurses in this typical establishment to cope with the terrible overcrowding.

The main character, played with magnificent range and depth by Olivia de Havilland, is Virginia Cunningham, a nervous breakdown case. You follow her progress as she goes part way along the road back to mental health, relapses, goes forward again. Gradually, as her husband (Mark Stevens) tells what he knows of her history and the psychiatrist (Leo Genn) delves deep into her background through the use of hypnotic narcosynthesis and electric shock treatments, you learn the causes of her breakdown. Finally, as these dark and buried reasons are made clear to Virginia herself, she is cured.

Anatole Litvak has directed The Snake Pit with masterly judgment and skill and the acting, down to the smallest role, seems flawlessly realistic. Under the leadership of Darryl Zanuck, 20th Century-Fox has produced a courageous and unforgettable work of art.

On these pages, we give you the story in pictures.

LONG AGO, THE INSANE WERE THROWN IN PITS OF SNAKES TO

1. As The Snake Pit begins, Virginia Cunningham (Olivia de Havilland) finds herself an inmate in a mental hospital. Bewildered, suspicious and fearful, she can't recall her husband

TRY TO SHOCK THEM INTO SANITY.. VIRGINIA (OLIVIA de HAVILLAND) IN "THE SNAKE PIT" FEELS THAT THIS HAS BEEN DONE TO HER.

2. Psychiatrist Mark Kik (Lea Genn), tells her husbond, Robert Cunningham (Mark Stevens) that her cose history is slight. Sa Robert tells what he con. He relates how he first ,met ond dated her in Chicaga.

3. One day she tled trom him without explonation. Six months later, he re-met her in New York. She wauldn't exploin her disoppearance. They were wed and soon after, on May 12th, she ottempted suicide.

continued an next page

4. After that, Robert brought her to the hospital. . . . Now Dr. Kik uses electric shock treatment on her. This helps, but she recalls little, flares up at mention of May 12th. Robert comes to see her.

5. She recognizes him now. In the dining room, the hospital chief says Virginia should be staff-examined with view to her release in Robert's custody. Dr. Kik objects, is reminded of overcrowding.

7. She blames herself for his death. Kik reassures her, then requests more time to cure her sense of guilt, is refused. She takes a staff examination, during it cracks up violently and bites hospital chief.

8. When she comes out of it days later, she blames Kik for sending her for examination prematurely. But Robert admits to her Kik was overruled at his request. So she tells Kik she now no longer blames him.

10. When he asks her to return the doll to save trouble, she denounces him for behaving like her father in taking the nurse's side. Then she tells him of the doll her mother gave her as a child, which she traded.

11. Her mother insisted she get the doll back and her father sided with her mother. Virginia then wished him ill. He died, she blamed herself. She's relieved when Kik explains he was incurably ill anyhow.

the snake pit

6. Then, under norcasynthesis (use af hypnotic drug), Virginia tells Kik she left Rabert in Chicoga for dote with odmirer Gordan. When he proposed, she felt ill sa he turned cor back, wos killed in crash.

9. Kik tells her thot her reolization thot she wasn't reody far on examination is a gaod sign, hos her sent to Ward One, from which inmates qa home. Here she's accused of steoling o doll, token to Kik.

12. But os a result af o run-in with o nurse, Virginio relapses, is placed with extreme coses. Here she feels camporotively sone. Then, after Kik makes cleor to her whot led to her breakdawn, she's cured.

■ They didn't have to twist Olivia de Havilland's arm to get her to play Virginia in The Snake Pit. While the novel was still in galley proofs in May, 1945, director Anatole Litvak read it, excitedly sent it to Olivia, and she immediately decided that Virginia was the role for her. "It gives me," she said, "the greatest dramatic opportunity I've ever had."

Scenarists Frank Partos and Millen Brand began work on the script in September, 1946. Their first important step was to build up a detailed case history for the unhappy heroine—the novel presented very little background material on her. When they got through, they had 123 pages. This they took East and had it gone over by three prominent psychiatrists. The doctors carefully checked every phase of it, made a few strengthening suggestions and, when these were incorporated, agreed that the case was completely authentic.

In preparation for their roles, Olivia, Leo Genn—the fine British actor who plays the kindly psychiatrist—and Mark Stevens—who plays Virginia's husband—all made repeated observatory visits to a number of state mental hospitals. (One of these institutions, while modern in every way in so far as buildings and equipment were concerned, had one doctor for every 400 patients.)

When the shooting script was finally done, Olivia described it, with firm enthusiasm if shaky grammar, as being "the most perfect I've ever worked from."

It seems safe to predict that The Snake Pit will be a strong contender for 1948 Academy Award honors in every department for which it is eligible. Among these, the most obvious possibility is that Olivia de Havilland will add another Oscar to the one she earned in 1940 for her work in To Each His Own—even though she'll be up against some very tough competition supplied by Jane Wyman, Barbara Stanwyck and Irene Dunne.

Olivia, until she came through so deservedly in 1940, had just barely missed an Oscar twice before—in the supporting role of Melanie in Gone With the Wind (1938) when Hattie McDaniel, in the same picture, beat her out; and as the star of Hold Back the Dawn (1940), when her sister, Joan Fontaine, triumphed in Suspicion.

During the filming of The Snake Pit, rumors sprang up that Olivia and her husband, novelist Marcus Goodrich, were on the verge of divorce. Neighbors reported hearing terrible screams coming from the Goodrich establishment. The screaming, however, was in no wise connected with the domestic relationship, which has from the beginning been lovingly serene. It was just Olivia rehearsing for the narcosynthesis sequence in the film.

But it's understandable that the neighbors thought Olivia was in earnest. You should hear her in the picture. THE END upside down . . . and downright good

KARO* Syrup makes these breakfast, lunch and dinner treats downright good. KARO glorifies their appetizing appearance . . . emphasizes their delicious flavor.

KARO, Blue Label, blends superbly with fruits and spices . . . gives the Upside Down Cake and Cinnamon Rolls a delicious glaze. KARO, Red Label, points up the delicate flavor of the Orange Rolls. To convenient "ready mixes", or your own recipes for quick breads and rolls, KARO adds extra nourishment.

the KARO Kid

PRUNE-APRICOT UPSIDE DOWN CAKE

Combine first three ingredients of Cinnamon Roll recipe in 9x9x2½-inch pon ond arronge 20 each drained, stewed prune and opricot holves. Use 1 pockoge prepored coke mix occording to pockage directions; pour over syrup-fruit mixture. Boke in moderote oven (375° F.) 45 to 50 minutes. Let cool in pon about 2 minutes; then invert on serving plote. Serve worm, plain or with whipped creom.

*KARO is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Co., New York, N.Y. © C.P.R.Co., 1949

CINNAMON ROLLS

½ cup KARO Syrup, Blue Lobel
2 toblespoons melted butter or morgorine
¼ cup brown sugor, firmly packed
1 pockage hot yeost roll mix
2 toblespoons melted butter or margarine
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons cinnamon

Cambine first three ingredients in lorge skillet. Prepore hot yeost roll mix according to package directions. When dough hos risen, roll into rectongle ⅛ inch thick. Spreod with mixture of melted butter, sugor and cinnomon. Roll os for jelly roll; cut into 12 slices. Ploce, cut side up, on top of syrup mixture. Cover and let rise until double in bulk. Boke in moderote oven (375°F.) obout 35 to 40 minutes. Invert pan immediotely. Serve hot.

ORANGE ROLLS

Combine ½ cup KARO Syrup, Red Lobel, ¼ cup sugor ond 2 toblespoons butter ar morgarine; divide equolly into 12 greosed muffin or cup-cake pons. Mix together lightly ⅔ cup milk and 3 cups prepared biscuit mix; roll into rectangle ⅛ inch thick. Spread with filling made with 2 toblespoons eoch melted butter, and sugor, and 2 teospoons grated oronge rind. Roll os far jelly roll; cut into 12 slices. Ploce each slice, cut side up, in muffin or cup-cake pans. Boke in moderate oven (375° F.) obout 30 to 35 minutes. Remove from pons immediately. Serve hot.

KARO is available in 1½, 5 & 10 lb. sizes.

accessories add plus to fashion

connie bartel, fashion editor

■ It's not only what you wear—it's what you wear with it. That's our theme for this issue. Our accent is on accessories, the plusses that add up to a successful costume.

Take a good look at any best-dressed girl you know—especially a girl who looks like a million on a budget—and you'll find she gets her effects with the etceteras of fashion—jewelry, bags, belts, gloves, scarves.

Look hard at a girl in a glamorous get-up, and she may turn out to be wearing nothing more elaborate than a simple sweater and skirt—or the plainest of basic dresses . . . plus. The knockout effect comes from the right accessories, used in the right way.

To illustrate, on the opposite page Janet Leigh wears a sweater and skirt, plus—and see what happens! On page 66 we give jewelry top billing; on page 68 we add belts and gloves to blouses and skirts.

And on page 70 we introduce a really fabulous accessory—fancy stockings which will turn any dress into a gala production.

janet leigh adds pearls to red, white and blue

■ Janet Leigh, whom we can't wait to see as "Meg" in MGM's forthcoming "Little Women," shows what can be done with a sweater and skirt—plus accessories.

To her blue and white sweater and plain blue skirt—she adds the new crinkled baroque pearls, delicate pearl bracelets, a pearl-handled umbrella, and a bright red belt. Result—drama.

The cotton knit sweater comes also with kelly, red, brown or green stripes; also in pink with brown stripes, maize with grey stripes. Sweater by Alberic—$2.98.

At Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn
Woodward & Lothrop, Washington
Nancy's, Hollywood

Jewelry by Coro; belt by Criterion Umbrella from Uncle Sam's Umbrella Shop, N. Y. C.

Other store information, page 73.

modern screen fashions

tops, plus!

■ Take it from three who know—nothing stretches your wardrobe like a collection of tops and skirts—plus accessories! Especially when the accessories include the very newest in jewelry—as shown here. Please take a second look at these bracelets, necklaces and pins; they're all trend-setters, they're all being worn by every fashion model and fashion editor in New York this very minute!

blouse: New idea! Collar-and-tie blouse in washable crepe. The blouse is green; the red tie runs under the collar and can be removed if you switch to a scarf. Also red, brown, black. By Vicki Lynn. $3.98.

plus: Double-eagle pin with rhinestones; gold-tipped bobby pin for the hair; a jeweled locket bracelet which opens to show pictures of your three favorite people. (The kangaroo pocket skirt in gabardine is by Junior Miss of Calif. $7.95.)

sweater: Striped cotton boucle in navy and white. Also green, grey, red, brown stripes, others. By Alberic. $3.98.

plus: Pearls that go the oyster one better—they're crinkled. Baroque pearl necklace; bracelet of baroque pearls strung on fine gold chain; pearl heart bar-pins; pearl drop earrings.

shirt: Cuffed cardigan in knitted cotton, in dreamy shades of pistachio green, almond, brown, berry red, others. By Garland. $4.98.

plus: The newest in necklaces—pearls and colored beads spaced by tiny gold beads; wide leather cummerbund to give the new high-waisted Empire look.

JEWELRY BY CORO.
GLOVES BY ARIS.
CUMMERBUND BY CRITERION.
GOLD BOBBY PIN BY BEN HUR.

■ The plus: scatter pins and fresh white gloves. The blouse: a real find in washable printed rayon. Gold, green, brown, grey. By Cornibert. $2.98 The skirt: smart narrow gabardine with high-rise waistband. Green, red, pink, aqua, grey, black, brown, navy, gold, beige, winter white. By Jr. Miss of California. $7.95

For where to buy, see page 73.

blouses and skirts -plus!

■ The plus: leather belt and gloves, fob pin, nifty crooked handle umbrella.

The blouse: combed cotton with flat turtle neck. Lots of colors. By Shepherd. $1.98

The skirt: buttoned to hem, side pocket, in rayon Dundee suiting. Rose, blue, brown, navy or black. By Koret of California. $5.95

For where to buy, see page 73.

1. Crowns on your onkles. Stockings by Bryan. About $4.95 ot Bonwit Teller, N. Y. Andrew Geller Shoes

Now you can have jewels on your ankles, lace on your toes

2. Loce instep ond clock by McCollum. About $3.50 ot Bonwit Teller, N. Y. Shoes by Evins

3. Initiols to your order. Stockings by Bryon. About $3.75. Bonwit Teller, N.Y

Strictly in the what-will-they-think-of-next department—here are jeweled stockings, of all things!

A designer named Ellen Troy—a red headed Viennese with a very ooh-la-la accent, decided one day that if you wear jewels on the ears, fingers, wrists and around the neck—why slight the feet? • So she set to work hand painting, embroidering and eventually sprinkling rhinestones on stockings—and now look!

If you have champagne taste—there are stockings with a champagne glass—plus rhinestone bubbles! Getting married? There are stockings with wedding bells. Or if you're musical—how about nylons with a painted scale and rhinestone notes? Also among the fantasies—crowns (photo 1), four leaf clovers, rosebuds, hearts, and even a chatelaine watch! You can also have your own initials (photo 3)—or your college flag . . . to be made up to your individual order. All of these designs are patented, the stockings themselves are nylon—and yes, of course you can wash them.

As for lace, the McCallum people have come up with a glamorous design that covers your instep and extends in a long graceful clock (photo 2)—and Gotham offers an elegant lace medallion, studded with jet (photo 4).

Naturally, these stockings are not intended to be worn with your tweed suit. But when you're dressing for a big night—and your mood is pure abandon—these are for you!

4. Lace insert studded with jet beads. By Gotham. About $15, Gotham Shops.

MARION HUTTON, STARRING IN THE UNITED ARTISTS' FILM "LOVE HAPPY"

MARION HUTTON
Taught me a Love Lesson

I never used to be popular...

'Til one lucky night I turned a page and read: "'Men are romantics at heart', says Marion Hutton. 'They like a girl to be so-o feminine . . . to have the softest, pampered-looking hands.' Marion advises: 'Use Jergens Lotion on your hands—I do.'"

Right then, I started using Jergens too!

Not long after I started going out! First with Paul, then Cy, now I've got several beaux. Men really do choose the girl with the softest, loveliest hands!

See how much softer your hands can be with today's richer Jergens Lotion! Because it's a liquid, Jergens quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. Yet never leaves that sticky feeling. Still only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

Hollywood Stars Use Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 Over Any Other Hand Care

Now Yours— Jergens Beauty Kit!

Contains generous samples of Jergens Lotion, Powder, Face Cream and Dryad Deodorant. Send 10¢ to cover handling and postage to The Andrew Jergens Co., Box 6, Dept. 50A, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.
Sorry, offer good in U.S.A. only, expires Dec. 31, 1949.

if you wear a HALF SIZE

■ Here's a date dress with three tiers to throw soft flattery toward your face—and make your skirt look very slim by contrast. Sizes 14½ to 20½. In grey, navy, powder blue, rose or aqua romaine crepe. By Rite-Fit. About $8. Carson, Pirie Scott, Chicago. Other stores on page 73.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices may vary throughout country)

Striped sweater worn by Janet Leigh in the full-color photograph (page 65)

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, 420 Fulton St., Sweaters, 3rd fl.

Hollywood, Calif.—Nancy's, 6366 Hollywood Blvd.

Washington, D. C.—Woodward & Lothrop, 10th & G Sts., Sportswear, 3rd fl., Main Bldg.

Collar-and-tie blouse (page 66)

Baltimore, Md.—The May Co., Howard & Lexington Sts., Downstairs

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Loeser's, 484 Fulton St., Blouse Dept., Downstairs

Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co., State, Madison and Monroe Sts., East Rm. Sportswear, Downstairs

Kangaroo pocket skirt (page 66)

Atlanta, Ga.—Franklin Simon, 640 Peachtree St., NE.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The William Hengerer Co., 465 Main St., 4th fl.

New York, N. Y.—Franklin Simon, 5th Ave. & 37th St., Jr. Assembly Shop, 6th fl.

Striped cotton boucle sweater (page 66)

New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 West 42nd St., Jr. Sportswear Dept., 3rd fl.

Syracuse, N. Y.—The Addis Co., 449 S. Salina St., Neckwear Dept., Main fl.

Cuffed knitted cardigan shirt (page 67)

Los Angeles, Calif.—Broadway Dept. Store, Broadway & 4th Sts., "Nine Seventeen Shop," 4th fl.

New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St., Main fl.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Strawbridge & Clothier, Market & 8th Sts., Misses Separates, 3rd fl.

Printed rayon blouse (page 68)

Boston, Mass.—The Gilchrist Co., 417 Washington St., Blouses, Street fl.

Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co., State, Madison & Monroe Sts., East Rm. Sportswear, Downstairs

New York, N. Y.—Macy's, Herald Square, Blouses, Main fl.

Narrow skirt with hip pockets (page 68)

Buffalo, N. Y.—The William Hengerer Co., 465 Main St., 4th fl.

Louisville, Ky.—H. P. Selman Co., 4th & Walnut Sts., 2nd fl.

New York, N. Y.—Franklin Simon, 5th Ave. & 37th St., Jr. Assembly Shop, 6th fl.

Cotton turtle neck sweater (page 69)

New York, N. Y.—Arnold Constable, 5th Ave. & 40th St., Main fl.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Frank & Seder, 5th Ave. & Smithfield St., 2nd fl.

Button-to-hem skirt (page 69)

New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, 34th St. & Broadway, Sports Dept., 3rd fl.

San Francisco, Calif.—Macy's San Francisco, Stockton & O'Farrell Sts., 2nd fl.

Washington, D. C.—The Hecht Co., 7th & F Sts., Sport Shop, 3rd fl.

Half size, tiered bodice dress (page 72)

Boston, Mass.—Conrad & Co., 19 Winter St., Dress Dept., Downstairs

Chicago, Ill.—Carson, Pirie Scott & Co., State, Madison & Monroe Sts., East Rm., Downstairs

New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Broadway & 9th St.

San Francisco, Calif.—Macy's San Francisco, Stockton & O'Farrell Sts., 2nd fl.

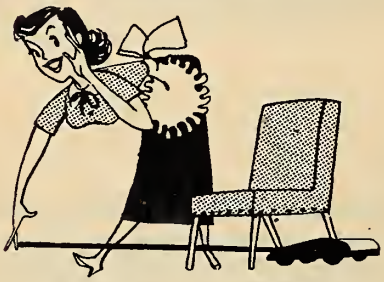
HOW TO ORDER MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

1. Buy in person from stores listed.
2. Order by mail from stores listed.
3. Write Connie Bartel, MODERN SCREEN, Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y., for store in your vicinity.

LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNDIES, GIRDLES, GARTER BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES



Just Whistle...

When your young buckaroo upsets the ashstand on your freshly cleaned rug . . . don't scream. Run for your new Bissell Sweeper . . .

And whistle! Bissell Carpet Sweepers now have "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action for the easiest clean-ups ever!

You don't have to press down at all. This miracle brush adjusts itself automatically to every rug nap, thick or thin . . .

Even cleans under low furniture, with the handle held flat! Save your vacuum for periodic cleaning . . . use a new "Bisco-matic" Bissell® for quick everyday clean-ups. It pays!

Illustrated: The "Vanity" at $8.45. Other models from $6.45. All with "Bisco-matic" Brush Action, easy "Flip-O" Empty, and "Sta-up" Handle.

Bissell Sweepers

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co.
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush

SOMETHING NOT FOR THE BOYS

(Continued from page 36)

There was also French pastry decorating the board. Everyone was looking forward to it. When it was passed, however, it wasn't touched.

For riding on a wave of whipped cream and grated chocolate atop an éclair was a large green fly. Every time a girl glanced longingly at the pastry, the fly would check her appetite.

When Jean was ready for dessert, however, she picked up the aforementioned éclair and deftly removed the insect—a novelty-store fly on a six-inch pin.

This action was the signal for things to start happening. From here on the evening was filled with surprises. There was cold cream smeared on door knobs, vanity drawers put in upside-down, and goldfish paddling in the bath tub.

crystal-gazing . . .

During the party's saner moments, Betty Lynn decided to tell everyone's fortune.

Crystal-gazing was a familiar routine for Betty. She had done it, just for fun, when she lived at Rehearsal Hall in New York. This is where girls who work on the stage, or aspire to, live.

"All I did was to tell one girl's fortune," sighed Betty, "then how the news spread. 'I'd always end my predicting with—'You'll be sent to Hollywood and have such a terrific screen test that they'll give you a contract immediately'."

"I wish you'd told me that," spoke up Kathleen Hughes. "You'd have saved me some awful worry." Kathy is the newest starlet to be added to the 20th Century roster. Her uncle is F. Hugh Herbert who wrote Sitting Pretty.

"I'll never forget the morning of my test," Kathy went on. "I had a cold with the usual horrible accompaniments—red nose and bleary eyes. I'd always been told that the camera exaggerated any defects in your appearance, so I shuddered. Besides, I was hoarse as a crow."

Somehow she made it to the studio. The makeup department got her ready for the test. She didn't look so bad after all. Then she went to the test sound stage.

"There wasn't a soul in sight. I was a half-hour early. So for 30 minutes I paced back and forth like an expectant father. When I did step in front of the cameras, an amazing thing happened. My knees stopped knocking and my laryngitis vanished."

So Kathy was given a role immediately —in Road House. Then her face landed on the cutting-room floor except for one short scene. But her part in Mother Is a Freshman doesn't suffer the same fate.

When you have a gathering of girls in one place—we were all in the living room —how can the conversation possibly stay off the subject of—Men?

After dissecting every available bachelor in Hollywood, from Dean Stockwell to Monty Woolley, Jean showed us a book a gay friend had sent her. The title was: "How to Pick a Mate."

Every girl wanted to read it, at the same time, and for the same reason. (During the fleeting seconds we saw it, we learned that San Diego, Calif., was the best place to find a husband.) Then the book was snatched from one pair of eager hands to another. Colleen hurled it, football fashion, to Jean. She ran for the bedroom, and the girls pursued. Someone threw a pillow. One pillow led to another. Before long the room was filled with flying feathers and loud squeals. Then followed utter exhaustion.

Everyone would have loved to have collapsed on the bed. But there were seven of us and only two twin beds.

Betty Lynn helped solve the problem by taking a blanket and curling up in a corner.

"I don't mind at all," she said. "I can remember times overseas when a bed like this would have been heaven."

Betty toured the China-Burma-India circuit for seven months. She and a guitarist were designated by the Army as a special unit. They'd go to the out-of-the-way stations usually overlooked.

"Tell us about your most exciting experience over there," we asked her.

"I guess that was during the siege on Mandalay," Betty answered. "We were supposed to entertain 40 soldiers who were stationed near the front. The monsoon was on and the roads were like swamps. We'd been bumping along in our jeep for hours and still no sight of the camp."

They were lost. They stopped the jeep when they spied some natives crossing a little footbridge.

One of them came over. He was wearing GI shoes. He was a member of an OSS outfit and informed them they were behind enemy lines.

If they'd gone two miles farther down that road they'd have driven into an encampment of 350 Jap soldiers.

"When I discovered how close we were to being captured, every freckle faded from my face. I think we broke some kind of a speed record getting out of there."

With Betty bunked on the floor, there was still the matter of fitting six girls in two twin beds. We drew straws.

Vanessa and we drew the short ones. So it was the deck for us.

No sooner had everyone settled down for the night than there came a cry from Colleen: "I'm hungry!"

"Well, just get un-hungry," said Jean. "We've already emptied the icebox!"

"Aren't there any tasty tidbits in your vanity drawer?" kidded Coke.

miss peters' prank . . .

This turned out to be an allusion to another Peters' prank. There was a "no cooking in your room" ruling at Ohio State. But one night Jean and her roommate managed to smuggle in a hotplate, pickles and four marinated herring.

Just as they were devouring a feast fit for a king, there was a knock on the door. The pickles and hotplate went into the bottom vanity drawer with several sweaters hastily thrown on top for reasons of security. The herring were put on the window sill.

The door was opened. Room inspected. Window raised. But the herring weren't discovered—since as the supervisor pushed open the window, they slipped off the sill into the front yard.

We kept talking and laughing into the wee small hours. The last thing we remembered was Colleen telling about working in a malt shop. Something about giving friends extra scoops of ice cream . . . putting it on the cuff . . . being fired . . .

Soon everything became quiet. You could hear the water dripping in the kitchen. We sleepily wondered what Jean would say in the morning when she found that the night before someone had filled the sink with hot water and then had added six packages of gelatin?

Who'd do a thing like that? Guess our halos are getting rusty. THE END

new faces

PATRICIA NEAL was discovered by Eugene O'Neill while auditioning for a part in his play, Moon for the Misbegotten. She didn't get the part, but six months later she read for Lillian Hellman and was cast for the Broadway production of Another Part of the Forest. Pat was born in Kentucky, January 20, 1926, and started taking dramatic lessons when she was 12. She made her debut in John Loves Mary with Ronald Reagan for Warners and is now at work in The Fountainhead. Pat's 5′ 8″ tall and has hazel eyes and blonde hair.

VANESSA BROWN, in addition to being a short story writer, and a senior at U. C. L. A. is also a full-fledged actress. She was born in Vienna, March 24, 1928, and made her acting debut in Paris, dubbing in the voice of a little girl in Prisoner of Shark Island. In Chicago with the Watch on the Rhine company, Vanessa was invited to become a quiz kid, and remained one for 2 years. 20th Century-Fox signed her to a contract and she's appeared in Margie, The Late George Apley, and will soon be in The Fan. She's got chestnut hair and blue eyes, and collects stamps.

TERRY MOORE had a friend who thought she'd be good in movies, and sent Terry's picture to a casting magazine. (She was eleven at the time.) Her photo was published and that was the beginning of both her radio and movie careers. Terry was born in Los Angeles, January 7, 1929, went to Glendale High School and took part in such radio shows as Dr. Christian and A Date With Judy. She played Ingrid Bergman as a girl in Gaslight, and Return of October is her first grown-up role. Terry is 5′ 2″ tall, and has blue eyes and blonde hair.

GORDON MACRAE came to Hollywood via radio and light opera stock company. He made his professional debut at the age of 12 on the radio, and later spent several years on the stage, a few seasons in summer stock, and made countless recordings. He was born in N. J., March 12, 1921, and discovered in the NBC studios in New York by Horace Heidt. He's married to Sheila Stephens and they have three children. Gordon's 5′ 11″ tall and weighs 175 lbs. You'll be seeing him soon in Warner's Silver Lining.

...dream girl, dream girl... Beautiful Lustre-Creme Girl
...hair that gleams and glistens...from a Lustre-Creme shampoo

Tonight!..Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

NOT A SOAP! NOT A LIQUID!
BUT KAY DAUMIT'S RICH LATHERING
CREAM SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN

for Soft, Shimmering
Glamorous Hair

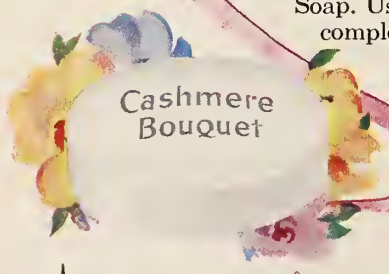
No other shampoo gives you the same magical secret-blend lather plus kindly LANOLIN . . . for true hair beauty.

Tonight he can SEE new sheen in your hair, FEEL its caressable softness, THRILL to its glorious natural beauty. Yes, tonight, if you use Lustre-Creme Shampoo today!

Only Lustre-Creme has Kay Daumit's magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin. This glamorizing shampoo lathers in hardest water. Leaves hair fragrantly clean, shining, free of loose dandruff and so soft, so manageable!

Famous hairdressers use and recommend it for shimmering beauty in all "hair-dos" and permanents. Beauty-wise women made it America's favorite cream shampoo. Try Lustre-Creme! The man in your life—and you—will love the loveliness results in your hair.

4-oz. jar $1; smaller jars and tubes, 49¢ and 25¢.



Kay Daumit, Inc., 919 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

You're doubly desirable, fragrantly appealing . . . with this lingering fragrance men love!

Would you capture the top spot in his heart? The road to romance may well begin . . . with your daily bath with Cashmere Bouquet Soap! For its haunting, bewitching fragrance is the fragrance men love—it comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes far more costly than you would expect to find in any soap. Popular girls for 80 years have followed this simple, successful routine. Bathe every day with Cashmere Bouquet Soap. Use it for your complexion, too!

Cashmere Bouquet

Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love

your letters...

FOR THE DEFENSE

Dear Editor: With Hollywood's moral reputation at its lowest ebb and with the recent scandals and tragedies blazing across the front pages of the nation's newspapers, now is the time for Hollywood to begin defending itself. . . . And who can do more toward this end than the movie magazines? Let's see more features on the worthwhile Hollywood personalities!

Ann McCullough, Victoria, Texas.

(Feeling it can da no less ta earn its readers' respect, MODERN SCREEN shaws Hollywaad's peaple and situations as they are—not as anyone might wish they were. This makes mare significant a recent survey of our own 1948 issues. The survey indicated that of all stars covered, anly abaut one in 37 was involved in anything "scandalaus." Of course, since scandals are always news and ordinary respectability often isn't, the actual prepanderance af "warthwhile" stars is even greater.—Ed.)

WE'VE GOT IT!

Dear Editor: Movie magazines always have the same people, with new clothes and different stories about them. How about more newcomers?

F. Freeburg, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

(The New Faces calumn—see page 75—is naw a regular department, and newcamers are featured more prominently as saon as readers indicate interest in them. This month, far example, MODERN SCREEN introduces Montgamery Clift on pages 58-59 in respanse ta truly great demand.—Ed.)

DOUBLE LIFE

Dear Editor: In your December issue, you said that Michael North got his first role in The Unsuspected. Previously, he had made several films under the name of Ted North.

William Lappin, Montreal, Can.

FASHION NOTE FROM PORTUGAL

Dear Editor: I must confess that Tyrone Power's statement on Portuguese bathing suits in the September MS is not at all exaggerated. The other day a girl came to the beach in a modern bathing suit, but was forced to leave because although the suit was one-piece, it had no skirt!

Ditta Walfrum, Porta, Portugal

(Ditta refers ta Linda Christian's story abaut their preparations far a vacatian in Partugal. Ty warned her: "Our regular bathing suits will never do. Men have to wear suits with attached taps, and women must wear one-piece suits with short skirts." Linda telegraphed her mother in Mexico and, by return mail, received a black woolen suit with lace trimmings and hip-pockets, Paris fashion, 1924!—Ed.)

PROBLEM CHILD

(Continued from page 33)

and analyzed it, Esther was fascinated. It was like a game, a challenge. It was interesting.

We pinned it down together. She knew boys liked her, but not in a boy-girl way. And she wasn't interested in boys as the opposite sex. They were no mystery to her. She'd played with her older brother, David, and his pals around the house all her life. Esther was a tomboy and an athlete herself. She wasn't boy-struck. Romantic notions were late in dawning. She didn't stand in the hall corners at school flirting and giggling. She didn't use feminine wiles, dress up, try to be pretty. In fact, she didn't give a hoot how she looked. Out popped a clue right there.

"Janet says she's not going to be friends with me any longer," Esther confided.

"Why not?"

"She says I look too sloppy."

Another followed: A "truth" session at her school girls' club had produced similar critical brickbats. We talked as two girls, not necessarily mother and daughter, and light began to dawn: Esther's boy problem was a problem only because of the girls' attitudes. They were boy-crazy well ahead of her and they didn't want to go around with a girl who wasn't attractive to boys. Esther was excited at the discovery, not depressed.

"Let's see what we can do to fix that," I suggested.

It wasn't so difficult. A look in the mirror at the unbrushed hair, wrinkled skirt and scuffed shoes that Tomboy Williams had never given a thought to—and she knew the solution. Esther saw to it that from then on she was neat as a pin, trim and attractive.

full steam ahead . . .

The shock to the girl who always loved everyone and thought everyone loved her was spur enough to action. Her popularity zoomed; she went everywhere, she was elected to everything. She soon was buzzing about in a dozen school activities—the Tri-Y, the Knights and Ladies. She was vice-president of the student body (the first girl elected, by the way). She turned into a new person to meet the new phase of her developing girlhood. In fact, she became so popular that another problem popped up. Pretty soon Esther was disciplined for talking in the halls to the crowds around her. They put her in a room by herself—and that day half the school moved in with her!

If you're going to be of any help to your children, or to anyone, you have to gain their confidence. That recalls a funny story which might show how free Esther felt about talking things over with us.

She informed one of her beaus one night, "You know, I tell my mother everything that happens to me." He jerked back in horror. "You tell her everything?"

"Yep," repeated Esther, "everything."

"Golly," gasped the boy friend, driving her quickly home. I'm afraid that scared him away, because he didn't come around much after that!

Actually, there were few startling confessions Esther had to make to me. I have never worried about her in my life, not even when she had emotional troubles—though most of the time we didn't let problems progress to the trouble stage. Most parents face, sooner or later, the petting problem, for instance.

And I'll have to tell a story on her here, about the first time she let a boy kiss her—although it wasn't exactly a time: it was more like a campaign. Esther worked out Dorothy Hart's smile wins six offers from Hollywood!

Dorothy Hart, Universal-International Starlet, blazed onto the Hollywood scene as the winner of a country-wide beauty contest. Then she spurned the prize—a movie contract—to become a cover girl.

After Dorothy's winning smile appeared on the covers of eight leading magazines in rapid succession, the movies beckoned again. This time Dorothy couldn't say "no" to all six tempting offers she received. She is on the threshold of stardom now . . . and taking care to keep the sparkle in her famous smile. "It's a Pepsodent Smile," Dorothy says, "I know from experience, Pepsodent brightens my teeth best!"

← Scene from Dorothy Hart's latest picture, THE COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO, a Universal-International Release.

The smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile!

Dorothy Hart knows it. And people all over America agree—the smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile! Pepsodent removes the film that makes teeth look dull—uncovers new brightness in smiles!

Wins 3 to 1 over any other tooth paste

Families from coast to coast compared delicious New Pepsodent with the tooth paste they were using. By an average of 3 to 1, they said Pepsodent tastes better, makes breath cleaner and teeth brighter than any other tooth paste they tried. For the safety of your smile use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year!

ANOTHER FINE LEVER BROTHERS PRODUCT

sweet and hot

by leonard feather

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

FROM THE MOVIES

A SONG IS BORN—"Giants of Jazz" album (Capitol).
This colossal collection includes the Benny Goodman bop version of "Stealing Apples" which we two-starred here a cauple of months back. The other sides are "Muskrat Ramble" by Mel Powell and an all-star Dixieland group; "Redskin Rhumba" by Charlie Barnet's band; "Daddy-O" by the Paige Cavanaugh Trio with Jeri Sullivan, singing it just the way she voice-doubled for Virginia Mayo on the saund track of the picture; and finally, a double-sided all star jam session on "A Song Was Born," similar to the scene in the film, with the Golden Gate Quartet, Jeri Sullivan, the Brazilians, Messrs. Gaodman, Barnet, Powell, T. Dorsey and Lauis Armstrong. It's the best musical album ever issued in connection with a movie—and as if that weren't enough reasan to buy it, all royalties go ta the Damon Runyon Fund. Don't miss it!

KISSING BANDIT—"Señorita" by Frank Sinatra* (Columbia), Jack Smith (Capitol), Dennis Day (Victor). "If I Steal a Kiss" by Andy Russell* (Capitol), Frank Sinatra (Columbia), Vaughn Monroe (Victar). "What's Wrong With Me" by Vaughn Monroe (Victar), Patti Page* (Mercury). "Siesta" by the Sportsmen (Capitol).

LUXURY LINER—"Can Maracas" by Jose Morand* (Victor).

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON—"Girls Were Made to Take Care of Boys" by Jo Staffard and Gordon MacRae* (Capital).

PALEFACE—Still mare "Buttons and Bows," by Bob Hope* (Capitol), Evelyn Knight* (Decca), the Dinning Sisters (Capitol).

REACHING FOR THE STARS — "The Morning Glory Road" by Ray McKinley* (Victor), Jahn Laurenz (Mercury).

SO DEAR TO MY HEART—"Lavender Blue (Dilly Dilly)" by Vera Lynn (London), Sammy Kaye (Victor). "It's Whatcha Do With Whatcha Got" by Johnnie Johnston* (MGM).

JAZZ (HOT AND COOL!)

LOUIS ARMSTRONG — "Please Stop Playing Thase Blues" (Victor).

DIZZY GILLESPIE—"Algo Bueno" (Victor), "I Can't Get Started"* (reissue on Columbia).

BENNY GOODMAN—"Varsity Drag"* (Capitol).

STAN HASSELGARD—"I'll Never Be The Same"* (Capitol)

WOODY HERMAN — "Basie's Basement"* (Coral).

CHUBBY JACKSON — "Lemon Drap" (Rainbaw).

GENE KRUPA—"How High The Moon" (Columbia).

DODO MARMAROSA — "Trade Winds" (alias "You Ga To My Head") (Dial).

CHARLIE PARKER—"Embraceable You"* (Dial), "Barbados"* (Savoy).

ED SAFRANSKI—"Turmoil"* (Atlantic).

CHARLIE VENTURA—"I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles"* (National).
It's a field-month for jazz! Almost all the above are worth a spin, with Doda's superb piano work a high spat. Nice "bap-vocal-with-horns" ideas on the Jackson and Ventura sides. Ben Webster plays tenor sax with Woody Herman. The Safranski item features seven men out of the Stan Kentan band.

her first defense scheme all by herself, but Mother got daily bulletins.

This boy had taken her to a school dance and at our door said he wanted to kiss her good-night.

Esther stalled. "Why?" she asked.

"For heaven's sake!" exclaimed her escort, "what do you mean—'why?'"

"I don't know why you want to, that's all."

"I don't either. . . . Gosh—I just do."

"Wouldn't it be awfully silly," reasoned Esther, "to do something you don't know why you want to do?"

The boy was pretty baffled at that, but he made another date anyway and, of course, tried again. This time Esther's delaying tactics expanded the idea that had worked before. She told him, "Think it over for a week—and if you can tell me one good reason why I should let you kiss me, why, I will."

He was back again with a reason that boiled down to, "I'd like to."

"Not good enough," Esther decided.

Esther finally gave in—she knew it was inevitable—the week after that. But by then I'm not sure the ardent suitor thought a good-night peck was worth all the long-distance debate.

Still, I knew a problem had come up in Esther's life, one of the most important ones, in fact, that an adolescent girl faces: To pet or not to pet? If I do, will the boys like me better, or worse? If I don't, will they call me a "lemon," will they stop asking me out, will I be unpopular?

At teen-age time, both girls and boys are pressed with a hundred haunting fears. At that trying time of a youngster's life, the herd instinct is very strong. There's a desperate desire to do as the rest of the age group is doing. There's a great longing to be accepted by your contemporaries. If you know you're with the crowd, you're confident and happy. But the age-group's verdict is what counts. I decided to get it on the petting problem.

One afternoon, Esther, her brother David, and four or five schoolmates flocked into our house for an after-school snack. It was always open house at our house, and where there's an easy welcome, there will always be young people. They came out in the kitchen and I found a chance in the conversation to ask, "Tell me, does a girl have to pet to get dates? I'm curious, and you boys know. Give me the low-down."

"No," they scoffed, "not if she has what it takes."

"What's that?" I wanted to know.

"You've got to look attractive and you've got to be fun," answered a boy. The others nodded. "Sure, those are the girls we like best."

I said, "Do they have to be the prettiest girls?" The boys answered, "No, but they have to look right—their hair has to be neat and their clothes clean and in style, but not too fancy."

There was Esther's—and her girl friends' —answer, straight from the horse's mouth, where it convinced. After that, Esther and the girls at her school studied the petting problem, talked it over among themselves, knowing where they stood. They even started making rules, rather than risk getting themselves involved in what they recognized as a serious problem. Five minutes parked in a car was the limit when they came home from a date. It was Esther's idea too, to start the boys thinking and talking on interesting subjects. "Tell me about clouds," she'd ask her date on the way home, "what do you know about them?" If the boy didn't have wise masculine information handy, he'd study up so he could next time—and he loved it. Esther knew and so did her girl friends soon that being an audience is supremely flattering to the other sex—and it kept their minds on safe grounds for the girls.

I've always believed in thinking with your children instead of against them, if you wish to help. A parent who is a dictator is a very poor parent. It's a parent's role to say: "I'm a friend. I've lived longer than you. Now, here is everything I've learned. Please use it." But never, "Do it because I say so," or "because it's best for you." That's a sure way to force them to do just the opposite. Forbidden fruits have been the sweetest since Adam and Eve and always will be.

We always followed rules of frank discussion and reason in our house. We never had a taboo. Taboos are "thou shalt nots," and that's negative, and nothing good comes of that.

Because of this, alcohol was never a problem in our home. Dad kept a bottle of whiskey in the kitchen cupboard and every Williams child knew where it was. If they wanted to taste it, they could. If they did, they didn't like it and that was that. But there was no mystery. The first time Esther was offered a flask by a wild youngster at a dance I'm afraid he was terribly let down by her reaction. "Daddy has some at home if I want it," she told him.

All our children look back on our simple little home as the greatest home in the world. They were all practically grown before they considered that there existed finer, wealthier, more comfortable homes. And when they did, they didn't like them half so well as their own.

simple rules . . .

Why? Because their home was their business, their project, their responsibility. They were "in on the act" as Jimmy Durante says, and every minute. They weren't just kids eating and sleeping there, being bossed around and dying to get away. Our place was always a welcome-matted clubhouse for the Williams kids and their friends. The big front room was always available for parties, fun, games, events. The only rules about it were (1) See if somebody else has plans to use it first and (2) Clean it up when the fun's over. (I was never the type to be a slave for my children—I don't approve of it!)

The kitchen was where our family gathered. It had a long table which was the family dining spot and council table, too. I think every home should have a table like that—especially when I think of the family problems that were taken up, analyzed, and solved enthusiastically around it, with every member tossing in his two cents' worth. Democracy, like so many things, begins at home. Everyone in our house was an active member of the ways and means and the rules committee, too.

I saw I Remember Mama with Esther recently. Halfway through that humorously touching picture she squeezed my arm excitedly. "Why, Mommie," she said, "that's us—that was our family!" And it was. And Esther remembers it as warmly and humanly as the author who wrote that play. All of us do.

There was the time, for instance, when June wanted a class sweater. It cost four dollars. To some families that was the same as forty cents; to us it was more like 40 dollars. But all the other girls had them. We discussed it at the table, all of us. We decided that June would feel out of things if she didn't have one too. She should buy one—but how? The idea spread from Esther, and was vigorously seconded by the other children: we'll each give up something we want and that will pay for the sweater. They thought: We can sacrifice; our time will come later. Right now it's very important to June.

Another time David joined the Boy Scouts when things were going hard fi-

Watch this new lotion glorify your WHOLE HAND!

Hinds

Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream

NOW IN NEW LARGER BEAUTY BOTTLE

WORKS WONDERS! Lanolin-enriched for extra effectiveness, New Hinds Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream keeps your whole hand feeling soft in spite of ravages of work and water. Use it to smooth elbows, arms and legs . . . try it as a powder base. Use Hinds to help protect babies' and children's tender skin from chapping! 4 sizes, 10¢ to $1.00.

PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK

GOLDEN GLINT Rinse GIVES BOTH

Yes, you need Golden Glint's colorless lustre rinse or one of Golden Glint's 11 true-color rinses after your shampoo because...

- Hair that is difficult to manage—dull, drab, brittle—even after the finest shampoo, becomes nearly tangle-free with a Golden Glint rinse, shining with a lustre comparable to hours of brushing.
- Hair that takes a beautiful permanent yet shows dull, lifeless waves and curls needs the lustre and new life that Golden Glint imparts to every shade of hair.
- Hair that changes shade an inch or two from the scalp needs the tiny tint color highlight of Golden Glint's true-color shades, blending and softening the color effect.

Try Golden Glint Lustre Rinse for lustrous, film-free hair... or try one of the 11 true-color shades (ranging from raven black to light blonde) to glorify the natural color of your hair. The added color does not rub off between shampoos, but washes out easily.

More than 60 million packages have been bought by America's loveliest women to bring out lustre or to add color to their hair.

5 RINSES, 25¢—2 RINSES, 10¢
SEE COLOR CHART AT COSMETIC COUNTERS IN DRUG OR DIME STORES

nancially with our family. The night he joined, Esther, aged ten, piped up at the dinner table, "Give David the biggest piece of meat. He needs strength for all those hikes and things he'll be taking."

We were not exactly poverty-stricken when Esther was a girl, but we did have to make every penny count. Dad and I raised a family of five children on what many families spend on one. Esther has told before now how, once when times were very lean, I fed our family on a sack of beans for almost a month. That was extreme. Most times we managed enough nourishing, well-balanced food—and the same ample helpings of psychologically important fare. If that meant a neat blouse and skirt to look like the other school girls, Dad and I found a way to get it (and the length must be to one-eighth of an inch what they were wearing!). If our kids hadn't come up with a self-sacrifice idea to make June's class sweater possible, I'd have found a way to get it because it was a psychological necessity.

But I wouldn't have worried my mind a minute if it had been a grand new evening dress she pined for, or a closet full of fancy skirts or shoes.

still satisfied . . .

Until she had graduated from high school Esther never suspected that other girls had better clothes or a better home than she had. When it dawned on her that others did, she wouldn't have traded if she could. And she still wouldn't, in spite of the expensive set-ups she sees all around her as a screen star.

Dad and I still live in the modest little house where Esther was born and raised. When Ben Gage, now Esther's husband, first took her out she brought him right here, saying, "You'd better meet my family and see what you think of us." While I chatted with Ben, Esther fell asleep on the sofa. That's how secure, unruffled and completely at home she felt.

I never saw Esther resent a "made-over" dress, and for a long time those were about the only dresses she had. On the contrary, each hand-me-down was a terrific thrill and a challenging problem. I had three girls to clothe and also, luckily, a good friend who came by with a box of her clothes every now and then. To Esther such occasions were like Christmas. Instead of being furious at the second-hand idea—as some girls are—Esther was as excited as if the packet was a band-box with a Fifth Avenue label. Her happy reaction was, "Now, what can we do with this one? . . . Oh, I know!" and off the whole household would be in a whirl of alterations. She gets the same glee today out of passing on her own clothes to her nieces, Bula, 14, and Judy, 11.

The most important thing of all, I believe, is to give children the conviction that a beneficent, loving Power is always around to protect them, love and guide them; that they can turn to Him any time for their needs. When you live by that secure faith it's pretty hard not to face life with courage, cheer and happiness.

Esther grew up with this feeling: "In me is a connection with every good thing. There is no limit to what I can do if I draw on this Power within me." Her simple little prayer of faith was the well-known one that goes, "God is my help in every need, God does my every hunger feed." Her favorite hymn was "God Will Take Care of You," which most children sing in Sunday School. She believed then and still does every word of the comforting lines,

When one Joy He takes,
He puts another in its place
So we may always see
The smiling of His face. . . .

That doesn't mean that all is sugar and spice and everything nice. But that faith does assure a constructive, happy, relaxed and undefeated approach to every problem, and as I said, problems are the warp and woof of life.

When Esther won the national freestyle swimming championship, she relied on that faith and incidentally, I had a chance to face another problem with her, although she was 3,000 miles away. I knew it was a major event in her life. I knew there was the danger of tenseness, of tying up, of letting a scare psychology ride in on the importance of the big moment in her lifelong ambitions. And I knew, from Esther's home training, what would free her for her best effort.

I wrote her a long letter which she read the night before the final race, lying in her cot, sleepless. Most of it was just a chatty letter from home, telling her family news, sending our love, wishing we were there to back her up as always. But also I repeated the simple, direct faith she had known since childhood, and later she told me she read and re-read those lines before she dozed off to wake up confident and strong, drawing on that Power she believes in to force her through to victory.

I had written simply, "You don't have to win if you don't want to. But if you do you can, if you draw on the Power within you. . . . And remember that God will be with success as well as with failure. . . ."

Sometimes I feel that I'm not much use to my own children any more. Particularly do I feel that I don't know Esther's movie world, that I'm out of touch with her problems. I tell myself the help I am to Esther Williams is what I gave her when she was a little girl.

Then the front door bursts open as it did the other afternoon and there's that same little girl, maybe a few years older, with a slight cloud dimming the sunshine. "Mommie, I've got a problem. . . . Such-and-such has happened, such-and-such is wrong. . . ."

"That's too bad, honey. But is it really so bad? Now, let's see what we can do about it. . . ."

We're sitting at the kitchen table before we know it, the same kitchen table that's served so well all these years. And the years are rolled back and I'm meeting a problem with Esther, and watching her leave at last, happy and radiant again.

Then I realize that once a mother, you're a mother for keeps. It's a lifetime job, a privileged, important one. And to me it's the happiest job in the world. THE END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Recently, while shopping in one of the New York stores, I came across a collection of smart suits. I didn't have much time, but I wanted to buy one. A woman standing nearby asked if she might help me select a suit. I was very grateful. While helping me, the woman spoke casually and humorously and I thought I'd never enjoyed shopping more. The suit was finally chosen and my charming helper left. Later, while walking in the street I passed a theater and saw a very familiar face on the billboard. Suddenly I realized that my shopping assistant had been none other than Marsha Hunt!

Lilyan Brounstein
Brooklyn, New York

This little girl went to the beauty shop

This little girl spent 2 hours at home

...and this little girl got lasting waves in an instant!

over a million women have found insta-curl to be SAFE!

The original "curls in a capsule"

insta-curl makes permanents unnecessary

$1.25 plus tax

1. Dissolve capsule contents in 4 oz. (half glass) hot water.

2. Comb solution generously through dry hair. (Best after shampoo.)

3. Set, allow to dry. Comb out for lasting waves and curls!

Never before Insta-Curl could you comb your hair into lasting waves and curls! Or get a permanent effect from a tiny capsule with perfect safety. Even more miraculous — the longer you use Insta-Curl, the lovelier, more glamorous and naturally curly your hair becomes!

Leading laboratories, including those of America's most famous stores, have found Insta-Curl absolutely safe. Contains no sulphur, resin, alum or other harmful ingredients. So for shimmering waves that last and glorious curls that stay, get Insta-Curl. Improves old or new permanents. Curls all types of hair! Grand for the fine, soft hair of children. Yes, nothing like Insta-Curl ever before!

Get Insta-Curl at all Drug and Department stores. If your favorite store doesn't carry Insta-Curl write to Beauty Factors, Inc., 139 S. Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills. Calif.

Copyright 1948, Beauty Factors, Inc.

THE WOMAN NOBODY KNOWS

(Continued from page 44)

A star who's worked with Jennifer Jones in most of her best movies shakes his head in wonder every now and then. "I can't understand how you ever decided to be an actress," he tells her. "You haven't any more ego than an Easter bunny!" Another calls her "the most un-Hollywood star in Hollywood." "Either that," sighs this friend, "or she's the stingiest one with her talent—she won't put on an act for a minute, away from the camera!"

Jennifer Jones has been around Hollywood seven years but she can't get acclimatized to the Hollywood treatment—to glamor, fuss and fanfares. Partly it's because she's painfully shy, partly it's because she's been cautiously alert ever since she hit Hollywood's golden shores not to succumb to the tinseled fripperies—and partly it's because she's constitutionally inclined to sell herself short.

jones legend . . .

When Jennifer recently finished Rough Sketch at Columbia, she found herself, to her great surprise, a darling of the first "foreign"—or non-Selznick—camera crew she'd worked with for a long time. For their part, they were a little amazed at Miss Jones, whom they'd suspected of being on the grand side, temperamental and even "difficult." You see, they'd tumbled for the Unapproachable Jones legend. And then they found themselves being hailed by their first names and joked with, by a gal who seemed ready to handle any situation that came up, like a pretty good sport. So when the last scene was shot, it was pretty clear to Larry Germain, her hairdresser—who takes care of many set situations for Jennifer—that the star was going to be asked to autograph a lot of pictures. He hinted this to Jennifer, knowing that she wouldn't have even a snapshot around anywhere.

"Maybe you're right," she admitted. "Maybe you'd better have the studio send some over. Six ought to be plenty."

"Six won't last six minutes," he said.

"But only two people have asked me," said J. Jones innocently. Larry brought over four dozen just the same. They all went in a couple of hours—as he knew they would.

The biggest fright-object in Jennifer Jones' life is the canvas star-chair with JENNIFER JONES stenciled pretentiously on the back—a type of caste mark which most screen stars dearly love. Long ago Jennifer's crews have noted that the minute they slide it up politely where she's standing, she finds an excuse to get the heck out of that vicinity. . . . The elaborate movie-star dressing cottage she inherited on the Selznick lot is musty most of the time from disuse; her trailer on the set, like those of other actors, is what she uses. . . . She hustles a 1941 Ford to and from studio—and to show how much fancy autos mean in her life, the speedometer, after seven years, reads 19,000 miles. . . . She gives chewing gum a pearly beating. . . . She's a slave to radio disc jockeys. . . . She never has any money in her purse and her dream project—of all things—is to pack-back into the high Sierras with her boys, guideless, on a campfire-and-sleeping-bag safari.

All these scattered but true items seem as out of place tacked onto the generally accepted picture of Jennifer Jones, as spangles on a nun. All are completely out of keeping with the elegant portrait of Jennifer which Hollywood has cherished ever since she played the virgin of Lourdes in Bernadette. Nothing—not even the red-hot role she played in Duel in the Sun—seems warm enough to melt away the solid idea that Miss Jennifer Jones in person is some kind of a cross between an ice-cream angel and a mystery Madame X.

And nothing could be crazier.

That such 'way-off-base ideas exist about Jennifer is, of course, largely her own fault—because of the way she looks, and the way she acts. The first she can't help, and since she's smart, probably wouldn't anyway. As for the second—well, she gets tongue-tied talking about herself, so she doesn't. "Nothing happens to me, I'm horribly uninteresting—what can I say?" she tosses in anguish at studio press agents approaching with a reporter in tow. So she's regarded as an odd body, and more myths bob up about her brunette head than balloons at a county fair—which are always a pleasure to pop.

For one thing, because of her super-feminine façade, Jennifer Jones impresses most people who don't know her, as a soft, sweet, gardenia petal of a girl. An anxious, elderly admirer wrote her recently advising iron-pills. "You look anemic, my dear," she cautioned, "and you must keep strong to stand your strenuous career." Jennifer's about as anemic as a Kansas City top sirloin.

In practically every picture she's made lately, she's had to handle a job husky enough to strain the sinews of a serial queen. She dug a tunnel with pick and shovel for days in Rough Sketch, and got rolled around by a tidal wave near Boston for Portrait of Jennie. Before that, she climbed a flinty Arizona cliff in Duel in the Sun, scorning knee pads, the standard protection for softies. (Even cowboy stars use 'em all the time.) She reaped a mess of cuts and scratches all over her body from tip to toe in that adventure, but didn't lay off an hour from her work, although the rocky mesa location was not designed for the lah-de-dah Hollywood lady she's supposed to be.

On the screen, Jennifer seems somewhat small and delicate. Actually, she's tall and lean. She's five-seven in her stocking feet and tips the scales at 118. This makes her a slender, streamlined vision in a bathing suit—which, incidentally, she never wears for publicity stills, but strictly for getting through the water, swiftly and often. She walks fast, with a getalong like a determined deer. She eats like a hungry horse—and anything, but mostly meat, potatoes and greens. She drinks milk like a prize baby, never touches coffee, puffs cigarettes only when the script says to, takes a drink on only particularly festive occasions. She doesn't bother herself with any health regime, diet, or massage to keep her figure because—surprise again—she has a terrific talent for sports, especially horseback riding and tennis. Jennifer has been taking tennis lessons ever since she hit Hollywood years back and by now she's a potential whiz.

portrait of jennie . . .

There are so many easy mistakes to make about the girl nobody seems to know, that the only way to add Jennifer Jones up is to break her down. Out of the little pieces you get a portrait of Jennifer that you never dreamed existed.

Mrs. Phyllis Isley Walker prefers her professional name, Jennifer Jones, in both public and private life and her favorite nickname is what she usually gets—"Jennie." Only recently she learned exactly what it means. On the Rough Sketch set, on the final day, John Garfield presented a lady burro to Director John Huston for his San Fernando Valley ranch. He explained to John that it was really a two-for-one present because the donkey was definitely headed for a blessed event.

"What's her name?" asked Huston.

"'Jennie,' I guess," replied Garfield. "That's what they always call these critters when they're expecting."

To Jenny Jones, who was listening, that was news and a little disconcerting.

"From now on," she stated emphatically, but with a twinkle in her eye, "everybody around here calls me 'Jennifer'—with a capital 'J'!"

The house in Brentwood where Jennifer lives with her two boys, Michael and Bobby, is a medium-sized, French-style place with an ocean view which she bought just before she went East to make Portrait of Jennie. Until then, she'd camped in apartments but never thought them fit to raise her kids in. The whole upstairs of her new place is turned over to the boys who, being only 11 months apart, look like twins—although Mike, seven, the younger, is taller than his eight-year-old big brother, Bob. Kermit, their nurse, takes care of their goings-on and Jennifer has developed what she calls "a deaf ear" in their direction. She can read,

Special offer to our readers

The 1948-49 edition of MODERN SCREEN's exclusive "Super-Star Information Chart" is something no real fan should be without. It's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia on over 500 of your favorite stars—complete with birthdates, hobbies, real names, recent pictures, and inside facts. To obtain your copy, send 10c in coin, plus a self-addressed, stamped (3c), standard 4″ x 9″ envelope to Service Department, MODERN SCREEN, P. O. Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y. Send soon!

MEDICATED CARE PROVES WONDERFUL BEAUTY AID TO FACE AND HANDS!

4 Out of 5 Women Showed Softer, Lovelier-looking Skin in Test Supervised by Doctors

REMARKABLE ALL-PURPOSE CREAM SHOWS WOMEN SIMPLE, EASY AID TO CLEARER, UNBLEMISHED SKIN

RECENTLY, 181 women of all ages took part in a careful skin improvement test supervised by 3 doctors—skin specialists! The women had many common skin troubles—roughness, dryness or skin blemishes.

The doctors explained a new 4-step Medicated Beauty Routine using famous Noxzema Medicated Skin Cream. Each woman's skin was examined through a magnifying lens at 7-day interyals.

Here are the astonishing results: Of all these women tested, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in 2 weeks—were thrilled at the marked improvement that this beauty routine helped bring to their skin!

If you want an aid to a softer, smoother skin . . . if you suffer the heart-breaking embarrassment of unattractive, externally-caused blemishes, roughness, dryness or similar skin troubles—try Noxzema Medicated Care. It's a simply grand new way to care for your face and hands.

Softer, Whiter Hands —Almost Overnight

Do your hands look red, feel raw and rough? Smooth on Noxzema. See how quickly this medicated formula soothes and helps heal—helps red, rough chapped skin look softer, whiter—often in 24 hours.

SIMPLE 4-STEP BEAUTY AID

Don't just cover up a poor complexion. Don't try to hide flaws. Give your skin the glorious aid of Noxzema Medicated Care.

1. MORNING—Bathe face with warm water, then apply Noxzema to a wet cloth and "cream-wash" your face.

2. Apply Noxzema as a soothing protective powder base to hold make-up.

3. EVENING—Repeat morning cleansing with Noxzema. Dry face gently.

4. Massage Noxzema lightly into your face. Pat on extra Noxzema over blemishes, if you have any.

Try this 4-step routine yourself. You'll be delighted with the results.

"Our family doctor recommended Noxzema for adolescent blemishes," writes lovely Mrs. H. Hiestand. "Now I'm married and still use Noxzema regularly at night to help keep my skin clear and unblemished."

Mrs. Lee Smith says, "I do my own housework. You know what that does to your hands. I've never found anything better for chapped hands than Noxzema. Now I use it as both a complexion and hand cream."

Try Noxzema and see why over 25,000,000 jars are sold yearly. Now on sale at all drug and cosmetic counters—only 40¢, 60¢ and $1.00 plus tax.

study her lines, entertain guests, paint, or take a nap, unruffled and undisturbed, even if they're chopping the rafters in two. Some people swear she hasn't a nerve in her body.

Jennifer is very much of a home girl. When she does doll up and go dancing it's practically always to those castles of gourd-and-off-beat rhythm, Mocambo and Ciro's—she loves to rhumba. But she's strictly a Saturday-night girl—so all other evenings are devoted to her home, her friends and her kids, or her relations, who visit her frequently from Dallas. Everyone is in on the act, whatever it may be.

Last Hallowe'en, Jennifer threw a spook party for the boys at home which she planned, organized and ran, herself! Seventeen friends of Mike's and Bobby's showed up in weird costume. (The boys go to military school and are popular young extroverts with packs of pals.) As anyone knows, keeping 17 young packages of dynamite in a Hallowe'en mood from tearing a joint to pieces is quite a job. Jennifer handled it smoothly, organizing the apple-bobbing, donkey-tail pinning and such juvenile goings-on with the easy impartiality of a gridiron referee, so that every one had a good time and comparatively few vases were shattered or rugs wrecked. That night Joe, her houseman, dolled up as a ghoul and met the kids at the door; Veada, her personal maid, pinch-hit as a gypsy fortune-teller done up in Romany rags; and Jenny's dad, who was visiting, tended the soft-cider bar.

When Jennifer entertains her own friends, it's always with small dinner parties, followed by such prosaic parlor sports as "The Game" (charades), ask-me-another quiz sessions, and scattered chatter. Among her intimates are Lenore Cotten, Anita Colby and Valli, Selznick's new Italian star. Jennifer's favorite at-home perch is the corner of one of her big divans with her feet curled up under her. She loves to hug fireplaces, of which there are three in her house.

Jennifer doesn't use makeup of any kind, except lipstick, even in pictures. Her hair's its own honest dark brown, naturally wavy and currently clipped to the shortest bob in Hollywood, the longest strands being exactly one inch and a half. She hates hats, but looks best in berets. Perhaps her big brown eyes and her white pluperfect teeth are the most striking features when you meet her face to face. Her long hands come next. She wears no rings—her only jewelry pets are earrings. She can't resist buying perfume and has hundreds of tiny flaçons all over her room.

Jennifer's personal tidiness, however, hasn't cramped her easy-going style on the set. There's no touch-me-not air around her. She wallowed for days in wet clay for some graveyard digging scenes in Rough Sketch and in one where she strikes a buried coffin with her shovel, the minute she hit it, it flopped open and a greenish decomposed hand (sponge rubber) bounced out. The props had rigged it to scare her. She screamed obligingly, so the next take a grisly skull shot out at her. At that point Jennifer decided it was time to get even with some cut-ups of her own. So she placed black plaster on her teeth—and when John Huston wanted a particularly sweet smile, she let him have the toothless-hag variety.

When Jennifer laughs, she laughs clear from the soles of her feet and her face turns red. When she's angry, she just trembles and keeps her lips buttoned—but that's rare, for normally she's extremely good-natured. Her boss, David Selznick, has never had a temperamental tizzy from her all the time she's been his star. Whatever he picks out in the script department she knows is right and she likes it. How her aloof reputation ever got started is a mystery, too, because her sets are always open and the only times she ducks out from the gang are to eat her lunch (which she brings from home) and to take a short nap.

Her one working weakness—besides telephonitis—is the fact that clocks and calendars mean nothing in her life. She loves to sleep late, and she's unpunctual. The only time she's ever been known to be anywhere exactly on the dot was during the war when she signed up for Nurses' Aid under her own real name (she worked 12 months before anyone in Hollywood found out) and had to travel 12 miles crosstown to the General Hospital four days a week.

Matter of fact, Jennifer is restless as a sparrow and has to keep busy at something all day long. The wardrobe, hairdressing and makeup departments at Selznick's have tried in vain for years to make her sit still like a good girl. Any sound stage portrait of Jennifer Jones would be meaningless without a needlepoint frame and a radio set, both of which she uses to occupy her ears and her fingers from the minute she parks her Ford in the morning until she climbs in to drive home. She whips needlepoint stitches between scenes, and often in them. At home she has chair backs, stool covers, picture frames and all sorts of things she's stitched herself.

As for the radio, Jennifer is tuned in from dawn to dusk. She packs along a portable on locations and has a plug-in for her dressing room. As much as she loves to listen to a radio, though, she can't act for it. A mike strikes terror to her heart and she's been on the air only twice. Both times were pure torture. When she gets worked up about anything—a radio program, an acting job or a personal appearance—she sprouts a saddle of sweat beads across her nose.

distress signal . . .

That private distress signal is prone also to pop out on Jennifer when she sees herself on the screen, because she's hypercritical about her own acting and fiercely bent on improving it. Jennifer took her "straw hat" La Jolla stage job last summer terribly seriously, studied and rehearsed hard at home with everything she had and put it over neatly. It was her first footlights appearance. Her first curtain call, holding hands with the cast and hearing real applause volley her way, was, she admitted, as great a thrill as winning her Oscar. The old Broadway stage hangover from her student days hasn't left Jenny as yet; in fact, after her next three pictures are made—Madame Bovary at MGM, and two films in England, Gone To Earth and Tess of the d'Urbervilles—she has definite plans to do a Broadway play.

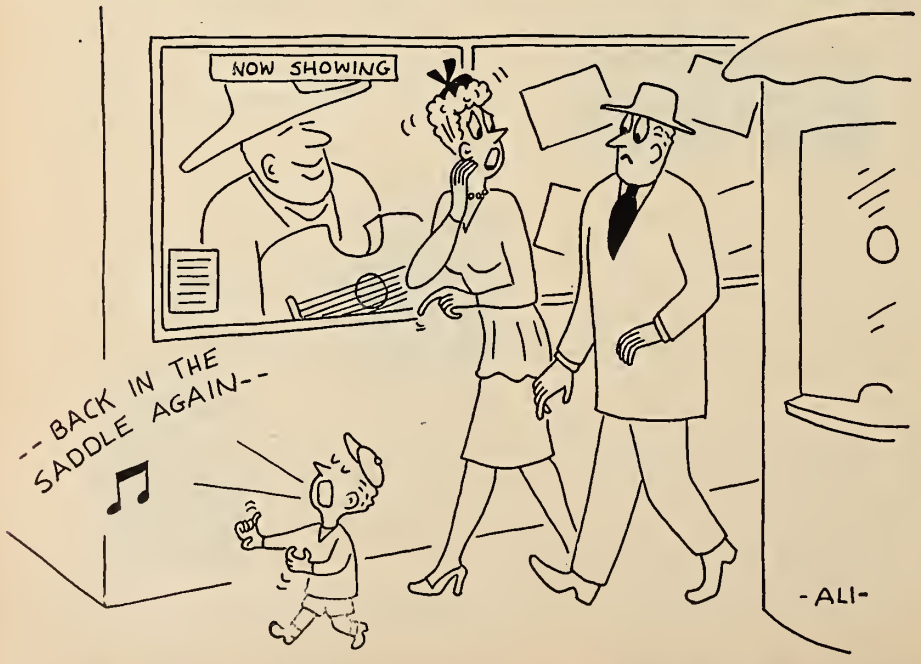
Meanwhile, myths will doubtless keep piling merrily up in Hollywood about Jennifer Jones, because, like Old Man River, the lady "don't say nothin' . . . she just keeps rolling along." It's always an irresistible temptation in a curious community like Hollywood to make anything from a plaster saint to a devil's handmaiden out of any character who keeps a close mouth and minds her own business. Maybe by now you've gathered that Jennifer Jones fits somewhere comfortably in between.

If any doubt exists about that—last year when Jenny was back in Boston daring death and disfiguration on those rugged lighthouse rocks, she rested nightly in one of Beantown's most elegant inns.

One midnight she sat up with a start and stared into the darkness with a terrified expression that wasn't acting. Something was making a horrible sound in her room. Jennie snatched her robe, ripped open the door and tore in panic down the hall to where Dorothy Whalen, her stand-in, slept.

"Dottie," she cried, pounding the door frantically, "let me in! Quick—let me in!"

Dorothy wasn't sure whether the men from Mars had landed or the hotel was on fire, but she leaped out and swung open the door. The pale vision of Jennifer Jones in cold terror confronted her.



"I'm staying here the rest of the night," Jennifer gasped. "I'm not going back to that room."

"Of course not," soothed Dottie. "You stay right here, you poor child. But what in the world happened?"

"Something's in there," whispered Jennifer, round-eyed. "Something awful."

"A burglar?" Dorothy gasped. "Or—?"

"Worse than that," chattered Jennifer Jones. "A mouse!" THE END

"Oh deor, I see we re going to be Gene Autry for the next couple of weeks."

I GOT MY MAN

(Continued from page 24)

catastrophe, so everyone came up clucking and exclaiming. Among the voices I heard that of John Lindsay.

Later that evening, he and I had ourselves to ourselves. He said—finally—"Could you possibly go out with me sometime?"

"We-el," I said, "I'm a pretty busy girl, but—we-el, sometime, maybe. How about tomorrow night?"

(Later I was to learn it had taken him two years to get up enough "courage" to ask me for a date!)

Since I had a radio show scheduled at National Broadcasting the next night, we planned for him to pick me up there. Right on the dot of nine, I met him and we entered his car. I expected him to ask where I'd like to go, but instead he said apologetically, "Do you mind very much if we stop by a job I'm doing? I have to check on something."

So down Vine Street we went to Melrose where Vine becomes Rossmore, a street of lovely apartments and exclusive hotels. Then I found myself stumbling among steel girders, cement-mixers and all the other equipment necessary to a hotel under construction! Me, with my broken arm in a cast! A veritable clinging vine, I wandered around with him, listening to him explain what the hotel was going to be like, why he had done this, why he had done that, and where he had had to make "compromises." I learned during the course of that little jaunt that he'd had his own business as an architect for two years now, and before that had designed sets at MGM.

After he was satisfied that the nails, or whatever the heck it was, had been delivered safe and sound for next day's work, we went to the Gala for awhile.

music and soft lights . . .

The Gala is a small café on the Sunset Strip with soft lights and the most terrific music in the world. Here I was on home ground. They were playing some of the music from On the Town. I said—rather condescendingly, I'm afraid—"Do you know the lyrics of 'Lucky To Be Me'?" You see, I knew every word.

And he knew not only the lyrics to that song, but all the others in the show as well! During the next hour, it turned out his knowledge of lyrics in general was practically encyclopedic.

From there we went to the Mocambo. Johnny cut my meat for me and all but fed me. My broken arm, remember. Nor could we dance because of that injured wing. So we talked and talked and talked. And very pleasant it was, too.

I found out that he prefers modern architecture, although he does design some modernized period structures. We discovered we both like ballet—which pleased me particularly, because so few men I've met have any real appreciation of it. I learned that he's terribly interested in modern art, that we both like Shakespeare and Thomas Wolfe . . . that we're both crazy about fireplaces . . . that we think Fred Allen is the funniest man alive . . . that we both love the theater. . . .

Then came the blow. It developed that he has to be practically dragged to the movies—to any movie! And all this time I'd been under the delusion that Mr. Lindsay was sort of fascinated by my dramatic talent. It had been my album of piano records that had caught his fancy—and the only movie he'd seen me in was Ruthless!

At last, we simply had to leave before

Fashion Parade

Junior SIZES
9-11-13
15-17

Regular SIZES
10-12-14
16-18-20

Large SIZES
38-40-42
44-46-48

7. Symphony ☆ Gay as a song, this lush Rayon Gabardine featuring today's newest moulded shoulders. Sleeves are full and easy . . . accented with bands of flashing color . . . buttons are self covered. Colors: Winter White, Kelly, Aqua, Beige, Gray, Black . . . all with contrasting trim. 10.98

5. 2-Piece Beauty ☆ You'll steal the scene in this beauty with the new back interest. Fine Rayon Gabardine with contrasting color Faile collar and covered buttons. Pencil slim skirt with side slits and zipper closing. Colors: Black, Kelly, Aqua, Winter White, Beige, Gray. 12.98

6. Sharp as a Dart ☆ Features a theme of contrasting saddle-stitched darts for trim—chorused by the smart cuffs and new long smooth look. Exquisitely tailored in Rayon Gabardine. You'll be delighted at how expensive it looks. Colors: Winter White, Kelly, Aqua, Beige, Gray, Black. 10.98

SEND NO MONEY ☆ WE SEND ON APPROVAL

BONNIE GAYE, Inc., Dept. 305
1051 South LaBrea, Los Angeles 35, California

Please send me the following dresses. I'll pay postman the total amount indicated plus C. O. D. postage with the understanding I may return any or all the dresses in 10 days for full refund if not satisfied.

STYLE	SIZE	1st COLOR CHOICE	2nd COLOR CHOICE	PRICE
7				10.98
5				12.98
6				10.98

Name

Address

City Zone State

we were closed up in the joint. Once again came the great care in getting me into the car and then out of it at the door of my apartment.

There it was that Johnny made what I call a really classic remark. He said: "If you ever want to go to a concert or a play sometime, call me."

I laughed gaily, but mentally my eyebrows shot up to there. I said to myself, "Well, Lynn, you've gone over with him like a lead balloon."

But in the days that followed, flowers and telephone calls came from him. I went out with him, but my casual dates with others continued. Then Johnny began to drop by every day to suggest if I didn't have a date, maybe I'd go out with him.

Then, evidently, he began to notice the flowers which occasionally adorned my apartment from other men whom I dated. For one day he sent me this huge bouquet of flowers with a note which read, "Anything he can do, I can do better." Other men continued to send flowers and each day Johnny's bouquet grew larger and larger, each with that same note.

I had to borrow vases from my mother, my tenants and almost any casual passerby. When my apartment began to look like a florist's shop at Easter, there didn't seem to be anything else to do but go steady. After all, a girl shouldn't smother to death!

All this may sound as if it took a long time happening. Actually, it was only a month after I met him that it just didn't seem logical that we should have dates with others.

parental approval . . .

When my parents met him, they adored him at the drop of a smile. Then he confessed to my mother that he'd talked to her by telephone two years before. While you may have read something of that elsewhere, you don't know the whole story.

Determined to meet me, he'd somehow wangled my telephone number. So then he telephoned the house. When mother answered, he said, "Mrs. Lynn (he knew so little about me that he didn't realize Lynn is my professional name), through some error, a letter for your daughter was sent to my address. If you care to give me your address, I'll be glad to forward it." Mother fell for this diabolical scheme and, with the address at last, Johnny got one of his friends to drive with him through Viewpark where we lived then. The streets wind around so, it's easy to get lost. After a few bad guesses, they located our house.

When they arrived, the friend asked, "What are you going to do now?"

"I'll be darned if I know," Johnny replied—and drove away without doing anything!

When he told me about it, I said, "Oh, Johnny! Why didn't you just come to the door? Then we wouldn't have wasted two whole years!"

Seriously I can't regret these past two two years. I know that during them I've grown up a lot. I've learned to hang up my clothes myself, to shop more wisely, to attend to the details of a home myself. I'm much better prepared for marriage.

I'm terribly fond of Johnny's grandparents (they're his family, since both his parents are dead). They're the youngest-seeming grandparents I've ever met. His grandmother is lovely and charming. His grandfather is a handsome, older edition of Johnny. We see a lot of them. We went with them to the annual picnic of former residents of their old home, Winona, Minnesota, and had a wonderful time. I know Johnny had learned as much of the ways of happiness, consideration and solid character from them as from anyone he'll ever know. They're a shining example for any young couple planning marriage.

Johnny's an awfully thoughtful person. There was the time he brought my mother, as well as me, a present on my birthday. And there are the times he brings me presents for no particular occasion at all. And he's so considerate of me when I come home from the studio, harassed and nervous—as all performers are at times. And if I'm an hour late for an appointment with him, he understands it's because some production problem made the delay unavoidable.

After the engagement, our evenings were full of plans—as are those of all young couples talking their way toward marriage. Thursday nights, Johnny was always late, because those nights he attends classes in Advanced Structural Engineering. Although he's a graduate of the University of Southern California and a licensed architect doing very well, he'll continue to study all his life, I'm sure. (And that's fine with me. I'm sure I'll never stop studying to improve myself!)

On a recent Sunday, we planned to go to Palm Springs—and he came by to cook breakfast for me before we went. He's a wonderful cook. He chopped up all kinds of good things, put them in a fluffy omelet—and then we really breakfasted!

a gardner of beauty . . .
ava . . .
on the march cover of modern screen
on sale
february 7

By this time, we were talking of when we could be married. I've always said that as soon as I announced my engagement, I'd want to be married soon after. Johnny agreed with me in this. But there were others we had to consider.

Johnny had a lot of clients who were concerned with getting their buildings finished. I was working in Hal Wallis' Bitter Victory—and working every day. I knew that wouldn't be finished before December 1. After due consultations with others—during which we assumed as casual an air as possible, so's not to let them know what we were up to—we arrived at a date which would give us a couple of weeks free for a honeymoon.

Having established the great day, we made the announcement almost right away. (Another wonderful example of Johnny's thoughtfulness is the fact that without telling me, he went alone and spent two hours with my parents the day the announcement was to be made.)

With the engagement announced, Johnny had his first real taste of what my career will demand of him. We'd discussed the probable problems seriously weeks before. He's proud of what I've accomplished so far—as I am of what he's done. He had no yen to keep me from continuing to act.

But as I say, with the announcement of our engagement, the demands set in. Johnny was kind of amused by it all, though he groaned, "Why does the studio have to call you every five minutes to ask you to come over for more pictures!"

Our first public appearance as an engaged couple was at the fabulous Kirkeby party at their beautiful Bel Air home. When the photographers swarmed down on our table, Johnny moved out of range, on the theory that they were interested only in the celebrities at the table. He was amazed to discover we were the magnet at the moment and that they were most definitely interested in him. He still hasn't recovered from the shock of the number of photographs we were asked to pose for!

wild calendar . . .

As this is written, my calendar is so crowded. In a few minutes, I must go for a fitting of my wedding gown. Although my trousseau is simple, it consists of everything from a jersey skirt and stole I bought at a department store for $22.95, to a rather extravagant blonde velvet bathing suit. (I couldn't resist it!) I just had to have Edith Head, who has designed all my important clothes since I was 13 years old, do my wedding gown and one really out-of-this-world evening gown. And of course I had to have my pal Don Loper, do my "going-away" suit.

Since my wedding gown isn't designed with the camera in mind, photos may not show some of the details I love. So let me tell you about the yummy outfit. Over the ankle-length white satin gown will be this foamy skirt made of four layers of white tulle. Down the back of the dress will be two white satin panels encrusted with lilies of the valley, bouvardia and white lilacs sprinkled with seed pearls. The cuffs on the push-up sleeves and the collar on the high neck will be encrusted with pearls. Elegant, hey? Rex, the hat designer, is using the same flowers—also sprinkled with pearls—for the bonnet, from which the white tulle veil will fall. Even my satin slippers will have—that's right—a few pearls on 'em.

Right now, I know Janie Withers Moss will be my bridesmaid. Johnny doesn't know yet who'll be his attendant. We don't know whether we'll have a double-ring ceremony or a single-ring one. We don't know exactly where or what time of day we're being married because it seems everyone in this marrying town has booked all the churches for weddings on that day. We know my parents are giving a wedding reception for us at Wynn Rocamora's house because their apartment is too small to accommodate the 200 guests we've invited. We know we're going to New York and on to Bermuda for a two-and-a-half-week honeymoon. But we don't know yet where we'll live when we return.

Yet, there's a lot we haven't settled definitely yet. But we do know we're going to be married in a church, with only a few guests present—because I've played a lot of scenes in my life and I don't want one for my wedding.

You who have written to congratulate me—will you please take another little moment and pray with me that Heaven will guard our happiness?

I love Johnny.

That's how I feel about this young man who drew up in a car beside my date and me, the night we happened to drop by to see Stu and Angie Martin.

P.S.—We've just found a church—Healy Chapel on the University of California Campus. I knew I'd get to college some day!

THE END

SHE CAN DO IT AGAIN

(Continued from page 39)

you should know now, the better to understand the little girl of yesterday and the beautiful Durbin in full bloom of womanhood today.

Look into the story of any famous woman and somewhere you'll find a man. There have been a number of men in Deanna's life. The first two came with her first big picture. They were Joe Pasternak, the producer, and Henry Koster, the director. They were signed by Universal at the same time the studio took young Deanna to its bosom following the dropping of her option by MGM. They created a world of music, gayety and laughter and set Deanna down in the middle of it to sing. The picture was Three Smart Girls. The song she sang was "Someone to Care for Me."

The picture was released and the world discovered the little girl, raised her on its shoulders and boosted her up on the pedestal of stardom in one sudden whoosh!

Her next was One Hundred Men And A Girl, and in that picture she sang "It's Raining Sunbeams." It really was. At 14, she was a star. At 14, she was paying off the mortgage at Universal, and sunbeams—especially in the bookkeeping department—were falling all around. (They say that in those days Universal had a portrait of Deanna directly over the big safe at the studio, and each time he put money in the safe, the treasurer of the studio bowed three times to the likeness of the little girl.)

riding high . . .

Deanna grew a little, filled out a little, became sweeter and more beautiful, then starred in Mad About Music, in which she sang "I Love To Whistle" while riding a bicycle through the scenes of the picture. She was riding high, and she was learning.

Her voice strengthened, her acting improved and she added to her vast following through the Pasternak-Koster pictures, That Certain Age, singing "Be A Good Scout," and Three Smart Girls Grow Up, in which one of her songs was "Invitation To The Dance." Deanna was at "That Certain Age" herself, for time had taken her into adolescence; she was growing up and receiving invitations to dances on her own. The world didn't know it at the time, because her publicity was always about the little girl who hardly knew boys existed, but she had met one—Vaughn Paul.

That boy was an assistant director on her pictures, and the invisible magnet of love was drawing them together. Her next picture was First Love. A provocative title to consider in the light of her dates with this boy of her choice.

Then Deanna bubbled her way through It's A Date, Spring Parade and Nice Girl. Her audiences bubbled with her, ecstatically, and the first two men in her life, Joe Pasternak and Henry Koster, stood back and smiled at the third man who had entered her life to become her first love—and, in the spring of 1941, her husband.

Then, suddenly, the music changed. A cloud drifted across the sun out Universal way. The Pasternak-Koster-Durbin combination was broken up. Joe Pasternak had been lured away by MGM and Deanna found herself loose on a sea of confusion.

Instead of being an easy flow of melody and song, the rhythm of her life tightened, became strained and frantic. A new, strange pall of uncertainty surrounded her. Universal's heads huddled together in

One Permanent Cost $15...the TONI only $2

If you aim to be "Queen of his Heart" this Valentine's Day . . . Toni can help you look the part! Because having a Toni Home Permanent is almost like having naturally-curly hair! Lovely-to-look-at waves and soft-to-touch curls! But before trying Toni you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?

Of course. Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Must I be clever with my hands?

Not at all. If you can roll your hair up on curlers, you can give yourself a Toni. It's so surprisingly easy that each month another two million women use Toni.

Why is TONI preferred by most women?

Because Toni Waving Lotion is not a harsh, hurry-up salon type. Instead it's marvelously mild. It just coaxes your hair into soft waves and curls. That's why your Toni wave looks more natural even on the first day.

How long will my TONI last?

Your lovely Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent . . . or your money back.

How much will I save with TONI?

The Toni Kit with re-usable plastic curlers costs $2. For a second Toni all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs just $1.

Which twin has the TONI?

Talented, teen-age Kathlene and Helene Crescente live in Ridgewood, N. J. Kathlene, the twin on the right, has the Toni. She says: "I never knew a permanent could look so natural right from the start!"

NOW over ~~1~~ 2 million women a month use Toni

LITTLE LULU

Times have changed—we play Drop the Kleenex!*

Little Lulu says: You know how kiddies drop their handkerchiefs and lose 'em! A box of Kleenex Tissues for school during colds saves good hankies—saves raw noses—saves washing!

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

EASY TO LEARN
MILLINERY
AT HOME

Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 182, Chicago 1, Ill.
Please send me your FREE catalog describing your training course in professional millinery.
Print
Name
Address

FAMOUS STARS' HOME ADDRESSES!

Now you can write direct to Movie Stars at their home addresses. Authentic directory of 300 famous movie stars' Home Addresses, only $1.00. Be the first to have it! Rush your $1.00 today.

HOLLYWOOD ADDRESSES CO.
Dept. D
P. O. Box 1102 Hollywood 28, Calif.

More than 40 new originals
Lily Baby Book of knit and crochet designs made with Lily cotton SOFTSPUN and anti-shrink wool BABY YARN.

BOOTEES SOAKERS
SWEATERS BLANKETS MITTENS BONNETS and ACCESSORIES

Beautifully illustrated, many in full colors, with complete directions for making.

LILY MILLS COMPANY, Dept. K, Shelby, N. C.
Gentlemen: I enclose 25c coin (no stamps, please). Send me your latest new Baby Book No. 1900 of Original Crochet and Knit Designs.
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY ZONE STATE
THIS OFFER GOOD ONLY IN U. S. A.

vain efforts to find a new brand of vehicle to fit their grown-up "golden girl."

They tried her out in It Started With Eve, and the very title had a portent foreign to the public's conception of a "darling Deanna." They tried her in The Amazing Mrs. Holliday, but you turned thumbs down at the box-office and the headaches at the studio increased as Deanna's heartaches drove her to divorce.

Officially, the record reads, "Deanna Durbin and Vaughn Paul, married April 18, 1941—divorced December 14, 1943." But records can be very cold. They don't tell the story, just the results.

It was while Vaughn and Deanna were married that Pasternak had turned loose the guiding reins on Deanna's pictures. Then the studio discovered that their star had temperament. But wasn't the temperament justified? Her pictures in the new theme failed to hold the audiences. She fought alone for better stories, the proper setting for a voice grown strong and mature, with perfect operatic timbre. She needed "someone to care" for her more than ever now. She needed the mature equivalent to the Pasternak production of Three Smart Girls and Mad About Music. She wasn't getting it, and she walked off the sets with her nose as high as her top notes on the scale. But her heart wasn't high—it was breaking.

The emotional strain was too great for the marriage. Vaughn Paul watched her on the set all day, knew all the things she was going through and could do nothing about it. Their evening conversations were a part of the same discouraging pattern.

The studio answered her temperamental outbursts with suspension and let her stew. Maybe they were justified, maybe they weren't. But when it destroyed her marriage, I had every sympathy for Deanna.

a sentimental memory . . .

Maybe that was sentiment on my part. I still remembered the little girl who had made everybody happy with her songs . . . and had paid off the studio mortgage.

But about the time she divorced Vaughn Paul, the studio lifted her suspension and she went back to work. Was there a connection between the two? Hollywood whispered that one trouble lay in the fact that Vaughn had wanted to direct her pictures himself. But there are always a lot of ugly rumors in Hollywood. For a nice town, it still harbors its share of viciousness.

When she went back to work, they gave her a new producer named Felix Jackson. His was the job of effecting the change from Deanna-the-girl to Deanna-the-grownup in six easy productions, wooing the audience into going along with her to the new status.

In two short years, Jackson made the change—but wooing the audience was another thing. His first move was toward comedy. He cast Deanna opposite Franchot Tone in His Butler's Sister. It was a good picture and it got a good hand all around.

Everybody, including Jackson, took a deep breath and tried again.

They knew it was an uphill climb, but Deanna was back in the harness, working like a Trojan, and Jackson was also deserving A for Effort.

Her next was Christmas Holiday. The sophisticated Deanna, whom audiences met in Christmas Holiday, was a rash and shocking departure from the girl they knew . . . and wanted. Someone had turned their sweet-voiced angel into a sultry woman of the world—and they didn't like it. . . .

If you've ever tried to walk in the sand of a desert, you'll have a fair idea of Deanna's trials of these last few years. She is a sincere, hard-working girl who gives every ounce of concentration to her chosen profession, and every ounce of energy to each performance. To give to this degree, month in and month out, striving to reach a pinnacle of success she has once known, yet gaining only meager results is a heartbreaking strain.

But through it all, the fourth man in her life was fighting at her side. Jackson was an older man, 20 years older, but work brought them together and, for a second time, love came to Deanna. It was a mature love, born of a mutual admiration between them. About the time she was making Because Of Him, the preacher tied the knot.

The next song symbolic of her life was "It's Dream Time" in the picture I'll Be Yours. It was the last picture which Felix Jackson produced starring his bride.

Can two careers survive in one home? You've heard the question asked a million times, and you have your own examples, both in and out of Hollywood, to prove that they can.

Things went well in the Jackson household through the birth of Deanna's baby daughter, Jessica Louise, which kept Deanna away from the studio for a while.

But when she went back to work again, there was a new producer on her pictures. The first song she had to sing was "Happy Go Lucky and Free"—but she wasn't. The picture in which that song occurred was Something In The Wind—and there was.

Were those titles ominous? Or was it just coincidental that these titles came along about the time Deanna and Felix Jackson came to the parting of the ways?

Again she had met and married a man with whom she worked at the studio. Again there had been trouble with her pictures, confusion in her life, both at work and at home. Now, once more, a man was leaving her life.

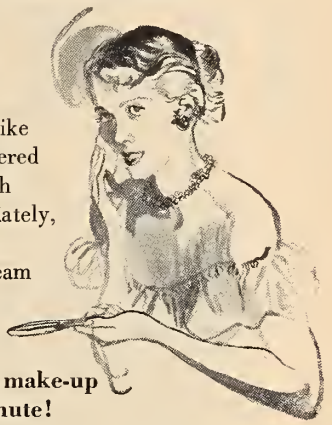
gone forever? . . .

Leaving it? Well, not quite. Jackson and Deanna have separated. (At this writing.) He is in New York writing a play which he hopes to produce. There has been no divorce, and some say that there won't be, that they'll reconcile. I hope such will be the case with Felix and Deanna.

The fifth man in Deanna's life came along to the accompaniment of another song, "Carousel In The Park," from the screen version of the Broadway musical, Up In Central Park. He was Vincent Price.

The song about the Carousel certainly fitted Deanna about the time she went into that picture. She was on a "merry-go-round" (which is another term for Carousel), and no doubt about it.

While a nurse took care of little Jessica, Deanna was seen here and there with Vincent Price. She laughed when asked if it was romance. He was just her leading man in the picture they were making. She said she got tired of sitting home alone, he got tired of sitting home alone, so they went out and sat together, and danced and dined together, and had a lot of fun together, as anyone could plainly see, if they were watching. And what's wrong with that?



There have been other men. But Deanna has taken none of them seriously.

However, what she takes very seriously indeed, is the fact that as yet, with all her years of striving, she has been unable to get back up on top of the heap.

When she was an adolescent kid singing pretty songs in a beautiful voice, riding bicycles, swimming, sailing, and running carefree through her pictures, she was rated one of the 10 top money-makers in Hollywood. Now, even though she has twice the acting experience and all those extra years of daily voice training (she sticks to her lessons and practices every day), Deanna no longer has the box-office pull of her kid days. Her latest picture is

For the skin that doesn't like heavy foundation

Flatter and protect your skin with a gentler, more natural foundation cream! A light, greaseless base that holds powder marvelously . . . yet never lets your face feel "coated"!

A Sheerer Powder Base! Greaseless! No oily coating . . . No "made-up" look

This softer, greaseless powder base lets you look like yourself and feel like yourself! No greasy, smothered feeling! Before powdering, just smooth on a touch of Pond's Vanishing Cream. It disappears immediately, leaving only a protective, transparent film. Suits every skin tone. Best of all, Pond's Vanishing Cream takes powder beautifully and holds it!

Glamour Mask for before make-up "Re-styles" your face in 1-Minute!

When you want your complexion to look its radiant best, give it a delightful beauty pick-up with Pond's Vanishing Cream, smoothed on for a 1-Minute Mask. Just cover face, except eyes, with a lavish cloak of the cream. After one minute, tissue off clean. "Keratolytic" action of Pond's Vanishing Cream loosens clinging dirt and dead skin flakes. Dissolves them off! Your skin looks clearer, softer—even lighter. Make-up goes on smoothly, stays fresh all evening!

Miss Nancy du Pont says, "When I want to look perfect—that's the moment for a 1-Minute Mask! In one minute—my complexion looks fresher, brighter. Make-up goes on evenly—and stays!"

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

For The Love Of Mary—and it's laying a horrible egg at this moment.

Yes, Deanna's screen career is swiftly fading. And the reason is that no one has found the right combination since Joe Pasternak and Henry Koster put Deanna on top.

Well, those two did it before—and they could do it again! They know Deanna better than anyone else in the industry. They have the firm hands which could control Deanna's temperament. If given the chance, it's a cinch they could find that right combination again.

I recently asked Deanna if she had talked to Joe Pasternak about doing a picture with him.

"Oh, yes!" was her quick reply. "I see Joe quite often, and we've talked about it—but so far nothing has been done about it." Then she added—rather wistfully, I thought—"Frankly, I'd love doing a picture with Joe again. He's wonderful. . . ."

As she said that, with a dreamy quality in her throaty voice, I could see once again the little girl with the brown hair and blue eyes. I knew, then, that I was hoping in the right direction.

But Universal seems to be about to give up hope on Deanna. Her contract runs out in September of 1949. It's now common knowledge it probably won't be renewed.

italy in the spring . . .

Deanna is still full of plans. It's just been announced that she'll be going to Italy next spring to make a picture with Gosfredo Alessandrini, one of the top Italian directors. The story will concern an American girl studying grand opera. Some extraordinarily fine films have been coming out of Italy of late and perhaps Deanna's will be another. If so—well, this might be the lady's salvation.

And she's told friends she'd like to go to New York and star in a musical. That has worked for others; it might be the ticket for Deanna. Betty Grable went back to New York, took a leading role in Dubarry Was A Lady, and returned to Hollywood an entirely new sensation.

When I asked Deanna about going to Broadway, she said: "I haven't made up my mind about it. I'd like to do a show on Broadway, but I haven't read any scripts as yet. I would enjoy the contact with a live audience. I'm sure it would improve both my acting and singing technique. . . . But if I went to New York to do a musical, I'd first want a period of months to train for the stage—it's so different from the screen." (That's characteristic of Deanna. She works hard to reach the highest point of perfection.)

Maybe a Broadway musical would do great things for Deanna. Maybe the Italian film will put her once again in the top brackets of popularity. But to me, there's another solution for Deanna's problem:

I want to hear one particular song from Deanna to round out the list of songs whose titles have reflected her story. .

I want to walk onto a motion picture set of a big Technicolor production. There I want to see a tremendous musical in the making, with a huge orchestra at the back of the stage. Beside the camera, in the director's chair, I want to see the waving arms and hear the knife-like voice of Henry Koster. Standing just behind Koster's chair, I want to see alert-eyed Joe Pasternak, producer.

In the center of that tremendous stage, surrounded by a setting worthy of her talents, I want to see the charm, the grace and the natural beauty of Deanna Durbin.

As the cameras start grinding to Koster's shout of "this is a take!" I want to hear one beautiful voice, Deanna's voice, singing a song symbolic of this scene.

And the title of the song could only be—"We're Back Together Again." THE END

HOUSE OF THE ONE-EYED GIRAFFE

(Continued from page 51)

as Kelly's locomotive, stuck down the back, gently nudges you.

You admire the gorgeous hooked rugs which stretch their mellow reds and greens from wall to wall. Dolores tells you they were made by a family at Redondo Beach. She points out the Hope initials worked into the corners, and remarks that Kelly took his first steps on these rugs.

Dolores loves "good" things, but also things which can be changed and adapted to a growing family's needs. "With four youngsters, our needs change constantly," she says. "For instance, right now we're living all over the house. Our bedrooms are in utter confusion at the moment as we work out plans to move the children into one wing of the house. Bob and I will have the center part to entertain our friends, and the other side will be for Bob's offices."

Making a home for four youngsters when the man of the house is dashing off on cross-country tours every few weeks, and sometimes every few days, is a task Dolores takes in stride. The average person may think that living with funny-man Hope is one long series of laughs. Dolores knows differently. Living with Hope is wonderful, she agrees, but catching him on the run to discuss household problems, tearing off to the airport to say goodbye or to welcome him home, and at the same time keeping her household running with precision, is quite a chore.

Bob has three secretaries and an assistant. Dolores has a secretary. She has, in addition, a cook, houseman, upstairs maid, and children's nurse to supervise. There are house plans to be studied, and small knees to be bandaged, along with the settling of school problems. Mrs. Hope does all this with a calm born of long experience. She can now plan her dinner menu with Kelly on her knee, with Tony at her elbow talking on the telephone, and with Bob and his writers, discussing his radio show not five feet away. She manages just fine, but she plans a few changes.

"We're going to make a terrace outside the living room. At one end, part of the children's section, we're going to put in a tennis court—and at the other end, a swimming-pool."

But before she does a single thing to the living-room, Dolores will transform the small, formal music room into a larger playroom for the children. It will be part of the children's wing.

"Tony and Linda have to have a room of their own to entertain their school friends. Bob and I believe that they can't start too young in learning to assume the responsibilities of host and hostess. Learning to mix with others is so important. We don't want them to think they're 'different' or 'special' because their father is a movie star. Yes, that problem has come up. For instance, at school the other day, Tony and Linda were asked for their autographs. When they came home and asked me what they should do about these requests, I suggested that they tell their friends: 'Our Daddy is the important one. If you want his autograph, we'll get it for you. But there's no real reason for you to want ours, is there?'

"The two older children are normal, bright-eyed kids who attend St. Charles School. They get an allowance of a dollar a week, and are expected to put half of that in the collection plate on Sundays. They have chores to do about the house, and they practice their piano and French lessons two afternoons a week.

salesman in the family . . .

"Tony has started his first business venture," Dolores confides. "He's selling subscriptions to his school paper as part of a drive his school is putting on. I let him have my personal telephone list, and he's very serious about calling my friends and putting on a sales campaign. Yesterday he called a wealthy widow, and told her with great earnestness that if she would only take a subscription from him she could save herself a whole dollar a year. Believe it or not, he sold her!"

But sometimes it doesn't quite work out that way. Tony called up his former nurse, a French girl whose English is still very shaky, and after inquiring about her health, he launched into his sales talk with a build-up about the Cleveland Indians. Did she know what the Indians were doing? Excited squawks from the other end of the line told him that Mam'zelle had no interest in wild Indians. Tony's explanation fell on deaf ears, and that was one occasion when he had "no sale."

Cozy spots for family chats abound in the Hope home. There's the playroom, its shelves lined with Bob's trophies and souvenirs, where Tony and his Dad can shoot a little pool. There's the music room with its deep grey carpet and softly-shaded lamps. There's the couch and wing chairs grouped about the television set in the living-room. But best of all, the Hopes like to gather in "the nook," located to the right of the living-room. Here, under a pastel portrait of Linda and Tony with "Red Son," their first dog, there's a strawberry-pink couch with room for the entire family. If things get a little crowded, and Bob's arms are too full of Kelly and Nora to encompass Tony, the subscription salesman will settle for the top of the coffee table. From there, Tony figures, you get a better view of your audience. A commanding position from which to say:

"Dad, when are you coming over to school again? I told the fellows in my grade that maybe you'd come next week."

One night, Linda, smoothing her tiny sister's dark curls, came out with the prize remark of the evening.

(Continued on page 93)

"You find our stubs, Henry—I'll get the Manager."

"DULL" DAYS
CAN BE GAY DAYS

MIDOL

RELIEVES FUNCTIONAL
PERIODIC PAIN
CRAMPS-HEADACHE-"BLUES"

MIDOL
RELIEVES CRAMPS
EASES HEADACHE
CHASES "BLUES"

MOTHERS: 24-page book, "What Women Want to Know", explains menstruation. Sent Free in plain wrapper. Write: Room 2603, Dept. C29, 1450 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.

half pound $1
more shampoo . . .
more quality for the money
(REG. LARGE SIZE, 60¢)

Helene Curtis
creme shampoo

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

rich in emulsified
lanolin

Who knows what shampoo is best? Your beautician! Use this 2-to-1 favorite of professional beauticians. Leaves hair misty-soft, dazzling clean, manageable, glowing. Billows of foam instantly even in hard water. No soap film! Rich emulsified Lanolin prevents drying. America's greatest value.

THE ONLY CREME SHAMPOO USED BY MORE THAN 100,000 BEAUTICIANS

Don't sit on your hands!

Here is a quick beauty treatment for winter-roughened hands when an unexpected date catches up with you

BY CAROL CARTER,
BEAUTY EDITOR

Barbara Lawrence, 20th Century-Fox starlet, keeps hands beautiful with regular daily attention.

■ Here you are, all dressed up for a party—fresh wave, slick makeup job, a smart new dress and terrific shoes. Your hands, you notice with dismay, look like Cinderella's right after she'd finished carrying out the ashes. Suddenly, you resolve you'll never let them get in such a bedraggled state again. But what, oh, what do you do for immediate improvement?

First, give them a very careful soaking in warm, soapy water for five minutes and go after them with a nail brush—unless, of course, they are painfully chapped. Dry them carefully. Now work lots of rich hand cream into your hands, massaging well. Use a movement as though you were working a tight pair of gloves down over your fingers. In some of the more deluxe beauty shops they warm your hands at this point. You can do the same thing easily enough. Slip your hands into some light-weight old cotton gloves, then into rubber gloves and hold them under water that is hot enough to warm your hands thoroughly. Keep them there 8 or 10 minutes.

Nail-brush your finger-tips so you can apply polish. A rich red shade, if it goes with the clothes you are wearing, will whiten your hands. When you're sure you've finished with the soap-and-water part of your grooming and dressing, flatter your hands with a film of foundation cream.

Holding your hands up in the air for a few minutes is an old trick, so if your hands are beginning to look too rosy in the midst of the festivities, slip away to check your makeup and take time out to hold your hands aloft until they become smooth and white.

Of course, the smart thing is to keep them looking lovely every day in the winter. Never go out without warm gloves. Always dry your hands carefully. Use rubber gloves for dish-washing and household cleaning jobs. Use hand lotion or cream regularly. Not extravagant slathers days apart when you happen to think of it, but just a few drops after any prolonged wetting of your hands.

We know that keeping your hands good-looking during cold weather is a problem, but remember how they show up against the black and dark-browns of the winter wardrobe and you'll realize it's worth the effort.

(Continued from page 91)

"Daddy, when are you going to have Gregory Peck on your program? When is he going to say, 'What's Bob Hope got that I haven't got?' You say that about him every week, and I think it would be a good gag if he came and said it about you."

Bob, jumping to his feet with a baby under each arm, said: "That's a swell idea, we'll use it!" And he dashed off in search of Charlie Cooley, his assistant, to get it written in right away.

Bob and Dolores decided to remodel the house while he was still working on The Paleface at Paramount. They have decided that one room will remain intact through the tearing-down process, and that is the Pennsylvania Dutch breakfast room. Formerly a butler's pantry, the room is aglow with golden brown panelling, with cupboards scrolled and painted with floral designs. The children have their meals here, with the exception of special occasions when they dine formally in the dining room. When this happens, two pink-and-blue high chairs, are brought into use for the little ones.

Dolores is filled with plans for her brood. Notre Dame or Loyola University for Tony . . . Marymount Finishing School for Linda. And the babies? "I haven't thought much about the future for Kelly and Nora. I hope they'll stay little for quite a while yet." She lifts olive-skinned Nora from her lap with one deft movement, as she reaches for Kelly. He has just planted his woolly deer on the Welsh dresser. Firmly, Dolores hands it back to him.

the young rebel . . .

Kelly is the rebel of the brood. He got his hands slapped the other day for hurling his toys from the sun-deck above the garage after he'd been warned three times not to do so. Dolores punished him lightly, evoking indignant wails from the culprit, and causing tiny Nora to rush forward and fling her arms protectingly about her brother. These babies, not yet three, have a fanatic devotion for each other.

The older childen are firm friends, too. They have plenty of play time together, though they're expected to study for certain set hours, and to take care of their own rooms. Before they leave for school each morning, they make their beds, and tidy their clothes closets. The rooms are cleaned thoroughly once a week, by the maid, but for the rest of the time, the children are responsible for keeping everything in apple-pie order.

Bob Hope is the perfect father. Pandemonium breaks loose nightly when the master of the house comes home after his day's toil. Quite often his toil comes with him. One evening he burst through the doorway flanked by two writers and three secretaries. Tony put down his truck and made a flying tackle for Bob's knees. Linda grabbed his arm. Nora and Kelly fastened like clams around his ankles.

"Hello, dear," said Bob, over their heads, to Dolores. "Anything new, today?"

"Nothing much," answered Mrs. Hope brightly. "Just that the carpenters are here, and would like a few words with you before they knock out the bedroom walls. And I want you to move the babies' beds into our room and, oh, yes—there's somebody on the phone calling you from New York—what would you like to do first?"

Nora settled that problem. She held up a droopy doll, greyish in color. Its head hung sideways, and stuffing oozed from its neck.

"Daddy fix it?" she asked hopefully.

So he waved all other business aside while he sat on the stairway to cope with his younger daughter's pressing problem. First and foremost, Bob's a father.

THE END

METROPOLITAN OPERA STAR RISË STEVENS SAYS:

"for dream hands, Cream your hands"

"I give my hands the same beauty care I give my face—I CREAM them! That's why it's Pacquins for me," says Risë Stevens

Try her method for just 3 days...a 12-second massage with non-sticky, non-greasy

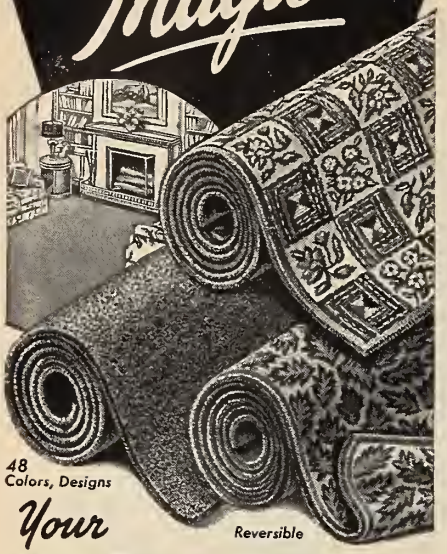
Pacquins Hand Cream

...morning...night...whenever your skin needs softening

● Try this Pacquins hand massage... morning... night... any time your hands need soothing, softening. Your own lovelier hands will tell you why Pacquins is the favorite of so many stars.

If hands are chapped, roughened, or dry, if housework leaves your hands scrubugly, smooth them . . . soothe them . . . with Pacquins. There's no waste, no spilling . . . no greasy after-film.

Keep that jar of Pacquins within easy reach. For truly dream hands . . . follow opera star Risë Stevens's advice: CREAM them regularly with Pacquins.



MARION PUNCH, R. N., says: "Pacquins Hand Cream is a 'must' on my chart! With the dozens of scrubbings my hands submit to every day, nothing less cherishing than Pacquins could keep them socially acceptable—soft, smooth, lovely. Pacquins was originally formulated for doctors and nurses."

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins are:
GLADYS SWARTHOUT • GERTRUDE LAWRENCE
LYNN FONTANNE • VERA ZORINA • JOAN BENNETT

ON SALE AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS IN U. S. AND CANADA

Olson Rug "Magic"

Your Old Rugs, Clothing

Save You up to ½

It's All So Easy! Write today for big Free Olson Rug Catalog (and Decorating Guide) that tells how your materials are picked up at your door and shipped at our expense to the Olson Rug Factory, where . . .

By the Olson Process we sterilize, shred, merge materials of all kinds—reclaim valuable wools, etc., then bleach, picker, card, spin, redye and weave deep-textured in sizes for all needs up to 16 ft. seamless, any length, in:

New Reversible BROADLOOM RUGS

Solid Colors — Florals
Two-tones — Ovals
Tweeds — Leaf
Early American, Oriental Designs

FACTORY TO YOU

Our 75th Year!

We guarantee to please, or pay for your material. Over 2 million customers. We do not sell thru stores or agents.

Write today for the beautiful 40 page Olson Book of rugs, model rooms and decorating hints.

Chicago New York S. Frisco

FREE Catalog in Colors

MAIL COUPON or 1¢ POSTAL to OLSON RUG CO., N-35, Chicago 41, Ill.

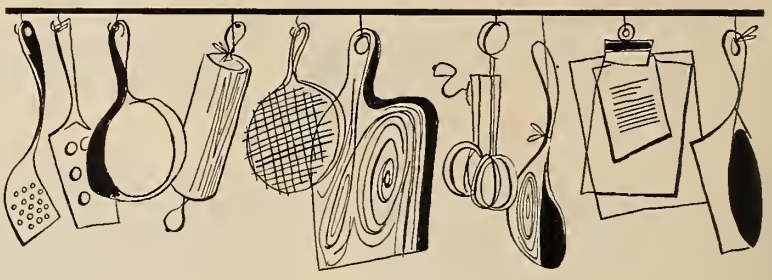
Please mail the Olson Catalog FREE to:



NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

TOWN ..... STATE .....

© ORC 1948

fan fare

The boys missed a lot when Jean Peters asked them to stay home (see "Something Not For The Boys" on page 34). MODERN SCREEN's Reba and Bonnie Churchill carried their best lounging togs over to Jean's house and stayed to nibble on . . .

franks in blanks

■ Split frankfurter roll lengthwise and lay frankfurter on it. Top with a slice of cheese and bacon and place under broiler until well-browned. Of course, for a terrific effect you can add condiments such as catsup, mustard, relish, minced onion or hot sauce. This was favorite snack at Jean Peters' party.

apples on a stick (can be served cold if desired)

1 cup mild-flavored molasses
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon cider vinegar
⅓ teaspoon salt
¼ cup water
2 tablespoons butter
12 small apples

■ Combine molasses, sugar, vinegar, salt and water. Cook slowly, stirring constantly to 270° F. (or when a small quantity dropped into cold water forms a hard ball). Remove from heat; add butter. Dip apples into syrup, covering entire surface. Place on waxed paper to cool. Insert wooden stick for holder.

pop corn balls

1¼ cups molasses
⅔ cup corn syrup
1 tablespoon butter or fortified margarine
⅛ teaspoon baking soda
4 quarts corn, slightly salted
½ cup chopped peanuts, raisins or semi-sweet chocolate, optional

■ Cook together molasses, corn syrup and shortening until small amount, when dropped in cold water, becomes brittle. Stir in soda and pour over popped corn until each piece is coated. Add peanuts, raisins or semi-sweet chocolate bits, if desired. Shape into balls. Makes about 14 large balls.

hot chocolate (can be served cold if desired)

1 tablespoon ground chocolate (unsweetened)
A dash of salt, allspice, cinnamon and nutmeg
2 teaspoons sugar
¾ cup milk
1 egg

■ Mix chocolate, sugar, salt and all spices with a little milk. (Enough milk to make a smooth paste). Stir in remaining milk, add egg, and beat thoroughly and serve.
For hot chocolate, heat milk.

cocoa whipped cream

2 tablespoons cocoa
2 tablespoons sugar
⅛ tablespoon salt
1 cup heavy cream

■ Mix together cocoa, sugar, and salt. Add cream gradually, stirring to keep mixture smooth. Chill one hour, then whip with rotary egg beater until mixture is stiff. Makes about two cups—delicious to top hot chocolate drinks.

MEXICAN ESCAPADE

(Continued from page 47)

vacationers were to defeat the panting newspapermen at every turn throughout their stay in Mexico City.

(A fellow passenger reported that Ali had hidden in the men's room of the plane until after the takeoff in Los Angeles, to avoid photographers, and that he and Rita had sat side by side throughout most of the trip and were "very lovey-dovey.")

While the skirmish was going on at the airport, I had been standing in the lobby of the big new Hotel Del Prado in downtown Mexico City, where Rita had reserved accommodations for "one suite and two single rooms." With me was Frank Tremaine, manager of the Mexico City bureau of the United Press. We figured, at 9:45 A.M., that Rita and Ali would be showing up any minute. We waited. And waited. When they didn't come, we began to get suspicious. Then the truth dawned on us.

Rita had made reservations at the Del Prado in order to send the press to that hotel while she and her Prince pulled an "incognito" gag and quietly established themselves in another hotel! The Prince, Rita, and her "retinue" (which included her secretary, Miss Shifra Haran) were comfortably ensconced at the other hotel before anybody could snap a picture or attempt an interview.

Naturally, the press tried to reach them by telephone. "Miss Hayworth is sleeping and cannot be disturbed," was the answer the management gave to all calls up until 3 P.M. when Miss Haran finally started answering the 'phone.

the vigil . . .

Reporters and photographers started camping out in the lobby of Rita's hotel. They had a long wait because the couple didn't come out. The manager blandly stated that "Ali Khan is not registered."

About four o'clock on Monday afternoon, a non-employee of the hotel was sauntering along the fourth floor corridor and saw porters carrying additional furniture into Suite 401. Standing in the doorway, directing the moving, was a beautiful blonde in a sky-blue housecoat.

This man asked Miss Hayworth (whom he recognized), "Can you tell me something about your future plans?"

Rita blinked and snapped, "No, no, I can't!"—and slammed the door in his face. She seemed disconcerted by this unexpected contretemps. After that, there was one such situation after another, each more improbable than the last. . . .

Monday night, Nov. 1—Rita and Prince Ali dined in the night club of their hotel. (No photos—no interviews!)

Tuesday night, Nov. 2—Rita and Ali danced cheek-to-cheek and drank champagne in Victor Sanchez' night club, the Intime. (No photos—no interviews!)

Wednesday, Nov. 3—Just before noon, Rita sneaked out of the hotel by way of the restaurant (which faces one street) and Prince Ali by way of the flower shop (which faces another street). Rita entered a dark red limousine and was whisked away into the traffic. Prince Ali stepped into a black limousine which awaited him at the curb outside the flower shop. He also was whisked away.

Three blocks from the starting point, Prince Ali's limousine halted alongside Rita's, he got out of his car, entered hers, and kissed her warmly on the cheek. Then they laughed gaily and ordered the chauffeur to drive them to "the Pyramids" (the famous Aztec "Pyramid of the Sun" and "Pyramid of the Moon" at San Juan de

Tests with Swift's Strained Meats show meat-fed babies in better physical condition

Actual test feedings show babies thrive on Swift's Strained Meats—specially prepared for earlier meat feeding.* Meat-fed babies were in better physical condition, more satisfied than babies who received no meat! The iron in Swift's Strained Meats helped prevent anemia—so common in early infancy.

100% meat—Swift's Strained Meats provide lots of complete, high-quality proteins. Complete, because meat proteins supply all of the essential body-builders (amino acids). And baby must get all of them at the same time for the best and sturdiest growth. Meat gives baby natural B vitamins and iron to build good red blood. Six kinds: beef, lamb, pork, veal, liver, heart—help baby acquire a taste for variety, form sound eating habits. Ready to heat and serve!

*YOUR DOCTOR—is best qualified to say how early your baby should start Swift's Strained Meats—ask him.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

All nutritional statements made in this advertisement are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

P.S. (PLENTY SPECIAL) DICED MEATS for—

CREEPERS (just learning to chew)

TODDLERS (to tempt finicky appetites)

KINDERGARTENERS— (so nourishing! Six varieties)

In fact--whole families are wild about delicious →

SWIFT... foremost name in meats

...first with 100% Meats for Babies

SWIFT & COMPANY, CHICAGO 9, ILLINOIS

Teotihuacan, located about a half-hour's drive from Mexico City).

Wednesday night, Nov. 3—Rita and Ali made no public appearance.

Thursday night, Nov. 4—While Rita and Ali were enjoying the intimate, low-lighted atmosphere of the Intime, their hotel was crawling with photographers. Fourteen of them prowled the lobby, the bar, and the restaurant, and covered every entrance and exit of the hotel. This time, they vowed, they'd get a picture of the elusive twosome.

Meantime, at the Intime, only one photographer was on the snoop. Juan Guzmán, known locally as "the lens boy who never misses," had the field to himself. He focused—and was seized and tossed out of the place by strong-arm experts and threatened with the "personal protection" law—which I'll tell you about in a minute—if he succeeded in getting a picture of Rita and her Prince together.

"Why?" yelled Guzmán, backed by the towering indignation of his colleagues. "What's this secrecy all about? They've been photographed together all over Europe. Why not in Mexico?"

No answer was forthcoming. Later, nobody answered the telephone at Rita's apartment and Ali was "not available."

personal protection . . .

Now I'll tell you about Mexico City's six-months-old "personal protection law." Up until six months ago, a number of shady characters, armed with cameras, roamed freely among the tables in Mexico City's swankiest restaurants, bars and night clubs, snapping pictures at will. The "take" from these pictures was lush. These "photographers," out for blackmail, specialized in pictures of married men (or women) who'd gone out for an evening of fun with companions not their legal mates. The price for "silence," plus the negative, was high. The lens lizards rolled in pesos. Then, Fernando Casas Alemán, Governor of the Distrito Federal (Federal District—like our District of Columbia) and cousin of President Miguel Alemán, issued a decree barring the taking of any and all pictures which were not sanctioned by those to be photographed. Knowing this, Rita and Ali hid behind this decree in perfect security.

"But," said the legitimate press photographers, comforting each other's injured feelings, "this decree holds only in the Distrito Federal! Wait until they go to Acapulco!"

Then, under pressure from the newspapers, the manager of Rita's hotel gave in and somehow persuaded Rita to hold a press conference. He called the reporters and photographers to his private office at four o'clock Friday afternoon. Expecting to catch Rita and Ali together "under correct conditions"—with freedom to fire questions and flash bulbs—the reporters were all very excited.

There was a half-hour wait. Finally, Rita came in—alone!

As she sat nervously answering questions—some of them, anyhow—Rita seemed very tired, with dark circles under her beautiful eyes. She wore a simple, medium-length, unadorned black dress and skyscraper-heeled black suede shoes. Her only jewelry was an oval-shaped gold medallion of Mexico's patron saint, the Virgin of Guadalupe, rimmed with 11 sizable diamonds.

"May I ask who gave you the medallion?" one reporter inquired.

"Yes," replied Rita with a smile. "My agent, Johnny Hyde."

Disappointment could actually be felt in the room. Here was the "Lady of the Royal Romance" without her Prince, not wearing even one of the fabled diamonds, rubies, emeralds or sapphires of Prince Ali's vast collection! This, thought the romantic press gang, was a definite letdown.

To the direct question, "Are you planning to marry Prince Ali Khan when your divorce from Orson Welles is final on November 10th?" Rita replied, "That is my personal life and I have no statement to make."

From Hollywood, it had been reported that Rita and the Prince would be aboard the Pan-American plane bound for Miami on November 14th, but Rita wouldn't talk of her plans—or say anything whatsoever that would give a line on her and Ali Khan.

That night, after the press conference, Rita and Ali enjoyed a quiet dinner with wines at the fashionable Ambassadeurs restaurant on the Paseo de la Reforma, completely immune from the press boys, who didn't know where they were. For three hours, the two held hands and exchanged soft glances oblivious of the other diners—not one of whom had thought of bringing a camera.

On Saturday night, Rita, elegantly and formally gowned and accompanied by her Prince in a faultlessly-tailored dark gray suit, entered the dining room of their hotel. Up popped photographer Victor de Palma, an old friend of Rita's. They exchanged saludos and Vic focused his camera. He flashed. He had his picture—the first and only picture obtained of Rita and Ali together in Mexico City.

Nobody said a word. Prince Ali winked one eye—that was all. Out of nowhere appeared two detectives who grabbed Vic's camera, opened it, exposed the film to the glare of a bright table lamp, and handed the camera back to Vic.

"The gentleman doesn't want his picture taken," they told De Palma in the understatement of the year.

Early the next morning I caught several of Mexico's top photographers readying their cameras at the biggest bullring in the world, the Plaza Mexico—where Rita and Ali just had to be together! The photographers had checked the number of the tickets which Rita had personally ordered and paid for. This time they wouldn't miss—"with these telescopic lenses she won't even see us!"

They primed their cameras, crossed their fingers, and waited for the hands of their watches to point to 4 p.m.—the hour of the desfile de matadores (opening parade) of the Fiesta Brava.

Came the hour. The matadores, picadores and ayudantes, in glittering gold-and-silver-embroidered trappings, filed into the gigantic Plaza to the tune of the spine-thrilling music of "La Virgen de la Macarena." With field glasses, the press boys trained their eyes on the box in which Rita and Ali were due to be seated.

In those seats were two bellboys from the hotel!

the scene shifts . . .

Checking the airport, the newshounds' worst fears were realized. Rita and Prince Ali had left for Acapulco, aboard a private plane, at 10:30 that morning.

Now let's go back two years or so to the summer of 1946. Rita was then still married to Orson Welles and they and their Lady From Shanghai company were on location in Acapulco, living in a hilltop hotel overlooking blue Acapulco Bay.

Errol Flynn was in Acapulco, having put in at the tropical port en route to Europe aboard his yacht, Zaca. Errol's presence in Acapulco was perfectly timed, since Welles needed a yacht for scenes for his picture. He made a deal with Flynn to rent the Zaca. And so Flynn and his crew remained.

Now, the Zaca's first mate was the blond Swiss, Teddy Stauffer, erstwhile manager of Mexico City's Casanova night club (now closed), a musician-of-sorts and an intimate of the international set. He had shipped on as a crew member of the Zaca on Flynn's promise to take him to Europe—his first chance to visit Rome since the end of the war.

Orson and Rita were fighting constantly all through the filming of Lady From Shanghai. Orson was going out night after night and leaving Rita alone at the hilltop hotel. Always by her side at the bar was Teddy Stauffer. His shoulder was a handy one to cry on—and Rita used it.

Shortly after her return to Hollywood, Rita filed suit for divorce and Teddy Stauffer showed up in the film capital. Rita sailed for Europe after her divorce was granted. Stauffer, it happened, was aboard the same ship.

Somewhere along the line, after they hit Europe, Rita and Teddy became separated. Then, on the French Riviera, Rita found her long-lost Prince Ali Khan—whom she had met in Hollywood a number of years before. Ali took one look—and then was really lost.

Well, Rita and Ali escaped from Mexico City to Acapulco—and one of the most interesting things about this is that Teddy Stauffer nowadays is manager of the Hotel Casablanca, one of Acapulco's leading hostelries. . . .

Acapulco—Rita and Ali arrived in Acapulco on Sunday, November 7. They had made reservations at the Hotel Casablanca—and, pulling the same dodge as they did in Mexico City, they checked in at the Hotel de las Americas instead.

In Acapulco, a famous American news magazine had made elaborate preparations to photograph the elusive couple. Cameras with telephoto lenses were concealed at that's hollywood!

"No matter how much money I make, I cannot buy the things taken for granted as part of any American's way of life. Any restaurant, anywhere, will serve him a glass of water. He and his children can use any public lavatory in any state of the Union. In case of an emergency, any hospital will admit him. He can drop into any church for a word of prayer. Any free library is open for his use—and his children are welcome in any public school.

"He can ride as he pleases in any form of public transportation. He stands an even chance, along with others of his background, training and experience, when he applies for a job. If he has any money, he can spend it wherever he pleases. He can get a room in any hotel in any city in the country. He can buy a meal in any restaurant. He can live in any section of the city he chooses which is within his financial means.

"I can't!"

That's frank and forthright talk—not from an impoverished member of the minority, but from a glamorous, $5,000-a-week actress—Lena Horne. It's from her forthcoming autobiography, "In Person" (Boni and Gaer), and just a sample of its eye-opening and, we hope, mind-opening chapters.

Irving Hoffman in
The Hollywood Reporter

numerous strategic points commanding views of places where, it was thought, Rita and Ali would be practically certain to appear together.

But once again the photographers were thwarted. During their entire stay in Acapulco, Rita and the Prince sallied forth together only once, when they took off in a hired automobile. When this occurred, there were no hidden cameras set up in the proper spot—and the men from the news magazine didn't dare to run up and snap away, since this, they feared, would cause their quarry to leave the city promptly, thus ruining the possibility of getting much more interesting shots later on with the concealed cameras.

And why didn't anybody else manage to get pictures for the newspapers and magazines? The explanation is simple. Prince Ali had a standing offer of 1,000 pesos for the negative of any photo of him and Rita together. The press was offering 150 pesos. So it's understandable that, if any were achieved, none was ever printed.

Aside from that automobile outing, Rita made no public appearances, whatsoever, with Ali. He frequently went swimming, at the beach and in the hotel pool—but Rita seldom stirred from her suite and remained in bed daily until long after noon.

Mexico City—Rita and Ali returned to the capital by car on Thursday, November 18. They checked into the Hotel Del Prado under the names of Margaret Wells of Hollywood and Albert Cameron of Beverly Hills. Here they continued as they had in Acapulco, never venturing forth together until, on November 24, they left by plane for Havana.

steamed-up press . . .

A report on the Mexico City doings of Rita and Ali wouldn't be complete without the inclusion of a few comments by the steamed-up press.

Wrote Julio Sorel in the newspaper Novedades: "Rita said nothing when she arrived in Mexico. . . . We send a bunch of black narcissi, Rita. . . . Welcome to Mexico . . . woman who walks asleep . . . volcano covered with snow, with sun on its crest and beauty in the architecture of body!"

And Clara Montes in Universal Grafico: "We remember, barely three years ago, when Rita attended a party in the American Embassy, on the arm of the dynamic Orson Welles, then her husband. Now, they are separated by a half-world of distance and coldness, Orson in Rome, Rita in Mexico. And between them (is) the figure of Ali Khan. . . .

"With an Embassy as a background and Orson Welles . . . at her side, Rita seemed scarcely touched with makeup, simply dressed. She was the most gentile and distinguished woman in the gathering of distinguished women. The men envied Rita, and love seemed to surround their young heads like a halo. And now, Rita is here with us (again), but invisible to the press!

"The hotel administration was besieged by reporters the day Rita arrived with her Prince. While the world shakes with such transcendental news as Chiang Kai-Shek's defeat in China and the Presidential election in the United States, the press of Mexico City follows the trail of Rita and her Prince!"

Yes, the press of Mexico City was steamed up—and completely frustrated—by Rita and Prince Ali, who wanted a quiet holiday together, unmolested by the pryings of the outside world.

Yes, Rita and Prince Ali won a great victory in their battle for privacy.

Or did they? THE END

Are you in the know?

Which square dance step is he calling?

☐ Birdie in the Cage ☐ Address Partners ☐ Dasey-do

How about giving a square dance party? Scene: your home (playroom preferred!). Music: courtesy of folk dance discs or the crowd's own vocal cords. First, learn the steps and calls—such as "Birdie in the Cage" (see illus above). And don't let difficult days keep you "caged," when Kotex can free you from discomfort. Made to stay soft while you wear it, Kotex gives softness that holds its shape. And see how freely your new, all-elastic Kotex Sanitary Belt lets you bend—because it's adjustable; doesn't bind!

How to cope with a cowlick?

☐ Fight it
☐ Favor it
☐ Forget it

Ornery critters—cowlicks. You can neither take 'em or leave 'em. But if you favor a cowlick by parting the hair directly into the center of that stubborn tuft—it behaves! There's another smart plan you can favor, at certain times. That's trying the 3 absorbencies of Kotex—to find the one just right for you. Remember all 3 have an exclusive safety center, assuring you of extra protection with Regular, Junior or Super Kotex. Keeps you extra confident!

What "new note" does this coat bring?

☐ Back interest
☐ A break for tall teens
☐ Another beauty ritual

Each answer is correct. The coat shown has new "back interest"; styling that flatters "glamazons." The new beauty ritual? Neck care! That collar-rubbing means extra scrubbing and softening (with lotion) to save your neck. Back interest in dresses is often a matter of eye-catching trimming, rather than flare. So on "those" days, choose the napkin that prevents telltale outlines! With those special, flat pressed ends of Kotex, you're smooth—from any view!

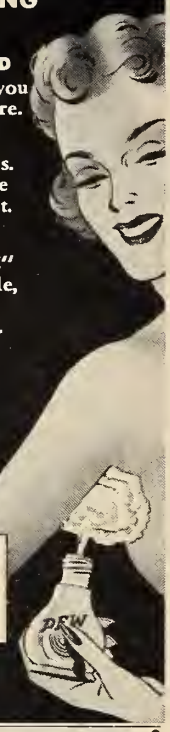
*T. M. REG U. S. PAT. OFF.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

AMAZING!! NEW!!
"DEW"
SPRAY DEODORANT
IN THE MAGICAL "SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TROUBLES! Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.



DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! "Dew" never touches hands. Not messy. Squeeze flexible bottle, spray on gentle mist.

ONLY DEODORANT CONTAINING "RETSELANE" to stop perspiration trouble, avoid perspiration stains on clothes. Removes odor.

WON'T ROT CLOTHES! Can't irritate normal skin.

SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax
Less than 2¢ a week

SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE!
"DEW" ®
SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

MOTHER!
Children love
This Pleasant Laxative!

It's a wonderful feeling to see your child smile when you give him Ex-Lax! Children love its delicious chocolate taste.

For over 40 years, millions of mothers have found Ex-Lax dependable for their children. It is equally good for grown-ups.

Ex-Lax gives effective relief in a gentle way. What's more, it's easy on the system. Still only 10¢.

When Your Child has a COLD
...be sure he keeps "regular". When he needs a laxative, give him gentle Ex-Lax. It brings effective relief without upsetting him.

When Nature "forgets"... remember
EX-LAX
THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

THE GIRL HE CAN'T FORGET

(Continued from page 41)

star in Hollywood. When Cary first caught sight of her on the Queen Elizabeth he blinked and suddenly remembered he'd seen her on the London stage in Deep Are The Roots. Her performance in that play had impressed him, but, at the time, he hadn't particularly wanted to meet her. However, seeing her on the boat at close quarters, and with moon rhyming with June, it was a different brew of witchery.

So it was normal and natural that when the boat docked, they made a date to meet in Manhattan. Cary was due to report to Hollywood for the lead in Every Girl Should Be Married. His co-stars were to have been Jennifer Jones and Barbara Bel Geddes. But David Selznick, who owns Miss Jones, said she was available only on condition that the rest of the package also came from his stable of stars—which includes Joseph Cotten, Shirley Temple, Guy Madison, Robert Mitchum and Alida Valli. Producer-director Don Hartman said, "I want Cary Grant, or nothing." At which very strategic point Cary said, "And I want Betsy Drake or nothing." It was no romance, he was very careful to point out—just helping a good little performer.

no romance . . .

And it was still "no romance," from Betsy as well as Cary, all during the shooting of the picture—even though they dined together every single night in Cary's permanent dressing room on the RKO lot, and lunched together every day. Sometimes, it was with the rest of the company for lunch, but it was always tete-a-tete for dinner. The reason they gave for the quiet dinners together was that they were studying the script. They found it superfluous to add that they were also studying each other.

On the set, Cary spent more time in Betsy's dressing room than in his own. And one time, when Betsy had to do a very emotional scene, Cary ordered everyone off the set.

One wonderful thing Betsy has done for Cary is to extinguish completely the torch he was carrying for Barbara Hutton, Mrs. Grant Number 2. It happened when they were on location in San Francisco with their picture. Cary received a wire from Barbara in Europe wishing him luck. At that time, San Francisco spelled "Barbara" for Cary. They had spent a lot of time there in the early happy years of their marriage and the city was full of tender, happy memories for them both.

After receiving the wire, Cary was moody all day. Betsy, wise for her years, ignored the moodiness without knowing its cause. During dinner she prattled about herself and the movie. By the time coffee was served, Cary had forgotten his gloom. And now San Francisco means "Betsy" at least as much as "Barbara." Not more, probably, because Cary never completely falls out of love with his former wives.

Cary was still not securely established in Hollywood when he and his first wife, Virginia Cherrill, were married back in 1932. And so there were financial difficulties to intensify the battles brought on by fundamental differences in temperament. Virginia always wanted to have lots of people around; Cary didn't. Virginia was extremely frank and outspoken; Cary is easy-going and diplomatic. After one of the most tempestuous marriages ever recorded in Hollywood, they parted. Yet, when Virginia visited Hollywood after their divorce, she and Cary went around together so much that several columnists predicted they'd re-marry. And even when he was with Betsy last summer in Europe, it's a cinch that he went to see the ailing Barbara Hutton.

What caused Cary's divorce from Barbara could never happen with Miss Drake. In the first important place, Cary had absolutely nothing in common with Barbara. She didn't like the motion picture business or picture personalities. She hated living in Hollywood. All her close friends were European. Her house was always full of members of the international set. Her first and third husbands were Prince Midvani and Prince Troubetsky.

Cary, born in Britain, loves Hollywood. And he loathes society parties. He and Barbara battled continuously about the parties and what he should wear for them. Cary wanted to stay home in old clothes and read a book. Barbara insisted on a tuxedo and elegant conversation with the international set. Sometimes he'd go along with her on this. Sometimes he wouldn't. I remember Cary once walked out on one of Barbara's own parties at their mansion!

Betsy hates big parties as much as Cary does. And she is, if anything, more shy and reserved than he is. In fact, Cary has tried to teach her to expand with people because he thinks it will help her career.

"When in doubt, whisper in my ear," Cary has told Betsy. They are now two of the greatest whisperers in the world. When Betsy has anything important to say, she puts her lips close to Cary's always listening ear. Even in Alcatraz—for a scene in their picture, of course! Betsy kept pulling Cary into an unused cell for a whispering session. No matter where they are, she draws him apart and whispers. And Cary loves it!

With Betsy he doesn't have to worry about how to amuse her. She likes everything. Recently he took her to see the long-

critic's corner

WHAT PAPER DO YOU READ?

Blood On The Moon, a sombre Western, must have gone stodgy somewhere between scripts and editing. At the Globe, it unreels a dark and dismal picture, confusing to the city slicker through at least its whole first reel, then not so much to make yippee about!

Irene Thirer
New York Post

The Globe is showing a Western with a top-notch cast, the kind of cast usually absent from horse opera. Blood On The Moon is an action film, with plenty of melodrama, hard riding, murder and sudden death. . . . This is an outdoor drama which moves right along, something happens every minute, and that something usually in the homicidal line. Blood On The Moon lives up to its title.

Eileen Creelman
The New York Sun

Although Robert Mitchum gets himself shot, stabbed and beaten up during the course of Blood On The Moon, the new film at the Globe emerges as a curiously static Westerner.

Rose Pelswick
Daily Mirror

running and very popular Ken Murray's Blackouts. At the show, Ken turned the spotlight on Cary and he took a bow—something he'd never have done in his pre-Betsy Drake days.

Betty Hensel, the blonde beauty who followed blonde Barbara, was more on the Betsy Drake side than the other loves of Cary Grant. She is very simple in her tastes and, although a socialite, not too social—more on the intellectual side.

This romance came to a sudden end when Cary, who is usually very faithful to his loves while he is loving, suddenly found himself falling hard for one of his leading ladies—who, by the way, also has a B in her name. He did not, of course, declare himself, because the lady was—and still is—married. But Betty didn't like it—and took a powder. She is now working as a model at Adrian's.

Cary has hundreds of acquaintances, but few close friends. And yet, more than any man I know, he wants to be loved. And women want to love him—he is so fascinating and eligible and attractive! I remember how Marilyn Maxwell carried on when Cary asked for a dinner date. She was like a freshman escorted to a prom by the Yale football captain. And when Cary was starring in Night and Day at Warners, Dorothy Malone used to swoon, just about, at his feet. And Bette Davis, working on a nearby set, found lots of reasons to visit him for long, intimate chats. (During Mr. Grant's gay bachelor days with Randy Scott, when they shared the same house in Santa Monica, they could have used five secretaries to handle all the calls from girls.) between romances . . .

Now, don't get me or Cary wrong—between his romances, he is like any other carefree wolf on the prowl. It's only when he's considering marriage that Cary clams up and brackets a girl's affection with his suspicion. But I do believe that Miss Drake has broken through the Grant caution of the past 10 years. It's true that he has already done more for her career than any ten agents could do, and even today Betsy is more interested in a career than in marriage—but she seems to love him and, I'm sure, he looks on her as being the square-shooter she obviously is.

Regardless of whether Betsy marries Cary or not, I am convinced she will continue as a movie actress. I don't think she'd be happy with anybody in married retirement. But to do a Mr.-and-Mrs. acting job like Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall or Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne—well, that would be very okay with Betsy.

There is an erroneous belief in Hollywood that Cary owns Miss Drake's movie contract, along with her heart. "I don't," Cary told me when I queried him. "But," he added with a smile, "I suppose I can always get her if I want her!"

Betsy's contract belongs 50 per cent to Howard Hughes and 50 per cent to David Selznick. When David could not sell his own girls to RKO for Every Girl Should Be Married, he did the next best thing—he bought half of Betsy. But both Selznick and Hughes have an understanding with Mr. Grant that any time he wants her for his pictures, he gets her. And that's good business for Selznick and Hughes—because every woman star in Hollywood yearns to get Cary as her co-star.

There's talk already of a follow-up for Every Girl Should Be Married—to show what happens after Betsy bags the man of her choice. That should be very interesting. The movie will, of course, have a happy ending.

And it's time for Cary to have a happy ending in his real-life mating. I think this time he will. THE END

Is this Young Wife
WRECKING HER MARRIAGE . . .

because her knowledge about these INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS is not complete or scientific?

When a young wife doesn't get off on the right start in married life for this reason—often her husband begins to show a cool indifference and honeymoon days are definitely over.

All too often a woman foolishly follows old-fashioned and wrong advice of friends. If only married women would realize how important vaginal douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, charm, health and marriage happiness. And what's more important—if only they'd learn about this newer, scientific method of douching with modern ZONITE.

No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO HARMLESS

No well-informed woman would think of using weak, homemade solutions of salt, soda or vinegar for the douche. These 'kitchen makeshifts' DO NOT and CAN NOT give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

No other type liquid antiseptic-germicide for the douche of all those tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to delicate tissues.

ZONITE positively contains no carbolic acid or bichloride of mercury; no creosote. ZONITE is non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-burning. Despite its great strength—you can use it as directed as often as you wish without risk of injury.

Zonite principle discovered by famous Surgeon and Chemist

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that it will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract BUT YOU CAN BE SURE that ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Buy ZONITE today. Any drugstore.

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published—mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MR-29, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Shinolo's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinolo is easy to apply and economicol to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada It's 2-in-1

Van Johnson

FREE PHOTO
LARGE GLOSSY PICTURE of your favorite
MOVIE STAR
INTRODUCTORY OFFER
direct from HOLLYWOOD, home of the STARS. Send name of your FAVORITE with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
★ Hollywood Stars ★
BOX 8716, DEPT. D-2
HOLLYWOOD 46, CALIF.

For That Younger Look
A HORMONE CREAM

Individually made for you for a MORE BEAUTIFUL AND YOUTHFUL APPEARING COMPLEXION. Freshly prepared on receipt of your order because hormones are very delicate and deteriorate rapidly on standing. Carefully made by hand—like a prescription—not mass machine mixed.

Made with NATURAL ESTROGENIC HORMONES combined in a lanolin, almond oil emollient cream.

A high potency—10,000 international units per ounce. A reasonable price. No C.O.D.'s please.

$2.00 for 2 oz. jar (plus 40c fed. tax)

℞ JOSEPH STARLEY
Apothecary and Chemist
509 Fifth Ave., Dept. M2, New York 17, N. Y.

HOLLYWOOD'S CRUELEST HOAXES

(Continued from page 57)

he usually picks on the most loved personalities.

A good friend of Clark Gable's reported that the worst day he ever spent in his life came when rumor swept through his Army camp that Gable had been killed.

"For some reason I can't explain," he said, "I actually believed it, perhaps by the sheer weight of the number of people who told me. I believed it so strongly that when on the same day there was a news broadcast concerning the death of President Roosevelt, I scoffed at that—it seemed so impossible."

Some day, perhaps, the arch fiend who has menaced the Bing Crosby family will be located, locked up in an insane asylum or dealt with otherwise, according to the proper legal methods. It's an unsolved mystery whether or not the person was insane, who somehow discovered the telephone number of the Crosby home some years ago and called to tell Dixie that Bing, then on tour with Bob Hope, had met sudden death. Nevertheless, a similar call has been repeated almost yearly. The last was in the form of a message to columnist Jimmy Starr. It was three a.m. when Jimmy was wakened by the insistent ringing of his telephone. Sleepily, he cursed the fates that had made him a news-hound and answered.

"Huh? What's that you say? . . . Crosby dropped dead just now on the golf course? . . . Why, nuts to you! You thought I'd be glad to get the scoop? . . . Well, I sure am. If Crosby is out playing golf at three a.m., he should drop dead—and so should you!"

Jimmy hung up and went back to sleep. The rumor didn't. A couple of other columnists had already given credence to the story, and as they checked its authenticity, the rumor began to spread.

Psychiatry has a definition for the warped minds capable of concocting such stories and deliberately launching them. The person who originates such a rumor is as temporarily insane as the fire bug who sets a blaze and then turns in the alarm so that he may watch the fire engines. The only difference is that the death rumormonger is more difficult to detect since his presence on the scene may be in one of a hundred thousand homes as he looks feverishly through the morning papers to find news of the havoc he has wrought.

narrow escape . . .

An imaginative script-writer could concoct an amazing mystery over the recent events in the lives of Ida Lupino and her husband, Collier Young. Early one evening, shortly after dusk, the two were in their bedroom, dressing for dinner. Their conversation was punctuated by a flat noise like a slap, followed by a shower of glass. They turned to see a bullet hole in a bedroom window.

Both Ida and her husband are sensible people. It could have been an accident, for they live on the top of a mountain off Mulholland Drive and on occasions there has been illegal target-practice and rabbit-hunting. Immediately, they reported the matter to the police, who had a similar theory. They felt better, until two nights later both their dogs disappeared.

Now Ida was convinced that something was afoot. And she had sufficient reason. Only a few years ago, while a member of the Women's Ambulance Corps, she had suffered a cruel trick at the hands of some unknown tormentor. Early one evening, she received a telephone call, telling her to take her station wagon to a specified corner and wait there for the arrival of a truck which was to bring an iron lung for an urgent hospital case. Ida didn't question the call. She hurried to the appointed place and waited. She waited for three hours, in her mind picturing the scene in which some patient was dying for want of the iron lung. Finally, she borrowed a nearby phone, checked every official contact she had, and finally became convinced that she was the victim of an unbelievable hoax.

Again, mysterious things have begun to happen to Ida. Of course, her fears were allayed in the case of her dogs' disappearance when they were discovered, several days later, in the pound where they had been mistakenly taken by some householder who lived at the bottom of the canyon. There may have been nothing to those recent events. But then again . . .

target for tonight . . .

Movie stars have for years been "target for tonight" for innumerable hoax artists. Some of the hoaxers are sad cases—people who have lost their sanity and whose hallucinations happen by accident to involve famous people. One of these was a former service man who came to Hollywood and began to hang around Van Johnson's home. He claimed that the actor had "sent for him." It developed that this poor lad suffered from severe mental dislocation due to his fighting in the South Seas, and his last memory seemed to be of a picture in which Van had appeared.

Sometimes a star may innocently start a chain of events that brings to light the number of hoaxers who live throughout the country. This happened to Ann Sothern, who once allowed a writer to tell the story of her missing sister. Ann had not seen the girl, who was actually her half-sister, since the two were youngsters. She sincerely wanted to get in touch with her, and after considerable convincing of a skeptical editor, the story was published. Immediately there came a flood of letters from young women. Some said they "thought" they might be the lost sister. Others, the majority, insisted that they were, and many of them asked for money.

Almost six weeks passed before a letter came from a young lady who described in detail what each had worn on the last day they had seen each other. In addition, she presented evidence that could not be contradicted. Ann welcomed the girl when she arrived in Hollywood for a visit, and as if all the other certainties were not enough proof, the sister stayed only a few weeks and then went happily home to the Middle West. Despite this, Ann still received letters for months from impostors.

Perhaps the worst of all hoax artists are the parents who deliberately offer their children for adoption. Then, after a year or two has passed, they manage to find out who has the child. They claim a "change of heart," and threaten court action unless the child is returned. Not so peculiarly, this seldom happens unless the parents are wealthy—or in the movie business. And also invariably, just before the child is returned there is the hint that they can be persuaded to forget all about it for a certain amount of money. Joan Crawford once suffered through such a trying experience, about which she refuses now to discuss details. To her credit, however, it may be said that this has not prevented her from further adoption plans, nor has she ever had anything but highest praise for legitimate agencies of adoption.

Another star, who must remain nameless, endured perhaps the most cruel of all hoaxes, brought about by human avarice. While on a personal appearance tour, she offered to do charity work One day she went into a poor section of an Eastern city, bringing a huge basket of food to a poor family in which there were eight children. She talked with the mother who said it would be wonderful if at least one of her children could have a real chance in life.

The star arranged to bring the baby to Hollywood, and further provided for clothes and a small income for the family. For three years the child remained with her. Then, to her utter amazement, the day came when the entire family arrived in a battered old car and demanded the child.

Reluctantly, the star gave up custody. Later she discovered that the woman's sister had talked her into demanding the youngster back in hopes of securing more money. Embittered, the star refused, and when some years later the boy came to her home and asked to see her, she refused.

Happily, the same star today has children of her own.

pathetic case . . .

Sometimes, but only rarely, one must feel a little sorry for the one who perpetrates a hoax, even if it does cause temporary heartache for the innocent victims. For instance, how would you have felt if you were Mrs. M. G. Mature of Louisville, Kentucky, and received a letter like this:

Dear Mrs. Mature:

Or shall I call you mother? You may be surprised to hear this, but your son Victor and I were married six months ago, just before he sailed for overseas.

We were going to keep it a secret, but I lost my job and I am going to have a baby. That's the reason I am writing you this letter. I am not a Hollywood glamour girl —just a store clerk. I want to be a good wife and I know that the way things are, you will want me to come and live with you until Victor comes home.

I am very handy and can cook and sew. Until I can arrange to come to Louisville, will you please see that Victor's allotment is sent to me each month?

Love,

.....

Fortunately for the peace of mind of Vic's mother, she knew that he had been out of the country for over a year and that he had never been in the state from which the girl wrote. There was no other choice. The letter had to be turned over to the authorities. The girl was discovered to be temporarily deranged as a result of an unhappy love affair. She was treated kindly and the whole affair was soon forgotten.

Both Mickey Rooney and Shirley Temple have at different times, when they were youngsters, suffered from widespread rumors that they were midgets! These were curiously persistent for a long time, and visitors on the set frequently asked to have a close look at them to make sure they were "real, normal youngsters." In this case, studios have believed that some jealous mother, who wanted her own child to be a star and foolishly hoped that by getting Mickey or Shirley out of the way, she could achieve that ambition, was responsible.

No one can estimate the number of blackmail cases which annually are nipped in the bud. They have been familiar to Hollywood way back to the time that a girl named Daisy DeVoe, who had been secretary to Clara Bow, went to jail for allegedly trying to extract money from the star.

Recently there was the case of George Raft and a girl whose name was briefly linked with his, in a story that provided Congratulations, sir! Your bandaged beak is a badge of honor!

It's a symbol of service . . . a sure sign that you, like most of us these days, have been keeping your nose to the grindstone—working your hardest just to keep your family living the way you want them to live.

But what of the future? Your nose can't take it forever. Someday you'll want to retire, to follow the hobbies and take the trips and do the things that you've always dreamed of doing.

That's going to take just one thing—MONEY! And will you have it when you want it?

You will if you're buying U. S. Savings Bonds automatically—on the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or on the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank.

With either plan, you're heading for real financial security. Month after month, regularly as clockwork, your money is saved for you. All you have to do is sit back and watch the Bonds pile up.

It's just about the easiest, surest, fastest way of building financial security that anyone ever dreamed up. And with U. S. Savings Bonds, you make money while you save it. Every $75 Bond you buy today will be worth $100 in just 10 years!

Of course, you can always buy Bonds at any bank or post office. But the best way, the sure and steady way, is to buy 'em automatically!

Start doing it now! Keep on doing it! And in no time flat, you'll find that you're well on your way to a permanent separation of nose and grindstone!

AUTOMATIC SAVING IS SURE SAVING

—U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

AMERICA'S FESTIVE FOOD CONFECTION

Manley's Hi Pop POPCORN

IN BAGS OR BOXES FRESH FROM Manley POPCORN MACHINES

IN PACKAGES FOR POPPING AT HOME

Get hot, fresh, delicious Hi Pop Popcorn anywhere—the Natian's popular food confection. Served from sparkling Manley Popcorn Machines at your movie theatre and variety store or wherever good popcorn is sold. Ask your food store for Hi Pop in the red and white candy cane package. Make your own popcorn at home. Remember—Hi Pop is the same fine corn movie shows feature.

almost a week of juicy headlines. George had dated the girl several times. He had given her presents, including some jewelry. This was not unusual for George, who is noted for his generosity.

In this case, however, the story popped up that George had demanded the return of the presents.

This was not the truth. Then, as the story gained momentum, there was a threatened lawsuit. The stories grew more and more confusing, then faded abruptly.

Public opinion was that George had "settled" the case. He had done nothing of the sort. Instead, he hired a private detective. The sleuth got in touch with the "investigator" who had been digging into this chapter of George's life. He suggested that he had some inside on Raft that would pay off big. The alleged investigator fell for the trap, reported to his fellow conspirators and a hidden camera photographed them as they talked.

Faced with this evidence of a plot against Raft and the threat of court action, they backed off.

What have you heard whispered about movie stars recently? That Nelson Eddy is going blind? That a certain star couldn't get a divorce from her husband because she had, in fact, never married him? These are old Hollywood bromides, but in their day such rumors have driven studio investigators a little crazy.

Fortunately, the police in Los Angeles, Beverly Hills and other communities in which stars live are peculiarly alert to the problems of celebrities. Most hoax artists simply haven't a chance.

Loretta Young will now notify police of even the slightest suspicion. Not long ago, the nurse asked Loretta and her husband, Tom Lewis, whether they had been unable to sleep the night before.

"Sleep?" Loretta asked. "We slept like logs."

"And you weren't prowling around upstairs about three this morning?"

"No."

"Well," the nurse said, "somebody was."

Loretta paid little heed to the incident, and that day she and her husband left for a short Palm Springs vacation. The same night their home was robbed of several thousands of dollars in jewels and furs.

An ordinary robbery?

Not by any means. This "job" was pulled by hoax artists—in the opinion of the police who investigated. The theory was that the thieves were former "servants" who had worked in the home before Loretta and Tom purchased it. They had keys and were able to leisurely "case" the place.

servant problem . . .

Do you wonder that stars investigate their servants with a thoroughness comparable to an FBI examination before hiring them? Is it so amazing that stars divulge their telephone numbers to only a few people, change those numbers with great frequency, and live behind electrically operated gates?

As you read this, a hoax artist is at work somewhere, figuring an idea to bring shame and misery to someone in Hollywood.

Let's hope that he'll be caught in the act and punished—but if he should happen to be successful, let him be like the little man who, in the long parade of cruel hoax fiends, provided a comic touch.

It happened when John Wayne and Johnny Weissmuller were living with two producer friends in a big penthouse apartment. They were enjoying a carefree bachelor life and the place was always filled with companions, some of whom almost lived there. Among these people was an omnipresent, personable fellow. He drank their liquor, made long-distance calls and enjoyed the run of the apartment.

One day, Johnny Wayne said to Johnny Weissmuller, "I don't like to pry into your private affairs, but I think that friend of yours, little What's-His-Name, is something of a louse—and on top of that, a deadly bore."

"Friend of mine?" Weissmuller exclaimed. "I thought he was a friend of yours!"

That night they compared notes with their two other roommates. Neither of them knew the little man and each assumed that he was the friend of one of the other tenants.

That night when the little man came in, mixed himself a drink and said, "What's cooking, fellows?" the Johns, Wayne and Weissmuller, laid large hands upon his person. They carried him to the swimming pool, tossed him in bodily.

Mr. Wayne said, "It's been nice knowing you."

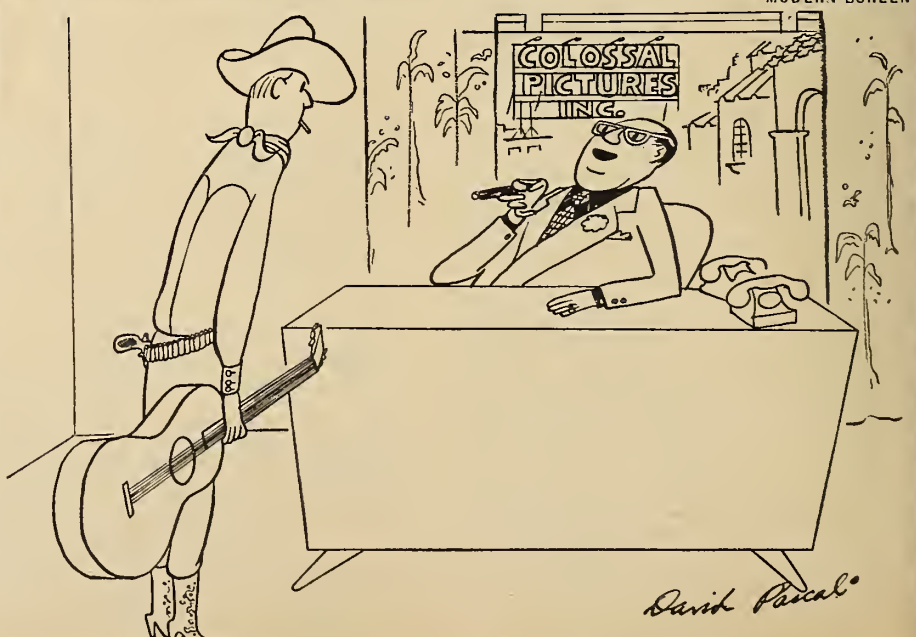
End of hoax. THE END

In 36 Minutes—wing your way to

Romayne Cahoon, charming Pan American World Airways stewardess, uses Glover's 3-Way Medicinal Treatment for lovely highlights!

Yes, in 36 minutes your hair can look lovelier! Fresh lustre and radiance, natural color tone and glamour—these are yours with Glover's 3-Way Medicinal Treatment—quickly, in your own home! Ask for Glover's Mange Medicine, GLO-VER Beauty Shampoo, Glover's Hair Dress at Drug or Cosmetic counters — or mail Coupon today for sampler.

Glover's



The 3-Way Medicinal Treatment

Glovers, Dept. 852
101 W. 31st St., New York 1, N. Y.

Send free Sampler Package in plain wrapper by return mail—Glover's Mange Medicine, GLO-VER Beauty Shampoo, Glover's Imperial Hair Dress in 3 hermetically-sealed bottles—with free booklet. I enclose 10¢ to cover cost of packaging and postage.

Name .....
(PLEASE PRINT PLAINLY)

Address .....

"Coctus, I've been meoning to osk you—if o script should ever coll for it, you con ride o horse, con't you?"

"OH, BROTHER!"

(Continued from page 31)

of Irish choppers wouldn't leave any food. The first time I went hungry, Bing smuggled a sandwich up to the porch later.

The second time I figured on the same treatment. He gave me a dirty look instead, and after that I was on my own.

When I grew a little older, Bing said he didn't want a baby brother who couldn't take care of himself. I got a half-dozen bloody noses from him while he taught me to counter-punch. When I figured I was ready, I went out on the street looking for trouble. I picked on Tom (Boo) Shields. I was a year younger, so he took a lot of picking-on before he'd fight me.

"Well, kid," he said, "I hate to do this, but you asked for it."

the manly art . . .

We went around and around for about an hour while Bing watched. I have to admit there was a touch of class in me. I stepped around Boo and popped him with left jabs a dozen times to his once. Boo kept moving in and trying to slug it out. I circled and jabbed. Finally Boo couldn't stand it. He dropped his hands.

Tears flowed down his cheeks. "You big baby!" he blubbered in exasperation. "Come on in and fight!"

If I had, he'd have murdered me.

It was a dubious decision, but it had Bing's approval. On those rare occasions when I did something he liked he never came right out and said so. But the night of the fight with Boo he took a long look at his necktie rack. Next thing I knew, he'd handed me his best tie and beat it out of the room.

There never was much loose change kicking around in our family. I think George Harrigan, who brought up seven kids without going bankrupt, was a financial wizard. When the old man dug up some small change for necessary upkeep on his offspring we were always struck by a hot flash of temptation and I guess I was about the worst of the lot.

One Saturday night he gave me 50c for a haircut. I had other ideas about what to do with four bits. So I shagged myself over to the Spokane barber college. They must have given me to a guy who was flunking. When I got home I looked like I'd fallen into the lawn mower. I still have a small pie-slice in my ear where the scissors slipped. Dad took one look at me that night and brought out the razor strop. I yelled so loud that it touched Bing's heart. He gave me his catcher's mitt.

Of course, the only reason I say decent things about the guy is that a miracle might happen and one day he'll be writing a story about me. I got to have some insurance. The trouble with having Bing for the next oldest brother is that I could never tell when the switch was coming.

One day I tagged along down to the river swimming hole. I was wading around in shallow water when one of the kids spotted me. "Kid," he said, "it's time you learned to swim." He grabbed me and dragged me up on the diving board. I yelled bloody murder. A couple of kids grabbed my legs and a couple more, my arms. They were counting one, two, three and swinging me over the water when Bing arrived on the double.

"Let go of my kid brother!" he yelled.

Gratitude welled up in my little chest.

My tormentors looked at Bing with scorn. "Huh," somebody sneered. "Want him to grow up to be a Sissy?"

"Never mind what I want!" Bing snapped. "He's my kid brother and when he learns to swim I'll teach him."

"Yeahhh!" I jeered. "That'll show you guys!" I started gingerly back off the diving board to safety.

Bing stood in my way.

"I said I'd teach you how to swim when the time came," he said. "Hold your nose!"

"What?" I gasped.

"Well then, don't hold it!" he snapped and pushed me off the board.

I came up, black fury in my heart but I was dog-paddling for dear life. I didn't talk to Bing for three days, but to anyone else who'd listen I bragged about how well I could swim.

When Bing went away to school I didn't miss him too much. I was relieved, and my other brothers and sisters were too much older or occupied or something to worry much about keeping me in line.

Of course, Bing still remained a big influence in my life. I wore his hand-me-downs until I was 17. But I'm not sore about this. After all, I've made a splendid living off his middle register for years. [Doesn't everybody?—Ed.]

I always wanted to catch up with Bing. I figured that I had to have an early start, so I quit school when I was 16, but I figured ways to work in a couple years of college. Every time I thought about what Bing was doing or the cracks he might make when I saw him next, I went on the hustle.

Bing was working with Paul Whiteman when he sent me a tennis racket for my birthday. There was a letter with it. "Learn to play tennis," he said. "You'll meet a good class of people—make something of yourself."

I played tennis every day until it got so dark I couldn't see the ball. I got to be a boy-champ. Finally I won the Pacific Coast Boys' Championship. Then I received another letter from Bing. "What's the idea?" he wrote. "We don't need any tennis bums in the family."

So I broke my tennis racket in little pieces and started singing.

all for one . . .

It's a funny thing with our family. Bing could do things to make me really sore. Same with Everett and Larry. We could bicker and argue like mad, but just let one outsider make a crack and the whole gang of us was ready to go to work on him.

That's been an unspoken policy since way back when I was in kindergarten. We were all crazy about our sisters, Katherine and Mary Rose. The smart alecs in the neighborhood used to love to tease Mary Rose. When she walked down the street they'd tag after her, yelling, "Mary Rose sat on a tack. Mary rose!"

Then they'd roll on the lawns and laugh themselves sick, it was so funny. We didn't think so. We'd move in on the kids, pair off according to our respective ages and teach a few lessons on respect for young ladies. The result was a healthy attitude toward the Crosbys, but it cost us more than our quota of black eyes.

Funny thing, though, as a family we've never seemed to be very close. Maybe it's because, when there are too many in one tribe, too much obvious sentiment can turn into a case of inbred nausea. It's hard to explain. For instance, when I was married, I never even got a telegram from Bing, and I don't remember if I sent him one. The reason I can't talk about any of his high-school romances or his marriage is that I don't know anything about them. Bing figures certain things are personal.

Still, I don't want anybody coming up

My spirit soared...

when I learned about Tampax

Only a few words about Tampax are needed to let an imaginative lady foresee a picture of remarkable improvement on "those days." Tampax is a modern method of monthly sanitary protection. It is worn internally and absorbs internally, discarding the whole harness of outside pad and belt . . . In use, you will find, Tampax is not only invisible but unfelt—and the difference it makes is amazing.

Made of highly absorbent cotton, Tampax was invented by a doctor for this special purpose. The wonder of Tampax is that nothing about it will remind you of the occasion. No bulky pad to hamper your movements or show its edge-lines under dresses. No possibility of chafing. No odor can form . . . Tampax comes in applicators for easy insertion. Changing is quick. Disposal no problem. And you can take your bath while wearing Tampax.

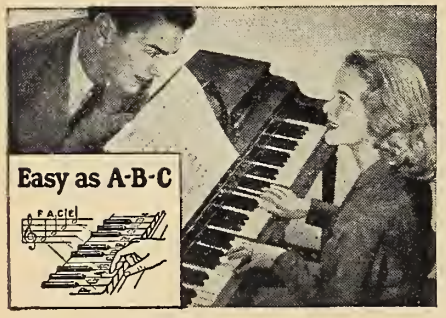
Three absorbencies (Regular, Super, Junior) for varying needs. At drug stores and notion counters. Average month's supply fits into purse; 4 months' average supply comes in an economy box. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

IT'S HERE
Curly-Head
Trade-Mark
FAST CURL CAPS
NO PERMANENT NECESSARY
Gives LONG-LASTING CURLS IN MINUTES
New SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY



4 FAST CURL CAPS 25¢
Manufactured by
GENERAL PRODUCTS • CHICAGO 6, ILL.
ON SALE IN VARIETY, DRUG AND DEP'T STORES

Foot Relief
Instant-Acting, Soothing, Cushioning Foot Plaster
To instantly relieve painful corns, sore toes, callouses, bunions, tender spots, burning on bottom of feet—use Dr. Scholl's Kurotex. You cut this soothing, cushioning, flesh color, superior moleskin to any size or shape. At Drug, Shoe, Department and 10¢ stores.

Dr. Scholl's KUROTEX

AMAZING OFFER—$50 IS YOURS FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES of entirely different, new DeLuxe All-Occasion cards. Patented feature television card included. Each box sells for $1.00, your profit 50c. Surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Write today.
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-17, White Plains, N. Y.
WRITE FOR SAMPLES

Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher
LEARN AT HOME THIS QUICK MONEY-SAVING WAY
Simple as A-B-C. Your lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. You read real notes—no "numbers" or trick music. Some of our 850,000 students are band LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. Then you play it yourself and hear how it sounds. Soon you are playing popular music. Mail coupon for our illustrated Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention your favorite instrument. U. S. School of Music, 1442 Brunswick Bldg., New York 10, N. Y.
FREE BOOKLET
U.S. School of Music, 1442 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y. 10, N.Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).
Instrument..... Have you Instrument?.....
Name.....
(Please Print)
Address.....

with slurring remarks. Sometimes Bing really lets go. Like the time he sent me to work with Anson Weeks in 'Frisco.

"I guess I need some advice," I said.

"Sure," Bing replied. "Keep your nose clean."

I feel like a chump writing only about Bing. There's my brother Everett. He went to war in 1918. He was in uniform as a top sarge so long we figured he must have got caught in a crap game. Now he's an agent. The best in the business. If he wasn't, how could he keep on working for Bing? Me, I wouldn't last two weeks in Crosby Enterprises if I changed my name to J. P. Morgan III and disguised myself with a beard. The reason I'm eating regularly is that they let me sing and I never had to try a business career.

Talking about business, there's my brother Larry. Like Bing, Larry just doesn't believe in getting clubby before you know somebody. Also like Bing, Larry knows that the thing to do with a dollar is to hang onto it. Once I was broke on the road. I sent Larry a wire asking for a fast fifty to tide me over.

This was the reply: "YOU CAN'T REACH ME. LARRY."

Much to my surprise, I didn't starve to death. My brothers never worried about me, or I about them. We all picked cucumbers for 57 Varieties when we were youngsters. Anybody who picked cucumbers can get along in the world.

You hardly ever hear about our successful brother, Ted. Frankly, I don't think Bing's money will last. Sooner or later he'll have to go up to Spokane and borrow money from Ted. He's in the used-car business.

Might as well face it. Every now and then some misinformed citizen peddles the story that Bing is closer than two nickels in Jack Benny's pocketbook. The one with the combination lock on it. That's not true. Every time I pick up the sports section I see that Bing is playing a charity somewhere. (And I'm not being facetious.) Then there's the handicap Bob Hope always talks him out of. By this time Hope must have made enough money off Bing to give up caddying as a sideline. (And I am being facetious.)

i don't play golf with bing . . .

I don't play golf with Bing. He'd take me like the Big Nine does the Coast Conference. And if I have a complex, you can't blame me. Bing is one of the greatest competitors you'll ever find in golf.

Once he was playing with a guy who kept trying to get his goat. The match was all even on the 18th green. Bing's opponent had a 30-foot putt. Bing was just outside. Well, the guy fiddled around for about 10 minutes before making his putt. And the last thing he did before hitting the ball was to turn to his caddy and ask, "Did they cut the grass this morning?" Then he sank the putt.

Bing walked up to his ball, pulled the clubhead back, looked up at his caddy and said: "About that grass—what time did they cut it?" Then he sank his putt and took the match.

One more thing about Bing and money. Once Joe Frisco, the fabulous funny man, found himself a little short. Bing loaned him a hundred dollars. Joe went to the track and ran that C note in on a few good things to the tune of around $3,000. Then Joe went to Palm Springs and began to splurge. Bing happened to walk in when Joe had just bought a round of drinks for the house.

"Kind of throwing your money around, aren't you Joe?" he asked.

Joe looked up as though he hadn't seen Bing in ten years. "Why, it's C-C-C-C-Crosby," he exclaimed. "Here, B-Bing—here's a hundred dollars. S-s-sing 'Melancholy Baby' for the f-folks."

A friend of mine checked this story with Joe for accuracy. Frisco burned up. "It's a d-d-darned lie!" he shouted. "B-b-but there's a lot of truth in it."

You've heard of Club 15—I do hope! It's where I work on radio, along with Maggie Whiting. This show, which is sponsored by Campbell Soup hit a nice rating of 15. A few days later it was Christmas and I was over at Bing's on a pass, drinking egg-nogs, which he likes because they broaden him.

"I saw the Neilsen rating on your show, kid," Bing said. "Pretty nice." Then I could see a thought cross his mind. Bing had made a mistake and complimented me. He thought he'd better retrench before it went to my head. "By the way," he asked, "what network are you on?"

Sometimes Bing drops in to watch me rehearse my band. Picking up a few pointers I suppose. "Not a bad little group," he said one day. "How many men you got in it?"

"There's 11—how can I compete with you. You've got a band with 37 pieces and four acres of John Scott Trotter."

"Sure," Bing said, topping me as usual, "but you've got no reason to complain. You keep them blowing all the time. Besides, you've got a two-headed sax player."

I do the best I can to keep up. For instance, there's my family. The kids are Cathleen, Christopher, Bob Junior, and Stephen. We tried to name them all with the initial C because we figured that if times got tough they could all use the same luggage. It worked out all right until Bob, Junior came along and spoiled the routine.

I complained to Bing that trying to have a family the size of his was keeping me broke. "You should care," he retorted. "You can show the girl to the other Crosbys and charge admission."

Bing's always been a little sensitive about that girl situation. When our brother Ted became the father of twin girls he wired Bing, "I've got a pair of queens." Later, when Dixie gave birth to the twin boys, Bing wired Ted, "Kings beat queens."

I'll have to admit that Bing is a solid citizen. He's been married a long time—18 years now. Bob Hope has been married 16 years. Al Jolson was married 60 years to his first wife, 20 years to his second

HOW TIME FLIES!

■ "Looks like the famous team of Astaire and Rogers has broken up for good. . . . This (The Castles) is the last picture on Fred's contract and there are no signs he will return to the fold." —From a 1939 issue of Modern Screen

* * *

Martha Raye was starring in Give Me A Sailor. In a supporting role was a comic named Bob Hope. "Bob Hope scores decidedly," said our reviewer. . . .

* * *

A new sensation, John Garfield, was not yet sure if he liked Hollywood or not—From a 1938 issue of Modern Screen and he's been three years with Larry Parks. But, man and boy, I've been married 11 years myself and I have three boys and a girl.

Few Crosbys can make that statement.

For a long time I've been sensitive about people referring to me as What's-His-Name Crosby—you know, Bing's brother. Instead of asking me intelligent questions about me, they want to know if I've seen Bing lately. I've got an answer for that.

"Sure," I say. "I saw him just yesterday. He was up at his ranch in Elko . . . out on The Connecticut Yankee set . . . and he'd just finished a round of golf at Lakeside."

The schmoe always bites and exclaims, "You're nuts—how could the guy be all those places at once?"

That's my cue to snap, "It's simple! He transcribes everything."

This has got to stop.

But I really want everybody to know how nice my brother actually is to me. That's a lot of junk about his treating me with studied indifference. Why, only last year I got it by grapevine that Bing was going to sell one of his Cadillacs. (Cutting himself down to fleet size.) I called him up and asked, "How much?"

"I can get $4200 for it," Bing said, "But seeing it's you, I'll take $2400."

I went right over with a check and drove the car home. The next morning Bing sent the butler over to take off the spotlight. He was nice about it. He said, "Begging your pardon, sir, the marster said this didn't go with the deal."

I think it would be nice to close my recollections with a tender, whimsical little touch. It happened last Christmas. Everett had just installed one of those electric gates on his property. You know, the kind that has the loudspeaker. You drive your car up to the gate. You get out, press a button and a voice from somewhere a half mile away says "Whomff thrarf?" Translated, this means, "Who's there?" You talk into the speaker and say it's you. Nobody can understand you, so you don't get in unless you're a second-story man come to hijack the family silver.

Anyway, the kids around the neighborhood were so fascinated by Everett's gadget that all Christmas morning they'd been pressing the button and announcing Bob Hope, Mayor Bowron, the police department and Madman Muntz.

Everett, who is the finest tempered of the Crosbys, finally went a little berserk. The next time the buzzer rang inside the house he flipped the button and roared, "For the last time I'm telling you bums to get off my property!"

Outside at the gate there was a shocked silence. There stood Bing and his boys, all set to sing "Silent Night."

For a minute Bing was stopped. Then he shook his head and exclaimed, "A man never had such brothers. I never know what's going to happen next!"

Neither do they. Neither do I.

If you'll pardon me now, I have to go somewhere and sing "A Tree in the Meadow." (It's been done so many times, they say that even the dogs won't pause to listen.) And if the voice sounds like a Crosby, it's strictly coincidental and any resemblance to my brother is only because there's a touch of smog in the air.

That'll teach the guy to shove his five-year-old brother off a diving board!

THE END

SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY

(Continued from page 53)

Hollywood! The French papers said, 'How could Hollywood even begin to understand our own feeling about our national heroine?'"

The French papers also sneered at Hollywood pictures about other famous French figures. They said, "They take our people —Pasteur, Zola, Curie—and they fix them up!"

Ingrid, who'd finished her breakfast at a small table, drained the last few drops from her coffee cup, arose, moved onto a sofa opposite me, and said, "I'm sorry I wasn't quite ready when you got here. But I went up so late this morning."

I smiled at that "went up." She meant "got up." She speaks English beautifully and this was the major miscue.

She was wearing a simple black dress without ornaments, and sandals with flat wood soles.

"To make it still worse for me, the French had planned for their own star, Michele Morgan, to do Joan of Arc," she said. "I'd wanted to do Joan since 1940. But no one would listen. They said it had too much war and religion—and no love story. Later, when I did Joan of Lorraine on the stage, they changed their minds."

As I sat there with her now—by the way, the wind was getting chillier—I saw on the mantel a small statue of Joan of Arc. Every actress has one role she passionately wants to play. This one had haunted Ingrid.

But there were long periods of terror about it because of the French criticism.

"Victor Fleming, the great director, saw me do Joan on the stage, and he sat in the audience and cried," Ingrid said. "He said, 'I've got to do Joan of Arc. He used to sit all day and only read and read and read and read about Joan of Arc. Then he'd go to museums and study her. And I also studied endlessly, because we wanted to prove to the French people that we could do their heroine.

"When we got ready to start the picture, I was so inspired, and kept asking, 'Where is the church? Where is the church?' There it was—one wall!" Her shoulders drooped, expressing her disappointment. "Not even two. The wall was about twice as large as this wall." She waved at the wall of her own room.

"To cut down expenses," she explained. "And the solyers!"

(She meant soldiers.)

"The English solyers would change their helmets and become French solyers. I said to them, 'Good heavens, you're French today!' I told them, 'You shouldn't come so close to the cameras, you'll be recognized!'"

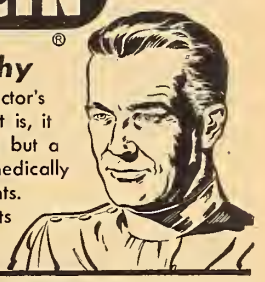
* * *

And so with all this apprehension having been built up in her mind, Miss Bergman, the supposed stalwart, was not a strong woman but another quaking, quivering female. the day last summer when she flew from London to Paris.

She was to appear at a charity show and face the furious French for the first time. After visiting France she would go on to Sweden and confront the people of her home land. They had sneered a little because she had supposedly said it "was the happiest day of my life" when she took out first citizenship papers. "Which," she said, "I never said."

The charity affair in France was to be held in an enormous tent under the Eiffel Tower. She learned on her arrival in

PAIN



of headache, neuritis and neuralgia

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

EXTRA Dollars for You Every Week

SHOW EVERYDAY CARDS

Earn extra money easily taking orders for new Everyday Assortment of 15 cards for Birthdays, all occasions. Friends buy gladly; you make up to 50c on big $1 value. Also PERSONALIZED Stationery, Name-Imprinted "Charmette" Notes, Napkins, Gift Wraps; other popular sellers at 60c up. Send today for Everyday Box on approval and Free Imprint Samples.

15 CARDS retail $1

FRIENDSHIP STUDIOS, INC.
923 ADAMS STREET - ELMIRA, N. Y.

feminine daintiness

. . . how to make sure of it!

Intimate feminine daintiness is vital to your charm. To be sure . . . syringe regularly. Faultless Feminine Syringes are designed specifically for this hygienic care, their gentle flushing action cleansing thoroughly, quickly. Modern, convenient, no accessories to handle, easy to put away. $1 to $2.98 at drug stores.

send for this free personal booklet

"Facts You Should Know About Intimate Feminine Care." Written by a registered physician. Sent in plain envelope.

Feminine Products Div., Dept. MS-29.
The Faultless Rubber Co., Ashland, Ohio.

Faultless
feminine syringes

IS THIS YOUR WALLFLOWER WEEK?

Why "sit it out alone" while your friends go bowling or dancing? Unless there are underlying organic conditions, Chi-Ches-Ters Pills offer blessed relief from "monthly blues". They tend to relax muscular contractions that often induce pain and nervousness. For best results take them as directed two or three days before your time. Ask your druggist for

CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS

DIAMOND BRAND

For relief from "periodic functional distress"

FREE—New illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write today! Chichester Chemical Company, Dept. 2-E, Philadelphia 46, Pennsylvania.

PROTECT YOUR LOVED ONES!

Genuine Legal Reserve

LIFE INSURANCE

Only 3¢ A DAY!

Now, you can provide the life protection you've always wanted for your family. Here it is, issued by mail, at a price anyone can afford. Liberal amounts of old-line, legal reserve life insurance with cash values, loan values and other valuable protection features including DOUBLE and TRIPLE BENEFIT provisions, for only 3c-a-day, the amount depending on your age . . . for example, $666 worth at age 35. Let us send you the policy for 10 Days Free Examination. No cost. No obligation. No agent will call. Just send us your name, address, age and name of beneficiary.

SERVICE LIFE INS. CO. Dept. 124, Omaha 2, Nebr.

WRITERS

Conscientious sales service for your short stories, articles, books and plays. Send today for FREE circular "Your Road To Writing Success."

DANIEL S. MEAD LITERARY AGENCY
Dept. D-2, 264 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.

Make Gorgeous

SHELL Floral Brooch

and Matching

Earrings

Easy at home

Only 89c

Quick and easy you can transform SHELLS brought to you from the SOUTH SEAS into the exciting, flattering floral brooch and matching earrings that are now the rage with fashionable women everywhere. It's easy—fun—quick—profitable! Although you might pay over $7.50 for the finished set, our complete home kit (with dainty yellow and white shells) and easy directions is yours for the unbelievably low price of ONLY 89c. (Only tool needed is tweezers and cement—35c extra.)

Make BIG MONEY! Profits 400% to 800%

Other Designs: Bachelor Button 65c, Pink Water Lily 70c. All three Kits, plus tweezers and cement ONLY $2.49

SEND NO MONEY. Just mail name and address on a penny postcard. On arrival pay postman 89c, plus C.O.D. postage. Save money! Send cash; we pay postage. Your money back if not delighted.

106 HOUSE OF HOBBIES, Dept. 48, Box 790, Evanston, Ill.

France that crowds were already jostling in the boulevards but she didn't know their mood. She'd heard about these French riots. She didn't think anything like that could be happening, but the papers had certainly been rough. They had seemed to be stirring up the French people against her.

Five thousand people were waiting in the tent.

People in the streets were screaming and yelling and pounding each other.

Miss Bergman's escorts had arranged that she could go past Customs without the usual inspection. As she started hurrying past, an official angrily yelled at her, "What goes on?"

"This is it," thought Miss Bergman. As she explained to me, "I really thought he was going to shoot me if I didn't stop."

Her escort explained to the inspector, "This is Ingrid Bergman."

"Ingrid Bergman," said the inspector, blankly. "Who's she?"

"She's Jeanne d'Arc," patiently said her escort.

"Ohhh, Jeanne d'Arc, Jeanne d'Arc!" shouted the inspector happily. "Go right ahead, go right ahead! And welcome to France!"

That astonished Miss Bergman. But she was still apprehensive because of the reports she'd received about the street crowds. She sat back in the automobile—with her short hair brushed by the summer breeze—and was ready for come what would.

At first she heard what seemed to be a low growl.

Then all at once the French imagination was caught by this girl who'd dared to play their heroine—and suddenly they began acting as if they really thought this was the Maid of Orleans returning to life.

A few people began cheering, "Jeanne d'Arc, Jeanne d'Arc!" And it grew into one big roar that followed her up the boulevard and into the tent where she was greeted by—hostile critics . . .

The President of France.

Still, she hadn't won the angry French movie critics. They continued to be hostile.

After the big charity affair, Miss Bergman made a tour along the very route than Joan of Arc had taken. People in the little French villages knew she was coming. Children came out in fancy clothes and bowed to her, some of them thinking in their confused way that this was Jeanne d'Arc. Indeed, at a flower show, a speaker said, "And now I want to introduce you to—Jeanne d'Arc."

"I'm so obsessed with her that nothing makes me happier than to be confused with her," Miss Bergman said.

At last she was ready to leave France. A final reception was given her. At this party, one of the French movie critics said to her, "You know, I suppose, that we have never been for you playing Jeanne d'Arc. We've been against you."

"I know," said Miss Bergman.

"But now that we've seen you, we're very glad that you did it," he said. Miss Bergman didn't kiss him, as that wouldn't have been like Joan of Arc.

* * *

"With Sweden," Miss Bergman told me—the window was still open and I was getting colder and she was merely getting redder-cheeked—"it was different because you are never a prophet in your own land. During the first seven years I'd been here the Swedish papers had said very few bad things about me. Everyone had been very nice and kind—the way you want to help a child.

"The last two years I'd noticed a change. They printed headlines on my picture, Arch of Triumph—how some critics didn't like it!

"In Sweden, though, there was even hostility to Garbo. She was not always box-office there. Sometimes they seemed to enjoy knocking her by running headlines like, 'Garbo Number 15 at Box Office.' I always felt they didn't have to put that in—or at least they could have put it in smaller type.

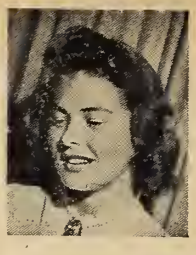
"Then about me taking out my first papers here. Of course it will make me a little sad to leave the citizenship of my home country. I had to practice speaking Swedish again with my husband. Oh, I knew that was important, because if I had ever said 'Hello,' or 'Okay,' that would really stab them."

Arriving finally in Stockholm, she met the press at the Grand Hotel.

Here was an assignment almost as difficult as any she'd ever played in pictures or on the stage—to make the reporters like her. To convince them that she hadn't gone big-headed, and hadn't forgotten that she was a Swede. "It was almost as full of suspense as a big opening," she said.

"I was very calm—maybe because I was almost numb. I knew some of the questions they would ask. 'Who is the No. 1 actress?' for example. If you say 'Greer Garson or Betty Grable,' they say, 'Oh, isn't she generous!' If you name yourself, they say, 'Oh, fine thing!' You see, you're never right.

"There was such a crowd. Some people crowded in front and they wouldn't budge. The others in back couldn't get to see me. I answered questions until I was almost unconscious, then I had to go on a radio program. When I finished that, they told me I could go to my room. I said, 'No, there are still people in there who want to ask me questions.' I went back and tried to see every one.



"And they wrote so nicely. I've never seen anything like it. They followed me around and wrote a lot about what I wore and what I ate. The morning and afternoon papers used to kid each other. One afternoon paper would print, 'The morning paper says Miss Bergman had dinner with two ladies. What ladies? Who are they?' Then the morning paper would say, 'The evening paper says Miss Bergman had breakfast. That's terrible. They didn't say what she had.'

"They said I went incognito to the theater. Was I supposed to wear a sign?"

While the papers were kind, Miss Bergman found herself so rushed giving interviews and posing for pictures that she and her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, decided to go to her father-in-law's farm at Medelpad for a rest. Here she hoped to get away from the reporters for a while.

But the Swedish reporters were as enter-

I SAW IT HAPPEN

One day on the way home from school I noticed a little girl playing in a yard. She was such a beautiful child I couldn't resist stopping to talk to her for a few minutes. As we spoke her mother called her and I took the little girl over to the porch where her mother waited. You can imagine my surprise when I realized her mother was Ingrid Bergman. And she was just as sweet and friendly as her daughter, Pia.

Shirley Mae Wolf
Rochester, New York

prising as American. "The press had gone ahead and was lying around in the bushes," Miss Bergman smiled. "My father-in-law was flustered and flattered by the reporters. He invited everyone in to have a cup of coffee and he"—she laughed—"will tell everything!"

So the first crisis developed.

She really wanted to have rest and privacy, and so she decided one day to invite the press in from twelve to two, and then end it.

"But it didn't end it," she said. "Because there was always some newspaperman who wanted to interview me while I was swimming in the river, or something."

"That would have been me if I'd been a Swede," I said.

"Well, my husband was finally fed up with it, and I was, too. I got pretty angry and . . . well, I got so mad I cried. I said, 'I will not do any more. Throw them all out!'

"The family was horrified but I stuck to it. And I guess their editors finally decided I'd done enough. They didn't bother me and for 10 days I had a nice time. And the things they wrote about me were just wonderful."

The trip that had frightened her turned out to be a great success—such a success that when she returned to New York, she was so exhausted that she rushed right back to Hollywood, went to bed, and told people who phoned, "I'm taking a little nap. Call me in about two weeks."

autograph headache . . .

In Sweden she also got the solution finally to the autograph headache. "I had tried just about every possible method," she told me. "For a while I told the children, 'Look, I can't sign here in the streets, or I'll attract a crowd. Send your books to my hotel.' That way you do nothing all day but sign your name. I wouldn't let anybody else sign for me. I got a rubber stamp and they didn't like that.

"And there were so many places I wanted to go! I wanted to go back to a candy store I knew as a girl. I told them, 'I used to buy candy here 20 years ago. I'm back. I want to buy some more candy.'

"First I went around in a car. Then I said, 'I just don't want this car. I want to walk in the streets.'

"And the children were always there. Like they are always in New York. They stand there and freeze. And they love you so and they say, 'We are only three, and you signed last year, and we hope you're not getting stuck up.'

"But I decided it must end somewhere—so in Sweden I said no, not at all, not to anybody, not even to a friend's little girl. At first some didn't like it. The papers printed that I wasn't signing and after a while they quit asking me. And a lot of people told me they thought I had done right. The longer I live the more I think it is the right answer.

"It's the same with fan mail. Thousands of letters a week—how can I read it all?"

"And so you're not signing for anybody now?" I said.

"No to anybody—except to people I know. I'm going to try it, anyway.

"A man from RKO who had come with me said, 'Miss Bergman, I'm glad you said you'd sign for people you know, because—well, I just happen to have a picture of you in your nun's costume, and my wife ordered me to get it autographed. Would you . . .?' "

She laughed and reached for a pen.

Don't have any worry about her getting stuck up, though. She objects to police escorts and such trappings. In New York she dropped into a drug store and sat down at the counter to have coffee and a muffin. A boy alongside her looked at her and did a double take. He got so astonished he couldn't hold himself and said, "Aren't you Ingrid Bergman?"

"Yes," she said.

The boy started telling the waitresses and the man next to him that this was Ingrid Bergman, and grew so agitated about his nearness to the great star that he could hardly drink his coffee. Finally she leaned over to him and said, "Take it easy."

"What?" he said.

"I want to enjoy some coffee, too," Miss Bergman said.

I've also noticed that when Miss Bergman goes to New York cafés, she refuses to sit on the ringside. She likes to sit in the back. She wants to see the show. She doesn't want to be the show.

But what a naturally glorious show she is. Of course the French and the Swedes didn't stay mad. How could they?

THE END

IS IT TRUE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT MONTY?

(Continued from page 58)

and in tight-twos, Monty Clift put on his sports jacket with the hole in the left sleeve, abused his 1940 car until it started, and returned to his one-room apartment where he played some Bing Crosby records for the rest of the evening.

Montgomery Clift, as every movie-goer knows by now, is far and away the hottest male newcomer to Hollywood. His two roles, in The Search and in Red River have already established him as a gent who inspires the most natural kind of impulses in young women, and also as an actor of towering technical skill and authority.

Also, at the same time, Monty has firmly established himself as a maverick. Hollywood, as you know, is an old-fashioned town, as rigid as Charleston, S. C., or Boston, Mass., in its social codes and way of life.

It expects its established glamor-folk to conform to certain standards, to drive certain brands of automobiles, to associate with other glamor-persons. But this Clift boy has got everybody all mixed up—him and his Murphy bed, hole-in-the-sleeve, and casual disregard for whether he acquires a swimming pool with hot and cold running blondes or not. He hasn't appeared at a night club yet, let alone socked anybody, and various publicity men assigned to exploit him, long ago sighed and gave up any notion of pulling items out of Clift for the columns.

All kinds of reports have made the rounds. The chief rumor, current at the moment, is that Montgomery Clift is an uncooperative actor who insults producers, breaks contracts, does as he pleases, and as a result of these sins and heresies, is about to be black-balled by every studio in town and ignored by Broadway.

Actually, Hollywood knows Monty hardly at all. In Red River he was constantly on location, as he was in The Search. He worked almost every day in The Heiress, and immediately after the picture finished boarded a train for New York, made his manners with his family, and took off for France and Italy.

Let's have a good look at this young man—and see how false those rumors are.

He is 28 years old, weighs 155 pounds, stands six feet tall, has brown hair and

LUCKY YOU!

to be able to have this extra advantage in

INTIMATE FEMININE HYGIENE

Easier..... Less Embarrassing to Use. So Powerful yet So Harmless!

Greaseless Suppository Assures Continuous Medication For Hours

Young wives are mighty enthusiastic about Zonitors. This higher type intimate feminine cleanliness is one of the MOST EFFECTIVE methods ever discovered. Zonitors are by far more convenient and less embarrassing to use — SO POWERFULLY GERMICIDAL yet ABSOLUTELY safe to the most delicate tissues. They're positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-smarting.

Easy To Carry If Away From Home

Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories. They are not the type that quickly melt away. Instead, they release powerful germicidal properties for hours. And they never leave any sticky residue.

No Tell-Tale Odor

Zonitors do not 'mask' offending odor. They actually DESTROY it. Help guard against infection. Zonitors kill every germ they touch. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE Zonitors immediately kill every reachable germ and keep them from multiplying. Buy Zonitors today! At any drugstore.

Zonitors

(Each sealed in separate glass vial)

FREE: Mail this coupon today for free booklet sent in plain wrapper. Reveals frank intimate facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMR-29, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Blonde Mothers and Children

USE NEW SHAMPOO WITH Andium!

WASHES HAIR Lighter, Shinier—SAFELY

To keep those sunny golden curls light and lovely, Mothers—use BLONDEX, the shampoo with ANDIUM, made specially for blondes. BLONDEX instantly removes the dull, dingy film that makes hair darker. Brightens faded hair. Gives it extra lightness and SHINE. Safe for children. Takes only 11 minutes at home. Get BLONDEX at 10c, drug and dept. stores.

"IT'S EASY—IT'S FUN IT'S PROFITABLE" SELL GREETING CARDS Says C. L. EVANS

31 new boxes. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Write today for FREE Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery samples, FREE 32-page catalog and feature All Occasion Samples ON APPROVAL. Special Offers.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONAL STATIONERY

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS North Abington 23, Mass.

STAMMER?

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 48 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 4910, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your favorite photo

NEW SILK FINISH • GOLD TOOLED FRAME

Just to get acquainted, we will make you a FREE 5x7 enlargement of any picture or negative and mount it in a handsome gold tooled frame. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes, and clothing for information on having this enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil.

SEND NO MONEY. Send your most cherished photo or negative now, accept your beautifully framed enlargement when it arrives, and pay postman only 19c for frame plus small handling and mailing charge. If you are not completely satisfied, return the enlargement within 10 days and your money will be refunded. But you may keep the handsome frame as a gift for promptness. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. M-71, Hollywood 38, Cal.

blue-green eyes. He has thick eyebrows. His features are not regular but his face is lively and interesting. Like Gregory Peck, who is not actually a pretty man, young Clift has the kind of dark handsomeness which photographs extraordinarily well.

"I have never been married or engaged, and currently I am not involved with anyone," he will, with some reluctance, assure you. "I like to travel. I like to read—Ernest Hemingway is one of my favorites. I like to sail and swim—but I'd hate to have a house with a swimming pool."

He enjoys staying up late at night, listening to music or rehearsing the next day's scenes. He'd like to become a director someday, but first he wants to prove himself as an actor. When he works, he likes to get up as late as possible. He rarely takes a drink, smokes very little, and never chews gum or munches candy or popcorn at the movies.

He likes loose, casual clothes, chooses them hurriedly, and is not fussy about food. He enjoys a good steak with all the trimmings, lamb chops and fresh peas, and very little dessert. He disposes of six eggs and two cups of coffee for breakfast. Salads are his favorite lunchtime dish.

Now, since there are possibly several thousand young actors who would cheerfully risk their necks for the chances Montgomery Clift daily throws away, it might be a good idea to examine why this fellow is so "stubborn."

no newcomer . . .

To begin with, although his fame has just burst out of Hollywood with skyrocketing acclaim, Monty Clift is far from new to the business of acting.

Some ten years ago, aged 18, Monty climbed the long steps to the top of the Theatre Guild building in New York for an interview with the celebrated actor Alfred Lunt.

He read some lines for Mr. Lunt.

"Hmmmm," said Mr. Lunt, "I think I had better introduce you to Miss Linnie."

Miss Lynn Fontanne came in, heard Monty read, "hmmed" and thought she had better introduce him to Robert Sherwood, the celebrated playwright.

Monty cannot recall Mr. Sherwood's part of the conversation, because there ensued a discussion about another candidate for the part in There Shall Be No Night.

Monty insisted that the other lad should get the part, and Miss Fontanne, Mr. Lunt and Mr. Sherwood agreed with him. But several days later he received a telephone call at home offering him the part and his career as a professional actor was firmly established.

He says now with a smile: "Honestly, I can't remember that I had much emotion about it. You know how matter-of-factly kids take things. I can't remember much about the part, or anything amusing that 'Miss Linnie' or Alfred Lunt said or did.

"You see, I had done a little work with a little theater in Florida, where my family spent the winter one time; and 'way back when I was 13, I appeared on Broadway for the first time in Flyaway Home with Thomas Mitchell. I never dreamed then that I'd land on the same stage with Lunt and Fontanne."

From then on, Monty played in such notable successes as The Skin of Our Teeth and The Searching Wind, and became sold, hard and fast, on the notion that he was an actor.

His father, William Brooks Clift, a stock and bond broker, was a patient man who hoped that his son would get over this foolishness and go to school. There was a distressing period between Monty's 17th and 18th years when he was completely out of work, and it looked for a while as if he would have to give up and attend Harvard with his brother, W. B. Clift, Jr. His twin sister went to Bryn Mawr College.

But by dint of holding out and by avoiding family arguments whenever he could, Monty managed to avoid the perils of Harvard and to stay with the stage. Still, the family was patient.

Now here's a curious thing. Most child actors are prodigies who are promoted, coached and inspired by their mothers. But Mrs. Clift never once sought work for her son, and so far as Monty can recall now, was never backstage when he worked as a small boy on Broadway. He went to and from the theater by himself and made his own arrangements. Obviously, this explains a large measure of his independence today.

Another thing, for the record: the report is out that Monty is independent because his father is in Wall Street and money is no consideration. Monty laughs about this.

"My father isn't a big Wall Street operator," he explains. "He isn't rich, never was, never made large sums of money, and probably won't. Apparently I won't either."

What motivates this Montgomery Clift is pure professionalism—a rare motivation in any line of work.

"I want freedom, and believe me, it isn't self-esteem that makes me operate the way I do," he explains earnestly. "Look, I want to grow. I simply want to be free to do the play or the picture that means something to me, that I can do best. Considering the long career that an actor can have, it's understandable what I'm after, isn't it?"

The call of Hollywood almost sent Monty out west in 1946. He went out at the request of producer Milton Sperling, who was then releasing his pictures through Warner Brothers. He was given a test, but halfway through it realized he wasn't right for the part. He did finish the test, but when he got to his hotel he packed and left on the next train for New York.

Montgomery Clift's reputation for being hard to handle started right there. Script after script was given him to read—22, in fact—and they all came back with a neatly pencilled memo, as terse as most of his conversation. "Sorry, not for me, thank you."

that's hollywood!

To Alton Cook, who was interviewing him, Peter Lind Hayes told how Alan Hale won an argument with a producer who doubted Hale's drawing power.

"Hale insisted that if he walked down any New York street, everyone would recognize him and turn and look at him. A bet was made and they started down the street, the producer about ten feet behind Hale to watch what happened. Sure enough, everyone turned and looked at Hale.

"The producer walking behind, however, couldn't see that Hale was sticking his tongue out at everyone who passed."

Irving Hoffman in
The Hollywood Reporter

It was Howard Hawks who finally induced him to try Hollywood again.

Hawks had seen the test Monty made for Milton Sperling and he liked it. He called Monty long distance and tried to explain what he wanted. That was for Monty to come right back and appear in a picture called Red River. But Monty wasn't having any. Whereupon Mr. Hawks, clinging to the receiver, started telling him the story of the film.

"I'm sorry," said Monty, "I don't think—"

Then the producer had a good idea. It is very hard to tell the plot of a picture over the telephone, especially that of such an epic as Red River. Instead, Hawks wired Montgomery Clift a sum of money to pay expenses for him to come to Hollywood and listen. If he didn't like it then, he could go back to New York. No promises made, no contract to be signed—Mr. Clift was free to do as he pleased.

Monty flew out, liked the story as told by Howard Hawks and made the picture. After that he felt he needed a vacation, so he hopped off to Europe. It was while he was staying in Switzerland that he was paged to play the role of the GI in The Search. He made it, and although it was his second picture, it was the first to be publicly released.

Monty's brother is in the export business and lives in New York, and his twin sister, now Mrs. Robert C. McGinnis, lives in Dallas, Texas. Monty is enthusiastic about her two beautiful young children, Mary Blair McGinnis and Edward Campbell McGinnis. Between plays and movies, and whenever else he can, he likes to hop over to Dallas merely to be able to play with his young niece and nephew.

The sister, incidentally, is beautiful. While on location for Red River one of the company asked Monty why she wasn't in the movies, too.

"She's not interested," said Monty with a smile. "She's the sensible twin."

Literally, the man has no hobbies.

"Why, I could list tennis and poker and sailing, things like that that everybody does," Monty will tell you. "But I'm just average at them and do them just now and then, like anybody else. I could say reading is a hobby, but I'm under the impression that almost everybody reads in this literate age. . . . Well, I do play records as a kind of a hobby—Crosby records."

Matter of fact, Crosby is a great celebrity to Monty. When he first came to Hollywood, he wanted to see the old Groaner on stage. It did not occur to him that since he worked for the same studio it would be absurdly easy for him to obtain tickets, sit in the sponsor's booth, hear the show in style, and meet Bing for a snack later.

Nope, none of that. Monty stood in line for tickets, looking extremely unimpressive in his unpressed suit, and barely managed to get a seat in the back row. He hasn't met Bing yet.

In New York, which he considers home, Monty maintains a small sub-let apartment at Lexington and 55th Street. Its one room is so small and so crowded that he bangs his shins on the furniture grabbing and stumbling every time the telephone rings.

As he left Hollywood the other day, he was told that all his fan mail had been delivered there, as he had requested. Bales of it.

"That'll be a problem," Monty said seriously. "I never saw fan mail before. Imagine all those people writing!"

According to preview cards received when Red River was first shown, and according to the way that unlooked-at fan mail is stacking up, Monty Clift is easily the town's hottest heart-throb. "A composite of Gary Cooper, Charles Boyer and Clark Gable," one excited young woman described him.

Miriam Hopkins, who also appears in The Heiress, heard about that and flung it up to Monty.

"What would you rather be," she asked, "Cooper in dress clothes or Boyer in dungarees?"

Monty considered the question. "I'd rather be back on the stage, Miriam," he told her. THE END

LUCKY IN LOVE

(Continued from page 42)

smiled, raising his eyes to the sparkling spun-glass doll with her spangled wings and golden halo. "Why, that angel's almost as pretty as you, angel."

But then, even a far less biased spectator than her husband could easily mistake Jeanne Crain for an angel.

And if old Kris Kringle were scouting Hollywood for a girl to personify the "angel on the top," Jeanne, having rounded out three heavenly years, as of last New Year's Eve and the Brinkmans' third anniversary, would be perfect for the part.

Three years would be a long time to hang by your toes or to wait for a street-car. But three years in which all your dreams came true—three years that brought love, a successful marriage, a beautiful new home, the handsomest, smartest baby in the whole world, with a second on the way—all that and three outstanding picture successes that put you right up there in the illustrious company of the screen's really big actresses . . . well, three brimful years like that zoom by with the speed of an Army jet showing off.

But as thrilling an event as it was, when Jeanne and Paul celebrated their third anniversary on New Year's Eve, the occasion was a quiet one. New Year's Eve in Hollywood is a highly glamorous night in a highly glamorous town. High-tariff restaurants and clubs along the fabulous Sunset strip are filled with celebrities. There are big parties in private homes, too, where other filmland notables gather festively.

Knowing what a thrill Jeanne gets out of receiving a party invitation, Paul slipped a note under her plate at breakfast, the day after they'd decided to stay at home New Year's Eve. Opening it, Jeanne read: "Mr. Paul Brinkman requests the pleasure of Mrs. Paul Brinkman's company on Friday evening, December 31, in honor of their third anniversary. Cocktails (for Mr. Brinkman) at 7. Milk punch for Mrs. Brinkman. R. S. V. P. by kissing Mr. Brinkman on the forehead immediately."

Of course, their reason for spending their third anniversary quietly before their own fireplace was a double one. First of all, it makes Paul, who is an expectant father, very nervous to take Jeanne away from home when she's about to have a baby. If it's a boy, it'll be Michael Anthony. If it's a girl, it'll be Diane Jeanne. His anxiety starts early and continues right up to the door of the delivery room. Secondly, the Brinkmans' fireplace is a lovely one and they'd rather sit, lie or just sprawl in front of it than have a ringside table at the swankiest night club. Just stay

DO YOU WANT LONGER HAIR?

MAKE THIS EASY 7-DAY TEST NOW!

THEN TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM ON YOUR HAIR ★ ★ Helps Prevent Brittle Ends Breaking Off

Just try this System on your HAIR seven days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR that can so often capture Love and Romance for you.

● Hair May Get Longer

when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded by supplementing the natural hair oils, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Amazing. JUELENE is not a hair restorative. Just try the easy JUELENE System 7 days and let your mirror prove results. Your money back if not delighted. See if Juelene's tendency to help your hair to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before — in just one short week helps your hair gain its normal natural beauty.

SEND NO MONEY—Fully Guaranteed

Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. Then let your mirror PROVE the thrilling results. JUELENE comes in 2 Forms ☐Pomade, ☐Liquid. SEND FOR IT TODAY! C.O.D. $1.00 plus Government charges. It is fully guaranteed. Money back if you're not delighted. Send for it today—sure!

JUEL CO., 4727 N. Damen, Dept. K603, CHICAGO 25, ILL.

PENNIES WANTED

WE Pay $10.00 EACH for certain LINCOLN Pennies

Indian Heads $50.00 ALL U.S. coins Wanted.
Send 10¢ for catalogue listing prices we pay.
FRANKLIN COIN CO. MISHAWAKA 58, IND.

Older folks say it's common sense...

ALL-VEGETABLE LAXATIVE

NATURE'S REMEDY (NR) TABLETS —A purely vegetable laxative to relieve constipation without the usual griping, sickening, perturbing sensations, and does not cause a rash. Try NR—you will see the difference. Uncoated or candy coated—their action is dependable, thorough, yet gentle as millions of NR's have proved. Get a 25c box and use as directed.

Nature's Remedy NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT

FUSSY STOMACH? RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION, GAS AND HEARTBURN

FOR THE TUMMY!

Calling all Men...
STRIP-TEASE NECKTIE
THAT GLOWS IN THE DARK
"SHE LOSES HER CLOTHES AS SHE GLOWS IN THE DARK"

BY DAY

Astounding new STRIP-TEASE NECKTIE is the latest rage from coast to coast! Spectacular new novelty tie creation for men who demand the distinctive and unusual! Brings gasps of sheer wonder, thrilling admiration the first time you wear it! By day, smart, handsome tie that is unrivalled for sheer beauty and extravagant good looks, by night a glorious goddess of light revealed for all to see! She loses her clothes as she glows in the dark! A glorious, gleaming blonde beauty revealed in daring pose in the briefest of costumes, mysterious and magnificent! Write today and if you don't agree this outstanding new necktie sensation is the most exciting tie you've ever seen—it costs you absolutely nothing.

BY NIGHT

SEND NO MONEY—

Special Introductory Offer

Send your name and address, receive startling new Strip-Tease Necktie by return mail. Pay postman just $1.64 (3 for $4.79) plus postage and keep 10 days. If in that time you aren't thrilled and delighted, return for money back without question! Write to GLOW IN THE DARK TIE CO., DEPT. 766S 215 N. MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO 1, ILL.

EAR NOISES?

If you suffer from those miserable ear noises and are Hard of Hearing due to catarrh of the head, write us NOW for proof of the good results our simple home treatment has accomplished for a great many people. NOTHING TO WEAR. Many past 70 report ear noises gone and hearing fine. Send NOW for proof and 30 days trial offer.

THE ELMO CO., Dept. 115, Davenport, Iowa

Earn Extra Money! Full, Spare Time!

Make many EXTRA DOLLARS with our new, sell-on-sight Plastic Line! Tablecloths, Aprons, Combination Shopping Bags; many other lovely, fast-selling items, novelties. Postal brings free details. Write today, HURRY!
ROYALTY SALES CO., Box 748, Passaic 2, N. J.

DRAW for MONEY

Be An Artist!

Trained Artists are Capable of Earning $60, $75 and more a Week. It's pleasant and interesting to study Art the W.S.A. way. COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING, CARTOONING all in ONE complete up to date home study course. No previous Art experience necessary—hundreds have profited by our practical methods since 1914. TWO ART OUTFITS furnished. Full information in FREE BOOK, "Art for Pleasure and Profit." G. I. APPROVED

FREE BOOK gives details

WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
Studio 802R, 1115 15 St., N. W.
Washington 5, D. C.

Name.....
Street..... AGE.....
City..... Zone..... State.....

there and reminisce about what a supercolossal three years it's been! . . .

Oddly enough, their first date was on a New Year's Eve, two years to the day before their marriage. Paul took her to a party at the home of some friends in Bel Air. And that was the night he said to himself, "Mr. Brinkman, you have just found Mrs. Brinkman."

The same friends repeat the party every year. And until this past New Year's the Brinkmans had gone there every year since they met, except the night of their wedding.

On the Eve of 1948, Jeanne and Paul slipped away from the gathering early to drink a toast in their own new home to future New Years as happy as the ones they'd shared so far.

The party had been fun, but all evening they'd looked forward to this special celebration. Before starting out, Paul had put a bottle of champagne, bought especially for the occasion, in the refrigerator. While Jeanne drew back the draperies from the high windows flanking the big stone fireplace and looked down over Hollywood, gala in a million multicolored lights, Paul stirred the banked fire alive and dancing.

"And now for the toast," he announced, heading for the refrigerator. "We'll have to hurry if it's going to be official . . . just 10 minutes to 12."

"Well, if it's really going to be official, Ba-ba has to be in on it," Jeanne said. "It's just time for his midnight feeding, anyway." ("Ba-ba" is Paul, Jr., and he manufactured his own nickname.)

"Of course!" said Paul. "You can't drink a toast to a new family without the head man. See if he's awake. I'll get the champagne—and, in my expert way, heat his bottle."

And so Paul, Jr., drank his first toast, taking his formula straight. (Evidently it went right to his head, for he fell asleep in the middle of the ceremony.)

looking backward . . .

Reminiscing over all the good fortune this third anniversary marks, Jeanne and Paul have a way of singling out the little things . . . the mingled scent of Christmas spruce and incense in the quiet of the church where they were married . . . the simple, beautiful words of the wedding service when they knelt before the priest that New Year's Eve morning three years ago. . . . "I, Jeanne, take thee, Paul, for my lawful wedded husband . . . for better, for worse . . . in sickness and in health." . . . Furnace Creek Inn, where they spent their honeymoon. . . the desert sun rising against the purple hills and the wonderful hot cakes and syrup in the dilapidated old diner in Death Valley. . . .

In the three years since her marriage, Jeanne has scored three of her biggest box-office hits in Margie, You Were Meant For Me and Apartment For Peggy. But the Brinkmans have crowded a lot of living into those three years, too. Even when Jeanne was away on location, Paul always managed to fly up North or East or wherever the company would be working, for a day or two.

The Brinkmans have recently completed their modern redwood and fieldstone farmhouse in the beautiful Outpost section overlooking Hollywood. It's a very fine house and equipped with scads of high-powered time-and-labor-saving devices that Paul, who is an engineer, installs as quickly as he thinks them up. Paul is gadget-happy, as he cheerfully admits, and is now working on a window-drapery control for the bedroom which will operate from the bed. Object: cheery morning sun without putting a toe outside the covers.

Earl's Pearls

■ Ed Gardner defines opera: "When a guy gets stabbed, instead of bleeding, he sings."

■ Milton Berle: "I saw a woman knitting three socks and asked her why. She said, 'I just got a letter from my son in the Army. He said he's grown another foot.'"

■ Out on the Knock On Any Door set in Hollywood, a buttinsky told Humphrey Bogart, "You're not as tough as you are in the movies." Bogie walked away growling, "And I'm not as polite as I am at home."

—Earl Wilson

The big sunny nursery wing on the house, which couldn't be built before, owing to wartime restrictions, is rapidly nearing completion. Jeanne herself has designed the murals for it. One day on the patio she was working away at the early sketches for them while the Pauls, big and little, were sun-bathing. After a while, big Paul arose and stood by the drawing board upon which her crayons were busily creating demure little pink-and-blue angels.

"How do you like them?" she asked.

"Hmmm," he said, "I dunno. . . . They're very nice. . . . But, honey, don't you think maybe you're sort of getting too definite a 'girl' feeling into them? I mean—well, maybe it's going to be another boy."

"Oh," said Jeanne, "I don't see why you should worry about that. You know we're going to have a houseful, assorted, one of these days."

Just then the telephone rang and Jeanne went off to answer it. It was a long conversation, and it was several minutes before she returned to the patio. Paul was again stretched out absorbing sunbeams.

Jeanne picked up her crayon—and gasped. All the little angels on the drawing board now sported football gear, cowboy outfits and policemen uniforms.

"What's the matter, darling?" murmured Paul.

"Now, who could have done this?" inquired Jeanne, hands on hips.

Paul craned his neck and frowned at the drawing board.

"Mice," he theorized.

"Well," sighed Jeanne, getting to work with her eraser, "I still love you, anyhow."

The completion of the nursery wing can't come a minute too soon, according to Paul. The overflow of baby accessories, including a bassinette and a pram, and the toys outgrown by Paul, Jr.—now a strapping young lad of 20 months—have spilled over into big Paul's work-room, crowding his gun collection into a small corner. Since most of the gun collection was stolen some time ago, Jeanne feels that the storage problem has worked out very well. Paul suspects that the lady of the house may have engineered the whole business, robbery and all!

Jeanne calls Paul's workshop "Peggy's Apartment" because its piles of baby furniture and assorted and lumpy stacks of boxes could very well have been the inspiration for the Professor's attic before Peggy and her ex-GI husband transformed it into their home in Apartment For Peggy.

Paul insists Apartment For Peggy was in reality a sneak preview of what he has dubbed "Baby For Jeanne." As the young wife of an ex-GI student, Jeanne's costumes had to be padded to give an authentic touch to her make-believe state of expectancy. She neglected to mention this to Paul, until one day when he dropped by the studio for luncheon. Arriving first, he sat down at their favorite table to wait for her. After a moment, there she was, smiling and coming toward him. But it wasn't—it couldn't be Jeanne! Not this roly-poly ball of a girl, plumping down in the chair opposite him. He gazed at her open-mouthed. Jeanne caught on at once and shouted with laughter.

But Paul really had the last laugh weeks later, near the final shooting on Peggy. Stopping off at his office after she'd been to the doctor's, Jeanne was the one who looked a little incredulous and slightly dazed, as she reported to Paul: "He says I am!"

"Ah, ha!" he exclaimed. "I told you to keep out of those padded costumes, gal. That sort of thing's contagious.

"That's all right, though, angel," he consoled her between two bear hugs and a kiss on her nose. "It just goes to show how you really get right into the spirit of a role."

Typical of Jeanne's admirable old-fashioned ideas about wanting babies was her instinctive reluctance to have the news about the new one leak out in gossip before she had a chance to tell her friends and her studio. When her doctor gave her a list of the dozen-and-one vitamins and tonics and builder-uppers prescribed for today's young mothers-to-be, she commissioned Paul to round them up—quietly.

"Don't go to Schwab's," she cautioned. "Everybody knows you there. And don't get them all at the same drug store—that'd be a dead give-away. Sort of shop around, will you, dear?"

As always, Paul was off like a streak to do her bidding. But his imagination warmed to the intrigue of his mission, and instead of simply asking for each item, he embroidered the plot as he moved from pharmacy to pharmacy.

"I'd like to get some calcium tablets, please." Could he let it go at that? He could not. "Having trouble with my teeth," he confided chattily to the druggist, tapping his strong white uppers with a forefinger.

Elaborating in this vein at each stop along his drugstore safari, Brinkman, the dramatist, came a cropper when he asked an elderly lady clerk for a specific iodine compound.

"I'm anemic," he explained dejectedly.

"Anemic?" she repeated hopefully. "Well, young man, I have something much better for that. You take this bottle of Wingbottom's Wonder Tonic. My brother was anemic, too, and it did him a world of good."

Murmuring something like perhaps he ought to see a doctor, Brinkman, the realist, beat a hasty exit, summarily finishing his pharmaceutical shopping elsewhere. And with no further ad libbing. Reaching home and triumphantly dumping his loot in Jeanne's lap, he counted 11 assorted bottles and packets in the great Brinkman undercover pill roundup.

Paul and the vitamins . . . Jeanne sketching nursery murals in a paint-daubed smock, with a blob of cherub blue on her chin . . . evenings by a fire . . . home movies of a little boy with brown eyes like his daddy's . . . maid's night-out barbecues for two . . . Ba-ba's newest and sturdiest tooth . . . the cuddly white lamb waiting in the white-skirted bassinette for its new owner . . . these—according to a couple of experts named Jeanne and Paul Brinkman—are the little things that make for great anniversaries.

But this attitude leads to false rumors like the one started by a hotel clerk in San Francisco where the Brinkmans enjoyed a short holiday not so long ago. Observing them wander off, hand in hand and oblivious to the world in general and the people in the lobby in particular, he winked at a lounging bell boy.

"Honeymooners," observed the wisey behind the desk. "I can spot 'em every time." THE END

The screen story of Jeanne Crain's latest movie, Letter To Three Wives, is a feature of the February issue of SCREEN STORIES magazine.

THREE LOVES THAT THRILLED THE WORLD

(Continued from page 29)

never made of papier maché. I won't go into the amazingly intelligent, level-headed, down-to-earth way George and Gertrude Temple raised Shirley and gave her the character to ward off the very real dangers of becoming an artificial personality. But I saw it—we all did—pay off when Shirley Temple suddenly bloomed as a young woman in love—seeing what she wanted, knowing what she wanted, getting what she wanted and finding real love and happiness far beyond the kind she ever played before a camera.

What Shirley wanted wasn't a foreign title, or a glamor playboy or a millionaire social snob—although she certainly could have had her pick of those one-way streets to false love and unhappiness if she'd tossed one coy, flirting look around. But Shirley wasn't interested. She didn't shop around or dangle hearts from her fickle fingers. The fact that she was Shirley Temple, the world's most treasured valentine in person, didn't warp her direct mind or honest heart. Jack Agar was the first and only true love of her life.

He was a buck private when Shirley first looked up into his blue eyes, in his strong, unsophisticated young face—and she knew love when she saw it. He wasn't clever and flashy or snappy with a fast line of bedazzling chatter. He was shy, modest and reserved. He hadn't a famous name, or too much money, but he did have the same solid American background that Shirley had, the same sincerity and sweetness (yep, men have it too). He was her match in every way—handsome, well-bred, manly, real. He was 22, Shirley was 15. But Juliet was less than that when she died for Romeo's love. Shirley was 16 when Jack slipped an engagement ring on her third finger, left hand, 17 when a wedding band joined it.

Too young? She was grown up—birthdays not counting—after they'd looked in each other's eyes. Shirley had been out with boys before, dated decorously around in her sheltered set. But the day Ann Gallery, Zasu Pitts' daughter and Shirley's neighbor, brought her friend from Chicago to Shirley's pool for a swim, was the day that changed her life.

There wasn't any pretentious hullabaloo about their courtship. You couldn't make much ballyhoo of the absolutely typical, tender, boy-and-girl romance they lived, as so many other couples lived it in those

NOW — HOME COSMETIC For GRAY HAIR!

Give your gray hair natural-looking color again, yourself, in the privacy of your own home. Mary T. Goldman's, wonderful clear liquid cosmetic, stops gray hair worries for thousands! So easy! Simply comb Mary T. Goldman's through hair. Won't bother wave, nor spoil hair texture. Guaranteed to give gray hair the youthful-looking shade you want or your money back. Get Mary T. Goldman's today at your drug or department store. Accept no substitute!

FREE TRIAL: Send coupon below for free trial kit.

MARY T. GOLDMAN CO.
W-11 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul 2, Minn.
Send FREE sample. (Check color desired.)
☐ Black ☐ Dark Brown
☐ Light Brown ☐ Medium Brown
☐ Blonde ☐ Auburn
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

ITCH CHECKED IN A JIFFY

Sufferers from the torturing itch caused by eczema, pimples, scales, scabies, athlete's foot, "factory" itch, and other itch troubles are praising cooling, liquid D. D. D. Prescription. This time-proved medication—developed by Dr. D. D. Dennis—positively relieves that cruel, burning itch. Greaseless and stainless. Soothes and comforts even the most intense itching in a jiffy. A 35c trial bottle proves its merits or your money back. Ask your druggist today for D. D. D. Prescription.

"Good-Luck" Bracelet Given Away

Girls believe it "good-luck" to wear this charm bracelet. It has fancy chain in 14-k electroplate finish with sure grip clasp. The charms are most attractive—consisting of a Four-leaf-clover, Bluebird, Wishbone and Horse-shoe. GIVEN for selling only 4 Rosebud Salve at 25c a box returning the $1.00. Order 4 salve—Send No Money. (We will mail your Bracelet and 4 salve NOW if you send $1.00 with order).
ROSEBUD PERFUME CO. Box 20, WOODSBORO, MARYLAND.

Marvel
$3.50 WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women
At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD
Free Booklet, Marvel Co., 602 East St., New Haven, Ct.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in EVERYDAY CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

Show rich Satin and Velour Greeting Cards. Never before offered. Get easy orders FAST! Astounding value—16 for $1 Up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery, Floral Charmettes, Napkins, 25 other Assortments retail 60c to $1.00 . . . SAMPLES ON APPROVAL. No experience needed. Start now—earn all year 'round. WRITE TODAY!

Satin and Velour Designs

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 95B, St. Louis 3, Mo.

BE A Nurse
MAKE $35-$45 A WEEK

Practical nurses are needed in every community . . . doctors rely on them . . . patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 50th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 232, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
*Name*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____ *Age*_____

Secret..... of Longer HAIR!

IMPROVE APPEARANCE OF YOUR HAIR IN "ONE" APPLICATION OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

All men adore girls with Longer Hair. Amazing method imported from Paris sold exclusively by us, helps make your Hair Longer. HAIR MIRACLE adds body, brings new life to hair injured by sun, wind, dyes or bleaches. Stops dry brittle ends from breaking, allowing hair to grow longer. NOT GREASY OR STICKY! Sensation of the Age. Thrill to new joy of romance & Love with beautiful Longer Hair. SEND NO MONEY! Order now. 2 months' supply $1.49 plus C.O.D. postage & tax. Pay postman. Money refunded in one week if not satisfied.

KAY EVANS of Calif., 150 Powell St., Dept. D-2, San Francisco, Calif.

New Easy Way to GET $25

Show Doehla All-Occasion Greeting Cards, Stationery—to friends, neighbors, co-workers. Make up to 50¢ on each $1 box. So lovely they sell on sight! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—FREE BOOK shows any beginner how to make money! Write for 2 sample boxes on approval. If friends don't snap them up, return at our expense. HARRY DOEHLA COMPANY, Studio X-8, Fitchburg, Mass.

FREE SAMPLES
"Name Imprinted" Stationery. Sell it on sight for only $1 per box.

Get Well QUICKER
From Your Cough Due to a Cold

FOLEY'S Honey & Tar Cough Compound

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR

TEMPORARY RELIEF IS NOT ENOUGH
Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure unwanted hair is FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the Mahler Method safely and efficiently. Used successfully all over the world for 50 years.
Send 6c coin or stamps TODAY for booklet, "NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU."

Mahler's, Inc., Dept. 36B, East Providence, R.I.

How to Make Money with Simple Cartoons

A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address

FREE BOOK

CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 432 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

Have FUN—and MAKE MONEY, Too!

Sell Everyday Cards

You'll enjoy showing these adorable Greeting Cards. And you'll enjoy all the extra cash you quickly make, too! Friends and others will be delighted with smart Birthday, Get-Well, Secret Pal, Kiddy, Easter and Relative Assortments. At only $1.00 for a box of 14 Folders, they'll buy in a jiffy. You keep up to 50c PROFIT! Also Gift Wrappings, Printed Stationery and Notes. Send for SAMPLES ON APPROVAL. DO IT NOW!
MIDWEST CARD COMPANY, 415 N. 8th ST. LOUIS 1, MO.
Dept. 17-K

FREE TO ALL WHO NEED MONEY

I'll help you get extra cash to fill your pocketbook—to live on. Supply my food and household products to regular customers. No previous experience or capital needed. I'll send FREE an assortment of fine, full-size products to test and show. Start near your home full or spare time. Gift premiums, big monthly premiums. Rush your name and home address today for free outfit. Hurry!

BLAIR DEPT. 360-EB, Lynchburg, Va.

REAL MIDGET RADIO
CARRY IN POCKET OR PURSE
Works on new crystal diode —NEEDS NO TUBES, BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG-INS." Plays for years for nothing! Easy to use! Classy unbreakable red plastic cabinet.
Receives Stations up to 25-50 Miles. Guaranteed! Send Only $1.00
(bill, ck., m.o.) and pay postman $2.00 C.O.D. plus postage or send $3.00 and we pay postage. SENT COMPLETE, READY TO PLAY on simple attachment. Has personal phone. JUST THE MIDGET FOR YOU TO LISTEN AT HOME, IN BED, IN HOTELS, OFFICE, SCHOOL, MOST ANYWHERE ANYTIME! Name Initials in Gold on any radio if you wish, free of extra charge for a limited time only—wonderful gifts for everyone! Amazingly low-priced! Rush your orders.
MIDWAY CO., DEPT. TMM-2, KEARNEY, NEBR.

frantic days. Letters from Army camps from Jack; and too, too short leaves for visits; sweet-sorrow partings, eased by plans and promises. They'd promised Shirley's parents to wait two years—but when Jack thought he might sail for duty in Europe, those sensible Temples saw no reason for denying a marriage they knew was right and a happiness that Shirley Temple, young as she was but grown-up in her emotions, deserved.

I suppose there have been more elegant and lavishly-bedecked brides than Shirley Temple as she stood in her simple ivory satin wedding dress at the altar of the Wilshire Methodist church that wedding day—but in my memory I don't recall ever seeing a sweeter one. In her dainty, still doll-like figure, too, there lived the earnest hopes and dreams of every girl in the world as she stood beside the handsome young soldier who adored her, and heard the minister intone, "Dearly beloved, we are gathered here. . . ."

It wasn't the most fashionable church she could have picked; in fact, it wasn't fashionable at all. Shirley Temple had picked it, not for swank, but because it was big—where more of the people who had loved her as a girl could see her become a bride. The altar was high and she liked that too. "So my friends can see us get married—all the way." Proud of her love, she was, and wanting all who could to see her in her happiness.

Jack Agar didn't marry a gossamer package of glamour or a fictitious legend. He married a very real girl.

Since that day I've watched with interest that love in the "ever after" and it's stood the test—from the time Shirley and Jack ran down the side steps and drove away glowing, in a car whose door handle wouldn't work. From the big reception at Shirley's old home, where all who knew her stepped up to plant a kiss and shake a hand. From their modest honeymoon in Santa Barbara to the home they soon made out of Shirley's girlhood playhouse. Through the expectant bliss of young motherhood before her twentieth birthday, and through the adult problems that married love has solved—such as Jack's own future and career as an actor himself. When David Selznick dangled an actor's future before him, there was the question: Should he go on and finish college or tackle a screen career?

movie career for jack . . .

Shirley pointed out, as a good wife should, both the advantages and disadvantages—but she told Jack he was the boss, it was his decision. ("But you could make a living a lot worse ways," she told him with her new wifely wisdom. "I ought to know.") So John decided—and played opposite his wife in Fort Apache. John Ford tells me he's sure to be a star.

But whether or not Jack and Shirley Agar become another pair of Lunts or not, isn't important. They have something much more important than mutual fame. They have mutual love—strong, young and sincere—and last Valentine's Day, as I gazed down into the sweet results of that love, little Linda Susan, cradled in her pink bassinette, I thought: This is the kind of love that makes the world go 'round, indeed. The fact that it blossomed right in and in spite of Hollywood makes it all the more wonderful to me.

The perfect, though tragic romance of Clark Gable and Carole Lombard was an entirely different sort of love—more adult and mature, but just as rich and strong and satisfying, even if it wasn't colored with Cupid's rosy young dream like Shirley and Jack Agar's. People write me all the time to ask, "When is Clark Gable going to get married again?"—and I can't answer them. I've asked Clark the same question to his handsome face time and again and got just a crooked grin from the King. I don't know any more than anyone else—and sometimes I wonder if Clark himself does. I think he probably will marry again, because he's a lonely man. Though I'm not sure but that a very large part of his heart rests forever on a Nevada mountainside where his perfect mate, Carole, lost her life—the first Hollywood star to give it in the service of her country during the war.

I know about the living room at Clark's ranch-house furnished just the way Carole left it. Clark has never allowed one stick of it to be rearranged. I know why he rushed into the Air Corps so swiftly—to cover his grief with action and impelled to risk his own life as Carole had hers. I know about the ruby clip—all they found of the mortal Carole Lombard in that lonely plane-crash pyre—which he himself found in the ashes, had mounted and still carries with him always. Yet, in fashioning a valentine in the memory of that great Hollywood love, I'd never edge it with sombre black; I'd trim it with the gayest colors I could find. For that was the kind of king and queen they were, and the theme song of their wonderful love was life and laughter.

in love with life . . .

Carole loved life and she lived it to the full. I've never known a girl who squeezed more living out of every moment and I knew Carole long before she ever knew and loved Clark Gable. She adored people, excitement, talk, action. I think that essential part of her, that hungry, vital all-out living side of her was what made Carole Lombard such a brilliant star. She was glowing and happy making other people happy, giving them fun, and that radiant exuberance sparkled through in every part she played.

I remember, and so does most of Hollywood, one party Carole staged in honor of William Rhinelander Stewart, the New York millionaire, at the Ocean Park fun pier. It was a walloping credit to her social leadership and personality power that she collected all the great glamor lords and ladies of the screen for that sailor-on-leave outing, broke their tinsel dignities to pieces and made them love it. Skirts whisked up over startled necks and glamor gowns tumbled on dusty boards, male star tailor's dummies shouted and yelled and reverted to their natural selves, to big kids, on that night.

I can still see Claudette Colbert sprawling in six different directions in the rolling tunnel of the fun house and Marlene Dietrich sent skittering on the whirl-around, skinning her million-dollar legs—abrasions she exhibited proudly for days, to prove she wasn't the austere Garbo-copy Josef Von Sternberg had made her. That party made Marlene and a host of other Hollywood stars real people and Carole chuckled to see it happen thus.

When Carole Lombard tackled anything it was with all her heart and soul—and that's the way she fell for Clark Gable, that's the way she made herself over to his style, staged a complete reverse, which, for a strong character like Carole, could have been worked only by the miracle that makes hearts beat faster on Valentine's Day.

I saw their first dramatic debut as a team. It was at a party—the last big one Carole Lombard ever threw her high tension energies into, the last one she wanted to attend. It was that famous White May Fair, the annual elite movie-world winter ball that she was selected to stage one year. As usual, she knocked herself out making it perfect and her theme was—all white for the ladies, every glamor gown snowy. It was easily the social event of Hollywood's year. And that was the night Norma Shearer crossed Carole up, with a feminine dagger thrust, by making a grand entrance in scarlet red—the only color gown there. (Bette Davis later used that incident for a striking scene in a swell movie of hers, Jezebel.) Carole turned whiter than her satin gown, swiftly picked up her skirts and left the ballroom. A big guy left the stag line and strode hurriedly after her. That was the first time Clark Gable took Carole Lombard home, and that was the night they fell in love.

Clark was truly Hollywood's king then. And Carole, with her slashing comedy-drama performances, was at the height of her career, too. She made news every minute. She was the screen's best-dressed woman, among its sharpest female wits, at the peak of her alabaster, violet-eyed beauty. She rated a fabulous salary, startled people by saying she was happy and privileged to pay her gigantic income tax. She was out in front, leading the parade, a fit mate for the king. Everyone who knew Carole loved her; everyone loved Gable, too—and when they loved each other it was a romance fit for the gods. Carole and Clark measured up, and matched. She saw to that.

gags and gaiety . . .

The theme of their merry courtship could have been taken from the title of a picture of Carole's, Nothing Sacred, that of their attraction from another, They Knew What They Wanted. Some of the outrageous pranks and fun they had with each other are still classics—the gags they tossed to and fro like a couple of big, happy kids. I remember one Christmas when Clark parked an ancient jalopy on the front yard of Carole's Hollywood home and she had to have a junk dealer come cart it off! They made news every day in wacky ways that were columnists' delights—but the biggest, most significant news was the way Carole made herself over to please the man she loved. The way her Paris gowns gave way to levis and riding breeches, her tailored suits to tweed jackets, sweaters, skirts and outdoor gear. Carole loved the open, and she loved Clark. She learned to shoot a gun, whip a bass rod, drive swift and long at the wheel, even climb up behind the king on his motorcycle.

They had both lived and loved before. But they found new youth and spirit together in a love such as neither had yet known. It was as if they'd never loved before—and they made as handsome, vital, electric a pair as I've ever seen together in Hollywood or anywhere else.

Carole deserted her big home on Hollywood Boulevard and together they planned and built Clark's dream ranch-house. Everything—she saw to that—was for a man: Huge, walk-in freeze rooms to hang whole deer carcasses, stables, kennels, deep leather chairs, gun racks, tool sheds and stalls for the fast cars and powerful tractors Clark loved. They had a pair of matched horses to ride, side by side, over the Malibu hills. They rigged up a special station wagon equipped for almost anything you'd want on a camping trip, double bunks and all. Carole, the party girl, turned into Clark's outdoor gal.

Her friends became his and his, hers. Carole loved Clark's dad, and insisted Clark find a place near the ranch for him. She loved to sit with Clark and Pop Gable, who died last year, late at night around the kitchen table, frying bacon and eggs, drinking bottles of beer and listening to the salty tales Pop would tell of his crazy kid, Clark. She went bass fishing with Clark and his pals at Lake Mead, back of Hoover Dam; she soon was shooting skeet up near his own high score; and Carole was the first lady gunner to go down into Mexico after ducks with her guy. They rolled all over Arizona, Nevada, and Oregon looking for a bigger, more rugged ranch. They had plans and dreams and team projects galore. They were both living and loving fully in perfect harmony in a perfect marriage.

Then Pearl Harbor shot up in flames.

Clark and Carole Gable had been married barely three blissful years when she flew East in the early war days to throw her dynamic gifts selflessly into the new cause, war bonds. Her mother, who traveled with her, and Clark's MGM publicity pal, Otto Winkler, tried to talk Carole out of taking the plane back home. It

Clark Gable and his ill-fated Carole at a Hollywood Greek Relief broadcast in February 1941 with Ann Rutherford, Dick Powell, Frank Morgan and a kid named Shirley Temple.

BRUSH AWAY
GRAY HAIR
AND LOOK 10 YEARS YOUNGER

• Now, at home, you can quickly tint telltale gray to natural-appearing shades—from lightest blonde to darkest black. Brownatone and a small brush does it—or your money back. Approved by thousands—Brownatone is guaranteed harmless when used as directed. No skin test needed. The principal coloring agent is a purely vegetable-derivative with iron and copper salts added for fast action. Cannot affect waving of hair. Lasting—does not wash out. Just brush or comb it in. One application imparts desired color. Simply retouch, as new gray appears. Easy to prove on a test lock of your hair. 75c and $1.75 at druggists. Get BROWNATONE today.

BROWNATONE—HOME HAIR COLORING

HEMSTITCHER

Hemstitch on any sewing machine with this handy attachment. Does two piece, criss-cross, inlaid, circular and hemstitching for pleats; also tucking, smocking and picoting. Makes rugs, comforters, slippers, etc. out of any material. Easy directions included

Both for $1.00

BUTTON HOLER

Makes button holes on your sewing machine instead of by hand. Also darns stockings, sews buttons, zippers; and can be used for quilting. Sews in any direction—front, back or sideways. SEND NO MONEY—Merely send your name, address and pay postman $1.00 plus postage on arrival. Or, send $1.00 with order, and we mail attachments postage paid. You risk nothing. Satisfaction guaranteed or $1.00 back

LELANE CO. Dept. DM29 Box 571 Kansas City 10, Mo.

CALLING FOR PRACTICAL NURSES!

EASY TO LEARN AT HOME

Help fill the need for Trained Practical Nurses in your community or travel. Wayne Training Plan, welcomed by doctors, prepares you for experience—at home in spare time. Many earn while learning. NO HIGH SCHOOL NEEDED. Ages 18 to 55 accepted. Nurses Outfit included. Easy payments. Information & sample of lessons Free. Write today.

Excellent Earning Opportunity for Full or Spare Time

Wayne School of Practical Nursing, Inc., 2301 N. Wayne Av. Desk K-37, Chicago 14, Ill.

THERE'S MONEY FOR You in PLASTICS

No Experience Necessary!

Here's CASH for you . . . easy! Show friends, neighbors amazing laundry-saving tablecloths, aprons, rainwear, babies' needs, etc. Tremendous demand. Sell on sight. BIG PROFITS, full or part time. Write for FREE Outfit.

LORAINE PRODUCTS, Dept. DM-97
411 So. Clinton Street Chicago 7, Illinois

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Use DERMOIL

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c. (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Cautions: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES. Box 3925 Strathmoor Station, Dept. 2209, Detroit 27, Michigan.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

Hair OFF Face Lips...Arms...Legs

Now Happy! I had ugly superfluous hair...was unloved...discouraged. Tried many things...even razors. Then I developed a simple, inexpensive method that brought satisfactory results. Its regular use helps thousands retain admiration, love, happiness. My FREE book about Superfluous Hair explains method, proves success. Mailed in plain envelope. Also TRIAL OFFER. Write MME. ANNETTE LANZETTE, P. O. Box 4040, Mdse. Mart. Dept. 510. Chicago, Ill.

SHORTHAND in 6 Weeks at Home

Famous Speedwriting system. No signs; no symbols, no machines; uses ABC's. Easy to learn; easy to write and transcribe. Fast preparation for a job. Surprisingly low cost. 100,000 taught by mail. Used in leading offices and Civil Service. Write for free booklet.
Speedwriting, Dept. 802-9, 55 W. 42 St., New York 18

WIN CASH CONTESTS

WIN next contest you enter. GENERAL CONTEST BULLETIN has helped others win. Big winners tell secrets, teach how to win BIG PRIZES. Lists current contests.
SEND 25c FOR SAMPLE COPY.
GENERAL CONTEST BULLETIN
1609 East 5th St. Dept. 104B Duluth 5, Minn.

FREE 24 PAGE CATALOG

STAMPED LINENS at ½ PRICE

Buy quality stamped goods direct from manufacturer—save one-half. Over 100 new items—pillow cases, seamless pillow tubing, show sheets, scarfs, bridge sets, luncheon sets, table cloths, show towels, bedspreads, aprons, infants' garments, imported Linens and Novelties. Complete embroidering instructions free. It's easy. Write:
MERRIBEE ART EMBROIDERY CO.
Dept. 236 22 W. 21st St., New York 10, N.Y.

High School Course at Home — Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.
American School, H-214, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

Design Smart Fashions

Fascinating work. Originate your own distinctive clothes. Our basic training provides excellent starting point for career. Learn at home—spare time. Send for FREE booklet today.
NATIONAL SCHOOL OF DRESS DESIGN
1315 So. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2362, Chicago 5, Ill.

LIKE to DRAW?

Use spare time at home preparing for profitable art career. A complete home study course with money back agreement. For details and talent test give age and occupation
AMERICAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL ART
DIVISION D, BOX 8066 • DALLAS 5, TEXAS

Nurses Needed Now! TRAIN AT HOME IN 12 WEEKS FOR BIG PAY

Earn while learning Practical NURSING. High school not needed. Age 16 to 60. Doctor's endorsement of this complete low-fee course. Prepare in 12 weeks for big pay and steady work, fine surroundings. Average lesson only $1.48. Easiest terms. FREE BOOKLET—send name now on penny postcard.

LINCOLN SCHOOL of PRACTICAL NURSING
Dept. 82, 4737 Broadway Ave., Chicago 40, Ill.

was overloaded. But she knew that at the Los Angeles Airport a big, black-haired, grinning guy would be waiting to sweep her off the step and wrap her in his arms. So she hastened aboard. . . .

When the end came, I know, what Carole was thinking of was her guy, Clark, out in Hollywood, waiting to meet her.

They never found anything mortal of her—except that ruby clip Clark still carries with him—although he stalked the blackened canyon for days and nights with the rescue party, sleepless, with red-rimmed, hollow eyes, silent and tearless in his grief. . . .

That's been seven years ago now, and they say seven years is a full chapter in any man's life. It is in Clark Gable's, too. I hope he goes on to a new one.

But I wonder, on this Valentine's Day, if there will ever be for him a chapter dedicated so completely to the heart—so perfectly, so ideally as it was with Carole Lombard, the love of his life.

undramatic devotion . . .

But deep devotion is not necessarily dramatic—even in Hollywood, where that's the town specialty—nor does it inevitably follow the primrose path that fairy princesses and prince charmings tread. In one Hollywood home shared by two of the most publicly spotlighted and privately plain people that I know—Betty Grable and Harry James—dwells as great a love and understanding as ever blessed a pair.

Yet it isn't spectacular or showy at all. True, it was the combination of a glitter girl whose looks and legs made her a wolf-whistle wherever her picture was pinned—and a brassy trumpeter whose name personified the strident up-to-the-minute blasts and beats of red-hot jive and jazz. A high kick and a hot lick! Yet that's not the real Betty and Harry—and it never was, to everyone's surprise.

She met him not in Hollywood but Chicago, that cradle of American dance and rhythm. Harry was tooting out his golden notes, as the new king of swing, at the College Inn, Chicago's famous café where great bandleaders have held forth ever since jazz came up the Mississippi. Betty was displaying her twin beauties and ivory smile at the Chicago Theatre on a personal appearance. After one post-performance visit to the College Inn, she headed there every night—and she took her mama along every time, too, which might have been a tip-off. From there the scenario progressed to Hollywood, just as it has in a score of musical movies, but the twist was—wartime, the Hollywood Canteen—with Harry James sending sweet notes for the service boys on Monday nights and Betty giving her Hollywood glamor there the very same night of the week. Then they made a picture together as Harry James' radio fame inevitably led him before Hollywood cameras. Boy and girl who met 'way back in show business found love and happiness at the rainbow's end—that's the plot, and it's been used for a make-believe movie many more times than once.

Only that's what really happened to Harry and Betty James. Maybe that's why it's so hard for us all to believe. Or perhaps it's just because Harry and Betty are too busy living their love to waste words or show off trying to prove it. I doubt if they even know when Valentine's Day rolls around, myself. Every day is that for those two—but not the sticky, sentimental kind. That's not their style.

Every time I call on Betty, I come away warmed by the refreshing sincerity of a show girl utterly dedicated to her husband, home and children. Every time, too, I confess, I search for a chink in her armor, some tell-tale giveaway of a conviction I've toted around ever since I stepped on a stage myself—that two careers in the same family strike sparks. But each time, after brief exposure to Betty at home, my old skeptic heart settles right down and purrs meekly, undisturbed by a doubt. Each time the unpretentious girl who draws in more box-office gold than any other lady star in Hollywood, who married the shy King of the Cornet, shames me by her direct declarations of the way her heart beats.

Last time, I remember, we sat side by side on a great sofa beside her homey, copper-cluttered fireplace, while her darling daughters, Vicki and Jess, romped around. Betty told me then how in tune she and Harry were in their way of life, in the things they love, their interests, hopes and plans. "It's almost spooky," she smiled. "Sometimes we burst out saying the same things, and we can almost send messages without a telephone. Everything Harry has ever fallen for—horses, baseball, music, ranch life—I suddenly love and want too." Love does that. And it was not, somehow, ho-hum or trite to hear Betty Grable say steadily: "Harry and I couldn't live without each other now. Our love has grown and deepened with every day we've been married. We don't talk about it much—it's just there." No, you don't talk about a love that's as real as Harry and Betty's—you live it every minute, in big ways, little ways.

Like Betty's locking her bedroom door each night when Harry's playing late with his band, so he'll have to wake her up and she can welcome him home even if it's past midnight and she's due at seven on her studio set. . . . Like seeing him off and meeting him coming home no matter when a train or plane arrives or departs. . . . Like cutting short a scene at six o'clock, no matter how important, to shop in person at the market for the foods Harry likes and her family thrives on. . . . Like following Harry's band tours whenever she can break away from her job, arranging her own film vacations to suit his so they can share them together, in some sport they both love, a horse-race meet or a world's series. . . . Like cooking Harry's breakfast on Sunday mornings and helping groom the horses on the ranch. . . . Like a lot of things that make two people one in all the married moments that add up to a life of love.

the hidden hearts . . .

That their kind of devotion can grow and endure in Hollywood against the tugging tides of two extremely opposite, demanding careers is to me a marriage miracle, caused by two large hearts worn not on sleeves but hidden inside, where they do the most good.

Yes, love blooms—and not just on Valentine's Day—in Hollywood as everywhere else. It's a hardy perennial likely to pop up practically any day the year round in giddying, sweet-scented profusion. Not always are the blossoms spectacular and dazzling—sometimes they're just tender buds and sometimes the petals are seared and torn at the edges. Well, I'm no poet and I know it. But, at the risk of sounding silly to some people, I believe that loves grow here in Hollywood every bit as luxuriant and lovely as anywhere else—despite the parodies they suffer sometimes in print and on celluloid.

And because the spotlight shines on them everlastingly, when they are full-blown and glorious they can thrill the world—as the loves of Shirley and Jack, and Clark and Carole, and Harry and Betty have proved to me. At least, that's the way I'm feeling as this St. Valentine's Day, A.D. 1949, approaches—and I hope it lasts, because it's a perfectly gorgeous feeling, believe you me! THE END

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION

SHIRLEY FROHLICH
director
GLORIA LAMPERT
associate

The Winners: Once again the points have been tallied, the totals added up, and the winners in our Eighth Semi-Annual MSFCA Trophy Cup Contest are ready to be announced. Three lucky clubs—one in each of our three leagues—whose high standards of performance, valuable services to their stars, and fine work in fulfilling the broader and generally worthwhile functions of a club have earned them the most coveted award in the fan club world! Here they are:

League One: (clubs with 500 members or over) Nelson Eddy Music Club (Rita and Jo Mottola, co-prexies). This two-time cup winner rolled up a Trophy-pulling total of 1600 points! League Two (201 to 499 members): Jeanette MacDonald Club (Martha Farrington, prexy). A first win for this fine club—and it took 1550 points! League Three: Joseph Cotten Club (Florence Steingraber, prexy). This club changed hands only about a year ago, but never slackened its consistently excellent pace! Total points: 1600! Congratulations and thanks to the winners for setting the goals for all MSFCA clubs and paving the way for the victors of tomorrow.

Runners-Up: In every Trophy Cup contest there are always those almost-winners, clubs every bit as excellent as the three League-toppers—fun to join, filled with surprises and fascinating activities, yet clubs which just miss out on the prize by a few hundred points or less. Very often they are cup-winners of the past. Chances are they're cup-winners of the future. At any rate, we hope they won't get discouraged, but will keep on trying until that inevitable day comes when they'll wind up with the highest score! So we salute the runners-up: In League 1, The Gene Autry Friendship Club (a two-time former winner) and the Bill Boyd Club (Nancy Sue Bryan, prexy). In League 2, Mary Ruth Bond's Musical Notes Club and Glenna Riley's Jeanette MacDonald Club (16 years old and still going strong!). In League 3, the comparative newcomer, the Freddie Stewart Club (Irene Ashcroft, prexy), the June Allyson Club (recently reorganized by Lois Carnahan) and Betty Gottschalk's Arthur Kennedy Club. We're proud of you all!

Fresh Start: Okay, clubbers! The scoreboards are cleared and everybody starts fresh, with an equal chance to win in the next series. And remember, winning points isn't the job of the prexy or the journal editor. It's the job of every rank-and-file member. Contribute stories and art work to your journals, submit your favorite snaps in our Candid Snap Contest, back up your charity drives; in other words, be ACTIVE.

At the Roy Rogers Fan Club Convention in Chicago, Roy helps Jacqueline Turner of Chicago into her Frontier Jacket (similar to the one Roy wears) which was one of 35 door prizes awarded at the Convention. Highlight of the week-end festivities was the reception Roy gave for the delegates at the Stevens Hotel. Helping him entertain were his wife, Dale Evans, and the Riders of the Purple Sage, all appearing at the Roy Rogers Championship Rodeo in Chicago.

8TH MSFCA TROPHY CUP CONTEST

It was a swell contest and we hated to see it go. But the new one's already begun—the ninth in our series! This is only the beginning, and remember, there are monthly prizes in addition to those silver Trophy Cups for the final league leaders. Winners in our THIS IS MY BEST contest can still try for those 4 luscious HELENA RUBINSTEIN lipsticks all packed in a lucite holder, to match their own particular hair coloring. Club artists have lots to gain by sending in sketches to their club journals. The TANGEE people have wonderful travel kits all packed with creams and powders, and ready to go along with you on that vacation trip. Don't forget, we have prizes for boys too—Dell mysteries, and subscriptions to the magazine of your choice, such as RADIO ALBUM, SCREEN ALBUM, FRONT PAGE DETECTIVE and many more.

LAST LAP

This Is My Best: (100 points) "From Me to You." Betty Gottschalk, Arthur Kennedy Journal. "Fun with Ginni and Maggie," Betty Bayre, Virginia Field Journal. "Spring in New York," Dorothy McCaw, Desi Arnaz (Martinjak) Journal. "What Do I Say," Dwayne Armstead, Ron Randell (Hreha) Journal. "My Journey To The USA," Tess Burton, Randell (Hreha) Journal. "Fantasy Impromptu," Robert Stockbridge, Burt Lancaster Club News. Best Journals: (500 points) League 1. Nelson Eddy (Mottola) Journal. League 2. Bob Crosby Journal. League 3. (tied) Freddie Stewart and Arthur Kennedy Journals. Best Editors: (250 points) League 1. Janie Hamilton, Bill Boyd Journal. League 2. Joann Julian, Burt Lancaster Club News. League 3. Virginia Haywood, Televisor. Best Covers: (250 points) League 1. none qualified. League 2. Jeanette MacDonald (Riley) Journal. League 3. (tied) Anthony Quinn, Sinatra (Wolfenstein) and Arthur Kennedy Journals. Membership Increases: (100 points) League 1. No entries. League 2. Alan Ladd (Pearl). League 3. Vaughn Monroe (Staub). Worthwhile Activities: (250 points) League 1. No entries. League 2. Mel Torme Club (collected toys for underprivileged children). Musical Notes Club (donated $30 to Cancer Fund). League 3. Frank Latimore Club (sent 2 packages of clothing to a member in England). Best Artist: (150 points) none qualified. Candid Camera Contest: (100 points to first prize winner, 50 to others) Margie Hummell, Ginger Rogers Club. Joan Fox, Sinatra Club of Staten Island. Kaye Criss, Jack Smith Club. Joyce Moisson, Sinatra Club. Irene Ashcroft, Freddie Stewart Club. Ann Glatz, Rise Stevens Club. Best Correspondents: League 1. Rita and Jo Mottola, Nelson Eddy Club. League 2. Nell Ambrose, Club Friendship. League 3. Lois Carnahan, June Allyson Club.

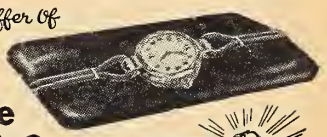
COMPLETE PROTECTION WITH JUST A FLICK OF YOUR FINGER

Here's quick, easy "finger-tip protection. Shaped like a regular fountain pen, this pistol pen throws a powerful charge of tear gas 15 feet! Cloud of gas spreads 4 to 6 feet. You can't miss. Just point pen like you point finger and release trigger. Ideal for home, office or car. May be clipped in pocket like pen. Loads like gun. Fires 38 Caliber S. & W. "Special" TEAR GAS cartridge. Will not kill. Renders mad dogs, robbers, etc., helpless. Cannot harm user. Effective indoors or out. NOT SOLD TO MINORS or persons residing in states prohibiting sale of firearms. ONLY $7.50. Cartridges 5 for $2.50. Order TODAY!

SEND NO MONEY Just send name and address. Specify Pen, Cartridge, or both. On arrival pay cost plus Express Shipping Charges. Send cash with order, we pay express charges. Use 10 days. If not delighted, return for money back. Order NOW!

Defendo Products Co. 215 Dept. 76S N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

Help Relieve Distress Of MONTHLY FEMALE WEAKNESS



Are you troubled by distress of female functional periodic disturbances? Does this make you suffer from pain, feel so nervous, tired—at such times? Then DO try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. Pinkham's is famous to help girls and women troubled this way.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Amazing Offer Of

SPARKLING IMITATION Birth-stone RING Plus Wrist Watch GIVEN

Yours for helping us get only twenty get-acquainted Enlargement orders by handing out or mailing attractive, new 25c Snapshot Enlargement Coupons FREE to friends and relatives. Send your name and address today for premium letter and coupons, FREE. No obligation. Enjoy wearing such a beautiful Ring and Wrist Watch. DEAN STUDIOS, Dept. X-14S, 211 W. 7th St., Des Moines 2, Iowa.

MAKE MONEY SELL DRESSES FROM NEW YORK

Specially Priced $5.95 to $19.95

5th Ave., N. Y., firm desires women to sell Dresses, Suits, Lingerie. As seen in "Vogue", "Mademoiselle". Featuring the New York Look. Good commissions. Write for sample Book. MODERN MANNER, 315 Fifth Ave., Dept. D-2, New York

Happy, Profitable Hours in PHOTO COLORING

EASY TO LEARN Fascinating hobby and vocation learned at home by average man or woman artistically inclined. Modern method brings out natural, life-like colors. Many have earned while learning. FREE BOOKLET tells how to get started doing this delightful home work for photographers, stores, individuals, and friends. Mail coupon below.

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan Ave., Dept. 2362, Chicago 5, Ill.
Send Booklet "Photo Coloring for Pleasure and Profit" and full particulars.
NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
CITY..... STATE.....

MOVIE REVIEWS

(Continued from page 22)

keeper, and Frankie's out to fix things for him. "I'll take my father's place," he promises. Trouble is, Frankie's father had only been an innkeeper in his spare time. His main occupation was banditry. He'd been known as "The Kissing Bandit." Kissed every woman he robbed. Made 'em faint. When Frankie hears this, he's terrified. He can't ride a horse, he's never kissed a woman, and he doesn't think robbery's ethical. But Chico and his father's old gang sell him on the idea of the clean, outdoor life banditry offers. "Fresh air, the blue sky, adventure . . ." And Frankie does try very hard. When the gang holds up the coach of the governor's daughter (Kathryn Grayson), Frankie even almost kisses her. Not quite, though. No nerve. He returns to Chico's inn, sorrowful and ashamed, and that night, the inn has important visitors. A count and a general who've come all the way from Spain to collect California's taxes, or the governor's head. They're a most unpleasant couple (call everybody "peasants") and they wind up tied in neat little bundles, while Frankie and Chico borrow their fine clothes and their carriage. Then, masquerading as the noble strangers, Frankie and Chico go off to visit the governor. Chico's thinking of the nice tax money; Frankie's thinking of Kathryn. Kathryn doesn't betray them, even though she remembers Frankie very well, and they both sing a lot of songs, and Ricardo Montalban and Ann Miller and Cyd Charisse do a dance, and the Technicolor is blinding. Frankie finally confesses he'd rather be honest than glamorous, Kathryn decides she can love him even if he isn't a big brave bandit, and the goings-on get really joyful. J. Carrol Naish, who portrays Chico with a big putty nose and a Mexican accent, walks away with the picture, but he's such a terrific actor it's a pleasure to watch him walk.—M-G-M.

Don Juan: Errol Flynn dashes back to Spain and proceeds to fall for Queen Viveca Lindfors.

DON JUAN

Don Juan acted out in such atrociously hammy fashion you keep thinking it's a play within a play. You wait for the curtain to ring down, and for the characters involved to step forward and say a few lines with matter-of-fact inflection. This never happens. In addition to which, Spanish history takes such a drubbing about the head and shoulders that Christopher Columbus is surely turning in his grave, sorry he ever discovered the country capable of spawning Hollywood. To get to the Technicolored point, Don Juan (Errol Flynn) the infamous Spanish lover of ladies, is languishing in England, in disgrace for his various misdeeds. He's given a dressing-down by the Spanish ambassador (Robert Warwick), who says Spain is in bad trouble. Why doesn't Juan change his way of living? the ambassador wants to know. Go home, in fact. Keep the wicked advisors of the Spanish king (Romney Brent) from making war on England. This is a big order, but not for Errol Flynn. With his trusty henchman (Alan Hale—who else?) he goes rushing back to Spain and discovers the lovely Queen (Viveca Lindfors) to be the only person with all her buttons at the whole court. The Duke De Lorca (Robert Douglas) has the king under his thumb, and the duke wants war. Errol proceeds to fall in love with the queen, but this time it's a finer love than he's ever known before. It gives him the strength to outwit De Lorca, kill half the palace guards (they were on De Lorca's side) and keep the peace. The queen, who's fought against the dreadful knowledge, admits finally that she loves Don Juan, and that's a nice pickle too. She's got her duties to her country on one hand; she's got Errol on the other. It reminds you of the Thurber cartoon that's captioned, "With you, I have known peace, Leda, and now you say you are going insane." Errol tells the queen she must be strong, as he bids her farewell, and rides away, on the trail of the other prettier ladies. Well, it all adds up to good fun, if you're feeling childish.—Warners also showing . . .

APARTMENT FOR PEGGY (20th-Fox)—G.I. student Bill Holden and his wife Jeanne Crain find campus quarters with old professor Edmund Gwynn and save him from despair. A superb comedy-drama.

BLOOD ON THE MOON (RKO)—A taut, exciting Western with Robert Mitchum, Robert Preston, Phyllis Thaxter. Very intelligently done.

ENCHANTMENT (Goldwyn)—Seven-year-old Gigi Perreau walks off with the honors in this superb film of three generations of an English family—but David Niven, Jayne Meadows, Teresa Wright, Farley Granger, Evelyn Keyes and a number of other first-rate actors are wonderful too. Guaranteed to please.

JUNE BRIDE (Warners)—Bette Davis and Robert Montgomery seem to be enjoying themselves in this bright comedy—and you'll enjoy yourself.

KISS THE BLOOD OFF MY HANDS (Univ.-Int.)—Burt Lancaster, a murderous fellow, woos and wins Joan Fontaine in post-war London and they come to no good end. A well-executed but seamy exercise.

MISS TATLOCK'S MILLIONS (Para.)—John Lund is hired by Barry Fitzgerald to impersonate an idiot heir to millions. An absolute riot. With Monty Woolley and Wanda Hendrix.

RED RIVER (U.A.)—This huge Technicolor Western really gives you your money's worth. John Wayne, Monty Clift and Joanne Dru get involved in stampedes and Indian fighting and feuds and everything. Great stuff.

RETURN OF OCTOBER (Col.)—College professor Glenn Ford, horse-lover Terry Moore and some whimsical doings concerning a racehorse named October. Complicated and amusing.

ROAD HOUSE (20th-Fox)—Cornel Wilde, Ida Lupino and Celeste Holm get all fouled up by villain Richard Widmark in this wild and woolly crime tale.

THE BOY WITH GREEN HAIR (U.A.)—Youngster Dean Stockwell awakes one morning to find his hair has turned green. Because of this, he becomes an outcast. A very worthwhile film that shows how silly bigotry is. With Barbara Hale and Pat O'Brien.

THE DECISION OF CHRISTOPHER BLAKE (Warners)—A story of the effect on a 12-year-old of his parents' getting divorced. Pretty phony fare. With Ted Donaldson, Alexis Smith and Robert Douglas.

THE GALLANT BLADE (Col.)—Larry Parks, Victor Jory and Marguerite Chapman in a Cinecolor costume swashbuckler. Lots of dash and swordplay.

THE PALEFACE (Para.)—Bob Hope, a tenderfoot dentist in the old Wild West, meets up with the Jane Russell version of Calamity Jane. One of the funniest Hope pictures ever.

THE RED SHOES (Eagle-Lion)—A Technicolor backstage drama of the ballet—which features a long, original ballet that is one of the most thrilling things ever put on film. Moira Shearer is the ballerina chiefly concerned. Don't miss it if you like magnificent dancing.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS (MGM)—A spectacular production, in Technicolor, of the 16th-Century France adventure classic. Gene Kelly, Lana Turner, June Allyson, Van Heflin, and Vincent Price help make it all look awfully expensive.

UNFAITHFULLY YOURS (20th-Fox)—Rex Harrison is a symphony conductor who daydreams of the various dramatic ways in which he can handle the supposed unfaithfulness of his wife, Linda Darnell. Unusual comedy.

WOMEN Make Money THIS EASY WAY

—and get your own dresses without a penny of cost!

SPRING SWING PLAID. Superb rayon sharkskin swathed with sashes

NEVER A DULL MOMENT. Midnight black crepe with gleaming Satin

Here's a special opportunity for ambitious women who want to earn money during spare moments. Without previous experience you can make up to $23 a week with ease—just by taking orders for Fashion Frocks, and you don't invest a penny of your own. These stunning new creations are such unbeatable values, you simply can't stop women from ordering them! Amazing variety of styles, colors, weaves and patterns—more than you can find in a dozen dress shops. Famous fabrics that are soft, rich, enduring—the cream of the world's best mills. And, a complete range of sizes for every type of figure—Misses, Half-Sizes, Juniors and Stouts. Best of all, they're not sold in stores—so women must come to you to get them. You can coin money "hand over fist"—and besides, you get dresses for your own personal use as a bonus, without paying a cent!

BIG MONEY WITH NO PREVIOUS EXPERIENCE

Each dress carries the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval and our own unconditional guarantee of satisfaction or money back. Fashion Frocks cost dollars less than similar garments sell for elsewhere—they are priced as low as $3.98! How can you miss getting orders right and left? You start by taking orders from friends . . . they'll tell their friends. Soon you're making big money like Marie Patton, Illinois, who took in an average of $39 a week . . . or Mrs. Carl C. Birch, Maryland, who earned $36 a week . . . or Mrs. Claude Burnett, Alabama, who averaged $31.50 weekly.

START EARNING IMMEDIATELY — NO CANVASSING

Whether you are married or single—housewife or employed woman—you can earn EXTRA money in your spare time. And just imagine how it will feel to have as many dresses as you want; to wear the latest, smartest, most glamorous dresses without cost. Don't forget—when you present Fashion Frocks you show dresses that are well-known and in big demand because every month the Fashion Frock advertisements are seen by millions of women everywhere. This means greater demand, orders are easier to get, and no canvassing is necessary. Women are delighted to order not only once, but several times a season—and for season after season. It's like having your own dress business with a steady income and WITHOUT INVESTING A PENNY.

Send No Money — Everything Free

Our elaborate Free Presentation Folio contains over 125 original styles and swatches. Examine the beautiful, glorious styles and colors—feel the rich fabrics. You just won't believe it possible at the low prices asked. You'll be proud to show them to your friends and neighbors. So don't lose a second. Fill out the coupon. Paste it on a postcard. No obligation. Mail coupon right now—while you think of it.

Send for FREE Portfolio of ADVANCED SPRING DRESSES at $3.98

FOREVER BLOWIN' BUBBLES. A Junior Style of silky lustrous broadcloth, with delightful Portrait neckline

Constance Bennett

Glamorous star of stage, screen and radio, one of the world's 10 best-dressed women, designs exclusively for FASHION FROCKS.

Fashion Frocks INC.

Desk B2054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD—mail now!

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Desk B2054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

YES—I am interested in your opportunity to make money in spare time and get my own dresses without a penny of cost. Send me everything I need to start right away, without obligation.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *Zone*_____ *State*_____

Age_____ Dress Size_____

Make the Camel 30-Day Test—PROVE

CAMEL MILDNESS

IN YOUR "T-ZONE"!

YES, make the Camel 30-day mildness test. Smoke Camels for 30 days... it's revealing—and it's fun to learn for yourself.

Let YOUR OWN THROAT tell you the wonderful story of Camel's cool, cool mildness. Let YOUR OWN TASTE tell you about the rich, full flavor of Camel's choice tobaccos—so carefully aged and expertly blended.

In a recent national test, hundreds of men and women smoked Camels, and only Camels, for thirty consecutive days—an average of 1 to 2 packs a day. Noted throat specialists examined the throats of these smokers every week (a total of 2470 examinations) and reported

NO THROAT IRRITATION due to smoking CAMELS!

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

Doctors smoke for pleasure, too! And when three leading independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors what cigarette they smoked, the brand named most was Camel!

Money-Back Guarantee!

Try Camels and test them as you smoke them. If, at any time, you are not convinced that Camels are the mildest cigarette you have ever smoked, return the package with the unused Camels and we will refund its full purchase price, plus postage.

(Signed) R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.
Winston-Salem, N. C.

Clark Gable's Secret Romance!

march

FEB 16 1949

modern screen

5c

MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • MAGAZINE •

PER

Ava Gardner

Watch your Skin Grow Lovelier with your First Cake of Camay!

Charm and good looks, dates and romance, can begin with a lovely skin! And your skin can be softer, lovelier, with your very first cake of Camay. Give up careless cleansing—go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested mild Camay care on scores of women—found most complexions grew softer and smoother with just one cake of Camay! Follow directions on the wrapper for a lovelier skin!

MRS. BENJAMIN MOATS, Jr.
the former Marjorie Lehmann of Haverhill, N.H. bridal portrait painted by Tim Rose

READ ABOUT A ROMANCE!

Marjorie met Ben when she was at Skidmore—he called with Dartmouth friends. It was love from the start! She thanks Camay: "My first cake brought a lovelier look!"

Honeymooning at Sea Island, bride and groom rode the ocean without a tumble. But Ben's "overboard" for Marjorie's complexion. She'll stay on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet!

Camay THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

©CIB 181169

"Dentists say the IPANA way works!"

Junior Model Joan Murray shows how it can work for you, too

Sitting pretty is dateable Joan Murray, radiant 17-year-old model of Harrison, N. Y. This popular lass has a smile that wins her top honors—modeling or dating!

Of course, Joan follows the Ipana way to healthier gums and brighter teeth . . . because dentists say it works! Her professionally approved Ipana dental care can work for you, too—like this . . .

"The Ipana way is easy—and fun," Joan tells friend Peggy. Dentists say it works . . . and it's simple as 1, 2:

1. Between regular visits to your dentist, brush all tooth surfaces with Ipana at least twice a day.
2. Then massage gums the way your dentist advises—to stimulate gum circulation. (Ipana's unique formula actually helps stimulate your gums. Feel the invigorating tingle!)

Try this for healthier gums, brighter teeth, an Ipana smile. Ipana refreshes your mouth and breath, too. Ask your dentist about Ipana and massage. See what it can do for you!

YES, 8 OUT OF 10 DENTISTS SAY:

Ipana dental care promotes Healthier gums, brighter teeth*

Products of Bristol-Myers

P.S. For correct brushing, use the DOUBLE DUTY Tooth Brush with the twist in the handle. 1000 dentists helped design it!

In thousands of reports from all over the country.

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

MARCH, 1949

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

STATE OF THE REUNION (Gloria De Haven-John Payne)....by Morgan MacNeil 19
I'M NOT MARRIED ..... by Guy Madison 20
SHE'LL NEVER STOP FIGHTING (Ginger Rogers)..... by Hedda Hopper 38
CLARK GABLE'S SECRET ROMANCE..... by Janet Franklin 40
SOLDIER OF GOD (Colleen Townsend)..... by Louis Pollock 42
VENUS IN BLUE-JEANS (Ava Gardner) ..... by Ida Zeitlin 44
REFUGE FOR LANA (Lana Turner)..... by Jean Kinkead 46
GOOD SKATES (Donald O'Connor's Skating Party)..... by Viola Moore 48
HOW SWEET IS SIXTEEN? (Peggy Ann Garner)..... by Mary Dalton 52
BOY GETS GIRL (Wanda Hendrix-Audie Murphy)..... by Dora Albert 54
A WOMAN'S PLACE (Rosalind Russell)..... by Jack Wade 56
STRANGE LOVES OF HEDY LAMARR ..... by Sheilah Graham 60
END OF THE BEGINNING (Mark Stevens)..... by John Howley 62
THE AWKWARD AGE: CURSE OR BLESSING? (Temple-O'Brien-Rooney, etc.) by Erskine Johnson 64
NO TIME FOR FUN (Jane Powell) ..... by Florence Epstein 66

features

TO OUR READERS 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
EDITORIAL: "The Hard Way" (Glenn Ford-Dorothy Lamour)..... 37
PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "Portrait of Jennie"..... 69

departments

MOVIE REVIEWS..... by Christopher Kane 22
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed..... 34
FASHION..... by Constance Bartel 72
YOUR LETTERS..... 90
THE FANS..... by Gloria Lampert 98
MUSIC: "Sweet and Hot"..... by Leonard Feather 106
NEW FACES..... 108

ON THE COVER: Ava Gardner Color Portrait by Virgil Apger
Other picture credits, page 34

WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, associate editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
VIOLA MOORE, associate editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
GLORIA LAMPERT, assistant editor
BEVERLY OTT, assistant editor
IRENE TURNER, research editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 38, No. 4, March, 1949. Copyright, 1949, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-President. Single copy price, 15c in U.S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U.S.A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

WATCH OUT FOR

ACT OF VIOLENCE

A shocker of a drama from M·G·M!

STARRING

VAN HEFLIN · ROBERT RYAN

HIS BEST ROLE! STAR OF "CROSSFIRE"

WITH

JANET LEIGH · MARY ASTOR
PHYLLIS THAXTER

Screen Play by ROBERT L. RICHARDS · Story by COLLIER YOUNG

Directed by FRED ZINNEMANN · Produced by WILLIAM H. WRIGHT

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

A MANHUNT NO WOMAN COULD STOP!

She Took a Cruise—
but Missed the Boat!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles— stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

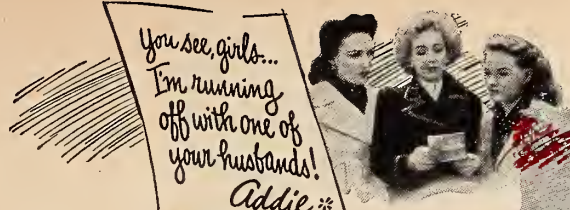
LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Always use
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
after you eat and before every date



To our Readers

EVER SINCE HER return from England, Lana Turner has been living quietly in Greenwich, Connecticut. Understandably, Lana's neighbors have been excited about her presence in the neighborhood. In order that their excitement and pleasure might be shared by Modern Screen's readers, we assigned Jean Kinkead to report on Lana's activities. The result is the story, "Refuge For Lana," appearing on page 46, and the somewhat gay illustration appearing at the top of this column. But as this is written, we don't feel gay. Only two hours ago, we learned that Lana had lost the baby she had been expecting. We are truly sorry about this tragic misfortune, and we extend to Lana our heart-felt sympathies. Unfortunately, we can't delete references to Lana's baby in the story appearing on page 46. A magazine is printed in sections; the section containing "Refuge For Lana" is already off the presses. All we can do, at this late hour, is to wish we could say something that would help . . .

WE HAVE A pleasant item for Hollywood's children: Kids, you can grow up now if you want to. The "awkward age" is definitely passé. Look at the way Shirley Temple, Judy Garland and Mickey Rooney, to name a few, waltzed through it. Look at page 64 of this magazine. Only thing you have to worry about now, kiddies, is grey hair.

IN 1945, A GIRL, name of Beverly Ott, wandered into our Hollywood office. Before she could get off the premises she was being referred to as a secretary and being given a batch of dictation.Then, before we could stop her, she'd gone back to school, wise child that she was. That was Rollins College in Florida. In the summer of '46, Bev wandered back to M. S. No questions asked, we dusted off a desk. This time she stayed a while and then started going to night school at USC. But Rollins was too much for all of us. Bev returned there in 1948 to pick up her diploma and tennis racquet. The tennis racquet is now in our New York office, as is Beverly herself, now an Assistant Editor. This kind of thing may keep up indefinitely, of course, in which case she will probably become a Ph.D and publisher of M. S. just about concurrently. In the meantime, we won't get nervous till she starts peering fondly at college catalogues again.

WE CAN'T END this without mentioning our next issue. It's a sort of present for Shirley Temple on her twenty-first birthday. We know you'll enjoy reading the stories and reminiscences about her life almost as much as we did gathering them . . . So watch for Shirley on our cover . . .

A LETTER TO THREE WIVES...

...IS A PEEK INTO THE OTHER WOMAN'S MAIL!

Jeanne Crain
Linda Darnell
Ann Sothern

* Addie is the 'other woman' all other women will be talking about!

A Letter to Three Wives

(STRICTLY PERSONAL)

Promise you won't peek-and-tell... the ending! It's a sheer, delightful revelation!

co-starring
KIRK DOUGLAS
PAUL DOUGLAS
BARBARA LAWRENCE
JEFFREY LYNN with Connie Gilchrist · Florence Bates · Hobart Cavanaugh

Screen Play and Direction by JOSEPH L. MANKIEWICZ · Produced by SOL C. SIEGEL

Adopted by Vera Carpory · From a Cosmopolitan Magazine Novel by John Klempner

20th CENTURY-FOX

LOUELLA PARSONS'

Good news

I think Diana Lynn was the sweetest-looking bride I ever saw, the day she said "I do" to John Lindsay, the handsome young architect.

From time to time in the past, I have frequently thought of Diana as a very self-sufficient, independent young woman. But the real sentiment in her nature came out as she planned her wedding.

First, she told Edith Head what she wanted for a wedding gown. It was to be very simple. "I don't want to look like a movie star," Diana said. "I just want to look like a happy girl."

Then she selected the small chapel on the campus of the University of Southern California for the Methodist ceremony because that is where John attended school. Only seven close friends outside of the wedding party were invited to the ceremony—but the entire chapel was as lavishly-decorated with beautiful white flowers and satin streamers as though it had been filled!

Later, Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay greeted all their friends at a large reception at the home of the bride's agent and close friend, Wynn Rocamora.

In the receiving line along with Janie Withers, the bridesmaid, and Diana's parents were John's grandparents—who have been married for 52 years. They were beaming and looked every bit as happy as the bridal pair.

Among the guests, all a little dewy-eyed about the whole thing, were Mona Freeman; Betty Hutton (so cute with the shortest haircut in town); Angie Greene, wife of Stuart Martin (the best man); the Reggie Gardiners, and most of Diana's co-workers at Paramount.

* * *

Another hearts-and-flowers romance is that of 17-year-old Elizabeth (Dreamboat) Taylor and Glenn Davis. Don't bat an eyelash if the youngsters get married the first leave the former West Point footballer gets from Army service in the Far East.

Elizabeth is so deeply in love with him she isn't dating any of the lads in London where she is making The Conspirator with Bob Taylor.

There was a time when there might have been parental or studio objections to a wed-

On December 18, Diana Lynn and John Lindsay were married in the Methodist chapel at the University of Southern California. Diana wore a four-leaf clover gold chain around her neck. Her gown was designed by Paramount's Edith Head.

Following the ceremony, a reception was given by Diana's friend Wynn Rocamora at his home. Over 300 people attended the affair, but there were few press agents or cameramen and not many movie stars. Jane Withers was matron of honor. Betty Hutton (above) was a well-wisher.

John Bromfield, who's with Diana in Hal Wallis' Bitter Victory, came with Corinne Calvet, his bride. Diana and her groom left early to hop a plane on their way to Nassau.

Even though Diana's bridal bouquet was mistakenly caught by a married woman, friends predict the next wedding will be that of June Haver and her constant escort, Dr. John Duzik—who were among Diana's guests.

BEAUTIFUL STAR OF STAGE AND SCREEN SAYS:

"FOR DREAM HANDS, Cream your hands"

TRY HER METHOD FOR JUST THREE DAYS... A 12-SECOND HAND MASSAGE WITH NON-STICKY, NON-GREASY

Pacquins Hand Cream

MORNING... NIGHT... ESPECIALLY IN HAND-ROUGHENING WINTER WEATHER

TRY IT! Massage your hands for just 12 seconds with Pacquins, every night ...every morning...every time hands are chapped, weather-roughened.

You'll soon see why Pacquins is the hand beauty treatment of so many stars. Your own hands will tell you why... they'll be smoother, softer...yes, truly romantic.

When winter cold chaps your hands, Pacquins will help soothe them, smooth them. For dream hands, cream, cream, CREAM your hands... with Pacquins!

Among the famous stars who use Pacquins Hand Cream are:

LYNN FONTANNE • RISË STEVENS
VERA ZORINA • GERTRUDE LAWRENCE
JOAN BENNETT • GLADYS SWARTHOUT

CATHERINE HART, R.N. "Nurses scrub their hands 30 to 40 times a day. We need a cream like this. And Pacquins was originally formulated for nurses and doctors."

ALSO: FOR EXTRA DRY SKIN RED LABEL PACQUINS CONTAINS LANOLIN!

ON SALE AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS IN U.S. AND CANADA

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Two-and-o-half-yeor-old Lizo Minnelli makes her screen debut with mom, Judy Garland, in The Good Old Summertime, gowned by Irene.

ding, because Elizabeth is still so young.

But I think the wonderfully happy marriage of Shirley Temple and John Agar has changed all that. Married happiness and having a baby have not hurt Shirley's career one iota —and frankly, I believe the young Agars have blazed the trail for other 'teen-age marriages in our town.

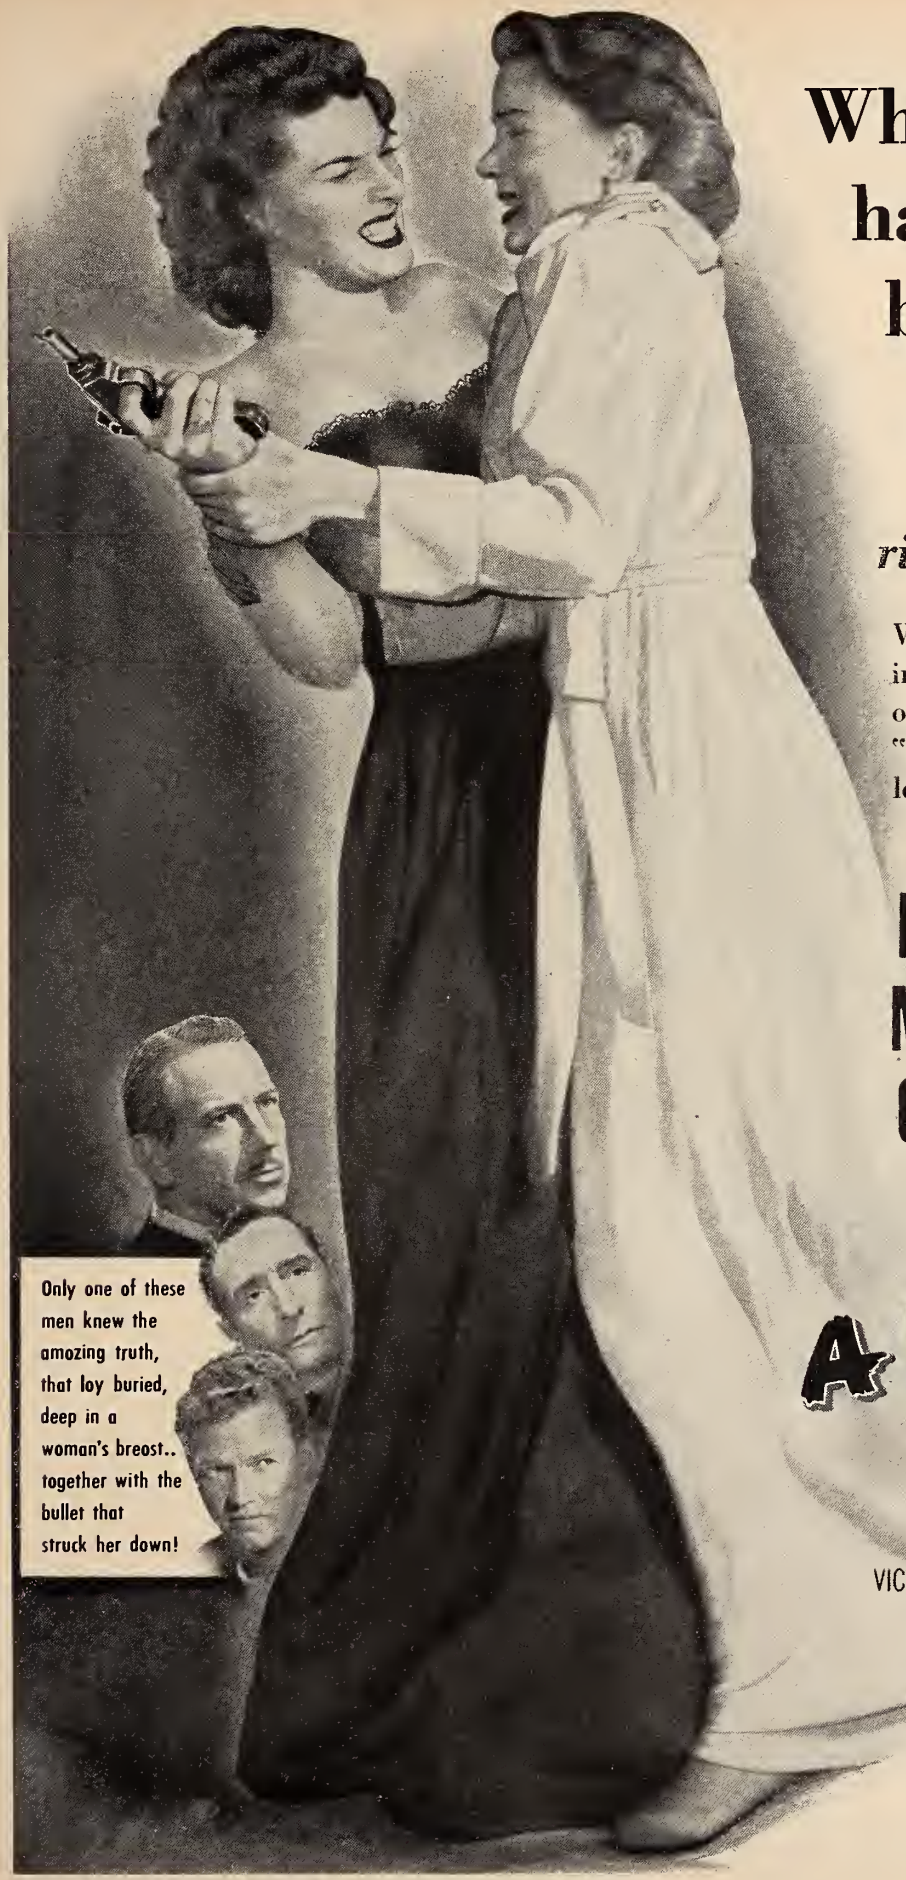
* * *

While we are on the subject of Cupid—I think you'll have to look a long way before you'll find a girl as happy as Jane Powell.

A beautiful diamond engagement ring is the reason. It was given to Janie by Geary Steffan at a dinner party in the Beverly Wilshire.

Jane, who's 19, met Geary, 26, two years ago when he was her skating teacher. He used to be Sonja Henie's partner.

"I think I fell in love almost at first sight," Janie said. "He's not only handsome, but he's so nice and thoughtful."



Jane hopes the wedding will be in a few months. Meanwhile, Geary's going into business for himself in Hollywood.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: For further word of Jane's adventures, see page 66.]

* * *

Scotty Beckett, picked up on a drunken-driving charge, is so remorseful and ashamed —and has sworn to his family and his studio that it will never happen again. In fact, the kid is so low about the whole incident that immediately after it happened, MGM made a public announcement that he would not be taken out of the role of Clark Gable's son in Clark's next picture.

Mervyn Leroy, the director, said: "It's the kid's first offense. With Hollywood getting so many black eyes on all sides, it is unfortunate it happened. But taking him out of the picture would be too drastic a punishment for a boy who is so sincerely sorry. He's a good

Only one of these men knew the amazing truth, that Joy buried, deep in a woman's breast.. together with the bullet that struck her down!

What really happened behind the closed door?

. . . was it worth risking murder for?

Vicki Baum knows women! And in this exciting story . . . based on her famous best-selling novel, "Mortgage On Life"— she fearlessly explores the souls of two!

MAUREEN O'HARA
MELVYN DOUGLAS
GLORIA GRAHAME
BILL WILLIAMS

in

A Woman's Secret

with

VICTOR JORY • MARY PHILIPS • JAY C. FLIPPEN

A DORE SCHARY Presentation

Produced by HERMAN J. MANKIEWICZ

Directed by NICHOLAS RAY

Screen Play by HERMAN J. MANKIEWICZ

RKO RADIO PICTURES

Advertisement

* * * * *

Don't be Half-safe!

by

VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush of womanhood many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nothing "wrong" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deodorants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. In fact, more men and women everywhere use Arrid than any other deodorant. It's antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate protection is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears. Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, is guaranteed not to crystallize or dry out in the jar, or new jar free on return to Carter Products, Inc., 53 Park Pl., N. Y. C. The American Laundering Institute has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Arrid is safe for the skin—non-irritating—can be used right after shaving.

Don't be half-safe. During this "age of romance" don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter—only 39¢ plus tax.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Chosen by MODERN SCREEN's readers as their favorite actor of the year, Alan Ladd received his trophy cup from M.S.'s editor, Wade Nichols, on the Movie Matinée radio show. That's emcee Red Benson in the center.

kid—and we believe him when he says it won't happen again."

* * *

Everybody in our town forgot the production blues and the studio shut-downs at Christmas time and the holidays were gayer than ever, it seems to me. There were parties galore—but before I tell you about them, I'd like to relate the cutest Christmas story I heard.

During the Christmas holidays, Dorothy Lamour was amazed to discover that her three-year-old son, Ridge, was plumb scared to death of Santa Claus.

Everytime she would take the little boy to a store to see the "jolly man with the whiskers," the youngster would set up a yowl of sheer terror.

Dottie, trying to pacify him, kept saying over and over, "But darling—Santa Claus is a nice, good, kind man. He is as shy as you are. You must be sweet and nice to him—don't scare him to death yelling like that."

So came the next visit.

And little Ridge screamed as loud as ever—but this is what he was yelling:

"DON'T BE AFRAID OF Me, SANTY! I'm NOT GOING TO HURT YOU!"

"Better luck next year," sighed Dottie.

* * *

Those happily married screen writers, Mary Anita Loos and Richard Sale, came up with the first big party of the season. With the newspapers filled with front-page stories about the storms in the East—listen to this:

The local weather was so balmy the Sales used their beach home for the shindig, closed in the patio with cellophane walls and had the dinner and dancing outdoors!

You would never have suspected it was Christmas except for the enormous, gayly-decorated tree in the living room and the crackling fireplace spreading the conventional holiday cheer.

Every time I see Shirley Temple I think she looks more attractive. She is certainly one of the "best-dressed" gals off the screen. Her clothes are one of Shirley's few extravagances—and I must say they look it.

She was a dream in a simple ice-blue satin without a gee-gaw on it—but, oh, what lines. I had a hunch it was a French model—and Shirley admitted it.

Van Johnson had the time of his life and turned out to be the life of the party. Between dances the orchestra was playing specially for Van while he went through all his dance routines from old Broadway shows. Fred Astaire or Gene Kelly couldn't have been better, or more active!

After the crowd had cheered him on his fourth exhibition, Van lay right down in the middle of the floor, gasping, "I ain't as young as I was then!"

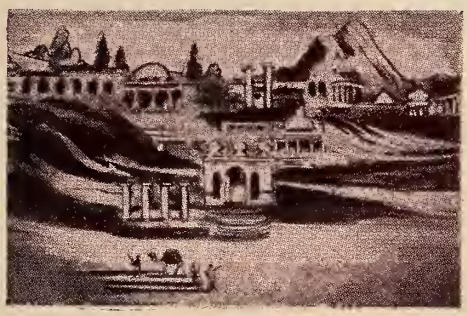
George Sanders' fiancée, Zsa Zsa Hilton, had on the most "jools"—but then, she is a very rich girl. George seems so changed since the pretty red-headed ex-wife of the famous hotel man, Conrad Hilton, came into his life. Gone are all the cynical wisecracks and the aloof manner.

Lucille Ball looked like her head was on fire—her hair is so violently red. She looked like a stunning poster girl in a form-fitting white dress.

I noticed that Evie Johnson is much thinner—and very becoming it is, too.

* * *

A movie star, very glamorous, but still old enough to be Farley Granger's mother, has a



On The Screen For The First Time!

ALL THE SINUOUS, SEDUCTIVE SPLENDOR OF THE SIREN OF...

ATLANTIS!

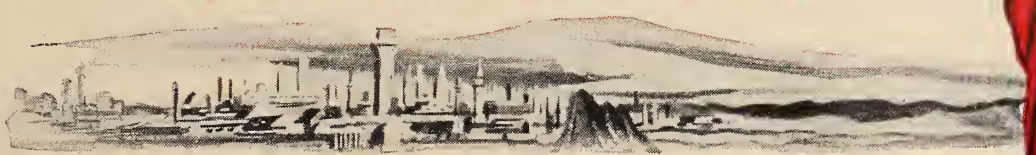
Fabulous land of mystery . . . Paradise on earth . . . ruled by a ravishing, ruthless Siren whose beauty and cruelty were her power!

THEY LIVE AGAIN!

..Legendary luxury cities!

...Exotic quarters for the Queen's favorites!

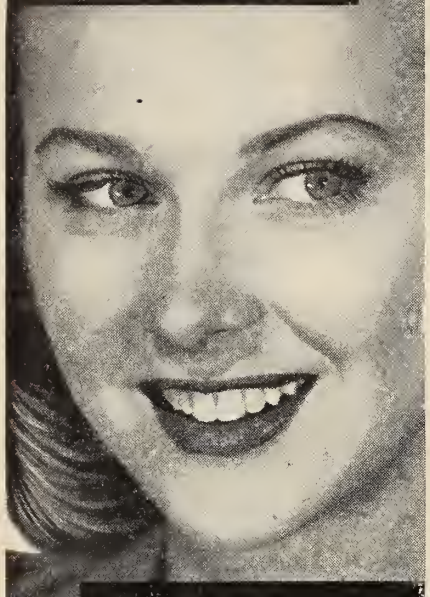
...Secret armies...ready to strike against the world!



...100 dancing houris...for the royal pleasure!

MARIA Montez · JEAN PIERRE Aumont · DENNIS O'Keefe

in Seymour Nebenzal's



"SIREN OF ATLANTIS"

Directed by GREGG TALLAS • Produced by SEYMOUR NEBENZAL

Based on the novel "Atlantida" by Pierre Benoit • Released thru United Artists

Brush up on your Smile...

USE THE BRUSH WITH

Real Nylon Bristles

Made by the makers of DR. WEST'S MIRACLE-TUFT 50¢

Bob Mitchum and his wife continue to oppear together in Hollywood's quieter spots. He's recently been working in Operation Malaya.

Jewelry which Avo Gardner weors in The Great Sinner wos whipped up by studio prop experts. Reol gems would be worth $50,000.

Cindy Lou Boyes discusses her new Conover contract with Charles Korvin. She won it in the Miss Stordust contest topping 28,000 entronts.

Spannie is the piglet's name ond Thad Swift is training him for a televisian show. Frank Sinatro thinks he moy become o ham actor.

yen for him. But Farley isn't looking in that direction.

When the lady subtly conveyed word to him that she was agreeable to a dinner and dancing date, he just didn't come up for air.

The girls he takes out are definitely around his own age—Pat Neal and Shelley Winters among them.

I hear he has flatly informed press agents that he has not the slightest intention of showing up at the Mocambo or at Ciro's with a "name" star just for the publicity. Good boy.

* * *

No couple in Hollywood gets a bigger kick out of anniversaries and birthdays and giving a party than Dinah Shore and George Montgomery. Maybe that's the main reason their parties are so good. There's nothing that puts a damper on guests like slightly blasé hosts—and that "ain't" Dinah and George.

When the guests started arriving for their fifth wedding anniversary, they were greeted by the spectacle of a brand new automobile (Dinah's gift to George) standing in the driveway tied around the middle with a huge satin ribbon and bow on top!

Inside the big early-American living room the fireplace was blazing away and already gathered around were the Ray Millands, Ann Sothern, Eleanor Parker, the Edgar Bergens, the Danny Kayes, the Eddie Cantors, Teresa Wright and about 50 others.

I've noticed that Dinah never calls on her talented guests to perform at her parties—and she never gives with a song herself.

Dinah never drinks, either. So, it was a highlight of the evening when Ray (Lost Weekend) Milland told her it was bad luck not to drink to your own anniversary and she downed a glass of champagne. Like most people who don't drink—she didn't sip it. Just down the hatch to get it over in a hurry!

The food in that house is always enough to put five pounds on you just looking at it. The buffet table groaned with exotic delicacies—but I noticed the old-fashioned pot roast and potato pancakes and the corn pudding got the most "repeats."

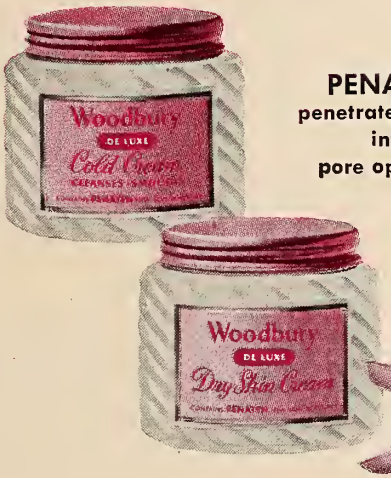
Try those old-fashioned dishes on your own buffet sometime. They certainly go over.

* * *

If you think that the lions and leopards who work in films are as gentle as oversized kittens—listen to this:

Pretty Tanis Chandler "rehearsed" with the

New!



Introducing the Beauty Discovery of the Century...PENATEN in Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams

—a revelation in skin care!
—cleanses, brightens, softens as never before!

Now, from Woodbury scientists comes PENATEN—newly developed penetrating ingredient. Here in Woodbury De Luxe Face Creams are just-discovered formulas—for deeper, cleaner cleansing!—for superb richer softening!—for sheerest make-up flattery! Your happy promise of flawless new skin beauty!

PENATEN
penetrates deeper into pore openings

Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream ...incomparable cleaner cleansing!
PENATEN makes this De Luxe Cold Cream deeper-cleansing. Helps cleansing oils actually penetrate deeper into pore openings. Seeks out clogging soil and make-up more effectively. With your first jar of Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream, your skin will be fresh and beauty-clean...as never before!

Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream ...superb richer softening!
Magically, PENATEN aids the skin absorb rich emollients in this De Luxe Dry Skin Cream. Lanolin's softening benefits... four more skin softeners... penetrate deeper into pore openings. Tiny lines soften. Flaky roughness smooths. Your skin looks gloriously younger!

Jars dressed in pink-and-gold elegance. Trial sizes, 20¢ to largest luxury sizes, $1.39. Plus tax.

Woodbury De Luxe Liquefying Cleansing Cream—contains Penaten! Particularly effective for cleansing oily or normal skin. Melts instantly. Loosens clinging grime, make-up, surface oil. Night and morning use helps keep skin clearer, younger-looking.

Woodbury De Luxe Vanishing Facial Cream—For Glamorous Make-Up: Greaseless, disappearing. A thin veil makes even oily skin look dewy. For a Beauty Pick-up: Apply lavishly to soften skin particles. Tissue off. Skin looks fresher, younger.

Woodbury De Luxe Powder Base Foundation Cream—Petal-Tinted: Adds glow to any powder shade. Veils dry or normal skin in satin-textured base that holds make-up. Helps hide blemishes. Apply sparingly—smooth over face, throat.

Woodbury De Luxe Complete Beauty All-Purpose Cream—Pink-Tinted: Penaten makes this De Luxe All-Purpose Cream more effective—for complete skin care, day and night. Cleanses deeper. Softens superbly. Provides a clinging make-up base.

big cats out at Trader Horn's Wild Animal Farm for almost a month so they would get used to her before production started on I Tamed A Lion.

The little French-born star was carrying a monkey on her arm when she got too close to a cage, and a leopard viciously struck out at her through the bars. Tanis was badly clawed on the arm. But the gal is game. Next week she was back at work—but keeping an eye on the tabbies, let me tell you.

* * *

Close-up of Ava Gardner: She's the darling of the studio fitting rooms. Stands for hours getting pinned and tucked without a murmur. . . . She still can't quite believe she is a big star. Calls all the producers and studio executives "Mister." . . . She's forgetful and hasn't yet changed her charge accounts from "Mrs. Ava Rooney"—although she and the Mick have been divorced for years. . . . Can't stand audible apple-eating, gum-chewing or cracker-nibbling. . . . If operations are too graphically described, she gets sick at her stomach. . . . Still owns an autographed picture from Jean Harlow which she wrote for when she was a wide-eyed fan herself. . . . When the radio is playing, she dances around the room by herself, if there is no dancing partner handy. . . . She never flares up with temper. But her feelings are easily hurt. . . . She likes to date young actors (particularly Howard Duff) because they speak her language. She enjoys talking shop after hours and admits it. She doesn't like even pretending to be interested in the insurance business or in real estate or in other careers of escorts outside the movie industry. . . . She has "sprees" of candy-eating, polishing off an entire layer at one time. Then she won't touch it for weeks. . . . She likes for heads to turn when she walks into a night club or theater. Makes her feel like a "movie star." . . . She is constantly borrowing nickels for telephone calls or 50 cents for the powder-room girl, but she always pays it back. . . . Someday, in about 10 years, she would like to play Sadie Thompson in Rain. . . . Anything beautiful—a sunset, a snatch of a lovely song, a poem, a fine painting—will bring a quick tear of appreciation to her eyes. . . . She wisecracks a lot to hide the fact that she's a profound sentimentalist at heart. . . . Her creed is: "Never hurt anyone—and then, you can never hurt yourself."

* * *

Dorothy Lamour won the Hollywood

. . . because HOLD-BOBS really hold. The perfection of this beauty is assured because those perfect curls are formed and held in place gently, yet so very securely, by this truly superior bobby pin. There is nothing finer.

More women use HOLD-BOBS than all other bobby pins combined

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

HOLD-BOB* is a GAYLA* hair beauty aid

©1949 GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED. CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Our April, May and June issues are practically yours right now, if you'll just take a few minutes to fill out the questiannaire below. MODERN SCREEN is interested in the stars you like ta read about, so let us know your favorites—in a hurry. Remember, the first 500 to return the questionnaire to us, will find the April, May, and June issues in their mail-boxes. For free!

QUESTIONNAIRE

Which stories and features did you enjay most in aur MARCH ISSUE? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT OF YOUR 1st, 2nd, and 3rd choices.

- I'm Not Married by Guy Madison ☐
- She'll Never Stop Fighting (Ginger Rogers) by Hedda Hopper ☐
- Clark Gable's Secret Romance ☐
- Soldier of God (Colleen Townsend) ☐
- Venus in Blue-Jeans (Ava Gardner) ☐
- Refuge for Lana (Lana Turner) ☐
- Good Skates (Roddy McDowall, Donald O'Connor, Farley Granger, etc.) ☐
- How Sweet is Sixteen? (Peggy Ann Garner) ☐
- Boy Gets Girl (Wanda Hendrix-Audie Murphy) ☐
- A Woman's Place (Rosalind Russell) ☐
- Strange Loves of Hedy Lamarr ☐
- State of the Reunion (John Payne-Gloria De Haven) ☐
- No Time for Fun (Jane Powell) ☐
- End of the Beginning (Mark Stevens) ☐
- The Awkward Age (Margaret O'Brien) ☐
- Picture of the Month (Portrait of Jennie) ☐
- Louella Parsons' Good News ☐

Which of the above did yau like LEAST?.....

Whot 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars wauld yau like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

Whot MALE stor do you like least?.....

What FEMALE stor do you like leost?.....

My name is.....

My address is.....

City..... Zone..... State..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Which Twin has the Toni?

(and which has the $15 beauty shop wave? See answer below.)

Compare Toni with any other permanent—any home wave, any beauty shop wave—and you'll find there's no finer wave at any price!

The secret of lovelier hair is yours—with a Toni Home Permanent. For your Toni wave is so soft, so easy to manage, so natural-looking that people will probably ask if you have naturally curly hair! But before trying Toni you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?
Of course. Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?
Amazingly easy! If you can roll your hair on curlers, you can give yourself a Toni. It's so surprisingly simple that each month another two million women use Toni Home Permanent.

Why do most women prefer to use TONI?
Because the Toni Waving Lotion is not a harsh, hurry-up salon solution. Instead it's a mild creme lotion—made especially for home use. So gentle it just coaxes your hair into beautifully soft waves and curls. That's why your Toni wave looks more natural, even on the very first day.

Will my TONI wave be loose or tight?
With Toni, you can have just the amount of curl you want . . . from a loose, casual wave to a halo of soft ringlets.

How long will my TONI last?
Your lovely Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent . . . or your money back.

How much will I save with TONI?
The Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the plastic curlers again and again. So for your second Toni wave all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs just $1 . . . yet there is no finer wave at any price.

Which twin has the TONI?
Lovely Frances and Bernadette Hanson live in New York City. Frances, the twin on the right, has the Toni. She says: "I want a permanent that's soft and natural-looking right from the start. And that's just the way my Toni is!"

NOW over ~~1~~ 2 million women a month use Toni

Jinx Falkenburg makes her entrance into blockaded Berlin. Irving Berlin and Bob Hope assist her. They flew there to entertain occupotian forces and airlift personnel at Christmas.

Women's Press Club golden apple as "the most cooperative actress of 1948" in a walk-away—and it couldn't happen to a nicer girl.

Glenn Ford won honors as the good boy—but Glenn came in on a photo finish with Burt Lancaster and won by just a handful of votes.

The booby prizes as the "least cooperative" stars went to Rita Hayworth and Errol Flynn—and they had no competition for the dubious honors.

There was a big to-do about Shirley Temple being on the list of "least cooperative" actresses—which is hard for me to believe. I've always found her to be most helpful and willing to be interviewed.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: So have I!]

But Shirley did not take the rumor that she was in the doghouse, lying down. She telephoned the press ladies and said she wanted to appear before them and find out actual cases of when she had failed to cooperate! I like her fighting spirit and, as I said before, I'm sure where Shirley is concerned, it must have been a big misunderstanding.

* * *

I don't know whether to laugh or cry over what Rita Hayworth is doing to her career.

It's a fantastic story—of that once too-plump little dancer who started out practically dancing for her supper in the patio of the old Agua Caliente hotel, who's on the verge of marrying an Indian prince—heir to one of the great fortunes of the world.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Before she left Hollywood with Ali Khan to spend the holidays at his fabulous horse-breeding farm in Ireland, Rita is supposed to have said:

"Who wouldn't prefer pushing a button for whatever you want instead of getting up at dawn to make movies?" She didn't say it to me, so I do not know whether it is true or not.

But it's hard for me to reconcile that frame of mind, with the Rita I have known, the girl who was so proud of her career and of the way she had pulled herself up to an enviable place in the sun by her dancing boot straps.

Less than a year ago, when I interviewed her, she told me, "Through my own efforts I have earned one of the greatest things life has to offer—independence. I am my own woman. No man is doing my thinking or living for me." And she said it with such pride.

I wonder if she has made a decision that will really bring her happiness? Untold riches are at her feet after Ali's divorce, when he's free to marry her. And she must be in love with him to have left herself open to so much criticism by "accidentally" showing up with him in all corners of the globe.

But she is giving up a great deal that can be measured in values beyond money—the solace of good work, achievement, being her "own woman."

Rita, Rita—as an old friend, I wonder. . . .

* * *

That's all for this month. And, as always, thanks for your letters. The letter score-board this month reads:

Lots of mail on Robert Mitchum—pro and con.

An upsurge of interest in Farley Granger. Ditto for Ann Blyth.

And Rita Hayworth should read some of my mail on her recent escapades!

Well, keep right on speaking your mind—I certainly enjoy all your letters.

AROUND AND AROUND IT GOES (and where it will stop nobody knows)

GOING oboard the Britannic in N.Y. with her four-year-old daughter Rebecca, Rita Hayworth adds new chopter to her royal romance.

GOING from Britannic to land in Queenstown, Eire, Rita tried to ovoid press, when queried stated she was very fond of Prince Ali Khon.

GONE? Alone but oboard the Britannic was Ali (center). It was reported that he and Rita spent Xmos together in County Kildaire, Eire.

Suddenly, on every hand—
This luxury polish! So low priced!

FURS BY ESTHER DOROTHY

Wondrous NAIL BRILLIANCE BY CUTEX *only 25¢

If you love luxury—utter luxury—you're the Nail Brilliance type.

No other polish offers so much . . . not even the most expensive polishes! See how many extras! Steady-based beauty of a bottle. Long-handled "artist's" brush for smooth-and-easy application. Miracle wear! Ten devastating, fadeless colors!

So pure, too! Even women whose skins are allergic to other polishes can safely use glamorous Nail Brilliance.

Suddenly—on the prettiest lips—the new Cutex Lipstick!
Imagine! A lipstick as wickedly flattering to your lips as Nail Brilliance is to your hands! Silkier-than-silk texture! Clinging-vine cling! Vibrant color-intensity! Colors to complement Nail Brilliance . . compliment you. Only 49¢*. *PLUS TAX.

LADD'S IN THE WEST... IN TWO-GUN TECHNICOLOR!

Here's a LADD you've always dreamed about—quiet, gentle-like — but the most feared man on the wild frontier! Afraid of nothing but the woman who loved him!

Filmed on a scale to rival the never-to-be-forgotten "Union Pacific"!

ALAN LADD

ROBERT PRESTON · BRENDA MARSHALL

DONALD CRISP

in

"Whispering SMITH"

Color by TECHNICOLOR

A Paramount Picture with

WILLIAM DEMAREST

Fay Holden · Murvyn Vye · Frank Faylen

Associate Producer Mel Epstein · Directed by Leslie Fenton

Screenplay by Frank Butler and Karl Kamb · Based on the Novel by Frank H. Spearman

state of the reunion

Gloria always wanted so much—she wanted John and the children and the glitter of Hollywood. But John said she couldn't have them all. Now he's changed his mind . . .

BY MORGAN MacNEIL

Together again after their third separation, the Paynes (married in 1945) are compromising. Gloria will have her career, but will keep it outside the home.

■ The latest reconciliation of John Payne and Gloria De Haven was announced on November 28th of last year after Gloria had already filed for divorce. John merely sat down and sent a telegram to several columnists, saying, "John Payne and Gloria De Haven have reconciled and are now living together again." (Florabel Muir had predicted this would happen in the story called "Parting Is Such Sorrow" in the January MODERN SCREEN—which went to press a few days before the reconciliation.)

That announcement was received with a good deal of happiness in the movie colony, largely because Hollywood has known for a long time that Gloria De Haven has always been in love with her husband. She has loved him tempestuously, passionately, with the singular ardor of a young girl who has known true love only once.

Even when she sought her freedom and filed for divorce, even when she went dancing with Peter Lawford and Jerry Lewis and other young bloods around town, even when she journeyed to New York with June Allyson and dated the flip Manhattanites whose main interest in life is the escorting of beautiful women to the Stork Club or the Colony or the Maisonette Room of the St. Regis—even then, she was in love with the tall, proud guy from Roanoke, Virginia.

And he with her. That's why they've come back together—the bond between them is yet too strong to be rent asunder, their children still cry out for the care and guidance of both parents. they still think that with understanding and compromise and perseverance their marriage can again be a joyful going concern.

As 1949 gets under way, John Payne and Gloria De Haven are taking up their marriage on a new basis. "Each of us," declares Gloria, "is to have a separate professional career. John will go his way as a free-lance actor or as a producer of his own independent productions—and I'll go mine as an actress under contract to MGM. We know that two acting careers in one family usually (Continued on page 113)

He's married,
he isn't married,
he is married—
that's what the columnists say. Now, Guy himself sets the record straight in this remarkable story.

I'M NOT MARRIED

by Guy Madison

■ I go out with Gail Russell. I have gone out with her almost from the time we first met three years ago. We are not married.

The way I am, when I go with a girl I "go steady"—whether the girl goes steady or not, which may or may not be a good thing. The point is, if I'd shifted about—gone with one girl, then another, and then back again with Gail—there'd have been no need for writing this story. Everyone would have said, "That's typical of Hollywood"—and that would have been the end of it. But so far, I haven't been the kind of guy who operates that way. Maybe I'll change. I sure don't expect to, but you never can tell.

The three statements in the first paragraph truly represent the facts of my romance with Gail Russell. I know only too well that they're not the statements you hear in Hollywood about us. Every now and then the same report is heard: Gail and I are married. There are several versions of how this happened. We eloped to Las Vegas. We ran off to Mexico and there, in some small village consisting of three 'dobe huts and a cantina, we were wed by a local mustachioed justice. Or we slipped away to my home town of Bakersfield, California, and there, with the aid of cooperative local officials, we were married secretly.

I think I was personally responsible for the last report of this kind—broadcast on a Sunday a few months ago to the whole country. At a party held just the day before the broadcast, someone came up to me—a male guest—and asked, "Say, why don't you marry Gail Russell?"

I should have answered carefully. Instead, I chose to kid him. "I guess you don't read the columnists," I replied, "or you'd know I married Gail a year ago."

"No!" he cried, and was gone. Another guest came up and I forgot about the first man. The next day came the broadcast —and my joking remark was given as the real inside dope!

GUY AND GAIL HAVE KNOWN EACH OTHER FOR THREE YEARS, YET THEIR BUSY CAREERS HAVE GIVEN THEM COMPARATIVELY FEW OPPORTUNITIES TO BE TOGETHER.

I denied the report, as usual. Gail denied it. (Or, as I remember, this time she just stayed in hiding.) And, as usual, nobody paid any attention to us. Nobody ever has. It's a good thing we don't doubt each other the way the rest of Hollywood seems to doubt us.

So let me state it here again, for anyone who may be interested: I am not married. And let me add—again for the benefit of anyone who may care to know—that if and when I decide to get married I will announce it loudly and proudly!

I've been doing a lot of thinking since this all started, and I believe I know what's causing most of the talk. If I'm right, it's less of a reflection on Gail and me than it is on Hollywood for being unwilling to understand the problems confronting young people in pictures today.

"Of course they're married! They've been going together for three years. That would be an overlong engagement period in the most conservative circles in the country—let alone Hollywood. You can't tell me they're not married!"

That seems to be the general opinion. The answer is simple. Yes, I have been going out with Gail almost since we met, three years ago—but we have not been going together for three years!

Right from the beginning, our romance has consisted of a day or two together, followed by many, many weeks of separation because of work. That's show business in Hollywood today; that's how a boy and girl go together out here when they're both starting out in pictures! The wonder is not that we haven't married—the wonder is that we've continued going together despite the little time we've had for ourselves.

I have a boyhood friend, Danny Shull, (Continued on page 115)

MOVIE REVIEWS

by Christopher Kane

A LETTER TO THREE WIVES

They'll probably call this a "woman's picture," but it's fascinating. Lady named Addie has a letter delivered to three wives. In it, she says she's leaving town and taking one of their husbands along. The three girls—Jeanne Crain, Ann Sothern and Linda Darnell—are starting off on a day-long excursion with a bunch of under-privileged kids, none of them wants to admit she's scared and go home, so they face out the day, each with her private thoughts. Jeanne's married to Jeffrey Lynn; she thinks maybe he's tired of her. She was a farm girl before they married; he's always had money and social position. Ann's married to Kirk Douglas, a high-school English teacher. They fight a lot because she writes a soap opera to piece out their income. He says soap opera's a menace; she says you can't feed children with high ideals and good grammar. Linda's husband is Paul Douglas, who owns a chain of department stores. Linda came from the wrong side of the tracks; Douglas married her because he couldn't get her any other way. As for whose husband leaves whom, wait and see. The pace of the movie, the flashbacks, are consistently interesting, funny, even exciting. There are performances by Connie Gilchrist as Linda's mother, and Thelma Ritter as a maid named Sadie, that are nothing short of magnificent. These two (drinking beer in the kitchen of the house down by the railroad tracks, shaking up and down heroically as the trains go by) are worth three times the price of admission. Incidentally, Hollywood should give Ann Sothern more good parts. She's very nearly the cutest, smartest-looking girl out there.—20th-Fox

The three wives concerned in A Letter to Three Wives are Lindo Dornell, Ann Sothern and Jeonne Croin. Lindo (above) is wed to Poul Douglas—who's not too interested in her spirituol side.

Ann Sothern's mate is Kirk Douglos. He's o school-teocher, ond their hormony is os shottered os thot record over Ann's wonting to write o soop opero—o form of ort he looks down on.

Jeonne Croin hos Jeffrey Lynn for o husbond. He's rich ond sociol, while she oin't, ond she begins to think moybe the guy hos become bored with her.

How LUCKY Can You Get ?

Amusement Enterprises presents

DOROTHY LAMOUR · BRIAN DONLEVY · CLAIRE TREVOR

in

"THE LUCKY STIFF"

JACK BENNY PRODUCER

with

IRENE HERVEY · BILLY VINE · MARJORIE RAMBEAU · ROBERT ARMSTRONG

DIRECTED BY LEWIS R. FOSTER

Screenplay by Lewis R. Foster
Based on the novel by Craig Rice
Released thru United Artists

It's a rollicking mystery-comedy based on the papular Craig Rice character (and we do mean "character") Mr. Malone

In 36 Minutes—wing your way to

Romayne Cahoon, charming Pan American World Airways stewardess, uses Glover's 3-Way Medicinal Treatment for lovely highlights!

New Hair Loveliness

Yes, in 36 minutes your hair can look lovelier! Appear always at your best on time, for business or social engagements—and Glover's Mange Medicine helps you do just that! Fresh lustre and radiance, natural color tone, hair softness and glamour—these are yours with Glover's famous 3-Way Medicinal Treatment—quickly, conveniently, in your own home! Ask for the regular sizes of Glover's Mange Medicine, GLO-VER Beauty Shampoo and Glover's Hair Dress at Drug or Cosmetic counters—or mail Coupon today for free trial application of all three!

The Famous 3-Way Medicinal Treatment

Glover's

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Free Trial Application

Be Glover-wise...glamorize with Glover's Mange Medicine, Glo-Ver Beauty Shampoo, Glover's Hair Dress! One complete application of each in hermetically-sealed bottles—all three in free Sampler Package not sold in stores. Mail Coupon today.

Glover's, Dept. 853
101 W. 31st St., New York 1, N. Y.

Send free Sampler Package in plain wrapper by return mail—Glover's Mange Medicine, GLO-VER Beauty Shampoo, Glover's Imperial Hair Dress in 3 hermetically-sealed bottles—with free booklet. I enclose 10¢ to cover cost of packaging and postage.

Name.....
(PLEASE PRINT PLAINLY)
Address.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

Command Decision: Brigadier General Clork Goble has the terrible Air Force duty of sending flyers out on missions on which mony must die.

COMMAND DECISION

Command Decision calls for that pompous word, "splendid." Everybody's cast perfectly, and the dialogue is magnificent. Since it's a war picture, it's grim. You won't hum, as you leave the theater—that's fair warning. Clark Gable plays an American brigadier general left by his superior, Major General Walter Pidgeon, in charge of Air Force operations over Germany. A certain "Operation Stitch" has been planned for some time. It's an operation necessary in order to knock out three German cities which are manufacturing aircraft superior to American aircraft. But the three German cities are deep in the Reich, beyond the protection of American fighter planes. Now, the campaign will take several days, and good weather is vital to any kind of success, so when the weather experts inform Gable that a few fine days are coming up, he orders "Operation Stitch" begun. In two days, the losses are so huge, everyone's appalled. The talk is that Gable's power-crazy; that he doesn't care how many lives he wastes. Pidgeon returns, upset. He's more diplomatic than Gable, he's used to juggling tea-cups and buttering up the right hostesses to get to important people—people who can help Air Power appropriations. He's just as concerned about the war as Gable, but they do their fighting along different lines. He wants "Operation Stitch" called off. A Congressional investigating committee's in the act of descending upon them, and he'd like the losses to look a little less horrifying for a few days. Gable claims that delaying "Stitch" means losing the good weather, and not knowing when good weather will come again. Whichever way the decision is made, men lose their lives. If it's done Gable's way, possibly it will mean a few men today, to have many men tomorrow. Some of the actors involved—John Hodiak, as a colonel, and Cameron Mitchell, as a lieutenant—give such quiet, forceful performances, they should both have medals. Van Johnson's excellent as Gable's aide, Charles Bickford plays a reporter, Edward Arnold a horrible congressman, and Brian Donlevy a brigadier general and a gentleman.—MGM.

CRISS-CROSS

Some of the most fantastic dialogue in the whole wide world turns up here. Our hero, Burt Lancaster, comes home to Los Angeles (he's been away for a year, trying to forget his divorced wife, Yvonne de Carlo) only to discover that he's still haunted by memories. He talks to himself. It goes like this. "You're eating an apple. You get a piece of the core stuck between your teeth. You tear a piece of cellophane off a pack of cigarettes, try to work the apple out. The piece of cellophane gets stuck too. . . . I knew I was going to see Anna. . . ." A little later, one of the other characters involved says (of Lancaster), "He's got her in his bones." And while you're attempting to figure whether she's in his teeth or his bones, the story unwinds. Since the divorce, Yvonne has been hanging around with a gambler (Dan Duryea). She still loves Burt, but she marries Dan out of spite, when Burt says a few mean things to her. Dan leaves town on a trip, Burt and Yvonne see each other (he seems to like her better when she's somebody else's wife) and when Dan comes home, he decides to wipe Burt out. Burt says, wait a minute, let's go into business, you're a big crook, and I'm a guard on an armored car, why shouldn't we be friends? This suits Dan. Together, they work out a robbery scheme, and it goes off flawlessly until Dan shoots down Burt's fellow-guard (Griff Barnett) in cold blood. Then Burt gets mad, and wrecks the whole works, and he lands up in the hospital acclaimed a public hero. A cop friend of his—ex-friend, anyway (Stephen McNally)—realizes Burt was involved in the robbery plot, though it looks to the world as if he'd been busily defending the payroll when the bad men struck. So

New lotion sensation a beauty miracle for your WHOLE HAND!

WORKS WONDERS! Lanolin-enriched for extra effectiveness, New Hinds Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream keeps your whole hand feeling soft in spite of ravages of work and water. Use it to smooth elbows, arms and legs . . . try it as a powder base. Use Hinds to help protect babies' and children's tender skin from chapping! 4 sizes, 10¢ to $1.00. PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK

Hinds

Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream

NOW IN NEW LARGER BEAUTY BOTTLE

R. TAYLOR

All work and No Fels-Naptha...

"I'm not the complaining kind, goodness knows . . . but it does seem as though some one in this house would think about me once in awhile.

"Nobody works any harder than I do . . . week after week . . . washing the family's clothes . . . with never so much as a 'thank you' or a pat on the wringer.

"I'm not choosy, either . . . whatever they hand me . . . fine linens; the ladies' lingerie; Junior's grubby play suits; the Boss's work clothes . . . I get the dirt out—somehow.

"Seems to me it's about time I had some capable help on this job. After all, I don't ask for too much . . . just some Fels-Naptha Soap."

Golden bar or Golden chips

Fels-Naptha

banishes "Tattle-Tale Gray"

Criss-Cross: Criminol Burt Loncoster finds he still loves his ex-wife, Yvonne de Corlo.

you know Burt's going to get it in the end—either from the cops or from Dan's gang (Dan's still alive and kicking). So you know, but you don't really care.—Univ.

A KISS IN THE DARK

If you can believe the story of Kiss in the Dark, you've won half your battle with the movie. David Niven's a concert pianist whose manager buys him an apartment house. (His manager invests all his money, because Niven's considered a feeble-minded child about anything but music.) When the manager (Joseph Buloff) goes away for a while, the ex-owner of David's new apartment house comes to call on David. This ex-owner (Victor Moore) considers the house his baby, and he wants to make sure David will treat the tenants right. Maybe David would even put in a roof garden, and a recreation hall, and a day nursery. . . David's apathetic until he gets a load of photographers' model Jane Wyman (she lives in the apartment house) and then it's love. He gives up the stuffy old world he's been living in, and he goes out to listen to swing music, by gosh. His old teacher (Maria Ouspenskaya) advises him to do just this, as a matter of fact. "Don't let that," she says, nodding toward the piano, "dominate your life as it did mine. Don't get old and lonely." Since, by Madame's admission, she's older than almost anybody, at the time we meet her, and since she's in the process of being given a party by her many friends and admirers, and since she's considered one of the world's foremost musicians, and has behind her a long and glorious career, it's a little hard to be sorry for her. She's neither in the poorhouse nor the old folks' home. However, David gets the point (more than I did) and changes his ways. He haunts his new apartment house, plays the piano loudly to get rid of an undesirable tenant (Brod Crawford), trains lowbrow Jane to like a high-class piece of music like "A Kiss in the Dark," and finally marries her, despite the protests of her loutish insurance-salesman-boy-friend, Wayne Morris. After which, deciding a man can have his cake and eat it, too, he and Jane depart on a concert tour. (First, though, he knocks down his manager, who's tried to prevent the romance, and then he knocks down Wayne Morris, who's ditto. (David's allowed Wayne to insure his, David's, hands, you see.) Maybe while he's on tour, he'll discover he prefers socking people to playing the piano, and then we have a sequel, in which he plays a boxer (man, not dog).—Warners

A Kiss in the Dark: Longhair pianist David Niven is introduced to jozz by Jone Wyman.

JOHN LOVES MARY

John Loves Mary, the movie, must be a lot like John Loves Mary, the play, was. Most of the characters stand around in one room, while other characters arrive, depart, make off-stage noises, and come rushing in with dramatic stories about what happened to them down the street a piece. Why the movies don't make more use of their facilities, when translating from the cramped stage, I can't understand. Which still doesn't mean that John Loves Mary isn't pretty funny. It concerns Ronald Reagan, a soldier who's come back from the war to marry the girl he loves (Patricia Neal), a senator's daughter. Only trouble is that his best friend, Jack Carson, the man who saved Reagan's life in battle, has returned to the United States long before Reagan. He's not only returned, he's returned broken-hearted. Because he's fallen in love with an English girl (Virginia Field) but he's lost her somewhere in the blitz. When Reagan—right before sailing for home—re-discovers Virginia, he wants to bring her back with him as a surprise for Carson, but to get a girl across, you have to marry her. Ronald does his duty, marries Virginia. He figures they'll be divorced in Reno, she'll marry Carson shortly thereafter, his own girl-friend will understand everything, etc. Carson, however, develops a wife and child at the first sight of Reagan, and there's Reagan with a wife and a fiancée, and oh, so much trouble. The movie's full of expert clowning (Carson's in particular), Edward Arnold and Katherine Alexander are charming as a senator and a senator's wife, and Patricia Neal makes an effective debut, though I wish she wouldn't say "Mahther" (instead of "mother") like an imitation of Hepburn.—Warners

IF YOUR HAIR LOOKS LIKE THIS →

WHEN IT SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS ←

don't use greasy pomades, brittle lacquer or sticky hair oil...

"Suave" your hair

Your beautician will tell you there's nothing else like Suave to make hair miraculously obedient . . . whisper-soft, kissable . . . starry-bright . . . Keeps every tress perfectly in place, and safe from parching sunlight. Rinses out instantly. It's the amazing, new cosmetic for hair that outsells ALL women's hair-dressings! Greaseless—not a hair oil. No alcohol! For the whole family. At beauty shops, drug and department stores. 50c and $1

"The cosmetic for hair"

Helene Curtis Suave

Tonic for Spring Fever!

A GREYHOUND EXPENSE-PAID TOUR

Take your pick! Everything is arranged, paid for in advance

An Amazing America Tour is all pleasure for you because Greyhound makes the reservations, picks the best of sightseeing and entertainment—you just enjoy yourself. Tours are amazingly low in cost—and are arranged for one person or a group. Early birds get first choice of hotel and resort facilities—so go in the Spring or early Summer. A few of the dozens of tours available:

6-DAY MIAMI TOUR $41.60 ☐
Includes hotel accommodations, bus and boat sight-seeing trips, round-trip to Key West, with luncheon.

4-DAY SAN FRANCISCO TOUR $13.20 ☐
Provides hotel accommodations, Gray Line tours of famous attractions, including U. C. Campus and Chinatown.

5-DAY NEW YORK CITY TOUR $21.60 ☐
Hotel, sight-seeing in N.B.C. Building, Rockefeller Center, Empire State Bldg. and Gray Line tour over entire city.

7-DAY MEXICO CITY TOUR $68.60 ☐
Accommodations at Hotel Geneve, four sight-seeing trips to points of interest and beauty around Mexico City. Six meals included.

11-Day Florida Circle Tour, $86.30 ☐. 6-Day Circle Tour Colonial Virginia, $40.45 ☐. 3-Day Chicago Tour, $11.95 ☐. 5-Day Washington, D. C. Tour, $24.95 ☐. 4-Day Los Angeles Tour, $12.40 ☐. 2-Day Kentucky Cave Tour, $21.10 ☐. 4-Day Historic Boston Tour, $23.25 ☐.

Tour prices subject to change without notice.
(Add price of Greyhound ticket to above rates.)

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR TOUR INFORMATION

Fill in this coupon and mail it to: GREYHOUND HIGHWAY TOURS, Dept. DM39, 105 West Madison, Chicago 2, Ill. Be sure to put check-mark opposite tour which interests you.

Name _____

Address _____

City & State _____ DM39

Chicken Every Sunday: Dan Dailey does on awful lot of good, but keeps going broke. Celeste Holm's his wife, Colleen Townsend's their daughter.

CHICKEN EVERY SUNDAY

Dan Dailey stops dancing long enough to enact a lovable if nerve-wracking husband and father in Chicken Every Sunday. He practically builds the city of Tucson, Arizona, single-handed, but his wife (Celeste Holm) has to take in boarders to pay the bills. The way it is, Dan can't resist a gamble. He starts a street-car line, but the minute it begins to show a profit, he sells it and invests the money in a creamery, and the same thing's repeated with a laundry and an opera house and a hotel. He thinks the town needs a hospital, and when nobody comes across with the necessary money, he pledges it himself, and there he is in hock again. Celeste, who's followed a policy of building a room on the house and taking in a new boarder every time Dan indulges himself in a new investment, finds herself worn to a frazzle at the end of 20 married years. She has three children, but she doesn't even own her furniture. Dan's given the banker a note on it. Meanwhile, life in the bustling boarding-house is eventful. Colleen Townsend (Dan and Celeste's oldest girl) is being beaued about by two callow young men (Alan Young and Bill Callahan), a crazy old lady (Connie Gilchrist), who used to be in show business, yodels all day long and throws around empty liquor bottles, and William Frawley (he's rich, and Dan wants him to invest some money in a copper scheme) wears a toupee that looks like a fur hat. Celeste is on the verge of divorcing Dan for non-support (this is right after the men have come and taken away the furniture) when suddenly the men come trotting back and replace the furniture. They've taken up a collection and paid for the stuff, because everybody in town loves Dan. This makes Dan feel even worse. He's middle-aged, and his friends have to arrange things so his wife and kids have beds to sleep in. But Celeste begins to see things differently. You can't be a failure if you have friends, she decides. And the only real security is the kind that comes from the heart. This picture is warm and pleasant and amusing. It's slow in spots, but unless you can't stand nice people, you won't find it dull.—20th-Fox

WHISPERING SMITH

If railroad detective Alan Ladd (Whispering Smith—he talks soft, but he shoots straight, ole pal) had cut down Preston Foster (a rat, who also works for the railroad) at his (Preston's) very first sneaking underhanded move, everybody could have gone home much earlier. Because Preston starts acting funny at the very beginning of the drama. However, Alan, being an old buddy of Preston's, gives him the benefit of every doubt. He doesn't holler even after Preston wrecks a few trains, and steals a few cows, and gets mixed up in a few assorted murders involving train crewmen. (The reason Preston's acting this way? Simple. The head of the railroad told him he couldn't loot wrecks any more, and he likes to loot wrecks. Feels everything on a wrecked train belongs to the men who go after it.) I think it's when Preston starts smacking his wife (Brenda Marshall) around, that Alan, who loves Brenda too, is really hurt to the quick. But not quick enough. The good guys (on Alan's side) include William Demarest; the bad guys (on Preston's side) include British Donald Crisp, who talks with a Western twang, believe it or not, and Frank Faylen as weirdly-named Whitey Du Sang, in the gol-darnedest make-up you've ever seen.—Para.

COMING ATTRACTION: THE APRIL ISSUE OF MODERN SCREEN—THE SPECIAL SHIRLEY TEMPLE BIRTHDAY BOOK!

NOT ONE! NOT TWO! NOT FOUR! NOT SIX! but EIGHT FREE!

ON THIS AMAZING OFFER

YES—we want to give you, AT ONCE, all 8 of these best-read books FREE, to prove how much pleasure you'll get as a member of "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"! Ordinarily, Book League members get their Bonus Books at the rate of one FREE with every two Club Selections (or alternates) purchased. But on this offer, YOU get ALL 6 Bonus Books right away, and — in the SAME BIG PACKAGE—you get 2 more best-sellers free, as your membership gift! Read the brief description of each popular book, here. Then mail coupon for your 8 FREE BOOKS today!

THOUSANDS HAVE PAID $18 FOR THESE 8 BOOKS-- But YOU Get Them FREE

If you join the Book League now!

THE BURNISHED BLADE, By Lawrence Schoonover—Dashing Pierre learned swordsmanship from a cavalier, manners from a gentle priest, and passion from an innkeeper's daughter. But to win romance, he braved the forbidden harems and barbaric torture-chambers of medieval Turkey!

SHORT STORIES OF DE MAUPASSANT—Over 50 of the most daring stories ever written! Tales of love, hate, intrigue, and passion that have never been equaled!

TALES FROM THE DECAMERON—Boccaccio's famous and lusty tales—about the amorous antics of outraged husbands and outrageous lovers, of sinning "saints" and saintly "sinners."

THE GOLDEN HAWK, By Frank Yerby—Roaring adventure and sultry love on the Spanish Main, where a pirate met his match in a bandit-wench no man dared tame! By the author of "Foxes of Harrow."

LIGHT IN THE SKY, By Agatha Young—Willoughby Fenno's seductive beauty made every man her slave. Then she met a man as ruthless as herself — and even her father's wealth couldn't shield her from a scandal that rocked the entire city!

JANE EYRE, By Charlotte Bronte—The tale of a passionate love affair between a sophisticated Englishman and a young governess — haunted by the screaming secret in that lonely house.

THE CLEFT ROCK, By Alice Tisdale Hobart—Beautiful Katya's husband denied her his love, even his name for their unborn child. But she gambled with fate—and found passion in the arms of her black-sheep brother-in-law.

AN AFFAIR OF STATE, By Pat Frank—Two women loved the handsome young Budapest diplomat. One lured him to dishonor and treason. The other made one supreme sacrifice — to save his career and his life. By the author of "Mr. Adam."

Why "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club" Gives You $18 Worth of Books FREE

BOOK LEAGUE membership is an adventure in exciting reading. You never pay any dues or club fees. And every month you receive the current Selection, or an alternate if you prefer, at the Club's special low price.

You get a popular best-seller by an outstanding author like Steinbeck, Maugham, or Hemingway —a book selling, in the publisher's edition, for $3.00 or more. But (regardless of how much the book may cost in the publisher's edition) YOU get your copy at the special low members' price of only $1.49, plus few cents shipping charges.

You Get EIGHT FREE Books RIGHT AWAY!

On this special offer, you don't have to wait a year to assemble the Bonus Books which members receive with every 2 Club Selections (or alternates) purchased—you may have SIX of them right away, in advance! AND—in addition—you get, in the same big package, TWO MORE FREE BOOKS as your membership gift from the Club! Yet the only requirement is that members accept not less than twelve of the Club's book bargains during membership.

Moreover, there is NO LIMIT to the number of free Bonus Books you may receive! If you remain in the club, you CONTINUE to get gift books like these—not only best-sellers by today's great authors, but also uniformly bound immortal masterpieces of writers like Shakespeare, Dumas, Balzac, Poe, etc.

No Need to Take Every REGULAR Selection

The book you receive each month need NOT be the Club's regular Selection. Each month you get without extra charge, the Club's "Review," which describes other best-sellers; so that, if you prefer one of these to regular Selection, choose it instead. No membership dues; no further cost or obligation.

Send No Money—JUST MAIL COUPON NOW!

Mail coupon today—without money—and receive BIG membership gift package containing the EIGHT books described above.

You also receive, as your first Selection, the current best-selling novel now being distributed to Club members. Enjoy these nine free books—eight FREE, and the ninth at the Club's bargain price.

Then you will understand why this IS "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"! Mail coupon —without money—now.

BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA, Dept. DMM3, Garden City, N. Y.

MAIL WITHOUT MONEY to

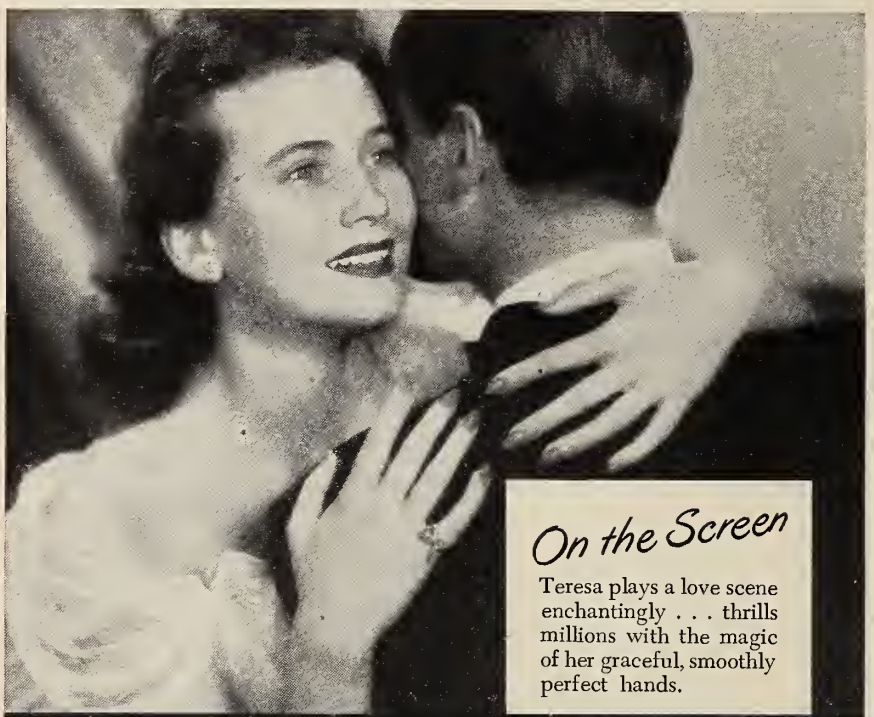
BOOK LEAGUE OF AMERICA
Dept. DMM3, Garden City, N. Y.

Please send me at once—FREE—all eight of the books described on this page (worth $18 in publishers' editions) and enroll me as a member of the Book League. You may start my subscription with the current selection.

The best-selling book I choose each month may be either the regular Selection or any one of the other popular books described in the Club's monthly "Review." I am to pay only $1.49 (plus a few cents shipping charges) for each monthly book sent to me.

I may cancel my subscription at any time after buying twelve books, or I may continue to take advantage of the Club's book bargains for as much longer as I choose. I will then be entitled to additional Bonus Books—one for each two Selections or alternates I buy. There are no dues for me to pay; no further cost or obligation.

Mr. / Mrs. / Miss _____
Please print plainly



Address _____

City _____ Zone No. (if any) _____ State _____

Occupation _____ If under 21, age, please _____

Slightly higher in Canada. Address 105 Bond St., Toronto 2.

The Double Life of Teresa Wright!

On the Screen

Teresa plays a love scene enchantingly . . . thrills millions with the magic of her graceful, smoothly perfect hands.

TERESA WRIGHT, lovely young star of Samuel Goldwyn's "ENCHANTMENT"

In Private Life

Teresa is a popular hostess and an excellent cook. Her specialty? Chef's Salad à la Teresa! And her hand care specialty? Jergens Lotion! Teresa says: "Jergens keeps my hands wonderfully soft in spite of kitchen work."

Hollywood Stars use Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 over any other hand care

For the Stars—for you—today's richer Jergens Lotion gives finer than ever care. Now Jergens:

Protects longer against roughness.

Smooths hands to even softer, finer loveliness.

Because it's a liquid, Jergens quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. Never sticky or greasy. Only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

Keep your hands lovely to look at with Jergens Lotion

Used by More Women than Any Other Hand Care in the World!

Words and Music: Judy Garland and Mickey Rooney are just part of all the bright fun.

WORDS AND MUSIC

Supposedly based on the lives of Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, the song-writing team, this picture is full of lovely melody, witty lyrics and attractive performers. I think there may have been a flaw in casting—Mickey Rooney attacks the Hart role enthusiastically, but it doesn't seem possible that a man capable of the sophistication Hart brought to his lyrics could have acted with such collegiate and undignified abandon in his private life. Mickey's death scene—he goes staggering out of a sickbed into a stormy street, knees buckling, eyes popping—is typical of what I mean. Still, hand him an E for effort, and let's get on. Since Words and Music is a show-case for Rodgers and Hart hits of years gone by, you're bound to be smacked nostalgically by one number or another. There's the spectacular dance sequence, "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue," beautifully done by Gene Kelly and Vera-Ellen—so beautifully, that even those who remember Ray Bolger's Broadway version won't mind. There's Judy Garland doing "I Wish I Were in Love Again," and being just about the best thing in a movie filled with good things. Lena Horne appears and sings "The Lady is a Tramp," Perry Como appears and sings a lot of other tunes. Betty Garrett plays a girl named Peggy whom Lorenz Hart loved and lost, and Tom Drake acts the way he thinks the young Richard Rodgers must have, while Janet Leigh is Dorothy Feiner, the girl Rodgers marries. There's so much wonderful music, there's so much beautiful color, there's so much to satisfy your soul in Words and Music, you'll be sorry when it's over.—MGM

LIVE TODAY FOR TOMORROW

This is a gruelling picture. It exploits all your feelings, to no end whatever. You are forced to watch Florence Eldridge slowly dying of an incurable brain disease, while Fredric March, her loving husband, learns the meaning of mercy. (He's a judge who's always adhered to the letter of the law, when handing down decisions. Very strict. Old Maximum, he's called by courtroom hangerson.) Be that as it may, when Miss Eldridge develops her staggering sickness, Fredric, tortured at the sight of her pain, decides to take matters into his own hands, and attempts to kill both his wife and himself by driving his car off a cliff. He doesn't die, however, and so he insists on standing trial for murder. (He's still awfully legal-minded.) The thing gets messier still, when an autopsy's performed on Miss Eldridge's body to prove whether or 'not she mightn't have been dead before the car crashed. You wonder why anyone so sensitive to his wife's agonies as Fredric—a man who obviously considers his own life ended anyway—doesn't take some step to stop this last indignity. He faces it coolly, however, and the ending of the picture verges on the absurd. Hollywood doesn't dare come out for mercy-killing, it doesn't dare come out against mercy, and so it winds up histrionically, saying nothing, but at great length, and defeating itself on almost every count. The acting is so good—particularly Florence Eldridge's—and you suffer so intensely when she suffers, that you're particularly resentful when you discover you've been suffering for no good reason. Geraldine Brooks plays the couple's daughter, Edmond O'Brien is her lawyer boyfriend, and Stanley Ridges is fine as a doctor.—Univ.

Live Todoy for Tomorrow: Geraldine Brooks tries to comfort her father, Fredric March.

MY OWN TRUE LOVE

Melvyn Douglas gives up chasing ladies around the bedroom and turns to heavy—or at least medium-weight—drama. He's a widower, a British army officer, demobilized at the end of the recent war, living in London. His daughter Sheila (Wanda Hendrix), who's been a member of the Women's branch of the army, introduces him to a girl named Joan Clews (Phyllis Calvert) also a female soldier. Melvyn dates Phyllis, likes her, invites her to come stay with Sheila, once both girls are out of uniform. Phyllis, who's being divorced by a soldier she married in haste, and who has memories of concentration camps (she's been a spy) accepts the offer of friendship gratefully. She falls in love with Melvyn, he reciprocates, and everything's going fine until Melvyn's son (supposedly miss-

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, creamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can use the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this safe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration better. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for a free jar.

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

My Own True Love: Melvyn Douglas and son Philip Friend both fall for Phyllis Calvert.

ing in action) comes home. He's lost a leg, and he's so disagreeable, you'd think Melvyn had had something to do with the tragedy. When the son (Philip Friend) discovers that Phyllis has shared certain common experiences with him (he's been in prison camp too) he makes her his confidante. In the Pacific, he'd married a native girl, the Japs had killed his wife and baby. Subconsciously, he resents his father's having two good legs, and, now, a chance of happiness with Phyllis. That's the situation, and you sit there waiting for lightning to strike. It doesn't. A happy ending's in order. The acting is very good—Phyllis Calvert is especially warm and real—and while some of the scenes may be slightly overdone, the picture's interesting.—Para.

MAN FROM COLORADO

Colonel Owen Devereaux (Glenn Ford) and Captain Dell Stewart (Bill Holden) are pals who fight together on the Union side in the Civil War, and who return together to Colorado, afterward. Colorado isn't a state yet, but it's under federal jurisdiction, and Owen's elected federal judge. Dell agrees to serve as his marshal, not because he likes to handle a gun, but because he hopes he can keep Owen from handling one if he, Dell, is standing by. The sad truth is that Owen's been changed by war. He's become a killer. He does not recognize it himself; practically nobody does except Dell and a few soldiers who served under Owen, and who caught him in a couple of unsavory acts. (Like shooting down men who carried a flag of truce.) Nevertheless, things run smoothly in post-war Colorado until a bunch of veterans, deprived of their rights, come to Owen's court. These men had had gold claims staked out before the war. They'd gone off to fight for their country, only to come back and find their claims being worked by a big mining syndicate. All perfectly legal, too. The law said if a man hadn't worked his claim in three years, he'd forfeited his ownership. Owen sticks to the letter of the law, he makes no attempt to establish real justice, and a number of the veterans subsequently turn to lawlessness because they can't make a living any other way. Owen, enraged by what he considers defiance of his all-mighty edicts, swears to hang every outlaw he catches. His reign

The Man From Colorado: Glenn Ford doesn't seem goy os Bill Holden cuts in on Ellen Drew.

as judge becomes increasingly bloody; even his wife (Ellen Drew) and Dell turn from him. Now, quite evidently mad, Owen goes on a weird, vengeful rampage, hanging an innocent boy, setting fire to a whole town. Before he gets his, you worry yourself silly. Man From Colorado is fascinating; it's got good acting, a taut script, terrific pace.—Col.

HIGH FURY

During this last World War, many French children were sent to Switzerland for shelter. This is, supposedly, the story of one such child. His name is Roger (Michael McKeag) and he's an orphan. He's been billeted with a lady named Magda (Madeleine Carroll), who owns an inn in the Alps, and her husband Rudolph (Michael Rennie). Magda loves the boy, Rudolph hates him. Chiefly because Rudolph himself is a very insecure person. He resents not owning the inn (it's been handed down through Magda's family), he feels the village laughs at him, and he gets even with the world by small, nasty independences—unfaithfulness, for instance. Eventually, after peace is established, the authorities say that Roger must return to France unless Magda adopts him. Magda can't adopt him because Rudolph won't consent. The only thing that makes Rudolph change his mind is Magda's signing the inn over to him. So now everything's horrible. Rudolph gives the orders, Roger creeps around wishing Rudolph liked him, the village doctor (Ian Keith), who's in love with Magda, tells Magda she's a big fool, and you never saw so many mixed-up people. Then Roger, knowing that Rudolph thinks he's a coward, begs Rudolph to take him mountain climbing. It's okay with Rudolph, and once Magda's convinced that it's important to the boy, that he's got to prove something, she gives her consent. Thereafter, in some of the most terrifying scenes in motion picture history, the rise—and fall—of Roger and Rudolph is depicted. They're trapped lord knows how many feet up a mountain, when a storm rises. Roger gets into trouble, Rudolph goes to rescue him, and is hurt. Realizing that the boy can be saved only if he, Rudolph, cuts the rope that holds them together, he does just that, and plunges to his death. Magda and the doctor find the boy, and the three undoubtedly live happily ever after. I wasn't

For the skin that doesn't like heavy foundation

Now—give your skin a fresher, more natural look with this greaseless foundation cream. It holds powder perfectly . . . yet never lets your face feel "coated!"

A sheerer powder base! Greaseless! No "made-up" look . . . no "smothered" feeling!

New loveliness for the skin that doesn't like a heavy foundation! Smooth on a very thin, protective film of Pond's Vanishing Cream before powder. This lighter, greaseless powder base takes make-up beautifully—naturally! No "cakey" look, no oily shine. Powder goes on smoothly, evenly—and stays!

Glamour Mask—1 minute quick! Beauty secret for a lovelier you!

To look your prettiest, give your complexion a delightful pick-up with Pond's Vanishing Cream, smoothed on for a 1-Minute Mask. Just cover your face, except eyes, with lavish fingerfuls of the Cream. After just one minute, tissue off. "Keratolytic" action of Pond's Vanishing Cream loosens dirt and tiny roughnesses. Dissolves them off! Your skin looks marvelously alive—clearer, softer, brighter—ready to take make-up flawlessly!

The Duchess of Sutherland says "To look my best, I always 're-style' my complexion with a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. My skin looks softer, brighter in one minute—perfect for make-up!"

prepared for Rudolph's heroism myself; I was so convinced he was a rat, I expected him to push Roger off a cliff, once they started climbing. Also, Roger seemed a little old (he was about 15) for the pitiful orphan role, though I suppose a boy of 15 can be as lonely as a boy of 10, even if less defenseless. The most spectacular parts of the picture are of course the mountain-climbing shots. They're actually painful to watch.—U. A.

FAMILY HONEYMOON

If you believe Fred MacMurray and Claudette Colbert had trouble in The Egg and I, well, you just wait a while. The hapless couple is at it again; apparently they're slated to be the Garson-Pidgeon of slapstick. In Family Honeymoon, Claudette's a widow with three small children. What they lack in size, they make up in horridness. Fred—a kind, simple (you can say it again) botany professor—marries Claudette, even though rich, handsome Rita Johnson (whose father is going to build the college a new botany building, or something) wants him. Well, Claudette's sister (Lillian Bronson) breaks her leg on Claudette's wedding day, and since she was to have stayed with Claudette's children, (she probably fell downstairs on purpose) there's nothing to do but take the darlings on the honeymoon. The little girl (Gigi Perreau) asks loud questions on the train (E.G.: "Mother, is that man going to sleep with you?"), the little boys (Jimmy Hunt and Peter Miles) get off the train at one station and don't get back on in time, and they have to be chased for quite a spell, and when the company finally gets to the Grand Canyon for the honeymoon, who should be there but rich, handsome Rita! Before one day has passed, Fred's whaled the tar out of his two new sons (all they did was barricade themselves in the hotel elevator) and Claudette's told him (Fred) to remove himself from her life. You, however, being way ahead of her, are already anticipating the happy ending. This picture didn't seem screamingly funny to me, but I'm sure it will make men think twice about marrying widows with children.—Univ.

Family Honeymoon: Fred MacMurray and Claudette Colbert take her tots honeymooning.

also showing . . .

THE BOY WITH GREEN HAIR (U. A.)—A down-to-earth fantasy in which a youngster becomes an outcast when his hair suddenly turns green. Highly entertaining besides being an effective blow at that horrible absurdity, bigotry. Dean Stockwell is excellent as the young victim and Pat O'Brien and Barbara Hale give solid assistance.

THE DECISION OF CHRISTOPHER BLAKE (Warners)—A story of the effect of his parents' divorce on a 12-year-old boy that somehow doesn't arouse the sympathy it should. There are some unusual dream sequences, but the total effect is artificial. With Ted Donaldson, Alexis Smith and Robert Douglas.

DON JUAN (Warners)—Errol Flynn as the legendary lover of Old Spain finds his true love in Queen Viveca Lindfors—and proceeds to give her nefarious enemies (and the facts of history) an awful beating. Pretty hammy, but exciting.

ENCHANTMENT (Goldwyn)—A beautifully-done love story spanning three generations of an English family. Seven-year-old Gigi Perreau is superb and so are David Niven, Teresa Wright, Jayne Meadows, Farley Granger, Evelyn Keyes and a number of other top-drawer performers. One of the year's best pictures.

EVERY GIRL SHOULD BE MARRIED (RKO)—Betsy Drake decides that Cary Grant is for her and woos him, to put it mildly, dynamically. Diana Lynn, Franchot Tone and Eddie Albert are involved in the scrimmage. Maybe Betsy Drake's characterization is kind of overdone, but she is a cute thing. Everybody else is fine indeed and so, all in all, is this bright comedy.

JOAN OF ARC (RKO)—You'll be disappointed if you expect this to be the greatest movie of all time, but the Technicolor pageantry is wonderful and there are some stirring and moving moments in the two-and-a-half hours.

THE KISSING BANDIT (MGM)—Frank Sinatra goes out to early California and is surprised no end to learn he's supposed to follow in his late father's dashing footsteps as an amatory outlaw. Frank can't ride and he's plumb bashful, but he tries hard. Kathryn Grayson, Ann Miller, Cyd Charisse, Ricardo Montalban and J. Carrol Naish are also engaged in the Technicolor festivities. Very pleasant.

LET'S LIVE A LITTLE (Univ.)—Advertising exec Robert Cummings has to choose between marrying cosmetics queen Anna Sten or losing her million-dollar advertising account. Before the decision's made, he becomes a patient of psychiatrist Hedy Lamarr. This works out to get the poor guy even more mixed up. An abundance of laughs.

THE LUCKY STIFF (U. A.)—An indescribably complex murder mystery with Dorothy Lamour, Brian Donlevy, Claire Trevor and six plots. Well, it's all fast and sinister and maybe you and your date can figure it out afterwards.

THE PALEFACE (Para.)—Bob Hope and Jane Russell in a seam-busting Technicolor burlesque of the Old West. You'll hear "Buttons and Bows" and probably wind up being carried out by the ushers. You'll die laughing, that is.

THE RED SHOES (Eagle-Lion)—The high point of this Technicolor backstage drama of the ballet is a long, original ballet featuring ballerina Moira Shearer—one of the most magnificent exhibitions of imaginative dancing ever recorded. Definitely one of the better films.

THE SNAKE PIT (20th-Fox)—Olivia de Havilland loses her mind and is helped back to sanity by psychiatrist Leo Genn and husband Mark Stevens, despite the dreadful handicaps of the typical state mental hospital in which she's been put away. Absorbingly dramatic, educational, and with an outspoken social theme, this great motion picture is further distinguished by Miss de Havilland's inspired and flawless performance.

SO DEAR TO MY HEART (RKO) — Bobby Driscoll, a farm kid, wants to raise a tiny lamb to win a blue ribbon at the county fair and works his heart out to achieve it. Luana Patten is his little friend and Burl Ives his uncle. There are several cartoon sequences. Walt Disney has created an absolutely enchanting movie, funny, tender and beautiful. Please go!

UNFAITHFULLY YOURS (20th-Fox) — Here we have Rex Harrison, a symphony conductor, having daydreams as he conducts—very special daydreams, in which he imagines various dramatic ways in which he can deal with the supposed unfaithfulness of his wife, Linda Darnell. Another highly unusual comedy from Preston Sturges.

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME (20th-Fox) — Dan Dailey, a burlesque comedian, rises to the Big Time but is felled by rum. His long-suffering wife, Betty Grable, manages to make him a solid citizen again. This may sound grim, but it's really not and is filled wth good old songs and nifty dancing.

YELLOW SKY (20th-Fox)—Gregory Peck, Richard Widmark, Anne Baxter and other frontier characters drawl and shoot and walk bow-legged through a big Western that misses being first-rate but is still a superior item.

YOU GOTTA STAY HAPPY (Univ.) — Joan Fontaine runs away from her stuffy bridegroom and gets Jimmy Stewart and his sidekick, Eddie Albert, to take her to California on their cargo plane. It's a fun highly illegal, from several angles, but love and legality eventually conquer all. A cute romantic comedy.

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page the photographs which appear in this issue.

6, 7 Bob Beerman—8 Wide World—10 Nemeth from Harold Stein Studios, N. Y.—12 T. Lt. Bob Beerman, T. Rt. Wide World, Bot. Lt. Allan Squires, Bot. Rt. Wide World—15 T. H. W. Tetlow from Keystone, Bot. Lt. Wide World, Bot. Cen., A. P. from London, Bt. Rt., A. P. from London—19, 20, 21 Bob Beerman—37 T. Stork Club Bot., Bob Beerman—38, 39 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—40 Lt., Acme, Rt., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—41 United Artists—42 Bob Beerman—43 T. Bob Beerman, Bot., Gladys Tippet—44, 45 Bert Parry—46, 47 Nelson Morris Exc. Top Rt., Jay Seymour—48, 49 Bert Parry, Bob Beerman—50, 51 Bob Beerman—52 Eagle-Lion—54 Lt., Bob Beerman, Rt., Monogram—55 Bob Beerman—56, 57 Bert Parry—58, 59 Bob Beerman—60 Clarence Bull of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—61 T., Wide World, Lt., Scotty. Cen., Wide World, Rt., Jules Buck—62 20th Century-Fox—63 Bob Beerman—65 T., Paramount, Cen. 20th Century-Fox, Bot., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—66, 67, 68 Nelson Morris—69, 70, 71 Selznick—73 Gene Fenn—78, 79, 80 Jacques Simpson of Pagano Studios

Abbreviations: Bot., Bottom; Cen., Center; Exc., Except; Lt., Left; Rt., Right; T., Top; A. P., Associated Press

Modess . . . because

Have You a Complexion Problem?

Skin Oily? Dull? Drab? Coarse-Looking?

For a Fresher, Brighter Skin Use Palmolive Soap As Doctors Advised

DOCTORS PROVED the Palmolive Plan can help these complexion faults—regardless of your Age . . . Skin Type or previous Beauty Care!

Doctors proved that most women who change from improper cleansing to the Palmolive Plan improve their complexions remarkably.

Oily skin becomes less oily. Dull skin brightens. Drab skin livens up. Coarse-looking skin appears finer. Even tiny blemishes—incipient blackheads—disappear or improve. Yes, many complexion problems respond wonderfully to proper cleansing with Palmolive's famous "Beauty Lather."

Do as these 36 skin specialists advised 1285 women with all types of skin—young, old, dry, oily and normal. Use Palmolive Soap—nothing else—this way:

Wash your face with Palmolive Soap 3 times a day. Massage Palmolive's wonderful "Beauty Lather" onto your skin for 60 seconds each time to get its full beautifying effect. Then rinse.

In 14 days or less, look for improvement in your own complexion . . . changes that help you to a skin men admire and women envy. Get Palmolive Soap and start today!

And for Loveliness All Over...

Get Palmolive Bath Size for tub or shower. It's big! Long-lasting! Economical! Gives you Palmolive's proved complexion care all over!

the hard way

an open letter to dorothy lamour and glenn ford

Dear Dottie and Glenn:

Hollywood is busily telling the people that they've got a terribly wrong idea if they think movie stars are a bunch of roistering characters who spend their leisure hours working up sins and sensations. There were some regrettable incidents, the town concedes—but now everyone has learned his lesson, now the acting folks are going to be chaste and circumspect.

Somehow, though, the front pages we've seen recently have made it seem that funny business is still going on as usual. A handful of the merrier men of movieland have continued to fight the bottle, tussle with cops, drive while drunk and kick in plate-glass windows. A few of the lighter-hearted ladies have involved themselves in gambling raids, drinking bouts and love affairs that mock their own not-yet-final divorces.

This impression of riotous living is, as we said, what we gain from the front pages. It must be more than an impression—it must be a wholehearted belief—on the part of many who get their ideas from the "scare" headlines. And from Hollywood itself have come a few evidences of such belief: Trade papers have noted that at least two actors and one actress proved to be "better boxoffice" after getting mixed up in scandals. A few actors, we hear, have been wondering out loud whether they shouldn't cash in on this easy way to the big dough.

Well, our advice is nobody's gospel: it's worth 15 cents, so to speak, and anyone can get it at the corner newsstand. But here it is, for taking or leaving alone: Our advice to those actors is, don't do it. Don't try that "easy" way. Pretty soon it's not going to pay off any more.

Our advice, further, is for Hollywood to take a long and thoughtful look at you two, Dottie and Glenn. You were recently given awards by the Hollywood Women's Press Club. Superficially, the awards were for your outstanding cooperation with the press in general during 1948. More than that, though, we have no doubt that the press ladies were conscious of the wholesomeness and sane living which both of you embody. We'll bet they wanted the world to know that among women who know best, it's Lamour and Ford—and the things you stand for—by 2-to-1 (or better).

You know, as other stars probably do, that you won't get on page 1 by living quietly in the love of your families and working as hard as you can at your jobs. It's not an easy way to get famous fast. But it's the way that endures, that maintains the respect and esteem of the public.

We hope you're justly proud of the honors given you. We hope Hollywood is proud of you. And we hope, most of all, that other actors will make you their example.

If they do, we think they'll find—as you have—that the hard way is the best.

Wendell H. Nichols

EDITOR

There were three strikes against Ginger, but the game wasn't over . . . Millions of fans clamored for Rogers, and now she's just hit another home run.

SHE'LL NEVER STOP FIGHTING

by Hedda Hopper

Fred and Ginger are dancing together once more in their new musical, The Barkleys of Broadway.

■ One dusty day last summer, Ginger Rogers leaned her Levis against a show-ring fence at an Oregon prize cattle show, narrowed her keen blue eyes and nibbled a wisp of hay reflectively.

Next to her, a sunburned man in a Stetson grinned to see Ginger on the spot. He was Fred Bayliss, manager of a big ranch and one of the West's top cattlemen. He'd just given his friend Ginger—who's sort of new in the cattle business—a sporting challenge. "Let's see how much you know about steers," Bayliss had smiled. "Tell me how you'd judge 'em—one, two, three and four."

"Okay," said Ginger, tenderfoot owner of the 4-R ranch. "That one for first, then that one, that—and that."

"Here come the judges with the ribbons right now," the cattleman observed. "We'll see how you came out."

And a few minutes later, he exclaimed, "Well, I'll be darned!"

The badges landed on the beef exactly where Ginger had pointed. She'd picked 'em right down the line—"one, two, three and four!" Fred Bayliss poked his hat back on his head and bent an admiring stare.

"How in thunder does a Hollywood gal like you (Continued on page 92)

He'd go off with other girls . . . but Virginia
Grey was the one he'd always come back to.
Now they've parted—
and Hollywood wonders . . .

BY JANET FRANKLIN

Clark Gable's SECRET ROMANCE

Clark attended tennis matches with Virginia Grey —but mare af their dates were spent at home.

■ It has been months since the romance ended, yet it is just getting to be known around Hollywood today . . .

When Clark Gable left California for his European jaunt last summer he spent his last afternoon visiting a girl who lives not far from his house in the valley. It is said that it was a somewhat uncomfortable afternoon for both of them. Perhaps this was not to be wondered at, since he had been dating this girl for five years, and now, as it was being reported around the town, he was bound for France—destined to be the fifth husband of Dolly O'Brien, who awaited him there.

No, the visit was not featured by the usual exchange of happy banter between them, nor light-hearted by-play. When train time neared and Clark finally stood up and said, "Well . . ." the girl just quietly expressed the hope that he would have a good time. His mood was not unlike her own as he replied that he'd try to.

There was, of course, no marriage to Dolly O'Brien. Clark was summoned back to Hollywood in a hurry by the sudden death of his father. He found a message from the girl—but he didn't phone back immediately. When he did get around to it, she wasn't in. It was not until he had tried for three days that he got her on the line. Then . . . they discovered that they had surprisingly little to say to each other. Something lay between them that they weren't able to hurdle. It was one of those conversations in which the pauses are so much more eloquent than the words that just sound like prattle. It wasn't long before Clark was saying, "Well, I'll see you when I can find you"—and she was replying, "Yes." Just, "Yes."

The way it is told around town, neither was fooling the other with these closing words. They haven't seen each other since.

But, even more unusual, it is not unlikely that Clark was a little baffled when he walked away from the telephone that night. For it was not in the books that this girl would act so distant. answer so coolly. Not this girl. In fact, any one who knew them both would bet on just an opposite reaction on her part. Because she was Virginia Grey . . . the same Virginia long-identified in Hollywood talk as "the girl Clark can always be sure of"!

"Why, Virginia is Clark's 'steady'!" gasped a well-known feminine star when she heard about it. "They've always been together—she was the first girl he was even friendly with after Carole's death! And besides, who does she think she is? You just don't do that to Clark Gable!"

An upset like this can affect a man's confidence—the average man's, that is. But Clark Gable's? Any sort of report purporting to even connect him with marriage is always (Continued on page 102)

Clark met the beautiful Virginia Grey at the start of her career; later she had roles in his Test Pilot and Idiot's Delight. She was the down-to-earth sort with whom he could relax.

Hollywood likes her. She's young and talented and charming. But Hollywood is just beginning to understand Colleen Townsend, who puts service above self . . .

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

soldier of God

■ The other evening at 20th Century-Fox, some of the younger players were giving a musical for the studio personnel. Between acts they were gathering backstage and someone asked Colleen Townsend why she was so quiet. "Oh, I bet she's in love," somebody offered.

Colleen knew what was coming. Having to conquer a fear of startling people is a situation she faces every day. "Well, you're close to the truth," she replied. "I've been thinking of Someone."

"Who is it?" came an eager chorus from the others.

Colleen gulped. She hates seeming smug, but she does not permit herself to dodge. "It's Jesus Christ," she said simply.

The silence was finally broken by a few uncertain little coughs. They all looked at her strangely.

Yet, after the show when she was seated in her dressing room and wondering, as she sometimes cannot help, what good she might have done with her truthful answer, there was a knock on the door. Two of the crowd, a girl and a boy, were standing there. They wanted to come in. They wanted to know more.

When she recalls a scene like the first part of that incident, and can add the second part—that someone came to her later and showed interest in her belief—there is a shining something in Colleen's blue eyes. "Oh, it's then that you know it was right . . . right to say the words that come so hard," she tells you.

The words come hard, but Colleen says them. She doesn't march up to people and try to redeem them, neither does she always wait until chance provides an opportunity. She goes where those in need can be found (she spends probably more time at this sort of work than before the camera) and lets it be known everywhere else that she will talk to (Continued on page 111)

Colleen wos o lonely child. Her parents were divorced ond she lived with her mother (above) who was out working to support her.

At 15, Colleen discovered a need for spiritual oid, ond she become deeply religious. Here, she speoks ot a Christion College Conference.

It took her a while to find herself, but now Ava knows that even in overalls she'd look like a siren, that even in mink she couldn't act like one.

BY IDA ZEITLIN

VENUS in blue-jeans

■ Irene, designer of the period costumes for Great Sinner, was telling a friend one day how Ava Gardner loved the clothes, how good she was about fittings—

"That's fine," interrupted the friend, but why doesn't she dress up on her own and look glamorous, the way people expect her to look?"

"I'll ask her," Irene promised, and did at the next opportunity.

Ava laughed. "I'm at home in skirts and sweaters. Fussing up is a bore."

With that face and figure, MGM's siren, model '49, would look the part in a potato sack. Only don't expect her to act it. Her eyes aren't sultry, they're clear and candid. Her manner's simple, her talk direct, her smile is friendly. She's free of the airs and graces of the stock movie star, and doesn't think she rates any cheers for their absence. Cooperation's part of the job. "Besides, I hate bickering, hate having anyone mad at me. It makes me feel very good when people like me. Which is probably silly, because why should you care? But I do."

She can't waste time pretending to be anything but what she is—and that's a straightforward, warm-hearted girl who wants a husband and kids more than she wants a career. She says: "It's a question of meeting the right man, and I haven't yet."

A husband? I asked her about Howard Duff. She smiled. "People try so hard to make a romance of Howard and me. But they lose sight of one thing: I'm not the girl I used (Continued on page 88)

Sweaters and skirts are Ava's favorite garb, but jeans run a close second. Here, on the set of Great Sinner, the former tomboy shows she hasn't lost her touch.

refuge for LANA

To neighbors in a small Connecticut town where she awaits her baby, she's still the golden Lana—even with an armful of groceries.

BY JEAN KINKEAD

Connecticut neighbor

Dorse Bronson, reporter for the Daily Item, said the neighbors were surprised the Topping phone number wasn't private.

On the Radie Harris show, MODERN SCREEN's editor, Wade Nichols, gives Lana her trophy as winner of MS's 1948 popularity poll.

On a recent CBS broadcast of the Radie Harris "Broadway and Vine" program, Lana Turner was presented with the silver trophy she won for being MODERN SCREEN readers' most popular actress of 1948. In the course of the presentation, Lana told of how much she was enjoying the relaxed, friendly atmosphere of Greenwich, Connecticut, where she and Bob Topping await their baby—who arrives in May. It occurred to us that readers of MODERN SCREEN would like an account of Lana and her life there as seen through the eyes of local people she encounters in daily activities. So we got in touch right away with a writer who lives not far from Lana—and the happy result was the neighborly story below.—THE EDITORS.

■ When Lana Turner returned from her honeymoon in Europe last fall, the reporters who met her boat had conflicting stories to tell about her. "She's going straight back to films." "She's put on 40 pounds—her looks are shot." "She and Bob are washed up."

So when I picked up the local paper one night and saw a small, chaste item in the social notes to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Robert Topping were at home at "Dunnellan," the beautiful old family house on Round Hill Road (which is the Park Avenue of Greenwich, Conn.), I was kind of surprised and more than slightly curious. Everyone in our town (I live in Stamford, right next door to Greenwich) is pretty blasé about celebrities, for the countryside is loaded with them—Henry Fonda, Mary Martin, Elmer Rice and Betty Field, Tallulah Bankhead, Benny Goodman, to name a few. But that Turner gal has a special brand of magic. She's not just a celebrity. She's a legend.

I found myself taking little jaunts over to Greenwich, hoping for a glimpse of a bright blonde head—a close-up of that fabulous face—and a (Continued on page 107) look at Lana Turner, like what they see...

A salesgirl in a Greenwich stationery store, Ronnie Cohen, finds the store is busiest when Lana is due to appear.

George MacKenzie is a traffic cop in Greenwich—he's never had to ticket law-abiding Lana for any violation.

Etta Marshall enviously watched another salesgirl sell Lana a pound-and-a-half of candy kisses in the local 5 & 10.

Irving Cohen, stationery store proprietor, cashed a small check for Lana one morning—as he gladly does for all the folks.

John Derek gets down on his knees for wife Poti while Marsh Thompson watches amusedly. Morsh's fiancée Barboro laces her own.

good skates

Forley Granger and Geraldine Brooks play it smart—they're resting on the safe side of the wall around Sonja Henie's ice rink.

Ice-skating is fun—I kept telling myself—and how often do you get a wonderful chance to break your leg to sweet music?

by Viola Moore

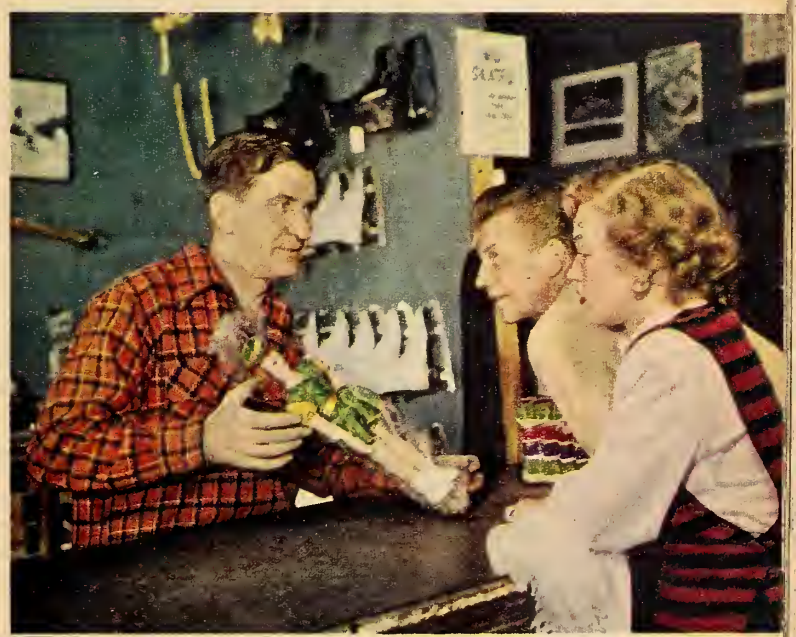
■ The whole idea was Donald O'Connor's (for which I may never forgive him). He and his blonde bride Gwen hauled out the phone book and rounded us up. Us being Bob Arthur and Betty Lynn, John Derek and his wife Pati Behrs, honeymooners John Bromfield and Corinne Calvet, Farley Granger and Geraldine Brooks, Marsh Thompson and his fiancée Barbara Long, Roddy McDowall and myself. Myself is Viola Moore, MODERN SCREEN reporter and general handywoman.

Gay as could be, we arrived at Sonja Henie's Ice Palace in Westwood. We rented our skates; we laced them on tightly; we ambled nonchalantly toward the ice.

"Roddy," I said very quietly, "I have never skated in my life."

He smiled. "Neither have I."

"Let's sit this one out," I said.



"Nonsense," he replied. "Just take my arm."

I took his arm—an altogether futile gesture. In a moment we had slid to the center of the rink. In another moment we were lying on it. I covered my face with my hands as skaters whizzed by perilously close. When I finally looked up, Roddy was crawling towards me on his knees.

"Here," he said, "take my arm."

"I did that (Continued on next page)

Envy of the skating party was Donald O'Connor, who cut figure eights like an expert. Here he and his bride Gwen buy a souvenir doll for remembrance—others took home swollen ankles, fallen arches.

Bob Arthur lends a not-so-helping hand to his date, Betty Lynn. "Ouch!" she cries, "you made the lace too tight!" They were the first ones ready—after a brief warm-up, they really cut ice.

Corinne Calvet takes a tumble—but husband John Bramfield (now in Hal Wallis' Bitter Victory) swoops her up just before she hits the ice.

before," I answered coldly. Whereupon I grabbed him by the jacket, hoisted myself up, banged my head against his and pulled him down in a heap.

The music was in waltz-time, and as it drifted over the rink, Corinne Calvet drifted with it. Her navy blue ballet skirt whirled above her knees, her curls bobbed prettily under her white wool cap as she performed dainty pirouettes. Donald and Gwen flashed by with expert strokes. Bob Arthur and Betty could have been dancing on a cloud, for all the effort it seemed to take. . . .

If it hadn't been for John and Pati Derek, Roddy and I might have languished on the ice till spring. But these two came along to give us back our dignity. They tried awfully hard, and our hearts were with them, but nothing could get us up. They prodded; they pushed; they coaxed; they threatened. Then Marsh and Barbara joined in—and we were hauled like sacks of meal toward safety.

Gasping, Roddy and I clung to the wooden wall that circles the rink.

"Thanks, kids," Roddy puffed. "Guess we've had enough for a while."

"The understatement of the century," I muttered.

The gang skated merrily off with hardly a backward glance. We carefully lowered ourselves to a sitting position on the steps and watched them with envy.

"It's like riding a bicycle," Roddy said to me. "You fall off a few times, but once you get your balance it's easy—and then you never forget.

"I'll never forget," I said bitterly, wringing the slush from my skirt.

Just then the kids skimmed by in a long line—they were playing snap-the-whip. This broke up into a game of tag. (Nobody fell.) Then they all stood around and watched Donald execute figure eights. (Gwen, especially, was enchanted.) I could see Roddy puzzling them out in his mind. That boy never gives up!

After a while they all came over to where we sat and announced they were starved. Food—that's my specialty, and there aren't many can eat it better. (Continued on page 114)

Marsh Thampson and Barbara Lang pause for autographs. They'll be haneymaaning down in Mexica when you read this.

Quick energy's pravided at the peanut machine. Pati gets a handful while John (wha put in the pennies) awaits his calories.

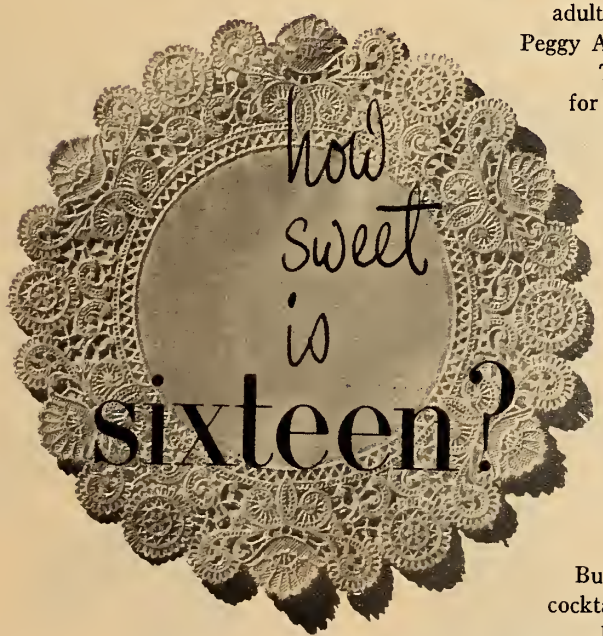
Oops, slips! This really explains itself. I am the girl (Viola); the boy is Raddy McDawall; the question is—haw lang can we stay up?

lobody wonts to follow the leader! Donold O'Connor does o few fast spins; atching him are wife Gwen, Pati and John Derek, Betty Lynn and Bob Arthur.

Bob Arthur leads, Betty, John, Pati, Marsh and Barboro follow. Corinne (of Hal Wollis' Rope Of Sand) was off figure-skoting.

b, Betty Lynn and hot dogs—food's supplied by Homer Shields. Homer's un the stand for fifteen years—he knew everyone by name ond appetite.

Donold gets his due from Homer os Gwen, John ond Poti Derek stond by—afternoon wos full of eots, ice ond ploin good fun!



Down for the count! Roddy wonted to try again—but I know when I'm licked.

good skates

When you're sixteen like Peggy Ann Garner, you're almost grown up . . . but things like slinky dresses are still an awful problem.

BY MARY DALTON

You've reached the age when you can make your own decisions without the aid of your family—and it's wonderful! You decide to do your room over in chartreuse with touches of crimson and by gosh, your mother gives in and says you're right. You give her a pep talk on allowing you to attend public school, and after listening respectfully to your watertight arguments, she gives in. She says: "I see exactly what you mean. Of course you should have the fun that goes with football games and dances!"

So you can start in at once at University High. Naturally you feel pretty good. You've grown up at last. You're sixteen—and from now on you can't be wrong . . .

. . . That's what you think, but it doesn't quite work out that way. Sixteen, it unfortunately develops, isn't such a sublimely adult state after all. Look what just happened to Peggy Ann Garner.

Peggy Ann and Elizabeth Taylor had a date to go shopping. They wandered down Wilshire Boulevard to look for a purse for Liz in one of the big department stores strung out between La Brea and Fairfax Avenues. Idly they looked in the show window of a store—then suddenly moved close against the glass.

"Jeepers!" breathed Peggy Ann. Her eyes rounded as she took in the two elegant models. They were displaying the most stunning, slinky, satin dresses she had ever seen.

"The blue one was just made for you," said Elizabeth. "And that flamingo pink is just super for me. Let's go in and try them on!"

Into the store went Peggy Ann and Liz. Out of the window came the dresses, yanked out by a testy saleswoman who had to take her shoes off so she wouldn't spoil the decorations. "They won't like them when I do get them out," she muttered. "They never do."

But she was wrong. Peggy and Liz slid into the satin cocktail gowns like eager little eels. They pivoted before the long mirrors and assured each other that they looked simply dreamy! True, Peggy Ann's bustle seemed to hit her in the wrong spot, and Liz had to hold her breath as she tugged her zipper closed. And both dresses were sort of "form-fitting."

The saleslady, who had climbed back into her patent pumps, shook her head and struggled with her conscience. (Continued on page 87)

BOY GETS GIRL

He won the girl—
Wanda, of course. And Audie found something else he'd been looking for—a new faith in life and in himself . . .

BY DORA ALBERT

Audie Murphy was the most decorated U. S. infantryman of World War II. Right: He and Wanda Hendrix in friend Al Foster's shop.

After completing Prince of Foxes in Italy, Wanda came home to marry Audie—an event they'd been planning for three years.

■ This is the story of two lovers. It is the story of a man whose being alive today is a miracle, and of the girl whose shining faith in him reawakened his faith in himself.

It is the story of Audie Murphy, the most decorated hero of World War II and the star of Bad Boy, and Wanda Hendrix, Paramount's beautiful young starlet.

Audie and Wanda have been in love for three years. But she was so young—only 17—when they first met and she was just getting started on her career. So for three years they prayed and dreamed and dated and sometimes fought, as young people in love will. Then came the knowledge that Wanda would have to go to Italy, on loan to 20th Century-Fox, to make Prince of Foxes. Being a contract player, she had no other choice.

Before she left for Italy, Wanda and Audie almost yielded to impulse, almost sealed their love in marriage. They talked of eloping by plane to Mexico, of how they could avoid all the fuss and pomp of a big wedding, of the blissful honeymoon they could have. . . .

But even as they talked, Audie saw something in Wanda's eyes that made him decide that a swift elopement to Mexico was not for them. All her life she had dreamed of a church wedding, with a beautiful wedding gown and music and flowers . . . and all the little things that mean so much to a woman.

"If a thing can't be done right," thought Audie, "I guess it shouldn't be done at all."

So they parted at the airport in Inglewood, after clinging to each other in a farewell embrace that would have to last them almost half a year. They knew they wouldn't be able to see each other again till Prince of (Continued on page 95)

a woman's place...

Rosalind Russell's home mirrors her vital personality . . . poised and elegant— but gay as Spring flowers.

By JACK WADE

Above: Rosolind Russell bought her French Provinciol home from Mory Bolond five yeors ogo ond hos been decorating it ever since.

Above right: Georgion stoirwoy corries out house color-scheme of blue, green ond yellow in its wollpoper design.

Right: A view from Roz's bedroom. Formol gordens, thickly plonted with cypress ond olive trees, surround the hedge-bordered pool.

The book-lined den is sturdily furnished for work and play. Here, five-year-old Lance and his mom work out a mechanical problem.

■ Rosalind Russell's Beverly Hills home is a stately French Provincial house in which Roz has mingled her own New England heritage with the continental traditions of her Danish husband, Freddie Brisson. In this setting the Brissons have composed a pattern of family life that is a fine blend of elegance, comfort, dignity and hilarious fun.

The house itself is set in a mass of trees, bordered with hedges. It is completely private, from the curbing in the front to the swimming pool edged with stately rose gardens in the back. Beyond the pool Roz has a three-room guest-house hidden among rustling palms. Cary Grant stays here sometimes. More often Roz and Freddie hide away here for long, peaceful hours far from the bustle of the big house.

As soon as you step into Rosalind's house, you get a feeling of spaciousness. Roz hates doors. Simply will have none of them. From the curving stairway in the front hall, you can look into every room on the downstairs level. Throughout the house, the basic color scheme is the same. This makes the furniture of the various rooms interchangeable. According to Rosalind, it gives a feeling of coherence a woman's place...

Plant life is found everywhere in the Russell home—in wall brackets, lamp bases and end tables. Raz is gifted with a pair of green thumbs —and all this decorative vegetatian comes fram her awn greenhause.

and unity which a large house very often lacks.

Roz bought her house from Mary Boland five years ago. She has been plastering, painting and puttering in it ever since she moved in. She started right out with Freddie's room. He liked it the way it was but, like most wives, Roz just couldn't see the man was happy.

"Darling, what color scheme would you like?" she asked, walking up to him with an armload of wallpaper patterns. Freddie's eyes took on that glazed, vague look men get when they aren't really listening at all. "Blue, I guess," he said absently. Roz knew he would say blue. All men say blue. So she wrote down "sunny yellow." And that's what he got.

"I knew what I was doing," Roz confided, her dark eyes crinkling at the corners. "Freddie's room has a northern exposure, so just plain blue would have been much too chilly. So I did the bed and matching built-in couch in nubbly yellow cotton. Just to make sure that he'd think it was masculine enough, I practically turned it into a stable with all the horsy decorations I could think up. I got him hand-painted horses' heads for the couch cushions, riding-boot book-ends, and hunting prints for the walls. Fred thinks it's fine. Forgot all about that 'blue' stuff."

Brown piping on draperies and pillows is repeated in the nut-brown carpet of this functional room, equipped with deep easy chairs and a sturdy mahogany writing desk.

After Freddie's room, Roz got to work on her own. She furnished her own quarters in tones of deep cream, gentle green, (Continued on page 82)

The living room is often the scene of gay parties, where usually-dignified guests are given stray bits of material and feathers and asked to design hats—in the dark. Bill Powell's an expert at this.

Her dressing table holds only a part of Roz's perfume collection. The mirrored walls do double duty when she has a dress-fitting.

The Brissons dress for dinner every night, and are often hosts at small, formal dinner parties. Frequent guests are the William Powells, Loretta Young and Tom Lewis, and Irene Dunne and her doctor-husband.

Fred announced he wanted a blue bedroom, but Roz did it in warm shades of yellow and brown. Hand-painted horses on the sofa cushions carry out the horsey motif of which he's so fond.

■ A few months ago, the Hollywood columns were filled with brisk speculation about a new romance Hedy Lamarr was said to be having with a mysterious San Francisco millionaire. One columnist stated that every weekend the infatuated fellow was flying to Hollywood to be with Hedy. Another knowingly announced that it was only a matter of time before Hedy yielded before his cyclonic advances and murmured "Yes." It seemed clear to another authority that this admirer had the inside track to Hedy's affections.

What did this burning romance actually amount to? Nothing.

It's true that Hedy and the millionaire—and he was a millionaire—did meet at Lake Tahoe, where Hedy was having a holiday with her children. The stranger admired her beautiful youngsters, got himself introduced to Hedy—and then asked permission to take a picture of the tots. Permission was granted, he snapped his camera, said thanks a lot—and that was that. Yet the little incident was enlarged upon by Hedy in her own mind, given romantic trimmings by onlookers and gossips, and represented as a mad passion by the eager press. (Continued on page 104)

Reginald Gardiner, the British comedian, spent lots of time with Hedy and it was rumored that he'd become her second husband. Reggie is now happily married to Nadia Petrova.

Strange loves of HEDY LAMARR

by sheilah graham

She still seeks the man she needs—
this strange woman of legendary beauty . . . and strange and legendary loves . . .

Hedy has recently finished Cecil DeMille's Samson and Delilah.

Hedy seemed to have found happiness with her third husband, John Loder—but her career stood in the way of a successful marriage.

There was a real romance between Hedy and George Montgomery. But their engagement was short-lived and soon after George took Dinah Shore for his bride.

Gene Markey, now married to Myrna Loy, was Hedy's second husband. Her divorce suit stated he neglected her.

end of the beginning

Mark Stevens (on the ground) and Rory Calhaun in a scene from Sand.

He was so loaded with luck it broke his back. His luck's still the same, but now Mark has learned how to take it.

BY JACK WADE

■ One morning last summer when Mark Stevens was on location for Sand near Durango, Colorado, he bounced out of bed bright and early. The sun was shining, the sky was blue, the air like wine. He felt swell and he couldn't wait for the cameras to roll. He even hummed a tune as he bumped along the road to the shooting site. His wife, Annelle, gave her blithe mate a sleepy glance.

"You seem pretty cheery and chipper for so early in the morning, dear," she said.

"Tip-top and right as rain!" Steve replied. "What a day!"

Well . . .

In the very first scene he dived under a barbed wire fence and laid open a long gash in his neck. No sooner was that patched up than a wasp buzzed up and let him have it in a particularly tender spot. Mark rallied to stage a slam-bang movie slugfest with Rory Calhoun. Rory muffed his timing and a ring on his finger laid open Mark's eye. He slapped collodion on that and noticed that he felt dizzy and hot. "High altitude sunburn," explained a local citizen. Mark stepped to a tumbling mountain stream, slopped water on his face and drank. Pretty soon he had belly pains and they wobbled him off to bed. He was laid up three days with dysentery.

"Honey," croaked Mark to Annelle, as she spooned him milk toast in the motel, "you are married to a guy who's loaded with luck. The trouble is—it's all bad!"

Mark Stevens isn't really so depressed as all that about his shake out of life. Actually, come to count it up, he knows he's one of the most fortunate characters on this earth. His terrific talent got a break where he could prove it. No one knows better than Mark about the thwarted thousands bruising their fists against the brassy gates of opportunity (as he did for years all over Canada and the U. S. A.) trying to get a "come in" from Hollywood, or Broadway, or practically any place in the show-business world.

For the first time since their morrioge, the Stevens hove a cozy home of their own ot Toluca Lake. Junior is two.

But there are times when Mark is convinced that if someone handed him a horseshoe it would drop on his toe and smash it. What other actor, Mark points out, ever had a lake full of trout stealing his scenes? What other jinxed Hollywood Joe ever got chewed by a horse?

Mark was emoting for Sand up there in the Rockies with crystal Lake Molas for a backdrop when he suddenly quit cold. Director Lou King asked him why. "I don't mind supporting a wild horse in this picture," explained Mark, "but my contract doesn't say anything about fish." Behind him, all over the lake, rainbow trout were leaping and splashing—and who'd look at even Mark Stevens with such (Continued on page 99)

Life used to moke o donkey out of Mork, but not now. (Eors ore on optical illusion—just plont leoves!)

by erskine johnson

the awkward age:

curse or blessing?

It happens to everyone . . . and to movie kids it used to mean "all washed up." But now more and more of them are breezing through the awkward age—with long term contracts.

Now grown up, Mitzie Green ond Jackie Coogan have been unable to capture the public fancy as once they did when they were storred together in Tom Sawyer.

Shirley Temple is a fine proof that kid stars need not fade after adolescence. Her roles grew up with her, and helped her through the awkward age to new fame.

Mickey Rooney is the only still-popular member of this group. Jackie Cooper is making grade B movies, while Freddie Bartholomew is now entertaining in night clubs.

■ Seven years ago, five-year-old Margaret O'Brien hit the popularity jackpot in Journey for Margaret. Since then, in one success after another, she's become the youngest major star in pictures. Now, at 13, she's confronted by a hurdle that few child stars in the past have managed to survive.

Margaret O'Brien is facing that classic bugaboo, "the awkward age"—the age when lovable tots begin to grow into rangy, sprawling creatures with knobby knees and angular elbows.

At the moment, Margaret's doing fine. Having finished one of the major roles in Little Women, she's now busily engaged in The Secret Garden. She's bigger box-office than ever.

And yet—is she slated, in a year or so, to fade into screen oblivion?

Time was when that would have seemed a foregone conclusion. It's by no means that today. For the truth is that "the awkward age" has of recent years been rapidly losing fright-power as the horrendous prospect it once was. There are any number of cases to prove this fine fact. There's Shirley Temple. There's Elizabeth Taylor. There are, among others, Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland and Deanna Durbin and Peggy Ann Garner and Jane Powell.

We'll get to them in a minute. First, let's examine some of the sad cases in the past that have justified the general fear of this bugaboo.

One of the first that springs to mind is that of Freddie Bartholomew. Freddie was an extraordinarily appealing and talented ten-year-old when the public fell in love with the little guy after David Copperfield in 1935. His next role was in Garbo's Anna Karenina—and from then on he received star billing. For a while, his fan mail at MGM exceeded that of Clark Gable. By 1939—Freddie's career was finished. At 14 he was a long, gangling string bean, all wrists and neck. "If the cinema tired of me," the youngster said as he set out to salvage what he could with a personal appearance tour, "I should keep my chin up and carry on with other things." Freddie kept his chin up, all right, but he's still trying his best to make a screen comeback via summer stock, vaudeville and night clubs. At this writing, he's making night club appearances in Australia.

Take the two Jackies, Cooper and Coogan.

Jackie Cooper was launched into pictures by his uncle, director Norman Taurog, a shrewd man who knew all about Hollywood. When Jackie was coining the money with roles like Skippy, Uncle Norman saw to it that the boy's income was salted away for the rainy days.

It's a good thing he did. Today Jackie is still on the screen, but he (Continued on page 109)

No time for FUN

Personal appearance? People think it's a glamorous tour. Jane Powell knows it's just plain work from coast to coast and home again . . .

by florence epstein

■ She'd finished her engagement at the Greek Theatre in Los Angeles. The Student Prince, her first complete operetta, had gone over well. After that she'd headed East on tour. Cincinnati was behind her, and so was Chicago. All that remained was two weeks at the Capitol Theatre in New York. It was a busy schedule, but New York lay waiting like a giant mardi gras, and a 19-year-old girl could really have herself a time. Only the way it turned out for Jane Powell, there was no time at all.

There was, to begin with, a cold. It took place in the Sherry-Netherlands Hotel on the ninth floor. Jane's mother sat in one corner of the suite, worrying. Dorothy Day, of the M-G-M publicity department, sat by the phone and cancelled appointments. And Jane stayed in bed, downing cold tablets.

The whole p.a. (personal appearance) was Jane's idea, though. She could have stayed home and experimented with the 16mm camera her father had just bought. Up until now, all the pictures had come out unrecognizable.

She could have stayed home and dated Geary Stephen. Geary used to be Sonja Henie's skating partner, but he'd given up the ice for the real estate business. Now he was in Hollywood, willing to give up the real estate business for a screen career. Janie could have made it easier for him. She could have sung to him every night while they were out dancing. . . .

But Jane had thought the tour was a good idea. Apart from the money, there was the experience, and there was the thrill of playing to a live audience and having them in the palm of your hand. The cold, though, was unplanned.

The rest of her time in New York was planned too well. There were five shows a day, and in between the shows she was interviewed. In between the interviews she nibbled on sandwiches, and in between sandwiches she thought how nice it would be to go shopping. To keep from being depressed she embroidered cats' faces on turkish towel bibs—presents for some babies she knew in Hollywood.

The sad fact was, she had only one date and that was arranged. Tom Rogers, who handles radio appearances for M-G-M stars, escorted her to Radie Harris' CBS show. Jane was the guest star. And that night Tom took Jane to the opening of Madeleine Carroll's new play, Goodbye, My Fancy, and to the Stork Club. Tom was lovely. But Jane kept wondering about Geary and whether he was lonesome, too . . .

continued on next page

The beginning of a wild dash: Jane, above, consults her watch while waiting for a cab. Below, a frenzied conference at the Capitol Theatre.

Shep Fields' orchestra accompanied Jane during her two-weeks engagement. Here, Shep and Jane rehearse downstairs at the theater between shows.

No time for FUN

Between shows there were interviews. Here, New York Post columnist, Earl Wilsan, visits Jane in her tiny dressing-room. Magazine and newspaper writers beat a path backstage.

Whenever Jane stepped into the street, fans surrounded her —she always abliged. This was outside the swank "21," on ane of the rare accasions that Jane left the Capitol to dine.

If she had thought back to her New York experiences of last year, she might have chosen to stay home this time. Last year she lost ten pounds (that left eighty-eight) climbing to and from her dressing-room upstairs at the Capitol. And everytime she turned around, someone had a question, or was pointing a camera at her.

This year it wasn't much different—except for the dressing-room. The stagehands at the Capitol had built her a sort of lean-to, covered with burlap. It stood backstage against the rear wall and it was the noisiest place in the city.

The few people she met went out of their way to please her. Tony Canzoneri, the former ring champ who was on the same bill with Jane, called up all the restaurants near the Capitol one night, to find out who served pizza. (Pizza is an Italian pie made of cheese and tomatoes.) And if no one thereabouts served pizza it wasn't his fault. If Jane had to eat soup it was because that's what they served around the corner from the Capitol half-an-hour before showtime.

There was the little boy whose name she never learned—he was too shy. But all day, every day, he waited near the stage door with a bouquet of flowers in his hand. When Janie came dashing out, he gave her the bouquet and helped her into a taxi.

The closest she ever really came to New York was when she sang to New Yorkers from the stage: At night, after the last show, she saw it from her window—the lights, the cars, the flavor of glittering excitement. But the view was all—there had been no time for fun. THE END

Caught in the act:
Jane wowed 'em all with tunes from Date With Judy, Luxury Liner.

Portrait of JENNIE

IN "PORTRAIT OF JENNIE," THE LOVE OF JOSEPH COTTEN FOR JENNIFER JONES TRANSCENDS TIME AND SPACE.

Picture of the Month

■ Portrait of Jennie is the story of an ethereal love affair between a young artist (Joseph Cotten) and a strange girl (Jennifer Jones) who comes to him from beyond the bounds of time. He first encounters her as a child playing in the snow in New York's Central Park. She disappears but returns—and disappears—recurrently over a span of months, on each reappearance having aged several years. When he sees her for the final time, she has grown into a lovely young woman. In the course of this fugitive association, he finds in her the inspiration that brings to life in him his great but dormant talent—and he paints a marvelous portrait of her to establish his career.

David Selznick and his associate, David Hempstead, have done a remarkable job in turning Robert Nathan's exquisitely-shaded novel into a film. Even those who look askance at fantasy will find it a rewarding experience, so convincingly and deftly is the gossamer dream-stuff woven into the fabric of recognizable reality. This poetic fable, aside from the ephemeral spirit-girl, is peopled by very realistic folk moving in the solidly factual world of Manhattan in the 1930's. And the climax comes in the wild and terrifying actuality of a New England hurricane.

Jennifer Jones gives a beautifully illuminating performance in the many-sided role of the heroine; Joseph Cotten blends spirituality with forthright virility as the artist; and the best supporting cast of the year does all anyone could ask in helping make Portrait of Jennie an extraordinary film.

continued on next page

1. As Portrait of Jennie begins, Eben Adams (Joe Cotten), a penniless young New York artist, meets a strange 10-year-old named Jennie who leaves him with the request that he wait for her to grow up.

2. Some days later, Eben sells a sketch of Jennie to art dealer Henry Mathews (Cecil Kellaway) and his assistant, Miss Spinney (Ethel Barrymore). Mathews asks Eben to do a portrait of Jennie.

3. Eben celebrates the sale at a tavern run by Mr. Moore (Albert Sharpe). Eben's friend Gus (David Wayne), a hackie, gets Moore to give Eben free meals in exchange for painting an Irish mural.

4. A few weeks later, Eben meets Jennie skating in Central Park. She seems older this time, but he thinks it must be the clothes. She's vague on her background, but agrees she'll pose later on.

5. Soon after, Eben sells more sketches of Jennie to Mathews. But he can't begin the portait—he doesn't know where she lives. He works on the mural while Gus tries vainly to locate her.

6. Then one day she comes to Eben's studio. He now learns she died years before he met her and, being lonely, has come to him out of eternity. She leaves, he seeks her at her convent school.

7. In octuality, she hod been ot the convent long ago—but Eben sees her there nonetheless. She returns to the studio, the portroit progresses.. Soon, the young girl hos become a grown woman.

8. Eben and Jennie go out in the country for o picnic. This is to .be their lost doy of hoppiness together—at leost, until they ore finolly joined deathlessly on onother plone beyond this earth.

9. Jennie appears once again—at a lighthouse on Cape Cod in the course of a howling hurricane that sweeps her from Eben's arms.

Dan River's Wrinkl-Shed Cotton really sheds wrinkles—gives you more days wear between washings.*

Wear it, pack it, give it all kinds of crushing treatment—this special cotton cord springs right back to smoothness. Fast color. Sanforized†. Dan River Mills, Inc.

*Dress by Kay Windsor. Grey, brown, green. Sizes 10 to 20. About $11 at Jordan, Marsh Co., Boston; D. H. Holmes Company, New Orleans; Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney, St. Louis; B. Gertz, Jamaica... Trademark †Fabric shrinkage not more than 1%

spring comes early to fashion

connie bartel, fashion editor

■ Even if there is still a lingering trace of snow on the ground, it's spring as far as fashion is concerned. The designers are always ahead of the first robin, and the fashions you'll be wearing this spring and summer are planned long before the crocuses show up.

In this issue we concentrate on two typical signs of spring—new shoes, and print dresses.

As for shoes, we've always believed the shoe makes the costume. Cute shoes pep up the simplest dress; but the most important gown in the world is ruined if your feet look dull. In the belief that nothing, but nothing, can make or break your outfit like shoes—we give you a shoe show, beginning on page 74. There is every kind of shoe you can think of—high heeled and low heeled, wedgies, platforms, ballerinas, louis heels—and lots of shoes which will be available in bright colors. If these don't keep you foot-happy for the rest of the season—we don't know what will!

Was there ever a girl who didn't crave a fresh bright print just around Washington's birthday? We've never heard of one, so beginning on page 78 we show you three prize prints—guaranteed to give you a lift like a daffodil.

Have you caught our Spring fever?

janet blair says hello to spring in bright plaid

■ Janet Blair blooms like a rose in a fresh spring plaid with a demure look to the ruffle-edged yoke and a bit of fresh white at the throat. The skirt is pleated. Dan River cotton plaid, in blue or green. Junior sizes 9-15.

By Peggy Paige, about $8.95.

For where to buy, see page 86.

modern screen fashions

the shoe makes the costume

1. BLACK PATENT CROSS strap pump, with new scallops. By Modern Miss. $6.95.

2. SCALLOPS (very new) on a suede baby doll pump. By Mary Jane. $5.99.

1

2

4

3

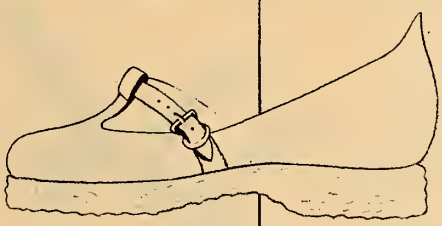
5

3. SQUARED INSTEP ballerina flat. Black suede gold edged bow. By Mary Jane. $2.99.

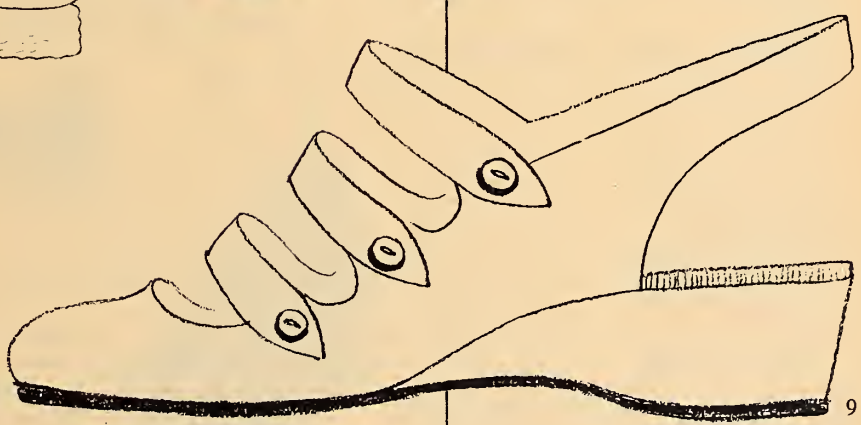
4. TRIPLE STRAP green leather pump. Louis heel, high back. By Mode Art Jr. $10.95.

5. CLASSIC spectator in white suede with blue calf trim. By Prom-Spec—$10.95.

6

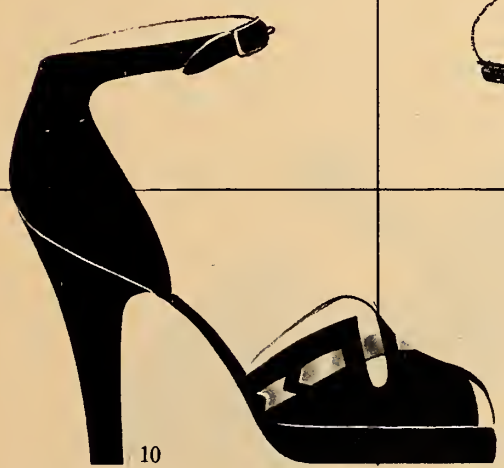


7



6. BOW TIE double strap green calf pump. Many colors. By Mode Art Jr.

7. LATTICE pump with wedge sole, especially for sizes 1½-5. By Cinderella of Boston. $9.95.



8. CREPE SOLES—new and smart after long absence. Red calf with T-strap. By Modern Miss—$6.95.

8

9

10

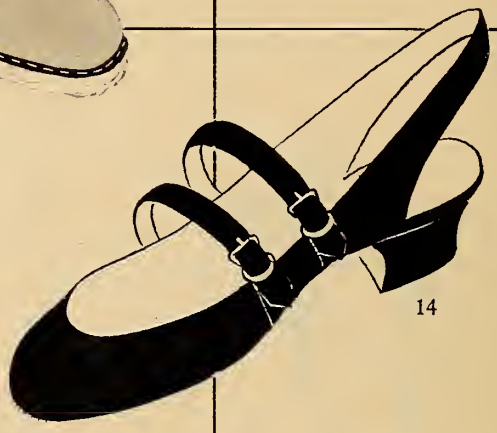
9. THREE-BUTTONED strapped wedgie. Black or copper suede. By Trim Tred. About $10.00.

10. PLATFORM ankle strap pump in grey, blue or black suede with leather contrast. Sizes 1½-5. By Cinderella of Boston. $12.95.

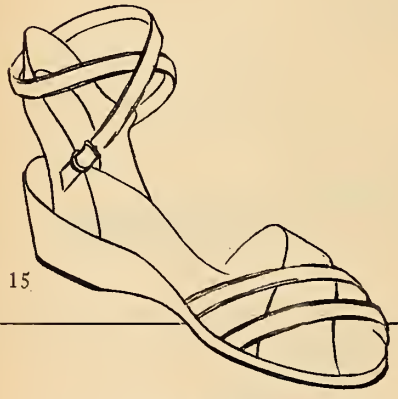
11. PALE GREEN calf open work pump, fastened with tiny removable strap. By Trim Tred. $8.

11

for where to buy see page 86



12. BUCKLED straps on a calf play shoe with new crepe soles. Green, tan, wine; also red and tan with white. By Laconia Debs—$6.95.



13. SQUARE perforations on gay elk leather playshoe. Bright multicolor, or white with multicolor trim. By Parkhill Casuals—about $4.

14. DOUBLE STRAP calf pump in black, brown, red or white. By Valentines. $8.95.

the shoe makes the costume

15. GOLD EDGED strapped sandals in suede-like arrabuk. Black, white, multi-colored, or all gold. By Parkhill Casuals. About $3.

16. LOUIS HEEL on a smart single strap suede pump. By Twenty-Ones. $10.95.

17. TWO COLORS, two straps on an open calf pump. Tan with brown heels or all grey. By Queen Quality. $12.95.

for where to buy see page 86

straps are very high fashion in shoes. They can be single, double, or triple. They can circle your ankle, or, smarter, cross your instep. They can either buckle or button (buttonhooks are coming back!) To put your feet in fashion, wear straps!

heels go to all heights. For sheer fashion, the louis heel is super-smart. It curves in gracefully, flatters the foot, and gives even a simple opera a new look. Watch for a return of the Cuban heel, too, as a medium between very high and familiar flat.

soles are newest in crepe; newest of all in a bright color to contrast with the upper. Crepe rubber disappeared during the war, but now it's back for all those girls who doted on it for sport and play. However, wedges, platforms and soft ballerinas are still favorites.

Lovely Dresses Given to You!

and EARN up to $23 WEEKLY BESIDES

If there's one thing every woman can always use, it's a NEW DRESS! Especially when it's beautifully made in the latest style and the newest colors and fabrics—such as those shown on this page. How would you like to receive one, two, three or even more lovely Spring dresses, without paying a penny of cost? That's right, without paying out a single cent in cash! Well, here's your chance. It's a remarkable opportunity offered by FASHION FROCKS, Inc., America's largest direct selling dress company. Our dresses are bought by women in every state, and nearly every county. We need new representatives right away to take orders in spare time and send them to us. Any woman, even without previous experience, can act as our representative. Whether you're married or single—housewife or employed woman—you can get the chance to obtain stunning dresses as a bonus—dresses that will not cost you a penny. In addition, you can make splendid weekly cash commissions—up to $23 and $25 a week, or more! You simply take orders when and where you please for FASHION FROCKS—gorgeous originals of exquisite fabrics, unbelievably low-priced down to $3.98. For every order, you get paid in cash on the spot. It's really a cinch.

Free PORTFOLIO OF LATEST SPRING DRESSES as low as $3.98

MORE REPRESENTATIVES NEEDED RIGHT AWAY!

Right now, more representatives are needed to show a marvelous added feature of FASHION FROCKS — sensational new styles personally designed by the lovely screen star, Constance Bennett, "one of the world's ten best-dressed women". Be the one to present these exciting dresses to friends and neighbors. Remember, they can't be bought in stores, so people must come to you if they want to be admired in stunning Constance Bennett originals. FASHION FROCKS carry the famous Good Housekeeping guaranty seal. You can make good money without previous experience. Our special cooperation plan helps you to exceptional earnings like these: Marie Patton, Ill., earned $28.84 in a single week — Mrs. Claude Burnett, Ala., collected $27.10.

GET STARTED NOW — MAIL COUPON

Think how wonderful it can be to get all your own dresses, without cost! Mail the coupon now to reserve valuable Style Presentation Portfolio sent FREE. No obligation—and nothing to pay. Just paste coupon to a postcard and mail it today.

Fashion Frocks INC.

Desk B3054 Cincinnati 25, Ohio

Lois Butler, appealing star of Eagle Lion's film "Mickey", personally selected 8 styles from the exquisite Spring line of Junior FASHION FROCKS.

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD — mail now!

FASHION FROCKS, INC. Desk B3054 Cincinnati 25, Ohio

YES — I am interested in your opportunity to make money in spare time and get my own dresses without a penny of cost. Send me everything I need to start right away, without obligation.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*_____

*Age*_____ *Dress Size*_____

For a pretty girl—a puffed-sleeved, flounced dress in Ameritex's wonderful "gaslight" cotton print, inspired by an old engraving. Aqua blue, moss green or pink. Sizes 12-18. By Ted Cohen, $5.98. At Gimbels, New York.

New scalloped pumps by Mary Jane.

print dress!

For a sophisticated girl—a striped rayon print with new rounded shoulders, shawl collar and little pearl buttons. Gold, grey or navy with multicolored stripes. Sizes 12-18. By Town & Country Club, $10.95. Oppenheim Collins, N. Y.

Colored suede sandals by Velvet Step.

For where to buy these Modern Screen fashions, see page 86

For other stores carrying this Modern Screen Fashion, see page 86.

Two shades of Spring

—and it's a half-size

Smartest half-size in town—a two-tone butcher rayon with new shawl collar, rounded sleeves, and a dramatic applique. Grey with yellow; navy with pink; cocoa with blue. 12½-18½. By Peg Palmer, $12.98. Famous-Barr, St. Louis.

"It's simply amazing!"

Pan-Stik*

Max Factor's New Cream-Type Make-Up in the smart swivel-stick

AS EASY TO USE AS YOUR LIPSTICK

A few light strokes of Pan-Stik...smoothed with your fingertips...a new, lovelier complexion.

Quicker...easier...convenient for any unexpected make-up need.

Women are saying!

"My skin feels soft, smooth, natural, refreshed; never drawn, tight or dry."

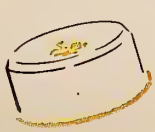
"It covers blemishes, makes my skin look more youthful and stays fresh-looking from morning to night."

"It's so easy to apply, goes on smoothly and evenly, never becomes greasy, streaky or shiny."

Ann Sothern

CO-STARRING IN METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S "WORDS AND MUSIC"

IN FIVE COLOR HARMONY SHADES AND TWO EXCITING SUN TAN SHADES $1.50



Only Hollywood's Make-Up Genius could bring you a make-up like Pan-Stik. In an instant it creates a new, delicately soft complexion. Your skin looks flawless, fascinatingly beautiful...feels gloriously natural...even refreshed. Pan-Stik takes only seconds to apply...yet lasts for hours without retouching. The new revolutionary swivel-stick means quicker, easier application. Pan-Stik is convenience itself...it's all you've dreamed of in a make-up..."It's simply amazing!"

*Pan-Stik (trademark) means Max Factor Hallywaod Cream-Type Make-Up

Max Factor • Hollywood

Complete your make-up in Color Harmony for your type

"I believe that cosmetic color harmony is the most important single feature in accentuating beauty and charm."
MAX FACTOR • HOLLYWOOD

FACE POWDER...creates a satin smooth make-up...in Color Harmony shades for your type ...the finishing touch.

ROUGE...to harmonize with your Lipstick...correct for your type...adds color, and accents your beauty.

LIPSTICK...3 flattering shades for your type: Clear Red, Blue Red, Rose Red. Correct for your coloring, correct for your costume.

Beauty is my business—

SAYS BEVERLY BURTON, FASCINATING COVER GIRL

and SWEETHEART Beauty Care Keeps My Skin Looking Velvety Soft, Radiantly Young—and Helps Prevent Chapping!

• "I'd be through as a model if I had rough, chapped skin. That's why I changed from casual skin care to SweetHeart Care. For it helps prevent chapping," says Beverly. "And in just one week, my complexion looked far lovelier. Yes, so much softer, smoother, and younger!"

You can expect the same glorious results! Yes, this time next week you can have a lovelier complexion. It's easy! Simply change to SweetHeart Beauty Care today.

Each night . . . each morning, massage your face with SweetHeart's rich, creamy lather. Rinse with warm . . . then cold water. One week from today you'll see an amazing difference! Your skin feels softer . . . smoother. It looks radiantly fresh—actually younger!

Beauty is my business, too!

• At 10 months, Nadine Koehne is already a model! And she has always been bathed with pure, mild, fragrant SweetHeart Soap.

For baby's bath—for your family's tubs and showers—you can now also get SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

IT'S A REMARKABLE ACTION!

That soft, billowing SweetHeart lather has a Floating Lift. Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings . . . lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. This heavenly gentle action is so kind to delicate skin.

SWEETHEART

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

A WOMAN'S PLACE

(Continued from page 58)

and shell pink. The same functional lines prevail here, as in Freddie's room, but the striped chairs are feminine-looking. The burnt-glass coffee table and the blond wood desk would fit in anywhere in the house.

"I believe bedrooms should be adaptable to general living, not just places to sleep. I keep a silver tea service here for entertaining my women friends, and I do all my household business at my desk."

The contents of Roz's desk are typical of Roz. Practical, sentimental, and studded with humor. She has neat pigeon-holes for her bills, but above them is a conglomeration of books, ceramic horses, a tiny American flag, and the bronzed baby shoes of son Lance—now five.

Roz is essentially as romantic in nature as she looks in person. Her cloud of soft dark hair and vibrant pink skin give her the loveliness of a porcelain figurine. Her heart is easily touched, and she saves family photographs and souvenirs with the fierce, maternal protectiveness of a lady lion. But in Lance's upbringing she is determined to be unsentimental.

toughening process . . .

"I want to toughen him up to meet life, not soften him up," she said. "He has to learn, even while he's just a little fellow, that life has its disappointing moments. That way, he'll be able to face his bigger problems when they come along." To illustrate her point, Roz told of a crisis in Lance's life just recently.

She gave him a cowboy hat and belt with a gun in the holster. It was just a cheap outfit, for she feels that it is foolish to buy expensive toys for little children. The hat was just made of paper-thin cardboard, but Lance thought it wonderful. He stuck it on his happy head, and swaggered off to the park to show it to the other kids. But some of the other kids didn't like it at all.

"That's a crazy hat," said one.

"Where are your boots? You can't be a cowboy without boots!" jeered another.

"I can so be a cowboy!" he said stoutly.

"You can not!" said a hulking brute of seven. To give his words more emphasis, he reached out and pulled Lance's cowboy hat down over his eyes. There was a ripping sound, and Lance's furious red ears poked through the brim. An instant later his hat was on the ground and the boys were tangled in an angry whirl of arms and legs. Timmy Hartmann, Joe Pasternak's boy, Stephanie Wanger, and George Murphy's "Missy" watched with round eyes. Roz watched too, from a discreet distance. Instinct made her want to fly to her child's rescue, to beat off the other boy and tell Lance that it was too a lovely hat, and of course he didn't have to wear boots to be a cowboy. But she stood still on the gravel walk and waited for the battle to end. More important for Lance was a major lesson in disappointment and frustration.

The fight was over at last, and Lance was holding his battered hat against his bloody nose. Roz held out her handkerchief to him.

"Here, use this," she said gently, "and let's go home." She just won't be sentimental over her son, Roz says.

Being sentimental with her husband is something else again. When Freddie comes home in the evening, his blue eyes alight with happiness at just being home, Roz enters into the spirit of celebration. She always dresses for dinner. Sometimes she wears a silver brocaded jacket over a cloud-grey chiffon skirt, or a flame-gold lamé gown with a matching stole lined with jade green. For Fred, like most European men, likes formality and ceremony in the evening—dinner gowns, candlelight and wines.

Dinner parties are held in the blue-and-green dining room with its polished pine table that seats 12. Shining silver pieces on the English buffet sparkle against the mirrors, and scintillate with the conversation. Frequent guests are Loretta Young and Tom Lewis; William Powell and Diana Lewis; Cary Grant; Irene Dunne and her husband, Dr. Frank Griffin; and Bette Davis and her husband, William Sherry. Danish-American dishes find high favor, and Roz goes over each detail with her cook before serving-time. Her favorite dinner menu consists of Danish blinis (savory pancakes with caviar), clear turtle soup, a light fish course served with cucumbers, breast of chicken in cream sauce accompanied by tiny peas, and ginger rolls for dessert.

While the men chat over their brandy and cigars in the dining room, Roz takes the girls up to her room for a good gab-fest. Then, the formal part of the evening over, they all troop into the living room for old-fashioned parlor games.

The living room invites the eye with its soft, deeply-cushioned couches and chairs in lime green. White Ming horses prance over the burnt glass coffee tables. Huge square mirrors on the walls reflect the mirrored corners on either side of the antique Dutch chest. These corners conceal a radio on one side, a movie projector on the other. Chinese trees with clear jade leaves trace a pattern of loveliness against the mirrors.

relax, relax! . . .

Roz has definite ideas about entertaining her favorite people. She believes that there is nothing more dreary than a party where the guests sit around nursing their drinks and coming out with abrupt statements of what they said to the boss, or why their movie company should never have made that last picture. "No shop talk" is the rule of the Brisson household, and Roz is alert to enforce it. Tired movie producers, worried writers, tensely glamorous actresses find renewed vitality after an evening of fun with Freddie and Roz. Before they know it, they have shed their tension with their hats, and are busily popping their own popcorn.

After dinner they romp through a session of games. Roz tugs open the drawers of the old Dutch chest and distributes handfuls of felt, feathers, ribbons, and gaudy ornaments. Then the lights are put out, and amid muffled giggles, the Powells, the Lewises, and their assorted friends struggle in the darkness to concoct the best-looking or funniest hats out of the materials Roz has given them. Lights on again, the hat-makers are forced to wear their creations for a full half-hour. Muffled giggles turn into shrieks as Bill Powell usually turns up the winner wearing some fearful contraption of lace and opulent plumes.

They play other games, too. They draw funny faces on paper bags and wear them over their heads. They team up, and with the ends of a piece of dental floss in their mouths, they chew vigorously towards a spinning piece of candy strung across the center. The first to get there is the winner! They feed each other popcorn from tablespoons while blindfolded—and find that ears have a way of being mistaken for mouths and that noses get smacked smartly with spoons. They play Indications and Charades. When everyone is exhausted, Freddie plays the piano.

Frequent guests are the Carl Brissons,

Helen Neushaefer presents

The only nail polish with Plasteen... the miracle chip-proofing ingredient!

"My business is making your hands lovelier," says Helen Neushaefer, fashion and color authority.

These 5 beauty features mean new loveliness at your fingertips:

NEW!
Plasteen Nail Make-up, Helen Neushaefer's new nail polish in the smart bottle with the tall "color-teller" plume. 12 new fashion shades.
25¢

Helen Neushaefer Nail Polish containing Plasteen. In familiar tapered bottle . . . 10¢

Helen Neushaefer

Nail Polish At ten cent stores and drug stores everywhere

NEWEST OF LIPSTICKS...
Smooth...creamy...true-to-tone colors, to match or complement the nail polish shades. 39¢

A. Sartorius & Co., Inc. • College Point, N. Y.

Dorothy Cox designed it...

Crisp cottons lead the foshion trend for 1949 . . . top designers recommend starching with LINIT* to keep cottons crisp, fresh ond chorming . . . LINIT, the superior storch, makes o thin, fluid mixture that penetrotes the fobric, restores its lovely finish . . . once you use LINIT for storching you will olwoys prefer it —for perfect results, for ease of ironing.

THE NEW Crisp LOOK
This Lovely
RESORT-SUMMER FORMAL designed by Dorothy Cox for The McMullen Company will soon be featured (about $50) in smort shops everywhere. For stores nearest you, write LINIT Storch, Dept. DC, 17 Bottery Ploce, New York 4, N. Y.

...adds the "finishing touch" to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT.

*LINIT is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Company, New York, N. Y. © C. P. R. Co., 1949

now touring in the East. The senior Brisson is only 17 years older than his son. His youthful blue eyes and terrific breadth of shoulder have kept him looking like Freddie's older brother. Lance has learned to speak Danish through the little-pitcher method of listening to conversations not intended for his ears. So his grandparents have resorted to spelling things out—in Danish.

Lance's room has plenty of growing space. His walls are a plain off-white without any nursery designs, and though he has a fondness for stuffed animals, he is leaving these behind as he moves forward into more fascinating mechanical mysteries. He still insists on his bedtime story, and only Roz can read it to him. To the little boy in the sturdy striped pajamas, the story hour is his highlight of the day. Afterwards Roz knows that she has drawn a little closer to her son.

For a movie star, Rosalind's clothes closet is surprisingly simple. Her Travis Benton suits are hung in orderly rows. Her hats are filed in three shelves. Shoes are her pet vanity.

"I have one pair of brown-and-white spectator pumps that I bought 14 years ago," she admitted. "Though I paid $65 for them, it wasn't really extravagance, because they are just as good today. During the war, I didn't buy a single pair."

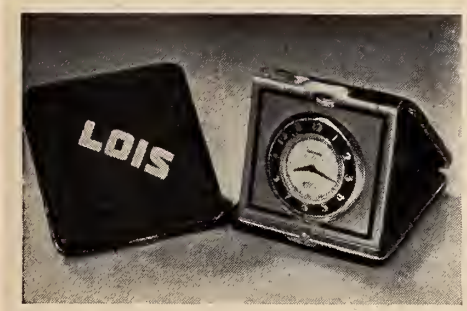
fragrant setting . . .

Roz has an oblong, mirror-walled dressing room between her bedroom and bath, which is a dream of ingenuity and beauty. She can see herself from any angle, which is fine for adjusting skirt lengths or having wardrobe fittings. Her dressing table glitters with crystal and silver bottles. Roz hoards perfumes of all fragrances and brands, like a sniff-happy squirrel.

Only in a bathroom belonging to Roz Russell would you expect to find philodendrons twining their leaves towards the window. But knowing her sheer delight in growing things, and finding at least three greenhouse products in every room of the house—well, you're not surprised to meet philodendrons in her bathroom. Roz has a tub equipped with a glass-and-chrome shelf which runs across it and holds her bath accessories. With this gadget on hand, she can cream her face, remove her nail polish or set her hair while bathing. This is real movie-star stuff and ties in with the glass shelf above the bathtub which shimmers with jars of bath oils.

Their life around the house is just as important to the Brissons as that which goes on inside. The whole Brisson family takes an interest in the garden. Freddie spades up the rose bushes, Rosalind putters in the greenhouse, and Lance has his own little garden. At the moment, Lance's fraction of an acre poses quite a problem. According to the directions which Roz read to him from the seed packet, he was supposed to plant his corn two feet apart. But when his mother wasn't looking, Lance dumped in a few packages of nasturtium and carrot seeds, as well. Now he confronts the devastating problem of what to weed out.

The son of the house is as round and brown as a sunburnt pearl. He has Roz's fine sense of humor, and her forthrightness. He has Freddie's blond good looks and charming manner. Lady visitors swoon with delight when Lance bows to them with one chubby hand on his stomach, his tow-head bowed almost to the floor. He is all Danish then, the Continental charmer, the smoothie. Then, like as not, he will straighten up and say: "Gee, Mom, kin I stay up tonight and hear Gene Autry on the radio? Kin I?"



He's an all-American kid again.

THE END

stuck for a gift?

Vendome carryall in blue canvas with red leather trim. Carries anything anywhere. By Atlantic Products, at Macy's, N.Y. $9.98.

Travel clock in black morocco. $5.50, or $6.25 with name in 24K gold, tax included. Crown Craft Products, 246 5th Ave., N.Y.C.

Scarlet satin pouch for many uses. Water-proof; rubber-lined. Also black, blue. By Kleinert. $2.95. Wanamaker's, Phila.

Look Lovely Longer

WITH "THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN"

Look for the Magic Inset

At last, figure beauty is yours with a dainty "Perma·lift"* Bra. There's such an important difference between "Perma·lift" Bras and the ordinary kind. The lasting uplift you want is so simply accomplished by the cushion insets at the base of the bra cups. You're gently supported from below—and remember, no matter how often you wash or wear your "Perma·Lift" bra, it never loses its comfortable support. See the wide selection of new popular styles and colors at your favorite corset department—$1.50 to $3.50. Be fitted today.

Also enjoy the boneless comfort of a "Perma·lift" Girdle—No Bones About It—Stays Up Without Stays.

*"Perma·lift" and "Hickory" are trade marks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

WHEN YOU BUY THIS SHOE AT

$4.99

Black Patent, Black Suede, Navy Blue, Kelly Green and Red Genuine Calf.
4 to 9 B Width
6 to 9 AA Width

YOU SAVE ENOUGH TO BUY A LOVELY MATCHING BAG too!

$2.99 plus tax

Black Patent, Black Faille, Red, Navy Blue and Kelly Green Calf Finish.

Mary Jane

Stores in principal cities

—ORDER BY MAIL—

Send check or money order and we'll pay postage.
MARY JANE SHOES
119 Beach St., Boston, Mass., Dept. MSC-3

Please send me.....prs. Breeze Shoes at $4.99 pr

COLOR	COLOR (2nd Choice)	Size	Width

Please send me.....Matching Bag at $2.99 plus tax ($3.59 total)

Name .....

Address .....

City .....Zone....State.....

☐ Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C. O. D.

When ordering C. O. D. customer agrees to pay all charges.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY THE MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices on merchandise may vary throughout country)

Plaid dress with ruffle-edged yoke worn by Janet Blair in the full color photograph (page 73).

Write: Peggy Paige,
224 W. 35 St.,
New York 1, N. Y.

Shoes shown on pages 74, 75 and 76

1. BLACK PATENT cross strap pump

New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 W. 42nd St., Shoes, 2nd Fl.

2. SCALLOPS on suede baby doll pump

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mary Jane Shoe Store, 1009 Market St.—and all Mary Jane Shoe Stores throughout the country.

3. SQUARED INSTEP ballerina flat

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mary Jane Shoe Store, 1009 Market St.—and all Mary Jane Shoe Stores throughout the country.

4. TRIPLE STRAP green leather pump

Jackson, Tenn.—Bond's, 107 E. Main.

5. CLASSIC spectator shoe

Atlanta, Ga.—Davison, Paxon Co., Peachtree and Ellis Sts., Shoe Dept., 3rd Fl.

7. LATTICE pump with wedge sole

Order by mail from: Cinderella of Boston, 59 Temple Place, Boston, Mass.

8. CREPE SOLES T-strap shoe

New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 W. 42nd St., Shoes, 2nd Fl.

9. THREE BUTTONED strapped wedgie

Write: Roberts, Johnson & Rand, Division International Shoe Co.,
1501 Washington Ave.,
St. Louis 3, Missouri.

10. PLATFORM ankle strap pump

Order by mail from: Cinderella of Boston, 59 Temple Place, Boston, Mass.

11. PALE GREEN calf open work pump

Write: Roberts, Johnson & Rand, Div. International Shoe Co.,
1501 Washington Ave.,
St. Louis 3, Missouri.

12. BUCKLED straps on plaf play shoe

Boston, Mass.—Gilchrist Co., 417 Washington St., 3rd Fl.

13. SQUARE perforations on elk play shoe

Indianapolis, Ind.—Wm. H. Block Co., Illinois & Market Sts., Shoe Dept., Downstairs

14. DOUBLE STRAP calf pump

St. Louis, Mo.—Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney, 10th & Olive Sts.

15. GOLD EDGED strapped sandals

Akron, Ohio—M. O'Neil Co., 226 S. Main St., Downstairs

16. LOUIS HEEL suede pump

New York, N. Y.—Mary Lewis, 746 Fifth Ave., Shoe Dept., 2nd Fl.

17. TWO COLORS, two straps, open calf pump

Louisville, Ky.—Kaufman Straus Co., 427 Fourth Ave., Street Fl.

Gaslight print cotton dress (page 78)

New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, 33rd St. & Ave. of Americas, Daytime Dress Dept., 2nd Fl.

Striped rayon print dress (page 79)

Chicago, Ill.—Chas. A. Stevens Co., 19 N. State St., Budget Sportswear

Indianapolis, Ind.—L. S. Ayres & Co., Meridian & Washington Sts.

New York, N. Y.,—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St., Budget Dresses, 4th Fl.

Half-size two-tone dress (page 80)

Buffalo, N. Y.—Wm. Hengerer Co., 465 Main St.. Budget Dresses, 3rd Fl.

Houston, Texas—Sakowitz Bros., Main & Rusk Ave., 5th Fl.

Memphis, Tenn.—Goldsmith's, Main & Gayoso Sts., Dresses, 3rd Fl.

New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St., Budget Dresses, 4th Fl.

St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Barr Co., Locust, Olive & Sixth Sts., Daytime Dress Dept.

how to buy modern screen fashions

buy in person

Go to the store in your city listed in the Where to Buy Directory, and be sure to go directly to the proper department and floor, which are also listed.

To save even more time, take along the Modern Screen photo of the fashion you want. If you haven't the page from the magazine, be sure to tell the sales girl you saw it in Modern Screen.

If no store in your city is listed, write Connie Bartel, Modern Screen, Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y.

buy by mail

Order by Check from any store listed, whether in your city or not.

Order by Money Order from any store listed, whether in your city or not.

Order by C. O. D. from any store listed, whether in your city or not.

HOW SWEET IS SIXTEEN?

(Continued from page 53)

"Maybe—maybe you're both a little young for those dresses," she ventured. "Your mothers might not like them."

"You don't know my mother," said Peggy indignantly, "she'll love it."

But apparently Peggy didn't know her mother either. Her mother did not love it. She pointed out that Peggy looked like a fugitive from a fancy dress ball. The bustle, she said forthrightly, looked like a battered sofa pillow after Peggy had sat on it. Furthermore, satin, draped over the hips, was not Peggy's type of material.

"But Mother—aqua's so right for me."

Mrs. Garner marshalled further arguments. There were dozens, nay hundreds, of aqua dresses in greater Los Angeles. If Peggy searched diligently, she'd be sure to find at least one more suitable to her age and figure. What's more, Mrs. Garner would personally assist her in the search.

Sadly, Peggy dragged herself to the telephone to confer with Liz. Liz had her sorrows too.

"Mother says I have to send mine back!"

Yep—when you're sixteen, darn it, you're still not quite ready to handle things as a woman of the world. Take the matter of dates. For instance, the time she wanted to go to the football game with Chuck, and Alan asked her first. Peggy said she would go if she could. Could they keep the date tentative for a few days? Because Chuck had sort of mentioned something about the next game . . .

enter chuck . . .

Then, later that day, she met Chuck on her way to study-hall. He stopped her and spoke with superb dignity.

"I hear you are going to the game with Alan. I was going to ask you to go with me." And, nose in air, he strode on by.

But sixteen has its great moments, too. Peggy Ann dined at Romanoff's with a school friend, Clark Hardwick. Peggy's hair was braided smoothly on top of her head, and she wore a long, pleated skirt of navy blue with a matching stole. Peggy had qualms inside, as she dug into her fruit cocktail. Qualms that perhaps she didn't look as elegant as she felt. Maybe she just looked like a girl trying to appear older—and that's fatal! Her hands froze, and her smile trembled a little as she looked up to see Sheilah Graham passing her table. Suddenly Sheilah halted.

"Good heavens, it's Peggy Ann! I didn't recognize you. You look so tall and slim!"

Peggy Ann seemed to grow two inches. Her heart felt as if it would burst with pride. This was the thrill of accomplishment, for by shaking her head at chocolate malts, she had lost 15 pounds in six months. Now Sheilah Graham had told her that she looked tall and slim. Those few words filled the room with quivering rainbows and the sound of far-off music.

Being able to feel this way—this was the best part of being sixteen. You may not be a full-fledged woman, a creature of stunning poise and mysterious depths—but, all in all, what a wonderful, wonderful age! THE END

The screen story of The Big Cat, Peggy Ann Garner's latest film, is a feature of the March issue of Screen Stories.

THE LOVABLE GIRL-OF-THE-MONTH

loves her Lovable BRA

Miss Leona Fredericks, "MISS MIAMI BEACH" title winner

Dress from Ciro Sportswear

You'll be lovely, too, in a Lovable® BRA

Lovable's "sculptured in satin" Bra gives wonderful support! Double fabric band extending from the strap insures uplift. In rayon satin with lace insert.

#945 White and Nude $1.50
[Also #955 White Cotton Broadcloth]

LOVABLE BRASSIERE CO.
358 Fifth Avenue
New York 1, N. Y.

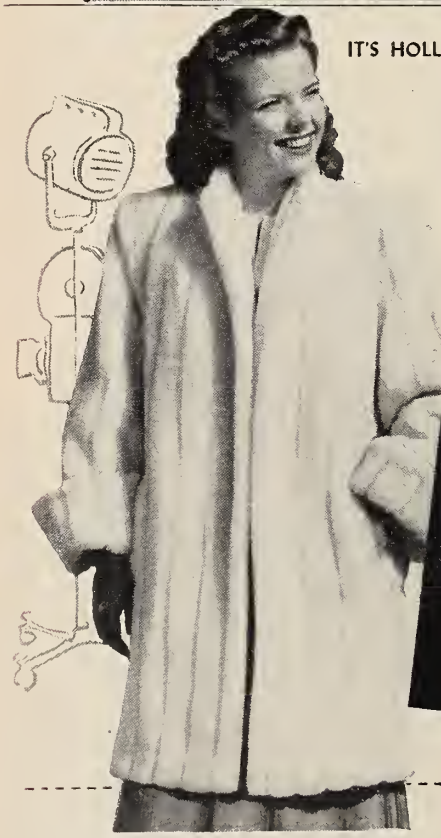
The gals are all going
CREPE SOLE crazy

In Black, Blue, Grey SUEDE,
Red, Green, Yellow, White ELK.

Sizes 5½ to 9, Narrows;
3½ to 9, Mediums.

$3.98

CRISS-CROSS



D-3

VICKI OF BOSTON
89 BEACH STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
Please send me
Criss-Cross ☐ Oxford ☐ at $3.98
Size____Color____2nd choice____
Name____
Address____State____
City____
Check ___ Money Order ___ C.O.D. ___
Send check or money order and we will pay postage.
Customer agrees to pay postal charges on C.O.D.'s

ORDER BY MAIL

OXFORD

Vicki OF BOSTON

IT'S HOLLYWOOD'S FAVORITE
THE Snowflake COAT
BY Mamselle Modes of California

He'll admire you in this glamorous, all-occasion coat...a California original of feather-light 100% worsted rib wool pile, with half belt, lined with sleek Earl Loom Satin. Pure white or smart Spring colors

$45

Use Convenient
LAY-AWAY PLAN
BY MAIL

Small deposit now will reserve your coat for prompt delivery after final payment is received.

Margery Modes of Hollywood,
Dept. 201,
834 S. Broadway
Los Angeles 14, Calif.

ORDER NOW—MAIL THIS COUPON
Save postage charges by sending payment with order.

MARGORY MODES OF HOLLYWOOD
834 S. Broadway, Dept. 201, Los Angeles 14, California.
Please rush "Snowflake" Coat at $45.00.
☐ Payment Enclosed ☐ Send C.O.D. Plus Postage ☐ Lay-Away Plan. Here is first payment of $____
Name____
Street Address____
City____Zone____State____
SIZE 8☐ 10☐ 12☐ 14☐ 16☐ 7☐ 9☐ 11☐ 13☐ 15☐
COLOR White ☐ Green ☐ Grey ☐ Plush Red ☐

LOIS BUTLER
Singing Star of EAGLE-LION PRODUCTION
"MICKEY"

VENUS IN BLUE-JEANS

(Continued from page 45)

to be. Instead of growing up at 18, it took me longer. Before, a man had to be the crush of the ages or I just wasn't interested. There was no in-between. Now I've reached the point where I can simply be friends with men, which is a sign of maturity—I hope. Howard's my good friend. I feel comfortable with him. It's not a romance. If it were, what would we be waiting for?"

As for kids, she feels that no woman's alive till she's had children. She stops to ogle strange babies on the street. At the drop of a hint, she'll drag out pictures of her seven nieces and nephews, and crow happily that an eighth is on the way. Long distance calls to the family in North Carolina are a pet extravagance. She writes faithfully to the children, remembering how as a little girl she loved getting letters from her sister in New York. Mary Edna, 13, inherits her sweaters and skirts. Ava wrote her about the gorgeous costumes in Great Sinner. Also about the corset that pulls her waistline in to 21 inches.

Mary Edna grew slightly apprehensive. "How on earth can your waistline be 21 inches? Mine's 31. I hope you put on a little weight, Ava, or your clothes won't fit me."

great-aunt ava . . .

They all call her Ava. At eight she battled for the title of Aunt and lost. This bout was waged with nephew Al, 18 months her junior. Ava coaxed, implored, threatened and bribed. Nothing worked but the bribes, and they didn't work for long. Al's married now, and an expectant father. "Bribe me," he says, "and I might let the kid call you Great-aunt."

What she misses most in Hollywood is the closeness of the family together at home. Of them all, only Beatrice (called Bappie) lives in Hollywood.

Every chance she gets, she's off to North Carolina. Last time, her train arrived late. She and her sisters gabbed all night till the men started stirring, then rolled up their sleeves and cooked nine breakfasts. Her idea of a perfect holiday is to yak with the folks, bathe and feed the babies, observe how the older children have developed. These teenagers put her into a glow. "They don't want to know how it feels to kiss Clark Gable or what Lana Turner's like. They ask grown-up questions about the industry, radio, politics. At their age I was a child. They're thinking people."

This atmosphere of domestic warmth and serenity is the kind she grew up in. Though marriage hasn't yet worked out for her, she still believes in the love that lasts a lifetime—a faith she owes to her parents. Head over heels in love, they married young and had seven children. One little boy died. Ava was the baby, with a gap of seven years between her and her next older sister.

Though money was scarce, the happiness of her parents made her childhood happy. Never once did she hear their voices raised in anger, never knew anything but perfect understanding between them. On all issues, Molly and Jonas Gardner were one. If Jonas thought something was wrong, Molly thought it was wrong. In addition to love, each commanded the other's respect. Time served only to deepen their love and need for each other.

All this Ava took for granted as a child, but it left its mark. She knows now that the greatest formative influence on her life was that of the mother who died five years ago. . . .

Molly Gardner was a person of rare sweetness and strength, an outgoing person with an endless capacity for love. Jonas was shy about displaying affection. Molly felt no such constraint. At 13, Ava was still climbing into her lap to be petted. When the girls married, their husbands became Molly's sons. She adored them all, including Mickey Rooney. He kidded and teased her. She was ill, and he made her laugh, and she responded to his fun as she responded to every good thing in life. When she wrote to Ava, she'd add little letters for Mickey. Ava knows that their break-up hurt her, but Molly blamed neither one. There was no room in her heart for condemnation.

jonas came first . . .

She gave her children all the affection they needed, but mother-love never shut her husband out. On the contrary, it was Jonas who came first. You could tell by the tone of her voice and the look in her eyes and the things she did for him and the way she did them. It was through the heartbreak of his final illness that Ava learned the meaning of devotion. They'd moved to Virginia, just the three of them. Jonas had been obliged to give up the farm and the little store, and in Newport News, Molly ran a boardinghouse for teachers. It was pure drudgery, and you could seldom get help. For the last year of his life Jonas was bed-ridden. With all the rest of it, Molly took care of her husband. Night after night she sat up with him. Day after day, at the sound of his bell, she'd drop whatever she was doing and fly upstairs. "Let me," Ava'd cry, but Molly'd go by without hearing. It was Molly he wanted, and she couldn't get to him fast enough.

"I've seen this woman so wracked, so worn, so exhausted," her daughter recalls, "that I'd think, she can't go on another day." Sometimes, as the bell tinkled, her young nerves would revolt. "He rings it unnecessarily!" Next second, she'd hate herself for thinking so. Now, from the perspective of time, she understands that her protest was normal, if childish. That the bell was a welcome call to Molly. That her one comfort during those heavy days was to lavish all her tenderness on the man she loved. That from every minute together, she drew the needed strength to go on.

When Jonas died, they went back to Smithfield. Molly took her loss quietly and with courage. But it left an emptiness that was never filled. . . .

Because of her beauty, because of the parts she's played, you think of Ava as a sophisticate in the worldly sense. She's not. To this day, she's self-conscious about entering a roomful of people. She stands at the door and stiffens terrified lest she do something wrong, make a fool of herself.

It sounds idiotic. How can a girl who looks like that be anything but sure of herself? According to the girl, looks aren't enough. Poise doesn't come from looks or clothes or beaux. It comes from an inner security that Ava lost at the age of 11.

Till then her skies were cloudless. She was wrapped in the safety of family love and the peace of family life. Her three eldest sisters were like mothers as well as sisters. Every Sunday Molly'd cook a fabulous dinner—fried chicken and ham and half-a-dozen vegetables—and the clan would gather. Till Ava turned 10, Al was the only grandchild, and he was a boy, scornful of babying. His aunt felt well-protected in her little place. After dinner the grownups would wash the dishes and gossip, while Ava ran out to play with the roughneck characters who appreciated

Your face is your fortune...but your figure's fortuna

Nylon power net panty girdle with exclusive contour-fitted crotch...

Fortunette

by FORTUNA

Super-strong, extra-flexible with rayon satin lastex panel. Contour-fitted cratch of exclusive Elasta-q cloth won't ride up, cut, or bind. Detachable garters. Or regular girdle. Nude, white, blue, black. Small, medium, large. $5.95 at leading stores everywhere.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

WOLFE & LANG, Inc., 35 West 32 Street, New York 1, N. Y.

the secret's in the circle!

Only Merry-Go-Round bra gives you all these exclusive features:

- Patented Circular Stitching creates alluring, feminine curves.
- Faggoted seams give you heavenly comfort and freedom.
- 4-section bias cup accentuates small bust — minimizes full bust.
- Pre-tested "Shrinkage Control"—FIT and LIFT won't wash out.

only PETER PAN makes Merry-Go-Round bra

Want lovelier curves? Write for FREE booklet, "Your New Guide to Bustline Beauty"
PETER PAN, 312 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 1, N. Y. Dept DI
MERRY-GO-ROUND OF CANADA, 3643 ST. LAWRENCE BLVD., MONTREAL

The Handiest Thing a Woman Can Have!

Laurita
"Chic-7"
New—Smart

Practical—Luxurious

Now, in one "hand sized" purse you have ● Billfold ● Coin Holder ● Removable Key Chain ● Identification Window ● Stamp Compartment ● Card and Ticket Pocket ● Removable Transparent Viewers for 8 photos.

Enjoy the pleasure of keeping your 7 "basics" together in this charming creation. Made of luxurious genuine leather in 4 of fashion's most glamorous colors: Emerald Green, China Red, Smoke Brown, Jet Black. Ideal for use in handbag or alone.

C.O.D. only $2.98 tax included plus postage. Send check or money order and save postage.

Money back if not satisfied.

ERMO CO.

Dept. Q, 507 Fifth Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

The new Dri-Bar Lingerie Dryer

Only $1.00 POSTPAID

G&S PRODUCTS CO., 383 Shrewsbury Street, Worcester, Mass. Send me Lingerie Dryers for which I enclose $1.00 each, postage FREE.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____

Holds safely for overnight drying. Will not mar or damage. Sparkling chrome finish. Fastenings included. GUARANTEED satisfaction or money refunded.

Gloves on your feet

3.75

Your twinkling feet will never grow tired in SQUA-MOCS—gay, soft-sole Indian Moccasins. Beautiful hand-sewn Indian beadwork on toes. Made of finest Buck Tan or Pearl Buck. Wash them like gloves! In pearl gray or brown.

CHEROKEE TRADERS, Dept. 3-B
319 N. Robinson, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Please send.....pair (s) SQUA-MOCS at $3.75 per pair. Size.....Color.....

Name .....

Address .....

City..... Zone..... State.....

☐ Money Order ☐ Check ☐ C.O.D.

her prowess as a tomboy. But there was always the cozy nest to return to.

Newport News changed all that. It marked Ava's initial contact with harsh realities.

Compared with Smithfield, Newport News was a big town. The kids made fun of the way she talked. She was the country cousin, the oddity, the one among many, and didn't know how to fight back. So she turned shy and withdrawn. Besides, the Gardners were poor. There wasn't much money for clothes, and most of the girls were far better dressed than Ava. As she entered high school, that fact loomed large; she couldn't cope with it. In high school you paid a $3 fee each semester. which admitted you to all the football games, the school plays, the dances. Ava loved dancing, but she couldn't afford the fee.

Her first date didn't help any. She was a sophomore, he was a senior and divine. His very divinity heightened her sense of inadequacy. She had no ready patter, no coquetry. At home all she ever did was talk, yet she couldn't find a word to say to this god. Tongue-tied she met him, and left him the same way. "He'll never ask me again," she wept to her pillow, and he never did. Other boys asked her, but more often than not she'd turn them down. It was easier to stay home than to agonize over clothes or over being a conversational dud.

complex at college . . .

By the time she returned to North Carolina, she'd grown a healthy inferiority bump, which her year at college failed to reduce. At college it was smart to live on the campus. Ava lived at home. It was smart to go in for academic training. Ava was taking the practical commercial course. She had dates, it's true. Boys are no dopes, and whenever she went to a dance, she'd be rushed off her feet. But she never went without inward turmoil and terror. Maybe this was the one time they wouldn't break in. Maybe this was the time she'd commit some social blunder that would start them tittering like the school kids in Newport News. . . .

With the pattern of insecurity established, she set off for Hollywood. How she got her contract—through photographs made by Bappie's husband—is a tale too often told to be repeated here. Except for Bappie, she was leaving behind all the people who loved her. Even then, Molly wasn't too well. Besides, Bappie'd lived in New York so long, she was more experienced. "With me," Molly said, "it would be the blind leading the blind."

They were all at the station to see her off. So was Ava's little boy-friend, who startled her with a kiss. He'd never kissed her before, and she couldn't help wondering how it would sit with Mother. Molly wasn't the preachy type, but you know how she felt. "I never kissed Daddy," she'd said once, "till we were engaged." But this she didn't seem to mind. In fact, she was smiling as if she thought it rather sweet. Then her arms went round Ava. "Be a good girl, honey." That was how Molly always said goodbye. When you left for school, when you went out to play—"Be a good girl, honey." That was all she said now. If she cried, it wasn't where anyone could see her. And Ava kept her own tears till the train pulled out. . . .

At 17, history repeated itself. Again she was plunged into alien surroundings, frightened and lost. Only this time it was worse, because the limelight was on her and she had no shelter to retreat to. The insecurity, born in Newport News, reached a climax in Hollywood.

Few adolescents understand themselves, and Ava's adolescence was prolonged by

Your letters . . .

THE WRONG CHRISTMAS

Gentlemen: I have just finished reading "The Christmas I'll Never Forget," by Alida Valli, in the January issue.

In what I thought was a rather inspiring article, I was surprised to find that twice during the telling, Miss Valli mentioned that her experience took place on Christmas, 1944. With this I cannot agree.

As an American sergeant with the Air Forces, I spent the Christmas of 1944 in Rome. No German patrol bothered me, and I doubt if any bothered Miss Valli. You—and she—should know that on June 4, 1944, the U. S. Fifth Army and the British Eighth Army occupied Rome.

J. S. Wicks, Trenton, N. J.

(Clearly, Miss Valli forgot that her unforgettable Christmas was actually in 1943.—Ed.)

WHAT BECAME OF SALLY?

Dear Editor: I used to be a devoted fan of Sally Eilers and saw almost every picture she was in. Could you tell me what has happened to her?

Allen Stearn, New York City

(Sally Eilers is still hard at work in Hollywood. She recently appeared in Coroner Creek, and you can hear her on the radio. She was guest star of the "Skippy Hollywood Theater" which is heard throughout the country every week.—Ed.)

ACTORS ARE HUMAN, TOO

Dear Editor: One of your readers wrote how disgusted he was by the Mitchum affair, and set it up as a cause of juvenile delinquency. How any person could blame a particular man for the existence of juvenile delinquency is beyond me.

Most of us have too many faults of our own to judge those of others. Usually, the very ones who are most critical are the first to ask and expect forgiveness for their own misdeeds.

Ruth Wilson, Los Angeles, Calif.

HONEST, JOAN!

Dear Editor: I am sick of sending in your Questionnaire box every month without receiving a free subscription. I am beginning to think that this is a put-up job.

Joan Furst, New York City

(Scout oath—we're on the up-and-up. You just have to be among the first 500, Joan.—Ed.)

special conditions. She floundered in her own immaturity, in the razzle-dazzle of movieland, in her passionate need to belong. To belong, you had to do what others did. Parties and night clubs and clothes, dancing and dates. If you got a mad crush on a man, you married him, blinding yourself to the fact that temperamental differences might cause friction later. Day by day, she drew farther from the values of her own background. The big idea was, don't give yourself time to think. From thinking came trouble. From thinking, heaven forbid, you might even realize what a mixed-up, unhappy person you'd grown to be. . . .

That was Gardner once, but isn't Gardner today. Within the last two or three years, Ava's found herself. How this came about would make an involved dissertation. Suffice it to say that she finally did give herself time to think—a painful business, to begin with, but worth the pain. The character of her background reasserted itself. She discovered that you don't have to run with the crowd.

It's been like coming out of a stifling rat-race into calm, fresh air. She knows what she wants now—books and music and friends whose ideas stimulate her. Artie Shaw used to shove books at her, and she'd shove them away. Now she reads like mad, her thirsty mind working overtime to make up for the drought. Anything, everything—child classics like The Wind in the Willows, which sent her scooting to Alice in Wonderland. Shakespeare, whose very name would have scared her once. Charlie Laughton started that. On the set of The Bribe, he read aloud from Shakespeare. "Oh, my lost high-school years," moaned Ava, and sat up half the night with Romeo and Juliet.

words and music . . .

Music was always in her blood, but as long as the radio blared with good jazz or swing, that was for Ava and you could keep the rest. Now she buys records. Now Debussy, Ravel and Sibelius send her, and she looks forward to the day when she'll understand Beethoven. The ex-playgirl can have a heavenly time, eating dinner alone, listening to records and reading. Or spending an evening with a few like-minded friends, whose interests range far beyond Hollywood and Vine. Except for Duff and the Van Heflins, they're not movie people. Three years ago she'd have thought it would bore her silly to sit quietly, talking the hours away. Now she finds that nothing makes her feel more alive than the process of stretching her mental horizons.

Maybe you can best judge the change in her by her new attitude toward marriage. "I used to think it would straighten out every problem, drive fears and loneliness away. Which is absurd. You can't expect your husband to do for you what you must do for yourself. It's too great a burden to put on anyone."

She admits she likes her career, but doesn't feel she'd be making any tremendous sacrifice in giving it up. After all, it was never the dazzling goal of her childhood—the whole thing happened almost by accident. She thinks the ideal set-up would be marriage plus one picture a year.

"My mother had the secret," she says, with that special softness in her eyes when she speaks of Molly. "Even after Daddy died, she was left with beautiful memories, not ugly frustrations. When I compare the happiness of those two with some of the misery I see in Hollywood, there's no question of choice. For their kind of love, I'd give up fifty careers." Her smile breaks through. "At least I know now what I'm after—and I don't propose to settle for anything less." THE END

Fashions Direct

BY MAIL FROM FAMOUS MANUFACTURERS TO YOU

You're alluring in the "Starlet"

only $8.95

in Mallinson rayon linen or fine combed yarn cotton chambray (sanforized)

A stunning go-everywhere classic . . . dramaticolly designed . . . elegontly embroidered. Flottering new portroit neckline creoted to glomourize you from desk to dote . . . conceoled pockets ond peekoboo button front odd to the excitement. Your choice of fobrics . . . both GUARANTEED woshoble. Sizes 9 to 15, 12 to 20. A must ot only $8.95.

COLORS:

Rayon Linen	Cotton Chambray
Aquo	Aquo
Grey	Grey
Liloc	Pink
Novy Blue	Liloc
Rospberry	Powder Blue
Pine Green	Honey Beige

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR YOUR MONEY REFUNDED

FASHIONS DIRECT, INC.,
225 West 34th St., New York 1, N.Y.

Send me the "Storlet" in Royon Linen ☐
Send me the "Storlet" in Cotton Chombroy ☐

Quontity	Size	1st Color	2nd Color

(Indicote 1st ond 2nd color choice)

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ZONE___STATE_____

Check Enclosed ☐ Money Order ☐
C.O.D. ☐

Postoge Prepoid Except for C.O.D.'s. If not completely sotisfied, I will return dress within 10 doys for complete refund.

SHE'LL NEVER STOP FIGHTING

(Continued from page 39)

know that much about cattle?" he wondered out loud.

"I don't," Ginger came back. "But I can sure tell what I like when I see it."

I've known and admired Ginger Rogers long enough to know that's a level statement of fact from a very gutsy gal. Ginger knows what she likes and what she doesn't like when she sees it, what she wants and what she doesn't, what's for her and what isn't. She's the most down-to-earth, straight-shooting, frank-and-honest, All-American girl I know in Hollywood.

The other night I risked life and limb skinning the hairpin turns up to Ginger's mountain-top house, perched like an eagle's nest over Beverly Hills, to congratulate her on finishing The Barkleys of Broadway, to say goodbye before she took off for her Rogue River ranch and to catch up on a hard-to-catch girl for MODERN SCREEN.

wrong foot . . .

I started off on strictly the wrong foot. I said it was a swell relief to see my favorite star back in a wonderful picture with Fred Astaire after those three straight turkeys she'd made.

Ginger bristled like a Fuller brush. "Now, wait a minute, Hopper!" she yelped.

"You know The Magnificent Doll was The Magnificent Flop," I baited her.

"I liked it," said Ginger stubbornly.

"And—"

She didn't even let me get started. "Name me one star in Hollywood," challenged Ginger, "who hasn't guessed wrong and made bad pictures. Just one!"

"Uh—" I began.

"I've made no worse pictures than anyone else in this business," Ginger went on heatedly. "In fact, I've made darned less fewer!"

"Is that grammar?" I asked her.

"Maybe it's not grammar," grinned Ginger, "but it's the truth and it's what I mean—darned less fewer!"

That's what I love about the gal. She's a scrapper; she sticks by her guns and she hits hard, win or lose.

And come to think of it, she's dead right about that career of hers. In spite of her three strikeouts in recent seasons, Ginger's batting average is very high indeed. In my book, her smash hits in those wonderful old Astaire-Rogers combines like Roberta, The Gay Divorcée and Flying Down to Rio; her great performances in Stage Door, Bachelor Mother, Vanishing Lady, Tender Comrade, and—especially—her marvelous Kitty Foyle, are unforgettable, and Hollywood classics. No Academy Award was ever more popular than Ginger's for playing Kitty, the white-collar girl, and when she got it—to her stunned surprise—she did what came naturally to an emotionally honest person like Ginger—she burst into loud, uncontrollable sobs, right there at the banquet!

It would take a rugged individualist like Rogers to live where she does—a place that should have St. Bernard dogs or at least a troop of Boy Scouts to lead a wayfarer over the pass. I get dizzy every time I try it, and this last time I stalled my car and almost rolled back to Kingdom Come (which, come to think of it, would be an interesting new name for Beverly Hills). I was really unnerved when I tottered inside her front door—which Ginger opened. (I've never seen a servant in her house yet—must be, but Ginger always greets you.)

But she's a pioneer there—built her house back in 1936, and has lived in the clouds ever since. It's a beautiful place really, with freedom to view all over Beverly Hills, Los Angeles, Hollywood and scattered California communities. There's a championship tennis court and swimming pool outside, and the big screened-in bed where Ginger and her husband Jack sleep outdoors seven months out of the year. Inside is a cozy, comfortable home that could belong only to Ginger. Her personality is stamped everywhere—in the six-foot-square (I swear) coffee table, cluttered with her sentimental knick-knacks and old magazines. ("I can't bear to throw them away until I've read them all—and I never get time," she sighed. "I'm a Scotchman.") And in the huge sofa which surrounds that on three sides, long enough to seat any imaginable number of dropper-inners. In the enormous fireplace dancing with flames, the great beamed ceilings painted a soft blue—

"That's green," said Ginger. I started again, "Bl—" "Green!" she repeated. It's green.

Ginger has her personal treasures scattered around the house. In her studio are her sculptures which she still hacks away at, and cleverly too. The prize is a head of her mother, Lela, and right now she's working on Jack's profile with a chisel (in marble, that is!) whenever he'll sit still. She showed me two gold medals, proudly mounted on velvet in her studio. One announced her the Charleston Champ of Texas, 1925, and spelled her name "Jinger." The other, dated 1933, proclaimed Ginger semi-finalist in the women's ping-pong championships. "Know who beat me?" grinned Ginger, "Alice Marble." She trotted out a still life painting she was working on—she's proud of her artistic efforts and frank too. "I'm making all the mistakes of beginners," she admitted.

When the fire that Jack built smoked us into tears and out of the front room, we trotted downstairs to Ginger's soda bar.

Sitting on those ice-cream bar stools under the candy-striped canopy of her soda fountain, with huge trays of nuts, candies and sugared cookies all around, I wondered, as I do every time I see her, at the perpetual girlhood of the Ginger Rogers who perched beside me in black slacks, bobby socks, beige turtle-neck sweater and another, royal blue, over that.

When Jack Briggs dropped in to kiss her goodbye I actually thought, "She looks like his kid sister!" although Jack is younger than Ginger. He was off to Oregon on ranch business—that tall, grinning super-handsome hunk of man, and my cheeks burned to watch them hug goodbye. I remembered what Ginger had told me five years ago, "He's everything I ever dreamed of, Hedda." Believe me, he still is, and so is Ginger to Jack.

But I've got a bunch of cards with Ginger's scribbles on them to prove that her heart beats in another way, besides to the rhythm of sweet romance. One reads: "Hedda, dear—may these little posies in some way speak what I find difficult to express. Love, Ginger." Well, I found it difficult enough to fathom the red roses that came with this one. But soon, another day, came another: "Belated thanks for your sweet story. Fondly, Ginger." And with that, orchids.

What story? That puzzled me. I hadn't mentioned Ginger's name in my column for weeks. (She's not the kind of star who makes news—she never gets in or out of trouble, kicks up her heels, puts on a publicity act. She's no party gal. She's far from a columnist's delight.) I riffled through the week's clippings and found a human interest piece I'd done—about a star of yesterday and a kindness that had brought her some happiness she deserved. That, I found out, was what Ginger sent me the flowers for, that was why she thanked me—because she liked that item.

If that's happened once it's happened a dozen times. White orchids from Ginger Rogers and a note, "Thank you, Darling, for writing that." Writing what? Never anything remotely concerning Ginger Rogers. I've done that too of course, and I've also lectured her sometimes—and whether I toss brickbats or bouquets at her, I never hear a peep from Ginger.

secret heart . . .

Yep, she has a heart. Doesn't wear it on her sleeve, and sometimes with her dukes up and her stubborn little neck stiff to back up her convictions of right or wrong, you might think it isn't beating—but it is. Take animals—she loves them. Her woolly, dusty sheep dog, Fudgy, for instance, goes wherever Ginger does, riding high and mighty in the front seat beside her whenever she speeds between her Rogue River ranch and Hollywood. No chair or sofa's banned to Fudgy in Ginger's house, no matter how expensive or plush. He hops right up on a stool at her soda fountain bar with his paws on the counter and yelps for his ice cream—gets it too, no matter who's there. He's a member of the family.

Ginger's Oregon home is in the heart of famous hunting country but she's never squeezed a trigger. She wouldn't hurt anything that lives for all the money in Hollywood.

Ginger loves every rock and twig on Rogers Rogue River Ranch. She's happiest when she's there with Jack—and usually her maw, Lela, too—working from dawn to dusk on the place. She even gets lyric about it. Last July I got a letter from Ginger. "I probably should be home in Hollywood pounding on producers' doors to get me a job," she wrote, "but the beauty of the countryside is at its peak now. Oregon never looked lovelier!

"The cattle are fat, the hay's in the bale
The cream's thick as that, on the Oregon trail.
The birds nest and sing; the fish bite my string,
There's nothing missing—on the Oregon trail.

"See—" scribbled Ginger, "that's what can happen to you when you stay up here."

Mrs. Eugenia Roberts of Atlanta had a dry skin problem. "Now," says this lovely young mother, "I use Noxzema as my all-purpose cream, my night cream and powder base. It certainly helps keep my complexion looking soft and smooth."

"I apply Noxzema before putting on make-up and use it before retiring after a day outdoors," states this charming Baltimore sports enthusiast, Jean Patchett of Preston. "I also use Noxzema to help protect my hands against chapping."

Which of these 6 American Women is the MOST LIKE YOU?

"Ten years ago I was annoyed by externally-caused blemishes on my face," says Mrs. Eileen Meyer, Detroit. "Noxzema helped heal them so quickly I've used it ever since. It's a real all-purpose cream!"

If you have some little thing wrong with your skin— and who doesn't—be sure to read these exclusive interviews.

• Recently we called on women across the country, asking about their beauty problems. Here are the views of six typical women who are using a new idea in beauty—Medicated Skin Care.

New Beauty Routine

It's a simple home treatment developed by a doctor. It has been clinically tested. In fact, 181 women from all walks of life took part in this skin improvement test under the supervision of 3 noted doctors—skin specialists. Each woman had some little skin problem.

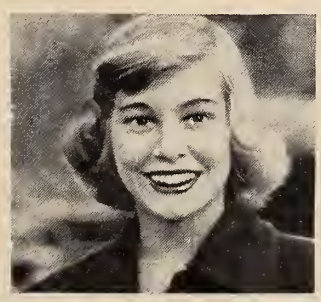
Based on Scientific Tests

Each woman followed faithfully Noxzema's new 4-Step Medicated Beauty Routine. At 7-day intervals, their skin was examined through a magnifying lens. Here are the astonishing results:

Of all these women, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in two weeks! Yes, 4 out of 5 were thrilled at the improvement in their skin!

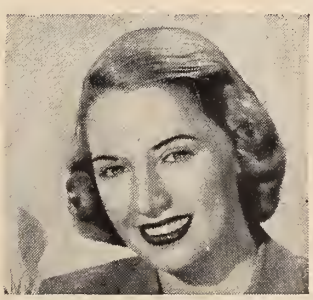
For Externally-Caused Skin Troubles

If you want an aid to a softer, smoother, looking skin, if you suffer the embarrassment of externally-caused blemishes, rough, dry skin or other similar skin troubles—try Noxzema.



4-Step Beauty Routine!

1. Morning—bathe face with warm water, with a wet cloth apply Noxzema and "cream-wash" your face.
2. Apply Noxzema as a powder base.
3. Before retiring, repeat morning cleansing.
4. Massage Noxzema lightly into your face. Pat on extra Noxzema over blemishes.



Follow this new routine faithfully morning and night. See if you aren't amazed at the astonishing way it can help your skin. At all drug and cosmetic counters, 40¢, 60¢, $1.00 plus tax—*Trial Size also now on sale.

"My hands were dreadfully chapped. A friend recommended Noxzema and today I use it for everything," says Shirley O'Hara of Los Angeles. "It's my complexion and hand cream—all in one."

Cute blonde Mrs. Sonia Dorsey of Cambridge, Mass. uses Noxzema as her all-purpose cream. She says, "I have unusually dry skin. I've found Noxzema helps keep my skin soft and lovely."

"I put a wonderful-feeling 'mask' of Noxzema on my face before retiring. It's done so much for my skin, I've been recommending it to my friends," says glamorous Jan Barker of Cleveland.

Well, Ginger got her job, the one she's wanted for a long, long time, without pounding on producers' doors—and, as usual, when she had a crack at what she wanted she didn't hesitate a second. I know, because I had a little something to do with that, too. I'm talking about Ginger's return as the lovely-lady half of the greatest box-office team that ever existed, back again dancing with Fred Astaire—after ten long, too long, years—in The Barkleys of Broadway.

what effort? . . .

With The Barkleys just finished, Ginger told me, "It's the best story Fred and I ever had." The story's about a Lunt-Fontanne type pair of dancers on the Big White Way, and not since The Castles has Ginger stepped so high, wide and handsome with her twinkling toes. I wanted to know if her calf muscles ached. She hadn't tripped a toe professionally since Lady in the Dark, six years ago, and that but briefly. "All that effort—rehearsals—"

"Effort!" Ginger exclaimed. "Can you name me anything I'd rather do than dance?" Nope, I couldn't, not offhand. As much of a natural-born stay-at-home as she is, Ginger would still be out whirling around dizzily every night on a dance floor if that were Jack Briggs' dish. But it's not. Ginger's been siccing him on Arthur Murray and Veloz and Yolanda persistently since they've been married—but it just won't take. He hates dancing!

Ginger Rogers has the reputation of being a lone wolf in Hollywood and it's true—she is and I know why. The gossipy, artificial, fame-and-money caste system of Hollywood is not for her; she's too honest. She acts like a movie star only on the screen. I've never heard her make a catty remark about anybody. If she likes you, she'll give you the hat off her head (as she did me once—took one off I admired and handed it right over!). She always comes to my parties, but I rarely see her around elsewhere. She can count her close friends on her fingers. They've got to be real ones.

She's a gal to call a spade a spade when she's making a picture and all was never peaches and cream between her and Fred when they shared starring honors, nor was it with any star Ginger batted up against. She went all out for her rights—as she still does. Not very long ago, during the filming of her latest movie, The Barkleys at MGM, Ginger had a difficult, quiet but emotional scene to handle and the director asked her beforehand, "Is it going to disturb you, Ginger, to have visitors on the set?" "Yes," she replied frankly, "it will." Well, it would happen that that very day was the one Judy Garland picked to visit the set and watch Ginger playing the part she'd had her own heart set on, but which illness had denied her. It was a ticklish situation when Judy, MGM's long-time darling, showed up at the stage door and the assistant told her, "Miss Rogers would rather not have anyone on the set. Can't you come back some other day?"

Judy said no she couldn't and stamped away in a rage, and that was natural, too. She thought Ginger had snubbed her. Ginger never learned anything about the incident until later, when she was very upset—but, being Ginger, she couldn't do anything about it. Something in Ginger Rogers' proud nature just naturally won't allow her to be beholden to anyone.

Ginger was getting ready the night I saw her, to shake Hollywood and its headaches for the pristine peace of her ranch at Eagle Point, Oregon. She bought it seven years ago and this last Christmas made the fourth she has spent there.

To hear Ginger talk, it's her edge on the future. "Someday when my lovely beef is selling in the market and I'm making a living up there, then I'll tell the picture business goodbye," she told me. "I'll say, 'you've been awfully good to me and I love you dearly—but I'm through'." I think she's talking a long, long distance ahead, myself—but anyway that's the provident way she feels about the Four-R. "It's for my old age and it's strictly business," Ginger's told me time and again. Okay, I'm beginning to believe her.

Ginger's the official owner but Jack Briggs is the working boss of the Four-R. "He's up before I'm even awake," Ginger told me proudly, "and usually I'm asleep before he drags in." Last summer, in haying time, Ginger didn't see Jack except with the rest of the ranch hands when she rustled up dinner for the crew in searing weather that, as she said, "fries your insides and makes you keel over quick."

There's no swimming pool on Rogers R. R. Ranch, no tennis court either—not even a ping-pong table. The tenant farmer's house is bigger than Ginger and Jack's, which is a tiny cottage made into a living room and library sealed in sugar pine, with three bedrooms and a bath tacked on. Ginger chuckles every time anyone thinks she gallops around her place like "Hopalong Cassidy in a silver saddle." When a Hollywood gal recently gushed, "Oh, Ginger, how you must love to ride the trails on your lovely ranch," she let her down with, "We've got one work horse, and he's too busy pulling things around to have me on his back, too." The lone car's a pickup truck and Ginger herds it over the dirt road into Medford three times a week to stock up on vittles. Rest of the time—"Just say I've got a chronic case of aching back and housemaid's knee," she told me. "I'm a busy woman."

handy woman . . .

She does all the ranch laundry on a beat-up old washing machine. She cooks the meals and washes the dishes. "I wash," Ginger explained, "Lela wipes and Jack keeps us apart." She chases around in faded Levis, plaid shirts, tennis sneakers and pigtails, rambling all over the 640 acres. She perches on corral rails at stock auctions all over the county. She's yanked her share of scrappy steelhead out of the Rogue and shot its dangerous rapids twice in a bobbing boat. But she's never shot anything else—not even the fat pheasants which swarm in her fields. Incidentally, Ginger thinks the Briggs family will belong officially to the Oregon Trail at last when Jack gets appointed a deputy sheriff. "That's important up there," she said, "and you've got to be an old timer to rate."

But Ginger Rogers has rated right here in Hollywood for almost two decades now and I'm betting on her to add another ten-stretch at least before she goes home on the range for keeps.

I was thinking with a chuckle as I waved her good-luck and rolled down that scarey hill homewards, of the time Ginger met Greta Garbo. She'd wanted to for years and years but—well—Garbo doesn't chum up easily with anybody. One day, in a Westwood Village shop, Ginger and her German maid, Irma, were picking up some things and tossing a few words of Deutsch back and forth in the process. Another customer looked up, intrigued by the foreign tongue. It was Garbo—and Ginger thought, "Now's my chance." But Garbo quickly averted her eyes.

That burned Ginger because she knew Greta Garbo knew who she was. So she stepped up, stuck out her hand and said, "Hello, Miss Garbo. I'm Ginger Rogers."

"How do you do?" Gee-Gee replied grudgingly, then turned and stalked away. But Ginger was satisfied. She'd met Garbo whether Garbo wanted to meet her or not. Ginger told me afterwards, "I made up my mind she'd say 'hello' or else. If she hadn't, by Golly, I'd have tripped her!"

And, knowing Ginger Rogers, I'm sure she would have, too! THE END

NEXT MONTH!

It's Never Been Done Before!

MODERN SCREEN'S

SHIRLEY TEMPLE

BIRTHDAY ISSUE

Shirley on the cover. Huge special section with exclusive stories and pictures. Shirley's own story. Her life in pictures. Scoop photos of Shirley and family at home. Many more features!

APRIL MODERN SCREEN

☛ ON SALE MARCH 11

BOY GETS GIRL

(Continued from page 55)

Foxes was finished. Since most of the picture would be shot outdoors, the warm sun of Italy would be their friend. If it shone frequently, she'd get home quickly. Rain, fog and clouds would be their enemies, delaying the shooting of the picture and their reunion.

Letters flew back and forth between Italy and America, telling of their love, of their impatience, of their determination never to let anything like this happen to them again.

Since he was not yet well established in pictures, his salary was small. Though he couldn't really afford long distance phone calls, he just had to hear Wanda's tender, gentle voice over the phone and know she was safe and well and still in love with him. (Wanda's current film is called, appropriately enough, My Own True Love.)

Over thousands of miles her voice traveled. To hear it, Audie paid the phone company $10 a minute, and it was worth every penny. But at the end of every conversation there was a feeling of frustration and of longing to be together. Audie knew that Wanda was working hard in Italy, and he wished that circumstances had been different, so he could have saved her from the trip. There are not many times in his life that Audie has wished for real wealth, but in these moments he often wondered if things might not have been different if he had been able to say, "I have plenty of money and can take care of both of us very well indeed. You won't have to go to Italy."

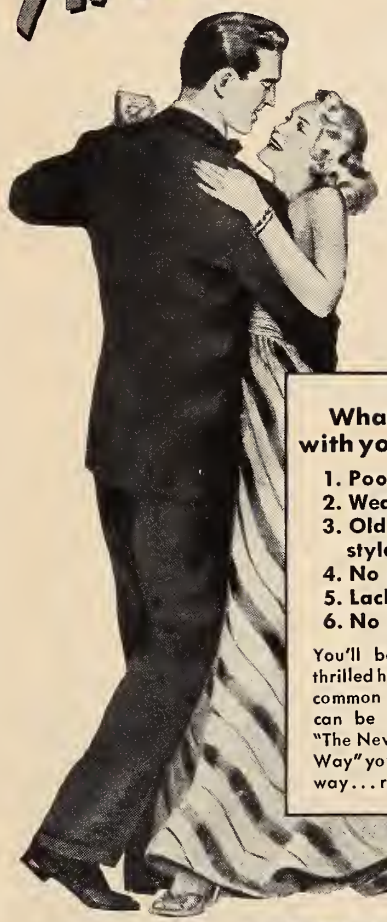
not too strong . . .

Knowing that he and Wanda would have to struggle for years, he hadn't felt he could make that plea. But when Wanda admitted she was tired, visions of her looking pale and fragile haunted him. She is healthy, but not too strong, he says. (In his heart he's fiercely protective of her.)

Over the long distance phone she promised him, "I'll never again take another trip like this. I miss you terribly."

So that it might be a memory that Wanda would cherish all her life, he decided that the wedding must be held in the church to which Wanda always goes, Unity Church in San Fernando Valley. And in the flower-decked church, with their friends and Wanda's parents present, they took their vows. Paul Short, the producer, who had faith enough in Audie to give him his first important part, was best man; Audie's cousin, Elizabeth Lingo, was maid of honor, and Mary Lou Van Ness, secretary to the stars at Paramount, was bridesmaid. It was a double ring ceremony.

Wanda's wedding gown, designed for her by Paramount designer Edith Head, was derived from the styles of 1830. Of white slipper satin, it was slightly high-waisted, with a full skirt, a high neck and a tiny, stand-up collar. Wanda's little cap and the veil just reaching to her shoulders were made of white lace which she bought in Italy.



And as his bride came down the aisle, Audie thought, "Isn't it strange the way fate works—here I am in Hollywood and Wanda is walking down the aisle toward me because of two magazine covers. . . ."

The first magazine cover was a picture of Audie on the July 16, 1945 issue of Life. James Cagney saw it, and at once offered him a contract. Audie hesitated, for he hated to look as if he were "cashing in" on his war record. But when Army buddies all over the country wrote to him urging him to go ahead, he signed.

HOW TO BECOME A POPULAR DANCER OVERNIGHT

"The New Arthur Murray Way"

Makes learning to dance easier — faster!

What's wrong with your dancing?

1. Poor posture?
2. Weak lead?
3. Old-fashioned style?
4. No confidence?
5. Lack of grace?
6. No variety?

You'll be amazed and thrilled how quickly these common dancing errors can be corrected. With "The New Arthur Murray Way" you learn the right way . . . right away.

THINK back to the last dancing party you went to . . . Who had the best time? The good dancers, of course. Were you one? Or, did timidity and lack of skill keep you on the sidelines? Arthur Murray has helped thousands conquer shyness and develop self-confidence through dance lessons. And, he can help you, too . . . show you how to become a popular, sought-after dance partner.

You see he has discovered a new, shortcut to expert dancing, "The First Step to Popularity", that makes learning faster and easier than ever before. Once you master this key step you will have the secret of the Rumba, Fox Trot, Waltz, Samba—all the dances.

So visit an Arthur Murray Studio now. Meet the instructors. Let one of them give you a free 15-minute dance analysis. And, you'll find lessons cost less at Arthur Murray's because you learn so quickly.

Just to give you an idea of how easy it is to become an expert dancer send today for Arthur Murray's entertaining dance book, "Murray-Go-Round." Use coupon below.

"'The New Arthur Murray Way' is so basic yet such an easy way to learn, that everyone understands the first time you show them," says lovely Lisa Derney.

"Many think the Rumba's only for experts. The steps seem so tricky, the rhythm's so different," says Betty Jordan. "But, you can learn the secret to this gay dance in just 5 minutes at Arthur Murray's."

Arthur Murray

Studios from Coast to Coast

Visit the one nearest you for a FREE dance analysis

ONLY 25¢

Entertaining! Fascinating! Instructive!

Copr. 1949—Arthur Murray Inc.

ARTHUR MURRAY STUDIOS, Dept. 15C (Consult telephone directory for address of nearest studio, or write Arthur Murray Studios, 11 East 43rd Street, New York 17, N.Y.) Please send me your magazine, "Murray-Go-Round", 44 pages of pictures, dance news, instructions. I enclose 25c.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE____ STATE_____

Mod. Sc.—Mar.

Please lady, listen

Please don't walk away or turn a deaf ear, gentle lady! There's big news in the air and you may find it just as important in your life as it has proved to millions of other women all over the world—not once, but thirteen times a year. . . . As you already have guessed, the subject under discussion is a wholly feminine one—monthly sanitary protection.

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

But the "big" news deals with a very tiny product indeed, no longer than your little finger! It is called Tampax and it is worn internally. This principle is well-known to doctors and it has many advantages. Tampax frees you from the tyranny of belts, pins and external pads. It causes no odor or chafing. Quick to change and easy to dispose of. Tampax is only 1/9 the bulk of older kinds and you can shower, tub or swim without removing it!

Made of pure surgical cotton compressed in dainty patented applicators, Tampax comes in 3 absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior. Average month's supply slips readily into purse. Compare today's price of Tampax with the price of nationally-advertised external pads. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

Cagney taught him a great deal about acting and said he had faith in him. But more than a year went by and still he had no picture for Audie to make. Finally Cagney loaned him out for a small part in Paramount's Beyond Glory.

Then, after several months more on the Hollywood sidelines, Audie decided that a film career was not in the cards for him—that it was time to get out of Hollywood, to try to earn a living at something else, somewhere else. He might have left Hollywood and never have made another film if it hadn't been for another magazine cover—this time a portrait of Wanda Hendrix on the cover of the February 1946 Coronet.

Pretty girls are a dime a dozen in Hollywood, as Audie would be the first to tell you. But something came through in this portrait—a lovely, wholesome innocence and warmth that stirred depths in Audie that he hadn't known existed. More than anything else in the world, he wanted to meet this girl.

ingenious scheme . . .

Then Audie had a bright idea. He talked Charles Leonard, who was then handling publicity for the Cagney Studios, into throwing him a birthday party on June 20th—to which Grace Fischler, who had arranged the Coronet magazine cover, was invited. Now, Grace is an attractive gal, but she knew perfectly well that the main reason she was being asked to the party was so she could bring Wanda. Wanda knew nothing of the Machiavellian scheming going on. She didn't dream that the whole party had been engineered so that Audie could meet her. . . .

And then Audie and Wanda were sitting together in the guest house at the Cagney home, where the party was given, and the glowing firelight shone on her lovely, delicate face, on her blue eyes and her soft dark hair. A phonograph was being played. Audie wished he could ask Wanda to dance. But his wounded hip still gave him trouble, so he contented himself with watching her and talking to her, lightly, smilingly.

Somehow she must have sensed that he was more than casually interested in her. After a while she said, "Would you like to come to dinner at my house Wednesday?"

Would he like to come! All evening he had been working toward asking her for a date—and now he fairly leaped at the invitation.

But on Wednesday morning, Wanda was on the phone telling him that she was terribly sorry, but Warners' had let her out—and she was so busy with her agent going to other studios to see about roles that she couldn't possibly keep their date—she'd be much too exhausted by the time evening came. Would he make it the following Wednesday instead? He made it the following Wednesday—and again she begged off. By the time Wanda had cancelled four dinner dates in a row— "Oh, forget it," he said through stiff lips.

And then he set about to forget her. He did his very best. But the smiling, heart-shaped face of Wanda kept wandering through his thoughts. He heard her voice, and wished he could see her. He saw her image in the movies, and when the picture was over, he found himself forgetting the plot, forgetting everybody in the picture, except Wanda.

Three months later he found himself driving up to her house. As he walked in, he saw Wanda surrounded by a group of young marines. Her cousin had come in from a nearby marine base, bringing a bunch of buddies with him, and they were pleading with Wanda to accompany them to the Palladium, that jive-jumping dance hall which has been called "everybody's night club." Wanda said aloud, "Audie! I'm so glad to see you—I thought you'd never get here." And she whispered, "Make them think I have a date with you."

So he did. But when the happy-go-lucky marines had departed, he said, "Well, I guess I'm just a prop to you—one that you use when you want, and drop when you don't. Now don't you want me to go, too?"

"Of course not!" said Wanda. "Why do you say that?"

"Well," said Audie, "I sort of thought . . . Well . . ."

Wanda sighed. "Men are such strange people," she said. "How about some tea and cookies?"

He grinned. "I'm sorry, Wanda. And I'd love some tea and cookies."

Then, for the first time they really talked. Wanda told him of how she had been born in a logging camp in Florida, of how she and her father, who was quarter boss at the camp, used to go fishing together when she was a kid. They talked of the outdoors. She said she liked hunting and swimming—which Audie also likes. They discovered that they even liked the same books, and had the same favorite—Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel." Soon they were pouring out confidences to each other.

After that they had many dates. Audie found that Wanda could fish as well as he, and shoot almost as well. "She does nothing right with a gun—except hit the target," he comments.

Audie told Wanda he was fed up on Hollywood and planned to leave the town. "It doesn't look as if I'm ever really going to get anywhere in pictures," he said. "I've started to write a book about the men I've known in the war and their experiences—but I know nothing about writing, and that will probably turn out badly, too."

"Let me read what you've written so far," begged Wanda. So he gave her pages of stuff to read, and watched the glow that came into her eyes. "Why—why, this is wonderful," she said. "Audie, you must keep on with it. It's real and it's honest, and I'm sure you'll find a publisher for it." (P. S. She was right. The book will be published very shortly by Henry Holt and Company under the title, "To Hell and Back.") keep trying! . . .

And as for his career in pictures—she continued to believe and insist that Audie would some day get a good part and make good. "Never mind what they're beginning to say about your chances!" she told him. "I know you'll come through if you keep on trying!"

"I had no faith in myself either as a writer or as an actor," he says today. "Wanda had enough faith for both of us."

If Wanda taught Audie to have faith, Audie in turn taught Wanda to have firmness, and to fight everyone who tried to mold her life differently from the way she wanted it. One of the things that upset Audie was the knowledge that Wanda, acting on others' advice to go out with as many eligible young men as possible, was being seen each night with a different date. This was strictly for publicity purposes, but Audie felt it was all wrong. "If you're making money for a studio, no studio will cut you off its contract list because you go out with anyone you choose," he told Wanda. Since by this time they knew they cared only about each other, she admitted he was right—and then stuck by her guns. The publicity dates were eliminated from her social life.

There's no doubt that Audie puts Wanda on a pedestal and worships her. One of the qualities he adores in her is her appreciation of small things. Early in their courtship he discovered that whenever he bought her a small gift—a bunch of red roses (her favorite flower), a book or an album of records—she cherished his thoughtfulness without regard to what he had spent. It delighted him to bring her moments of happiness, like bright jewels strewn throughout their courtship. He could afford very little in the way of real jewels—but in June, a month before she left for Italy, Audie gave Wanda a simple gold engagement ring set with a diamond.

When at times Audie was preoccupied and listless, she was very understanding. On the battlefield, where only victory and honor counted, little things had ceased to matter.

"TO HELL AND BACK"

When First Lieutenant Audie Murphy was released from the Army in September 1945, he was America's most honored GI. Among his 17 medals and decorations earned in four years as a combat infantryman were the nation's highest award, the Congressional Medal of Honor (for almost single-handedly stopping two companies of German infantry and six supporting tanks by continuing to fire a machine gun atop a blazing tank); the Legion of Merit (for repeated bravery in volunteering for dangerous missions in Italy and France); two Silver Stars (the first for attacking and wiping out an enemy machine-gun nest, the second for taking radio equipment through unceasing enemy fire to direct his own company's mortar fire); three Purple Hearts (he was wounded in the leg, foot and hip); the Distinguished Service Cross; the Legion of Honor, and the Croix de Guerre.

Often Audie sees fellows his own age (24) get excited about a dance, or a sporting event or about their minor successes. Such things stir no great fever in him. "Little things that used to mean something to me before the war means nothing now."

All his movie work means to him is a chance to earn a living and to support Wanda and to raise a family. He's amused when people say, "Don't let Hollywood change or break you." If he's a success in Bad Boy, he'll continue to work hard in other pictures. If it flops, he knows he'll make a living somehow.

"I've gotten an awful lot of million-dollar advice," he says, "but aside from Wanda, only three people have given me any practical help—Terry Hunt, who lent me eating money when I was broke; Spec McClure, the writer, who took time out from his own work to help me with the continuity of my book; and Paul Short, who gave me the chance to play Bad Boy when no major studio would gamble on me. I'll be glad if the picture is a success, but I won't stand on my head with glee."

Only one thing can make him quiver with excitement—and that is the sight of Wanda. Not that he will admit even that much. "Only actors get emotional," he says dryly. He does not consider himself an actor.

Actually, underneath the surface, one can sense a great flow of emotion, but it is under control. Through Wanda's lovely eyes, he may rediscover excitement and importance in little things. He may even become sentimental about the very things which awaken so little response in him today.

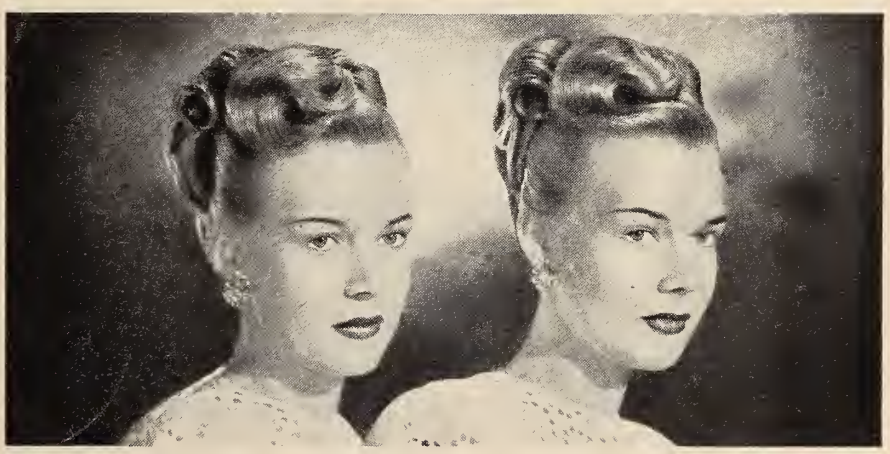
THE END

BIG NEWS! NEXT MONTH'S MODERN SCREEN IS THAT SPECIAL SHIRLEY TEMPLE ISSUE!

TONI TWINS prove magic of SOFT-WATER Shampooing

LATHER . . .

WAS LILA'S PROBLEM!



"This soap shampoo just won't give me enough lather," says Lila Wigren. "Our hard water sees to that!" And a lack of lather isn't the only problem, Lila. Even the finest soap shampoos leave hair with dulling film, that just won't rinse away. So the natural sparkle of your hair is concealed. Looks drab...lifeless. It's hard to manage, too.

BUT ELLA

GOT HEAPS OF IT!

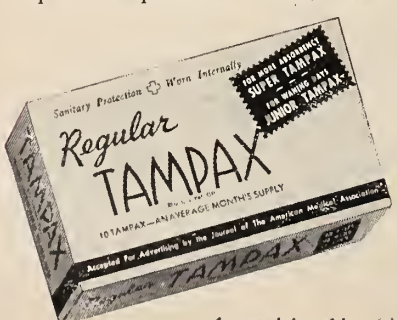
"Look at the lather I get," says twin Ella. "Imagine! Toni Creme Shampoo gives me Soft-Water Shampooing even in hard water!" And Ella—your hair shows a difference, too. Toni's thorough cleansing action leaves it glowing with lovely, morning-dew freshness. Its natural beauty is revealed . . . those wonderfully soft, smooth curls fairly sparkle.

NOW IT'S TONI CREME SHAMPOO FOR TWO!

They've seen the proof! And the lovely Wigren twins are convinced that no soap or soap shampoo can match the advantages of Toni Creme Shampoo. For it gives you Soft-Water Shampooing even in hardest water. Leaves your hair gloriously smooth and soft, easy-to-manage. Helps your permanent "take" better. Those oceans of creamy-thick lather rinse away dirt and dandruff instantly. Your hair sparkles with lovely natural highlights. Try Soft-Water Shampooing today. Get the jar or tube of Toni Creme Shampoo. It's new!

Enriched with Lanolin

Please lady, listen



Please don't walk away or turn a deaf ear, gentle lady! There's big news in the air and you may find it just as important in your life as it has proved to millions of other women all over the world—not once, but thirteen times a year. . . . As you already have guessed, the subject under discussion is a wholly feminine one—monthly sanitary protection.

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

But the "big" news deals with a very tiny product indeed, no longer than your little finger! It is called Tampax and it is worn internally. This principle is well-known to doctors and it has many advantages. Tampax frees you from the tyranny of belts, pins and external pads. It causes no odor or chafing. Quick to change and easy to dispose of. Tampax is only 1/9 the bulk of older kinds and you can shower, tub or swim without removing it!

Made of pure surgical cotton compressed in dainty patented applicators, Tampax comes in 3 absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior. Average month's supply slips readily into purse. Compare today's price of Tampax with the price of nationally-advertised external pads. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

Cagney taught him a great deal about acting and said he had faith in him. But more than a year went by and still he had no picture for Audie to make. Finally Cagney loaned him out for a small part in Paramount's Beyond Glory.

Then, after several months more on the Hollywood sidelines, Audie decided that a film career was not in the cards for him—that it was time to get out of Hollywood, to try to earn a living at something else, somewhere else. He might have left Hollywood and never have made another film if it hadn't been for another magazine cover—this time a portrait of Wanda Hendrix on the cover of the February 1946 Coronet.

Pretty girls are a dime a dozen in Hollywood, as Audie would be the first to tell you. But something came through in this portrait—a lovely, wholesome innocence and warmth that stirred depths in Audie that he hadn't known existed. More than anything else in the world, he wanted to meet this girl.

ingenious scheme . . .

Then Audie had a bright idea. He talked Charles Leonard, who was then handling publicity for the Cagney Studios, into throwing him a birthday party on June 20th—to which Grace Fischler, who had arranged the Coronet magazine cover, was invited. Now, Grace is an attractive gal, but she knew perfectly well that the main reason she was being asked to the party was so she could bring Wanda. Wanda knew nothing of the Machiavellian scheming going on. She didn't dream that the whole party had been engineered so that Audie could meet her. . . .

And then Audie and Wanda were sitting together in the guest house at the Cagney home, where the party was given, and the glowing firelight shone on her lovely, delicate face, on her blue eyes and her soft dark hair. A phonograph was being played. Audie wished he could ask Wanda to dance. But his wounded hip still gave him trouble, so he contented himself with watching her and talking to her, lightly, smilingly.

Somehow she must have sensed that he was more than casually interested in her. After a while she said, "Would you like to come to dinner at my house Wednesday?"

Would he like to come! All evening he had been working toward asking her for a date—and now he fairly leaped at the invitation.

But on Wednesday morning, Wanda was on the phone telling him that she was terribly sorry, but Warners' had let her out—and she was so busy with her agent going to other studios to see about roles that she couldn't possibly keep their date—she'd be much too exhausted by the time evening came. Would he make it the following Wednesday instead? He made it the following Wednesday—and again she begged off. By the time Wanda had cancelled four dinner dates in a row— "Oh, forget it," he said through stiff lips.

And then he set about to forget her. He did his very best. But the smiling, heart-shaped face of Wanda kept wandering through his thoughts. He heard her voice, and wished he could see her. He saw her image in the movies, and when the picture was over, he found himself forgetting the plot, forgetting everybody in the picture, except Wanda.

Three months later he found himself driving up to her house. As he walked in, he saw Wanda surrounded by a group of young marines. Her cousin had come in from a nearby marine base, bringing a bunch of buddies with him, and they were pleading with Wanda to accompany them to the Palladium, that jive-jumping dance hall which has been called "everybody's night club." Wanda said aloud, "Audie! I'm so glad to see you—I thought you'd never get here." And she whispered, "Make them think I have a date with you."

So he did. But when the happy-go-lucky marines had departed, he said, "Well, I guess I'm just a prop to you—one that you use when you want, and drop when you don't. Now don't you want me to go, too?"

"Of course not!" said Wanda. "Why do you say that?"

"Well," said Audie, "I sort of thought . . . Well . . ."

Wanda sighed. "Men are such strange people," she said. "How about some tea and cookies?"

He grinned. "I'm sorry, Wanda. And I'd love some tea and cookies."

Then, for the first time they really talked. Wanda told him of how she had been born in a logging camp in Florida, of how she and her father, who was quarter boss at the camp, used to go fishing together when she was a kid. They talked of the outdoors. She said she liked hunting and swimming—which Audie also likes. They discovered that they even liked the same books, and had the same favorite—Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel." Soon they were pouring out confidences to each other.

After that they had many dates. Audie found that Wanda could fish as well as he, and shoot almost as well. "She does nothing right with a gun—except hit the target," he comments.

Audie told Wanda he was fed up on Hollywood and planned to leave the town. "It doesn't look as if I'm ever really going to get anywhere in pictures," he said. "I've started to write a book about the men I've known in the war and their experiences—but I know nothing about writing, and that will probably turn out badly, too."

"Let me read what you've written so far," begged Wanda. So he gave her pages of stuff to read, and watched the glow that came into her eyes. "Why—why, this is wonderful," she said. "Audie, you must keep on with it. It's real and it's honest, and I'm sure you'll find a publisher for it." (P. S. She was right. The book will be published very shortly by Henry Holt and Company under the title, "To Hell and Back.") keep trying! . . .

And as for his career in pictures—she continued to believe and insist that Audie would some day get a good part and make good. "Never mind what they're beginning to say about your chances!" she told him. "I know you'll come through if you keep on trying!"

"I had no faith in myself either as a writer or as an actor," he says today. "Wanda had enough faith for both of us."

If Wanda taught Audie to have faith, Audie in turn taught Wanda to have firmness, and to fight everyone who tried to mold her life differently from the way she wanted it. One of the things that upset Audie was the knowledge that Wanda, acting on others' advice to go out with as many eligible young men as possible, was being seen each night with a different date. This was strictly for publicity purposes, but Audie felt it was all wrong. "If you're making money for a studio, no studio will cut you off its contract list because you go out with anyone you choose," he told Wanda. Since by this time they knew they cared only about each other, she admitted he was right—and then stuck by her guns. The publicity dates were eliminated from her social life.

There's no doubt that Audie puts Wanda on a pedestal and worships her. One of the qualities he adores in her is her appreciation of small things. Early in their courtship he discovered that whenever he bought her a small gift—a bunch of red roses (her favorite flower), a book or an album of records—she cherished his thoughtfulness without regard to what he had spent. It delighted him to bring her moments of happiness, like bright jewels strewn throughout their courtship. He could afford very little in the way of real jewels—but in June, a month before she left for Italy, Audie gave Wanda a simple gold engagement ring set with a diamond.

When at times Audie was preoccupied and listless, she was very understanding. On the battlefield, where only victory and honor counted, little things had ceased to matter.

"TO HELL AND BACK"

When First Lieutenant Audie Murphy was released from the Army in September 1945, he was America's most honored GI. Among his 17 medals and decorations earned in four years as a combat infantryman were the nation's highest award, the Congressional Medal of Honor (for almost single-handedly stopping two companies of German infantry and six supporting tanks by continuing to fire a machine gun atop a blazing tank); the Legion of Merit (for repeated bravery in volunteering for dangerous missions in Italy and France); two Silver Stars (the first for attacking and wiping out an enemy machine-gun nest, the second for taking radio equipment through unceasing enemy fire to direct his own company's mortar fire); three Purple Hearts (he was wounded in the leg, foot and hip); the Distinguished Service Cross; the Legion of Honor, and the Croix de Guerre.

Often Audie sees fellows his own age (24) get excited about a dance, or a sporting event or about their minor successes. Such things stir no great fever in him. "Little things that used to mean something to me before the war means nothing now."

All his movie work means to him is a chance to earn a living and to support Wanda and to raise a family. He's amused when people say, "Don't let Hollywood change or break you." If he's a success in Bad Boy, he'll continue to work hard in other pictures. If it flops, he knows he'll make a living somehow.

"I've gotten an awful lot of million-dollar advice," he says, "but aside from Wanda, only three people have given me any practical help—Terry Hunt, who lent me eating money when I was broke; Spec McClure, the writer, who took time out from his own work to help me with the continuity of my book; and Paul Short, who gave me the chance to play Bad Boy when no major studio would gamble on me. I'll be glad if the picture is a success, but I won't stand on my head with glee."

Only one thing can make him quiver with excitement—and that is the sight of Wanda. Not that he will admit even that much. "Only actors get emotional," he says dryly. He does not consider himself an actor.

Actually, underneath the surface, one can sense a great flow of emotion, but it is under control. Through Wanda's lovely eyes, he may rediscover excitement and importance in little things. He may even become sentimental about the very things which awaken so little response in him today.

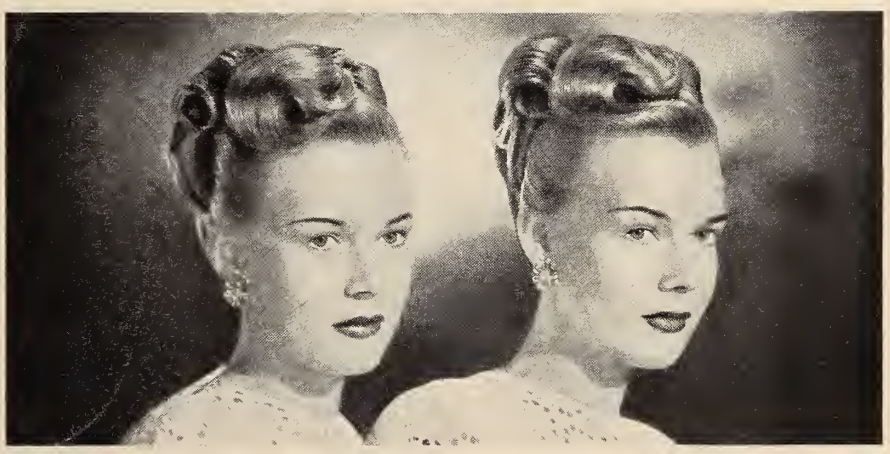
THE END

BIG NEWS! NEXT MONTH'S MODERN SCREEN IS THAT SPECIAL SHIRLEY TEMPLE ISSUE!

TONI TWINS prove magic of SOFT-WATER Shampooing

LATHER . . .

WAS LILA'S PROBLEM!



"This soap shampoo just won't give me enough lather," says Lila Wigren. "Our hard water sees to that!" And a lack of lather isn't the only problem, Lila. Even the finest soap shampoos leave hair with dulling film, that just won't rinse away. So the natural sparkle of your hair is concealed. Looks drab...lifeless. It's hard to manage, too.

BUT ELLA

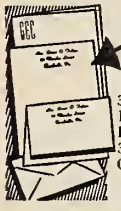
GOT HEAPS OF IT!

"Look at the lather I get," says twin Ella. "Imagine! Toni Creme Shampoo gives me Soft-Water Shampooing even in hard water!" And Ella—your hair shows a difference, too. Toni's thorough cleansing action leaves it glowing with lovely, morning-dew freshness. Its natural beauty is revealed . . . those wonderfully soft, smooth curls fairly sparkle.

NOW IT'S TONI CREME SHAMPOO FOR TWO!

They've seen the proof! And the lovely Wigren twins are convinced that no soap or soap shampoo can match the advantages of Toni Creme Shampoo. For it gives you Soft-Water Shampooing even in hardest water. Leaves your hair gloriously smooth and soft, easy-to-manage. Helps your permanent "take" better. Those oceans of creamy-thick lather rinse away dirt and dandruff instantly. Your hair sparkles with lovely natural highlights. Try Soft-Water Shampooing today. Get the jar or tube of Toni Creme Shampoo. It's new!

Enriched with Lanolin



The latest fashion — these

These are two blocks of sterling silver inlaid at back of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks of Holmes and Edwards silverplate. They make it finer, different... keep it lovelier longer. Fifty-two piece service for eight $68.50 with chest, also 76-piece service for twelve at $99.95. (No Federal Tax.) All patterns made in the U. S. A.

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Division, Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

SELL 50 for $1.00 NAME IMPRINTED STATIONERY

FREE SAMPLES

31 new greeting card boxes. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Write today for FREE Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery samples, FREE 32-page catalog and feature All Occasion Samples ON APPROVAL. Special Offers. Start at once.

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 38, Mass.

PAIN

of headache, neuritis and neuralgia

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION

GLORIA LAMPERT
director

BEV OTT
associate

News: We know it's long past new year's day, but the Lizabeth Scott club has come up with some fine resolutions, and other clubs might take notice. They offer 30 page journals, on time, and a money back guarantee if you're not pleased . . . The Buddy Rich and Dinah Shore clubs are sending out calls for COOPERATIVE members. How about some of you go-getters signing up? There's plenty of work to do in the writing and drawing end of journal production . . . Joan Caulfield club sends out a real news-filled bulletin in addition to its regular journal. It gives the clubbers news on current movies and fan magazine articles on their favorites . . . The Jimmy Wakely club has undergone a prexy change and the new prexy is Bea Terry, Box 273, Greenville, Texas . . . Club Friendship dedicated to making life a little brighter for shut-ins, is sending its monthly CARE packages to needy European families . . . Happy Birthday to the Alice Frost fan club. This club has recently celebrated its first anniversary with a lovely journal. Alice is the radio actress in the Mr. and Mrs. North Series . . . Darlene Foreman has taken over Eddy Hardin's club for Frank Sinatra while Eddy makes a trip to Hollywood.

We'd like to correct an error previously appearing in the FANS. The Movie Fan Diary which is being offered by Dorothy Fenger can be gotten by writing to her at 1402 Superior Ave., Sheboygan, Wisc. Many of you may have written to Michigan and not received a reply . . . The Glenn Vernon club is offering half-price memberships to the first five people from each state who write Betty Komenda, 19 Enjay Avenue, Catonsville, Maryland . . . One of the nicer journals we've seen recently was sent by the Radio Stars club. Its prexied by Virginia Haywood and features a variety of radio and television people in each issue . . . Nelson Eddy Music club will have its annual convention in New York in April. Convention is only open to members, so now's your chance to join . . . N. Y. members of the Burt Lancaster fan club recently met their honorary and thought he was really swell . . .

Any of you hep cats want to join a really hep club? We've got a new one for the Page Cavanaugh Trio and here's a swell chance to join and get in on the ground floor . . . Speaking of Mimeograph Services, and if you're a clubber or a club prexy, chances are that you were, we have a whole slew of people who do nice work at reasonable prices. They're all tried and true and not fly-by-night outfits that are out to make money. Pick one in your own area and we're sure you'll be satisfied. In the Pennsylvania area, we have the Wallachs who not only print journals, but have an information bureau. There's Clover Hutchings in Florida who puts out the Autry and Crosby journals and has recently set up a new service for MSFCA clubs. If you are a new club and don't know how to budget your money in order to get out journals, snaps and incidentals, Clover's your girl. On the West Coast, Loretta Verbin, once prexy of the Jack Carson club, has a mimeo service which is new and should do nice work. There's Nelda Clough in Indiana and Virginia Haywood in Minnesota. We'll be happy to send you their complete addresses in exchange for a self-addressed envelope . . . Taking a lesson from the UN, the MSFCA has decided to start its own Board of Advisers. This board is composed of prexies our Trophy winning clubs and their chief function will be to settle your problems. We realize that nobody knows as much about fan clubs as an honest-to-goodness fan, and that's what these prexies are. Each prexy will serve 12 months and then be replaced by new Trophy winners. You'll probably agree that this is a natural outgrowth of our Trouble Clinic because we think the impartial judgment of the prexies will be better appreciated. So if you as an individual clubber have a problem or complaint about any club, let us know and we'll turn it over to our Board. If your club has any problem which can't be solved (even after straining) let us know and we'll try to help. The decision of the board remains final, and its decisions will be published, whenever necessary.

New Prizes: You lucky fans who are winners in the THIS IS MY BEST CONTEST have another surprise in store for you. Each of you is the winner of a wonderful ENGER-KRESS billfold. Its name is Candlelight and they come in wonderful shades of pink, yellow, green, blue, and red. They're genuine leather and carry coins, snaps, and passes, as well as folding money. So, come on, all you would-be writers. Now's your chance to win some points for your club as well as a swell prize for yourself. HELENA RUBINSTEIN's FOUR-CAST lipstick sets are almost all gone, and we know you who have won them are so pleased. Remember, each set is made for your particular hair coloring and costume. In addition, we have wonderful TANGEE TRIP KITS just jam-packed with their super cosmetics in a handy carrying case. For boys and runner-ups, we have subscriptions to all Dell mags, as well as collections of Dell mysteries. This is only the beginning!!

9th semi-annual TROPHY CUP CONTEST

This Is My Best: (100 points) "Fairy Tale for June," Marie Damiano, June Allyson journal. "As Old As You Feel," Jeane Holder, Warren Douglas journal. "Searching," Donna Dawson, Nina Foch journal. "Afraid of Music," Kathy Bellows, James Melton journal. "What Is An American?" Lenore Becker, Lon McCallister journal. "How The Cat Became Domesticated," Patrick Cordier, Jane Wyman journal. Best Journals: (500 points) League 1, Jane Wyman journal. League 2, Joan Crawford journal. League 3, James Melton journal. Best Editors: (250 points) League 1, Margaret and Joy Nicholin, Nelson Eddy International Club. League 2, Ruth Schweitzer, Allan Jones journal. League 3, Dwayne Armstead, Robert Preston journal. Best Artist: (150 points) Robert Breslin, Ella Raines journal. Best Covers: (250 points) League 1, none qualified. League 2, Joan Crawford journal. League 3, Robert Preston journal. Best Correspondents: (50 points) League 1, none qualified. League 2, Red Jones, Jimmy Lloyd Club. League 3, Ginger Bagnall, Jack Berch Club. Most Worthwhile Activities: (250 points) League 1, none qualified. League 2, (tied) Jeanette MacDonald Club (Fund for crippled children in U. S.) Farley Granger (food and clothing parcels to England, Belgium, Holland). League 3, (tied) Dick Contino Club (Rosenthal) (collected toys for underprivileged children). Club Friendship (CARE box for Polish family). Membership Increases: (100 points) League 1, none qualified. League 2, Mel Torme Club. League 3, June Allyson Club. Candid Camera Winners: (100 points for first prize, 50 points for others) First Prize, Dorothy Abramovich, Bingites. Don DeArmond, Ron Randall C. Cathy Pirofalo, Dick Contino C. Rita Lo Rossa, Danny Scholl C. Kaye Criss, Jack Smith C. Maude Summerfield, Frank Sinatra C.

END OF THE BEGINNING

(Continued from page 63)

a fascinating sports carnival going on.

Then, back in Hollywood, what should happen but that Jubilee, the wild stallion they had for Sand's action scenes, got mixed up with the docile horse-double who worked in closeups—so when Mark walked up to him, the critter took a chunk right out of his shoulder!

As Mark danced around the set in pain, he was swearing and laughing at the same time. "Bitten by a horse!" he yelped. "It could happen only to me!"

But the very fact that moody Mark Stevens can survey such hotfoots of fortune today with a sense of humor is one of the many up-to-date indications that he's finally come into his own and is on his way. The furrows of his freckled brow are gone and you can see assurance, confidence and the capacity to have some fun out of his success, sticking out all over him. Physically, he's almost on the chubby side, he weighs 167, a pick-up of 18 pounds for his tall frame. But it looks well on him, despite what the studio comptroller thinks.

This financial watchdog was going over his bills one day while Mark was away on that location trip. When he came to one particular bill he blinked, studied it carefully, and then called Mark's agent. "Say," he inquired, "has Mark Stevens got his kid with him up there in Colorado?"

"Do two-year-old babies go on Rocky Mountain location trips?" the agent came back.

"Well," argued the efficiency expert, "what's a grown man doing with this milk bill for 35 bucks?"

his aching back . . .

It's taken more than milk to restore Mark Stevens' health, to iron out the misery in his aching back and banish the dark depressions which used to mire his spirits in the old frustration blues. When I first saw Mark three years ago, you could tell at a glance he was expecting his Hollywood good luck to blow up in his face.

Once we were talking about New York City and he said he'd spent some time there—"around Central Park."

"Central Park West, East, or South?" I asked. "There're some wonderful hotels and apartments located around the Park."

"In the middle," he said drily. "I slept on a bench."

Certainly Mark's screen start was not designed to bring him peace and soothe his restless nature. On the contrary, after he'd banged his stubborn head against the old Hollywood brush-off, his good luck, when it finally came, seemed only to tease and torment him. He finished The Dark Corner on a physical dare, ignoring the stabbing pain in his back from an old spine injury that was infected and eating his nerves to pieces. The minute the picture was over they wheeled him to a hospital, sliced him open, and scraped his spine. For a year he did nothing more in Hollywood except watch the parts they had programmed for him go to other and luckier guys. He had two more painful, risky operations and health kick-ups of all sorts. He couldn't tell you which was more agonizing—the surgery or the mental torture of seeing the breaks he'd battled for go glimmering—or so he thought.

Life wasn't much fun then for Mark; he was like a racehorse in hobbles, ready to gallop off in all directions the minute he could bust loose. Eventually he did cut loose, but Mark discovered that running off in all directions wasn't much fun

WE WILL SEND YOU ANY ITEM YOU CHOOSE FOR APPROVAL UNDER OUR MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Simply indicate your selection on the coupon below and forward it with $1 and a brief note giving your age, occupation, and a few other facts about yourself. We will open an account for you and send your selection to you subject to your examination. If completely satisfied, pay the Expressman the required Down Payment and the balance in easy monthly payments. Otherwise, return your selection and your $1 will be refunded.

SEND FOR FREE CATALOG

A301/C112 87.50

3 Diamond Engagement Ring, matching 5 Diamond Wedding Band. 14K yellow or 18K white Gold. Send $1, pay 7.75 after examination, 8.75 a month.

A408/C331 $125

7 Diamond Engagement Ring, matching 8 Diamond Wedding Band. 14K yellow or 18K white Gold. Send $1, pay 11.50 after examination, 12.50 a month.

D404 $75

Man's Twin Ring with 2 Diamonds, pear-shaped simulated Ruby. 14K yellow Gold. Send $1, pay 6.50 after examination, 7.50 a month.

1 CARAT ZIRCON
2 Side Diamonds

F426 19.95

Genuine 1 Carat white Zircon, 2 side Diamonds. 14K yellow Gold. Send $1, pay $1 after examination, $5 a month.

SEND $1 WITH COUPON — PAY BALANCE OF DOWN PAYMENT AFTER EXAMINATION

L. W. Sweet, 25 West 14th St. (Dept. D4)
New York 11, N. Y.
Enclosed find $1 deposit. Send me No._____
Price $_____ After examination, I agree to pay $_____ and required balance monthly thereafter until full price is paid, otherwise I'll return selection and you will refund my dollar.
NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____STATE_____

New York's Largest Mail Order Jewelers
Established 1878

L. W. Sweet

MAIL ORDER DIVISION FINLAY STRAUS, INC.
25 W. 14th St., NEW YORK 11, N. Y. Dept. D4

SHAMPOO
without water

NEW DRY WAY TAKES ONLY 10 minutes

WAVE STAYS IN! You'll thrill to the glorious way Minipoo restores beautiful sheen—without disturbing your wave.

QUICK AND EASY! No water, no soap, no drying. With its simple mitt applicator, fragrant Minipoo removes excess oil, dirt and hair odors in just 10 minutes. Leaves your hair shining clean and fresh!

IDEAL DURING COLDS!

When Ann catches cold, safe, dry, Minipoo keeps her hair clean.

Sis' sudden date finds her ready with shining hair, thanks to handy Minipoo!

Minipoo

THE QUICK DRY SHAMPOO

30 Shampoos and handy Mitt in each package

FREE . . PERFUME SAMPLE

FROM CALIFORNIA . . . Advertising Offer. WE MAIL . . . "FLOWERS OF GOLO" (Reg. $1.00 Size) Glamorous rare fragrance. Very new—exciting. A scent you'll love. Send only 10c for postage & packing.
GLAMORINE OF CALIF., 140 Borel Ave., Dept. 3, San Mateo, Calif.

face "Broken Out?"

Do as many do for skin improvement—use Resinol Soap for daily cleansing you'll enjoy—then, medicated Resinol to soothe pimply irritation, and thus quicken healing.

RESINOL OINTMENT AND SOAP

FREE PHOTO

DIRECT FROM HOLLYWOOD

LARGE SIZE OF YOUR FAVORITE
MOVIE STAR

INTRODUCTORY OFFER! You will also receive FREE handsome catalogue containing names of all the stars, including various pictures and poses. Send name of your FAVORITE STAR and 15¢ to cover handling and mailing.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box A, Dept. M-39, Hollywood 28, Calif.

either. He did some things he was sorry for.

But he made up for them and that was that. Things are different now. And the reason is no secret.

I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now solidified his success, and his hit in Street With No Name has made Mark Stevens the hottest new male star on the 20th Century-Fox lot. If his performance in The Snake Pit gets the critical acclaim the studio expects, then Mark will no longer feel the pressure he's been under to prove that he wasn't necessarily a false-alarm actor, a morning glory and a one-picture rave. And he's as steamed up, himself, about his work in Sand. All in all, it looks as if Mark Stevens could relax now for the first time since he left Montreal and could start enjoying himself for a change.

For one thing, Mark and Annelle are having some family life at long last. It's really a rare occasion when the Stevenses are seen outside of their little English house out on Toluca Lake. It isn't their Mister Blandings dream deal by a long shot (they, too, have some of those plans hidden away for lower building costs), but it's much cosier a set-up than the hectic housing they've had since they hit Hollywood.

Mark and Annelle's honeymoon house, for instance, was a tiny, cold and cramped apartment up over a guest-house garage across from Pickfair. Mark came home there from his first critical operation while Annelle was expecting the stork and feeling miserable most of the time. It was the best they could do, what with post-war apartments rare as hen's teeth. After that, they rented a Bel-Air place which didn't fit their family, and squabbles with the landlord went with the lease. That was where Mark Richard, their baby boy, came home from the hospital with all the disturbing family adjustments a baby brings; it was where Mark had another flare-up with his aching back—and with his mixed-up emotions, too.

But now at Toluca Lake, for the first time since their marriage, Mark and Annelle have a place that's designed for living. "In fact," chuckles Mark, looking across the Lakeside golf course which runs along the front, "the only worry I have here is that some day Bing Crosby will slice his drive and smash the front window."

marco dampens all . . .

I don't think, however, even such a catastrophe as that would make hot-tempered Mark Stevens do much more than grin, in the new mellow mood he's in. He stood the test the other day when little Mark Richard messed things up pretty thoroughly. Mark was at home making a picture sitting—which he hates—and there were all sorts of people fussing around, posing him here and there and dressing up this and that. It took hours and Mark's patience was wearing thin when the deed was at last done to everyone's satisfaction. At that point, "Marco" or "Marcola," as Mark is likely to call Mark Richard at any time, picked up the garden hose, turned the tap and let fly. Before anyone could stop him he'd ruined the picture plates, and so damped down everybody in on the project that repairs had to be made and the whole tedious business done over again.

Did Mark turn the atmosphere blue? He did not. He smiled indulgently and said, "Well, that's one wetting a diaper won't fix!"

Mark's pretty crazy about that kid of his, now that he's grown into a little human being with a personality all his own and now that Mark has had a chance to get acquainted. Mark Richard looks like his mama in the eyes, but the rest of his fast-shaping little map is a carbon copy of Mark's—same ginger hair, straight nose and stubborn chin. Already, too, like his dad, he's always asking for trouble—trying to ride every big dog in the neighborhood when he gets out of the backyard pokey each afternoon for a stroll with Miss Ray, his English nurse. Luckily, the local bowsers—consisting of a boxer, a police dog, a collie and Mark's French poodle, Pepi (son of Cornel Wilde's pooch, Punch)—are gentle. They let him maul them around to his heart's content. Like Mark (says Mark), actors bore Marco. When Mark took him on the set of Sand not long ago, the kid yawned and promptly drifted off to dreamland! But there isn't much question about the fun Mark Stevens is getting out of his boy.

While Mark was working in Street With No Name in Washington, D. C., last year, he and Annelle had a second honeymoon in the capital. And when he went on that location trip in the Rockies last summer, Annelle went along too. Mark and Annelle Stevens' reconciliation after they'd been on the brink of divorce a few months before, has been considerably strengthened and sealed by those two picture-making second honeymoons they had in Washington and Colorado. Doing D. C. together, with Mark happily busy, and Annelle doing what a Texas girl always likes best, seeing sights, they found just the right spot to banish the memory of those mixed-up disagreement days out of their minds. But it was up in the mountains that they really found again the old happy boy-and-girl fun they'd known before they turned bride and groom, before Mark's aches and pains and carcass carvings and career trouble started turning the sky black, before the cares of parenthood sobered them both.

In the turquoise setting of the famous Four Corners region at the corners of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and Utah from play to film

The trouble with screen writers is they do things the hard way. Following, for instance, is the easy way to make a film out of a play. You simply take the word PLAY, and, changing one letter at a time, form a new word each time according to the definitions until you reach the word FILM. Turn to page 112 when you've finished.

P L A Y

To kill— — — —
A lath— — — —
A narrow opening— — — — smoke dust— — — —
kind— — — — a stronghold— — — —
a golf warning— — — — a conflagration— — — — solid— — — —

F I L M

—than which there's nothing more beautiful—it was pretty hard to miss having a wonderful time no matter what happened.

There were dozens of thrilling excursions for Mark and Annelle to take in the scenic Four Corners wonderland on off days—to Silverton, the old ghost mining-town where $110,000,000 worth of gold ore poured out of the now-abandoned mine shafts in the 1870's and where the expensive mahogany bar still stands, riddled with bullet holes. "Just like a Western set at the studio," mused Mark.

Once you get in the groove and start looking on the upside of life, it's funny how many things you can find to do and have fun with. Mark was always active as a jumping jack and twice as ambitious before bum health and black cats ganged up on him. Now he's started boxing again to tone up his neglected muscles. And he even took a fling at polo a while back, progressing to a three-pony string and a fair stick-and-ball game—until his doc heard about it and warned, "Whoa, Mark—you know you're just asking for another operation on that spine if you keep up this saddle stuff!" So Mark quit, because he has too many other bright projects he'd hate to watch go glimmering.

great expectations . . .

For one thing, Mark wants to be right and ready for his next screen job, Quicksand, which he'll make in Hollywood for J. Arthur Rank, the British film tycoon. For another, he has a script of his own up his sleeve that he's dying to produce in France, in both French and English. Then Mark's lined up next fall to make a picture for his boss, Darryl Zanuck, a Royal Canadian Mountie epic he's dreamed about doing for years, up in his home country, Canada.

But Mark's really not satisfied with being just a star now that he again feels up to his old ambitions. Fact is, he'll shock you out of your socks by saying right out, "Most actors are phonies and I'll be one too if I keep on acting. Someday I want to produce."

These days it's strictly a case of Stevens Unlimited. There's nothing he considers impossible or even improbable after he gets wound up like a dollar watch. In fact, when Mark gets that way he just naturally has to do something or he bites himself, like a scorpion, and suffers accordingly. "When I'm loafing," Mark admits readily, "I go crazy. I call my agent and gripe. I snap at Marco. I pester my secretary and pick on my wife. I tell people off, speak out of turn and generally make an obnoxious ass of myself." So you can't blame him for soaring off on energetic enterprises. It's sort of in self-defense.

Yes, he's an unpredictable character, this mercurial Mark Stevens guy—either up in the clouds, when the going's right, or six fathoms below sea level when it's not. But maybe a rapid emotional range is what makes a mere actor an important star—as Mark Stevens is today. The truth is, Mark's got a full head of steam up all the time and some simply has to leak out now and then to plummet him down deep or rocket him up high. Right now, though, Mark looks to be in for a steady, heady ride through the Hollywood stratosphere—on a long, long overdue raincheck.

But whether that will make Mark Stevens permanently, purringly happy or not is another kettle of fish. He knows he's blessed—or maybe cursed—with what the critics call a "divine discontent." Or as Mark himself puts it, with a crooked grin: "Right now I'm looking over a four-leaf clover. But frankly, I wouldn't be at all surprised if it handed me hay fever."

THE END

DON'T FAIL YOUR DAUGHTER... YOU MUST TELL HER THESE Intimate Facts of Life!

And here's up-to-date information you and she can trust . . .

Every daughter has a right to know these intimate physical facts before she marries. You must inform her how important vaginal douching two or three times a week often is to feminine cleanliness, her health, marriage happiness—to combat odor and always after menstrual periods.

And you should make her realize no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested for the douche is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues as modern ZONITE!

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

Be sure to caution your daughter about weak products for the douche. Pity the girl who, through ignorant advice of friends, uses such 'kitchen makeshifts' as vinegar, salt or soda. These never can assure the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

On the other hand you must warn your daughter about dangerous products—overstrong solutions of which may burn, harden or scar delicate tissue lining, and in time even impair functional activity of the mucous glands.

Remember, while ZONITE is powerfully germicidal, it's non-poisonous, non-irritating and ABSOLUTELY SAFE to delicate tissue lining. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury.

Truly A Modern Miracle

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Leaves you feeling so sweet and clean. Helps guard against infection. ZONITE kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure ZONITE DOES KILL every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. You can buy ZONITE at any drug counter.

Zonite FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

FREE! NEW!

For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published—mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MR-39, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Avoid underarm irritation...

...use

YODORA

the deodorant that is

ACTUALLY SOOTHING

Looks bad, feels bad, when underarm skin gets red and irritated. That's why more women every day turn to Yodora, the soothingest cream deodorant. Yodora stops perspiration odor quickly, safely...because it is made with a face cream base, with no harsh acid salts to cause irritation. Yodora helps soften your skin, just as face cream. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your favorite photo

NEW SILK FINISH • GOLD TOOLED FRAME

Just to get acquainted, we will make you a FREE 5x7 enlargement of any picture or negative and mount it in a handsome gold tooled frame. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes, and clothing for information on having this enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil.

SEND NO MONEY. Send your most cherished photo or negative now, accept your beautifully framed enlargement when it arrives, and pay postman only 19c for frame plus small handling and mailing charge. If you are not completely satisfied, return the enlargement within 10 days and your money will be refunded. But you may keep the handsome frame as a gift for promptness. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. M-85, Hollywood 38, Cal.

(Continued from page 41)

taken lightly (especially by Clark himself when asked about it). Any suggestion that love has so much as given him temporary pause raises a quick laugh. And to imply that he could possibly be carrying a torch for anyone—ridiculous!

Yet, there are certain facts to this parting that can't be just poofed away, and when these are added up, the pointer on the scale moves exactly in that direction!

First of all, of course, you have to consider Virginia: tall, blonde, beautiful, and talented enough so that her picture career may still blossom into top stardom. When you look at her, it's easy to understand why so many people in their circle believe that Clark was devoted to her.

not one of those things . . .

How devoted? Well, this much can be said: When that which is known about the two, and that which is indicated by the nature of the bond between them, is pieced together, it makes up into a definite romantic pattern—not just "another Gable thing."

The attachment they had for each other was different in that it was not displayed much in public. While it is true that their names were frequently mentioned in the news, actually they were never out together more than three or four times since the day they first met when he, still an Army Air Force major, ran into her at Jill Winkler's home and kissed her—though they had known each other but casually up to then. It just so happened that right from the start their interest in each other revolved closer to their homes and the home kind of living, and bloomed stronger that way.

Instead of going out together, they visited each other. They talked, they took Sunday rides, they helped fix up each other's houses; they seemed to enjoy each other in this sort of "togetherness." Sometimes you would see Clark's Cadillac convertible pulled up outside the fence of the Van Nuys airport of a sunny afternoon, and the two would sit contentedly watching the take-offs and landings. Maybe Virginia wasn't interested in planes, as Clark undoubtedly is—but it was enough to be near him.

Afterward, they would drop in anywhere for a bite to eat—maybe a diner, or just a hamburger joint for a bowl of chili and a glass of buttermilk. It wouldn't make any difference, just so it wasn't where you had to eat Chinese food—Clark's pet hate.

And like as not the day would be topped off by an hour or two at a golf driving-range, with Clark hitting towering drives (with a tendency to fade off) and remarking philosophically, when they went higher than further, "That'll bring rain!" And he'd give Virginia pointers on the game.

Even more—for the full five years they never missed dining with each other on any high holiday; never a Thanksgiving or Christmas in that period without "Paw" and "Ginny" (yes, their names for each other!) at Clark's dinner table together. Clark would carve. He would give Virginia the dinner bell to ring for the next course. "Here, you be the hostess," he would say happily.

These sessions, and others before his fireside as he oiled his guns or talked of his boyhood, were warm scenes—hardly to be tossed aside as the background of just a casual affair, as Hollywood well knows.

It is admittedly difficult to understand how Clark could pitch himself into the intimacy of this phase of his life entirely oblivious, as always, to the fact that one half of the world was speculating on the chances of Anita Colby or Iris Bynum becoming his wife, while the other half favored Dolly O'Brien or "Slim" Hawks. Maybe that's just Clark Gable. Was Virginia oblivious? Nobody ever knew . . . except for one thing she was once heard to say in reply to a friend's comment.

Said the friend: "You're always with him, even while all that talk is going on about the others! He does go out with the others—but he always comes back to you. Why, it's like the story of . . . of . . ."

"Like the story of Back Street?" prompted Virginia, when her friend had hesitated as if loath to come out with it.

"Yes!" came the confirmation. But Virginia had nothing more to add. It was just as if she wanted to indicate that she had been thinking about it.

Clark Gable kissed Virginia Grey in 1943, but he first saw her in 1936 when she was hardly started on her film career. It was the day after Jean Harlow died and Virginia Grey was being considered by MGM heads to play Jean's part in Saratoga Trunk, which was only three-quarters completed. It was Clark who said, "Test her," when the producers were undecided about Virginia. And it was Clark who made the tests with her and insured their success—even though, at the last moment it was decided to release the picture as originally made, with Harlow, plus certain added scenes using a double to round out the story.

from that day on . . .

From that day on, Virginia and Clark used to see each other around the studio—but only in passing. Yet when Clark made Test Pilot and Idiot's Delight, Virginia got good parts in them and, as she admitted to friends, she knew it was he who had recommended her. They weren't friends—they wouldn't see each other for months sometimes, and then only by chance—but it was as if he had a continuing interest in the girl he had originally given a professional boost.

This slight contact between them was broken when Virginia left MGM for a contract at Universal and Clark joined the Air Force and was assigned to filming bombing operations over Germany. But their paths were to come together again. The date set by fate for this was December 21, 1943—a rainy, pre-Christmas afternoon. On that day Virginia, who had just finished decorating her Christmas tree, got a call from Jill Winkler, who asked her to drop over. Jill is the widow of Otto Winkler, Clark's publicity man and close friend who was killed in the same airplane crash that took Carole Lombard's life.

When she got to Jill's house, she learned that Clark had come back from Europe just the day before to cut and edit his bombing films, and that he was on his way over to see Jill. A little while later the bell rang and Clark entered, dripping wet. Jill was barely starting to present the two to each other when Clark took action to make this unnecessary. He cried out recognition in high glee, strode over and took her in his arms.

Inasmuch as he had never exhibited that kind of warmth to her before, maybe Virginia should have entered a protest right then and there. But she didn't. Maybe she was just nonplussed by the suddenness of it. Or—well, it was wartime, Clark was in uniform, and wasn't it a thing between girls those days that getting into the Army and Navy seemed to be having an unusual effect on fellows, and one had to be tolerant with them? One thing is definitely known. Virginia considered Clark's demonstrative greeting as a flash of the moment, soon to be forgotten.

She was wrong.

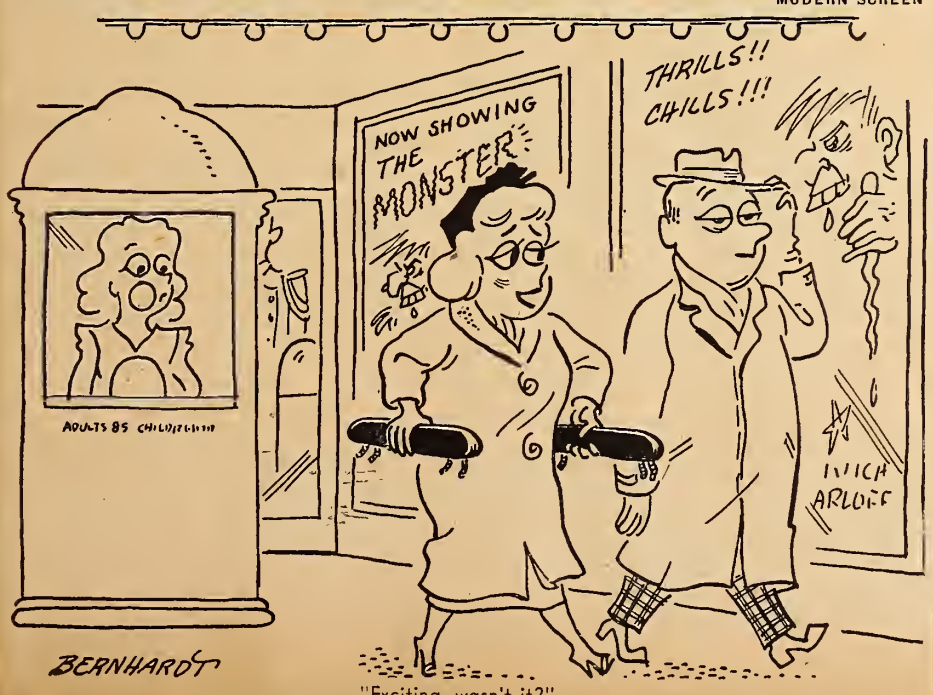
Clark's enthusiasm for her didn't abate a bit. Before he left he had won from her an acceptance to have dinner with him at his place the next night. She accepted, went and had a wonderful time. It was not only fun, not only an event to be commemorated by a whopping bottle of Chanel No. 5 which he insisted she take as a souvenir of the occasion, but the first of many other similar dinners and many other happy days together.

She got to know a lot about Clark. She saw, and is quoted as reporting, that while the places of the fashionable had an attraction for him, he found them too cobwebby underfoot for permanent comfort. He was a man who had never denied his simple background nor accounted for his success by any other words than, "How lucky can you be?"

He told Virginia about his boyhood, when he loved to go ice-skating and return home to have his mother stick his half-frozen feet into a tub of hot water and feed him gingerbread. This story, she decided later, was a sort of alibi for the frequent presence on his dinner table of his favorite dessert—gingerbread.

Clark's house stands on a 15-acre tract of land. After the death of Carole he talked often of selling it. But the idea seemed to fade after he met Virginia. She admitted quite freely to her friends that she had talked against it; that she had told Clark he was a homesteader at heart and would find himself missing the place the moment it was no longer his. And Clark must have listened because he would quote her when his friends asked if he were going to dispose of the house. "Ginny thinks I ought to keep it," he would reply simply.

Watching them, hearing of their activities, their friends decided they were both homesteaders. Clark has a fence around his house and corral. Virginia helped him whitewash it—a job that took five days. His driveway is lined with oleander bushes. Virginia helped select and plant them. For that matter, when she bought piping to lay under her lawn for a watering system, it was Clark's turn to help her and he carted every foot of the pipe to his place so he could cut and thread the ends to fit. He's handy that way.



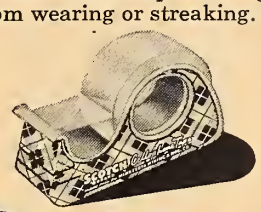
It was all fun. They were fun. Being together was fun. That's why those who were close enough to them to see this, find it difficult to think of them permanently apart now. It isn't that they suspect Clark's heart is breaking but that they know he loved being with Virginia, loved being able to be himself when he was with her—which is perhaps more important for him.

Some of his friends catch themselves watching him for an indication of how he feels about the split-up. They know that a happy Clark shows the world how it is going with him—he carries his disposition on his sleeve, if not his heart. In a figurative way, he loves to take off his shoes, curl up his feet and expand into amusing talk if he is happy. If he is unhappy, he makes this plain too. He may be with the most beautiful girl in the world but the tell-tale actions mean the same thing. He sits up severely straight, he tightens and jerks at his necktie, he clock-watches and, if he talks at all, he bites his words until they come out raw and encourage no answers.

But it is Virginia and her reasons for seemingly being able to take the break-up in calm stride (if she didn't actually precipitate it, as some hold), that intrigues most of their friends. Did anything new in their relationship form the basis for the change in her attitude which formerly had seen her ready to run to him whenever and however he beckoned? Had she once loved him so much that it had made no difference who else he was seen with—and now, is this love gone?

Or is it the reverse? Did this love grow until it could no longer share him, could no longer be all of her life and just a part of his—and moved her, in desperation, to finish it?

THE END



"Exciting, wasn't it?"

Tape it easy!

A strip of Cellophane Tape along the back of your galoshes will keep stockings from wearing or streaking.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SCOTCH BRAND
Cellophane Tape
TRANSPARENT AS GLASS
Buy It At Your Favorite Store

Tips on everything from gift wrapping to mending picture frames in our new booklet "Tape It Easy!" Send for your free copy today to Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 945 Fauquier Ave., St. Paul 6, Minn.

©1949 3M CO.

EARN EXTRA MONEY! FULL, SPARE TIME!
Make many EXTRA DOLLARS with our new, sell-on-sight Plastic Line! Tablecloths, Aprons; Combination Shopping Bags; many other lovely, fast-selling items, novelties. Postal brings free details. Write today. HURRY!
ROYALTY SALES CO., Box 748, Passaic 2, N. J.

NOW—HOME COSMETIC
For GRAY HAIR!

Give your gray hair natural-looking color again, yourself, in the privacy of your own home. Mary T. Goldman's, wonderful clear liquid cosmetic, stops gray hair worries for thousands! So easy! Simply comb Mary T. Goldman's through hair. Won't bother wave, nor spoil hair texture. Guaranteed to give gray hair the youthful-looking shade you want or your money back. Get Mary T. Goldman's today at your drug or department store. Accept no substitute!

FREE TRIAL: Send coupon below for free trial kit.

MARY T. GOLDMAN CO.
W-12 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul 2, Minn.
Send FREE sample. (Check color desired.)
☐ Black ☐ Dark Brown
☐ Light Brown ☐ Medium Brown
☐ Blonde ☐ Auburn
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

Relieve Constipation Pleasantly!

No NEED to take a harsh, bad-tasting laxative. Get relief pleasantly with Ex-Lax – the dependable laxative many doctors use in their practice.

Ex-Lax tastes wonderful – like delicious chocolate. It works gently and comfortably. Ex-Lax is easy on the system and it brings thorough relief.

Ex-Lax is still only 10¢. There is no better laxative at any price.

Got a COLD?

If you need a laxative, don't add to your troubles by taking one that is harsh. Take easy-acting Ex-Lax. Ex-Lax gets thorough results gently.

When Nature 'forgets'... remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

THE STRANGE LOVES OF HEDY LAMARR

(Continued from page 60)

And the strange thing is, there's been nothing more than that to many of Hedy's so-called "flings." The public hears—sometimes from Hedy, sometimes from others—that certain men are crazed with yearning for her—indeed, they wish to marry her. Then, sadly enough, nothing develops.

In the realm of stern reality, Hedy has had three unfortunate marriages—to Fritz Mandl, when she was only a young, inexperienced girl of 17; to Gene Markey, with whom she actually had little in common; and to John Loder, with whom, for a time, she seemed to have found happiness—until fundamental issues arising in part from the inequalities of their careers put the marriage on the rocks. And aside from her ill-fated matrimonial ventures, she has had several affairs of the heart that were by no means mere newspaper rumors. Somehow, these too have all ended on an unhappy note.

Why has this fabulous woman been unable to find the right man to love—the man who can give her the deep, stable devotion she so clearly needs in her life? Why does Hedy Lamarr, one of the most hauntingly beautiful women that ever walked the earth—wealthy, famous, intelligent, admired and envied all over the world—why does a woman of such legendary attractiveness have so little success in her most vital relationships? That very question, in the various forms it takes, is a mystery that has titillated Hollywood for years. The incident with the San Franciscan simply added new fuel to the old fires of curiosity.

to please the public . . .

Like any major star, Hedy has been to a great extent a victim of that curiosity. It goes without saying that the public has an insatiable appetite for fresh-from-the-oven tidbits concerning the private lives of celebrities; and the newspapers, in supplying this demand, are under a natural pressure to make the most of such items as may come along. Thus, the strange and over-blown accounts of Hedy's affairs are, much more often than not, no fault of hers.

It sometimes has happened, however, that fanciful reports about her have been given their initial impetus by Hedy herself. She's a very candid, honest person. She says what she believes to be true. If her belief in the validity of a "romance" leads her occasionally to make unguarded statements that later on appear to have been exaggerated, you really can't hold it against her. Every one of us is controlled, far more than we imagine, by the workings of our subconscious. And Hedy, with a deep and understandable need for the devotion of the man who could fulfill her life, seems sometimes impelled to mistake her own wishful thinking for reality.

Recently, George Sanders was reported to be wildly avid for Hedy. Soon afterward, I watched them do a scene together for Samson and Delilah—in which Hedy, as the champion siren of all time, made love to George. When the panting scene was over, he calmly walked away from her without a word. I was amazed—for Hedy herself had told me that George had even planned where they'd spend their honeymoon—in New York and Europe.

A little later I heard a different version of the Lamarr-Sanders relationship from the fascinating Zsa Zsa Gabor. Of course, Zsa Zsa might have been faintly prejudiced—she was engaged to marry George at the time!

"They had two dinner dates," she said. "That's all there was to it. In fact, he left Hedy in Hollywood to come to me in New York, without even saying goodbye to her."

Then there was the strange case of Billy Wilder, the very eligible and top-flight director. I saw him with Hedy at a big movie première. Billy was being very attentive and Hedy was beaming—obviously loving the attention. For weeks afterward, the columns were filled with rumors of impending wedding bells.

"I hear you and Hedy are getting married," I said to Billy when I encountered him at Romanoff's.

"Don't be ridiculous," he smiled. "I've had one date with her."

As I've already indicated, Hedy can't be held responsible for all the romantic items about her that appear in the public press, since sometimes even the wildest fantasies are grist for the hungry columnists' mills. An example of this was the coupling of Hedy's name with Cary Grant's in the papers for a time. Well, Cary didn't have even one date with the lady. Possibly he wanted to—but it never happened.

But the fact remains that Hedy herself has on a number of occasions given currency to such fictions. I asked her not long ago the routine question, "What's new in your life?" She hesitated—then said, "Oh, I've met a fascinating Frenchman—Jacques François. He calls me all the time."

It so happened that I was lunching next day with some people at Universal-International when Jacques François joined us. After coffee I said lightly, "How's Hedy?"

Jacques looked surprised, and then said, "I don't know. We had one dinner date three weeks ago—but I haven't seen or heard from her since. I must have bored her—she hardly spoke to me all evening.'

Now, why did Hedy want me to believe she was interested in Monsieur François?

critic's corner

WHAT PAPER DO YOU READ?

The best fiction film ever made about extra-sensory perception has opened at the Paramount Theatre under the spectacular name of Night Has A Thousand Eyes. What it will do to the peace of mind of those who experience it has stimulated this department's comparatively feeble powers of prediction. Approximately one thousand newly fledged mentalists will be leaving the theater after each break. The rest, along with this observer, will be cursing their own blunted extra senses . . .

Archer Winsten
The New York Post

For a time this account of a fake vaudeville mental wizard who becomes endowed with prescience of terrible events is mildly fascinating. It settles too soon for the customary contrivances of a mystery melodrama of the shrieks and clutching-hand variety . . .

If Night Has A Thousand Eyes gives you pause, it is because of a preposterous theme and a lame ending rather than eerie overtones . . .

Howard Barnes
New York Herald Tribune

Some might attempt to explain it by saying that Hedy is so used to having men swoon at her feet that she feels rather undressed, unless at any given moment, she can say that some man is pursuing her. Nonsense! Hedy isn't like that at all. She is used to having men swoon at her feet—so used to it that she attaches slight importance to it by this time. She'd certainly never go out of her way to impress a columnist with the already universally-known fact that men find her attractive. Why on earth should she?

No, I think the reason is the one I've given—that it's simply her great and very natural longing to find the right man that drives the honest Miss Lamarr—with no deliberate intent to falsify—to suggest romantic situations where actually none exist.

Last summer Hedy informed me in great excitement that her first husband, Fritz Mandl, had telephoned her from South America to say he was coming to Hollywood to marry her all over again. "Of course I shan't let him," Hedy told me.

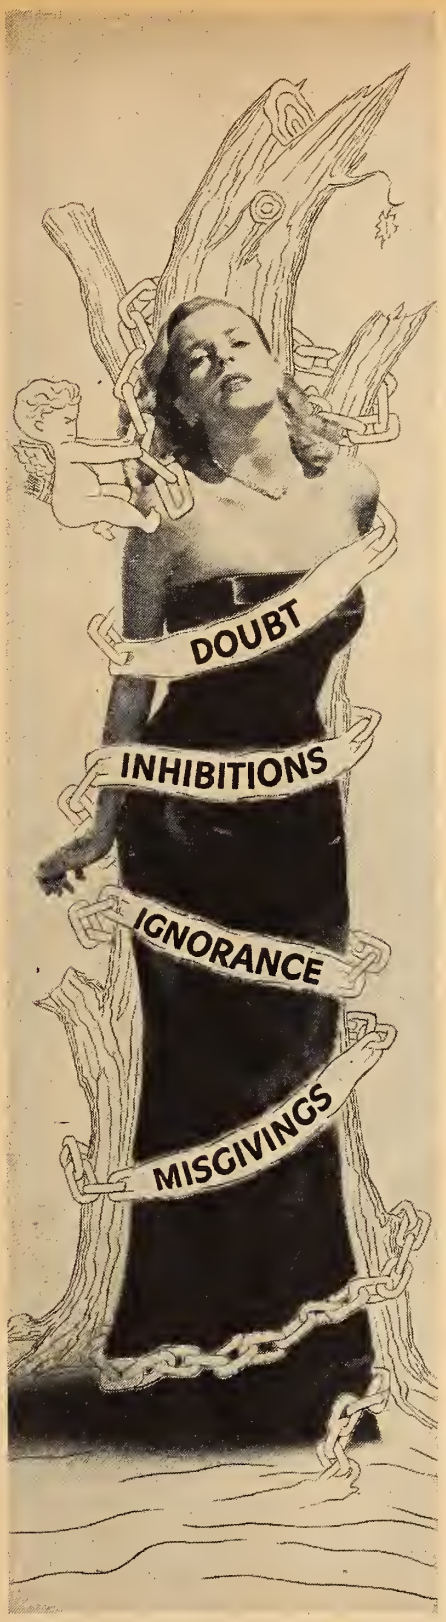
Nothing ever came of it—I believe that at the time of his telephone call, Mandl was still married to someone else. But it made a good story and Hedy enjoyed telling it to columnists.

Aside from the mystery of why so many of Hedy's "romances" evaporate into nothingness, there's the deeper mystery of why her well-authenticated romances with no quotation marks around them, end so unsatisfactorily—and this includes her marriages.

they parted friends . . .

Soon after her arrival in Hollywood, it looked as if Reginald Gardiner would be her choice for a second husband. The brilliant, young English comedian was a witty, intelligent companion, plainly devoted to her. For a while they were together constantly. Then they parted—as friends.

Back in 1942, Hedy and George Montgomery made no bones about their plans to get married—"as soon as we both can get enough time off to have a honeymoon." Yet, after a brief engagement, they went their separate ways.



I saw Hedy the day after she married Gene Markey. "We are going to buy a farm and raise chickens," she told me. She'd always longed for life on a farm—perhaps because she'd never had one. Anyhow, Gene had other ideas. He wanted to show off his beautiful bride in fashionable restaurants and night clubs. Hedy far preferred a more intimate domestic existence. So they were divorced, with Hedy accusing Gene of neglecting her.

The big problem in Hedy's marriage to John Loder was the disparity in their earning powers. Aside from that difficulty, things for a time appeared outwardly smooth. John was willing to raise chickens, children, or anything else Hedy wanted. But after one separation, a reconciliation, and several bitter battles, he lit out for New York. At the time of the divorce John stated, "I don't know what's the matter with Hedy. She's so mixed up that I can't even reason with her."

When I saw John recently in Manhattan, he told me Hedy had called him to ask him to return home for a visit with the children. John, however, preferred to remain in New York.

The Mark Stevens episode still has Hollywood—and Hedy herself—baffled. "I just don't understand," the very bewildered Miss Lamarr told me. "One week he says he loves me—and the next week, when I telephone him, his manager answers and says that Mark doesn't want me to call him and has gone back to his wife."

Don't get Hedy wrong on the Stevens

ONE NEGLECT THAT CAN BE STRONGER THAN LOVE...

Chains of intimate physical neglect can bind wives away from husband's love . . .

Too often . . . too frightfully often . . . the romance and tenderness of married love is shattered on one sad neglect.

This neglect makes a wife unsure of her feminine daintiness . . . slowly but surely succeeds in causing trouble between her husband and herself.

Far too many wives are guilty of this neglect . . . fail to practice the complete, effective feminine hygiene that assures dainty allure. Yet all they need do is take regular vaginal douches with a scientifically correct preparation such as "Lysol." So easy a way for a wife to banish this unsureness . . . which may stand in the way of normal, happy love!

Germs destroyed swiftly

"Lysol" has amazing, proved power to kill germ-life on contact . . . truly cleanses the vaginal canal even in the presence of mucous matter. Thus "Lysol" acts in a way that makeshifts like soap, salt or soda never can.

Appealing daintiness is assured, because the very source of objectionable odors is eliminated.

Use whenever needed!

Yet gentle, non-caustic "Lysol" will not harm delicate tissue. Simple directions give correct douching solution. Many doctors advise their patients to douche regularly with "Lysol" brand disinfectant, just to insure daintiness alone, and to use it as often as they need it. No greasy aftereffect.

Three times as many women use "Lysol" for intimate feminine hygiene as any other liquid preparation! No other is more reliable. You, too, can rely on "Lysol" to help protect your married happiness . . . keep you desirable!

For complete Feminine Hygiene rely on . . .

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

A Concentrated Germ-Killer

NEW!...FEMININE HYGIENE FACTS!

FREE! New booklet of information by reputable gynecological authority. Mail coupon to Lehn & Fink, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____

D.M.-493 Copr., 1949 by Lehn & Fink Products Corp.

New! Unique! LEOPARD THONG
Wedge Heel, Platform Sandals
Genuine Crepe Sole
Adjustable Straps
Built in Airlift Arch
Sizes 1 to 12, Narrow, Medium & Wide
Actual Photo
Pat. Pend.
Yes! Yes! ONLY 2.95
Genuine Leopard Fur-Like Material.
Also in Solid Standard Colors
Money Back Guarantee
ORDER BY MAIL—SAVE!
COLLEEN ENTERPRISES, Haverhill, Mass.
Rush me_____prs. Leopard Thongs @ 2.95
Rush me_____prs. Colored Thongs @ 2.95
SIZE _____WIDTH _____COLOR_____
NAME _____
STREET _____
CITY _____ZONE___STATE _____
☐ Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C.O.D. d

WANTED
all beauty-conscious women to rush to leading Five & Ten Cent Stores' Cosmetic Counters today! Why? To get the sensationally new, purse-size Blue Cross Cuticle Shaper. Only 25c! Nothing ever like it! It's filled with rich, creamy lanolized cuticle remover that instantly dissolves dead, cracked, ragged hangnails. No cutting. No soaking. Just a drop of this lanolized miracle liquid on each fingernail (toenails, too!), then gently work off all ugly skin tissue. Used exclusively by professional beauticians for 12 years. Never sold at retail before. Big refills, too, only 25c. At Five & Ten Cent Stores. Or send 30c (stamps) to Vonett Sales Co., Dept. 8, 645 N. Martel Ave., Hollywood 36, Calif.
Blue Cross CUTICLE SHAPER & REMOVER
25¢

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS
EASY TO LEARN
Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.
NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL
1315 S. Michigan, Dept. 2363, Chicago 5

BLONDES STAY LIGHT!
NEW HOME SHAMPOO MADE WITH ANDIUM
Made Specially for Blondes
Washes Hair Lighter, Shinier
To keep blonde hair light, lustrous and lovely use BLONDEX, the shampoo with ANDIUM, made specially for blondes. BLONDEX instantly removes the dull, dingy film that makes hair darker. Brightens faded hair. Gives it extra lightness and SHINE. Safe for children. Takes only 11 minutes at home. Get BLONDEX at 10c, drug and dept. stores.

romance. She had nothing to do with Mark's leaving Annelle and didn't date him until after he'd left his wife. But when he flew to Lake Tahoe to be with her and then, on their return, kissed her publicly for the waiting photographers, who can blame Hedy for believing that Stevens intended to marry her when he was free?

You'd think that almost any man would consider the bright and beautiful Hedy to be the perfect mate. She's an interesting and varied conversationalist—and she listens when the other person talks about his or her problems. She reads everything and has a lot of shrewd horse-sense. In addition to beauty and brains, she's got a rollicking sense of fun, considerate kindliness, and a flair for domesticity. She's proved herself to be a fine mother.

Hedy Lamarr's romantic difficulties are deeply mysterious indeed. Yet there must be an answer to the unhappy riddle. And here's what I think it is:

Hedy, I'm afraid, tends to be very overanxious about the state of her health. She has more ailments in a week than even Sidney Skolsky has. So perhaps it's this excessive self-concern that upsets her life. It's been my personal observation that most men aren't too happy with women who constantly complain about their aches and pains.

too possessive? . . .

I've also heard it suggested that Hedy is too possessive. I don't think that's so. I believe she desperately wants a man who'll boss her around. But one great stumbling block to that is the fact that Hedy earns many times the salary of the men who might marry her—and is many times more famous. Because of this, she finds herself the dominant member of the partnership and quickly loses interest.

And then, it could be that Hedy's longing for a mate she can love is too obvious. Nothing usually scares off a man so quickly as knowing a girl is eager to marry him. One writer I know was wildly in love with Hedy. He met her at a party and thereafter wrote her a sonnet every day—all of which he filed away in his pocket.

They were good—he read me one. I urged him to go ahead and send them.

"But—but won't she be insulted?" he asked doubtfully.

"Send them," I insisted.

Next thing he knew, Hedy had telephoned him. And next thing I knew, the courtship was over.

Hedy is also very sensitive. She takes offense easily. At one time she tried to write. She called a famous author who had taken her out a few times, to get his opinion on a story she had written.

"I'm terribly busy today," he told her. "How about my coming over tomorrow?"

Hedy slammed the receiver down in his ear. She thought the man was giving her a brush-off. Of course he wasn't—but nevertheless, the incident ended his interest in Hedy.

Sensitive, self-concerned, eager for devotion—here is an incredibly beautiful woman with a number of very human failings, failings that are heavily overbalanced by her rare qualities of personality and character and mind. She is a woman of profound and restless loneliness, longing for love and marriage with the right man—one she has yet to find.

My own guess is that someday she'll find him. But until then, Hedy Lamarr will remain a woman who seems strange to and in Hollywood, about whom will continue to flower many myths and legends—and those of her loves will be the strangest of all. THE END

BE SURE TO READ THE APRIL MODERN SCREEN—IT'S OUR SPECIAL SHIRLEY TEMPLE ISSUE!

sweet and hot

by leonard feather

 Highly Recommended
* Recommended
No stars: Average

FROM THE MOVIES

KISSING BANDIT—"Siesta" by Xavier Cugat* (Columbia).

SLIGHTLY FRENCH—"Let's Fall In Love" by Hank d'Amico (MGM).

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME—"The Birth af the Blues" by Bing Crosby* (Decca), Guy Lombardo (Decca); "Say Si Si" by Andrews Sisters (Decca); and the title song by Ted Lewis himself (Decca).
As we pen these lines, musicians all over the cauntry are flocking ta the recarding studios, committing the latest hit songs to wax—and not a mament too soon! After eleven and a half months of the recarding ban, things had just abaut reached the paint where our "From the Movies" sectian would have had to be eliminated fram this column. All the Decca items listed above, incidentally, are reissues.

WORDS AND MUSIC—Album from the sound track of the picture* (MGM), featuring Lena Horne, Betty Garrett, Mickey Rooney, June Allyson, Judy Garland, Ann Sothern, Lennie Hayton and the MGM studio orchestra.

POPULAR

FOOLS RUSH IN—Billy Eckstine (MGM).
One of the greatest sides yet by America's greatest male ballad singer. (Frankie's opinion, and plenty of other singers' taa; also yours truly's honest belief.)

LITTLE LEARNIN' IS A DANG'ROUS THING—Frank Sinatra and Pearl Bailey (Calumbia). Double-sided ditty by a powerful team. Mildly amusing, but could have been great with stronger material.

PIANO REFLECTIONS—Claude Thornhill* (Cc lumbia).
A pleasant album of eight sides by Claude with a rhythm section. Definitely dream music, including Noel Coward's "Someday I'll Find You," and the dreamy maestra's own "Memory af an Island," written during a stay in Hawaii.

TARRA TA-LARRA TA-LAR—Bing Crosby* (Decca); Dean Martin* (Capital); Frankie Laine (Mercury); Alan Dale (Signature); Dinah Shore (Columbia); Johnny Desmond (MGM).

"BOPULAR"

BEBOP—An Album of Modern Jazz* (Victor). Eight sides featuring four different all-star bands, including the Dizzy Gillespie orchestra in his famous Afro-Cuban opus, "Cubana Be" and "Cubana Bop." Others are "From Dixieland Ta Bebop," a musical satire by Lucky Thompson's Lucky Seven; "Jumping For Jane," your correspondent's own opus as performed by Coleman Hawkins' group; and "Royal Roost," by Kenny Clarke's boppers. A must for bop fans.

WOODY HERMAN—The Goof and I (Columbia).
More modern jazz by the cleanest and most exciting band playing it today.

CHUBBY JACKSON—Dee Dee's Dance (Rainbow).
Recorded a year or sa ago in Sweden with the great sextet Chubby took over there. Small-band bop at its fastest and most fantastic.

ILLINOIS JACQUET—Embryo* (Victor).
Star man with this bunch is trombonist J. J. Johnson; wish he were featured more.

JAMES MOODY—Tropicana* (Blue Note).
Nice combination of bop solos, Cuban percussion and exotic tune.

REFUGE FOR LANA

(Continued from page 47)

couple of times I was rewarded by a really good look.

Want to know something? (And this is from a cynic.) She's truly something! Don't you believe the reports that nowadays she looks like a suburban housewife. She's showy, spectacular-looking. Even in slacks and moccasins and a suede jacket she just doesn't look like a country girl or a housewife. She's Lana Turner, no matter what she has on, and looking at her no one could possibly forget it.

She has given out no interviews to the two main newspapers in the area—the Greenwich Time and the Stamford Advocate—but from the people in the stores, from the high-school youngsters who follow her around when she shops on Saturdays, and from the neighbors, a portrait of Mrs. Robert Topping emerges that is perhaps more colorful than any that could be drawn from just a regular interview.

At H. L. Green's five-and-ten store, a youngster named Katharine waited on her one day. Katharine goes to Greenwich High School, works part-time to get money for clothes. "There was a kind of lull," says Katharine, "and I was straightening out the paper bags and thinking about the Christmas play at school when a nice deep voice said, 'I'd like some of those chocolate kisses.' I looked up, and it was Bob Topping. Everyone in town knows him. 'Give me a lot of them,' he said. So I weighed out a pound-and-a-half, told him it would be $1.20—and then I saw her. I remember exactly how she looked and what she had on. In the first place, she's little. I never realized she was such a half-pint. She had her hair parted on the left side and curled around, and she was wearing dark glasses. The thing I noticed most about her was her mouth. You know how hard some theatrical people's mouths get to look. Well, hers is rather gentle. She had on sort of a cowboy jacket—you know, with fringe on the sleeves, and dark slacks and moccasins. And she looked cute. Bob handed her the candy and she gave him a big smile. She said 'Mmm, thanks!' And when they walked out I noticed that they were arm in arm." And Katharine was a heroine at Green's for at least an hour afterward.

the brush-off . . .

Charlie Piro at the Greenwich Time had a slightly less mellow story to tell. Reporters from his paper had twice tried to get a story from her and had been rebuffed. Not pleasantly rebuffed, it seems, but genuinely brushed off. Said one of the reporters: "Now, Henry Fonda's a nice guy—you can get him on the phone any old time. Not her. You can't break through the barrage of butlers even to hear her say 'no' in person. And there's a girl that could use some good publicity, too."

At the Stamford Advocate, the word is that Lana will talk to anyone, that she's easy-going and friendly as a puppy—but that Bob hates publicity and doesn't want her interviewed. Considering Lana is off-salary at the moment at MGM, her time is her own and Bob's, this doesn't seem such an unreasonable attitude at that. And the fact that Lana is willing to go along with Bob in spite of her own feelings, substantiates the opinion of some of her close friends that this time Lana's marriage comes so far ahead of her career that the career doesn't even show.

For a neighbor's-eye view of Lana, you must drive north from the town of Greenwich eight miles or so. The Topping estate is set in a really beautiful section of rolling hills and green meadows, crossed and criss-crossed by dozens of old stone walls. Before you reach the house, you pass a country store—the kind that belongs on a cover of the Saturday Evening Post—and a lovely white New England church. There are a couple of farms—with red barns and cows and all the props—and then there's a small modest sign that says TOPPING.

You can see the house from the road, and it's a mansion, nothing less. An English-style brick house with five enormous chimneys, it dominates the scene for acres around. There are 29 rooms, a tennis court and a swimming pool, and numerous small buildings. At one end of the 202 Topping acres, Jack, the youngest boy, built a house and kept a string of magnificent horses (Palominos are his hobby) but this has been sold.

house for sale . . .

Last winter Bob's mother, Rhea Topping, a beautiful and much loved woman, died, and after her death the boys put "Dunnellan" up for sale. The house was her house, her love, and for the boys it holds hundreds of wonderful memories, but it represents a way of life that scarcely exists any longer. Nowadays when Lana goes into N. Y., it is not in splendor, with Mr. Steele, the head chauffeur who once drove for Bob's grandfather, at the wheel of the town car. Instead, Lana drives in with Bob in either the yellow Cadillac convertible with the California license plates or in the incredible red thunderbolt Chrysler 16. This is a low-slung, completely streamlined, special body job. Made in 1941, it cost around $6,500, and there are only 14 of them in the world. (Jack Topping has one of the others.) But Mr. Steele still polishes the town car, dreaming of the good old days, and wondering what's to become of this house he's known and loved so long.

Bob offered the house and ten acres to the town of Greenwich for $275,000 for use as a school, but although a school is needed back there in the hills, the house is just too big and would require too much remodelling. Rumor has it that Rockefeller is dickering for it for use as a memorial to his mother—whether as a school, a hospital or what, doesn't seem to be known. At any rate, future buyers will have to be fairly well-heeled, as the assessed value of the place is just a few dollars under half-a-million.

It's a little hard to picture Lana in this setting. Lana—who likes to kick off her shoes and relax; who has been called many things, but never stuffy. The neighbors have a little light to shed on this subject. She still isn't stuffy. She goes around the place in slacks—her favorites being a light blue pair. Sometimes she drives down to the store with Bob—the top down on the car more often than not, even on chilly days—her yellow hair bound up in a bright scarf. When they have guests, which isn't very often, Sunday night is their favorite for entertaining, they do it informally and they prefer small groups to great mob scenes. (The neighbors can tell by the number of cars.) Many of the younger women I spoke to in Greenwich talked mainly about her beauty, but a lot of the older ones were more concerned with the report that Lana's blood is Rh negative. They'd read that there was a chance that the Topping so soft!

SITROUX TISSUES
strong... absorbent
NOW FINER THAN EVER
. . . say
SIT-TRUE

FREE PHOTO
LARGE GLOSSY PICTURE of your favorite
MOVIE STAR
INTRODUCTORY OFFER
direct from HOLLYWOOD, home of the STARS. Send name of your FAVORITE with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
★ Hollywood Stars ★
BOX 8716, DEPT. D-2
HOLLYWOOD 46, CALIF.
Van Johnson

You can have LONGER HAIR
Enjoy love & romance with LONGER HAIR. GLAMORINE with PURE LANOLIN helps stop dry, brittle ends from breaking. Gives hair chance to get longer. Helps improve hair damaged by permanents, dyes, bleaches, sun. Adds glamour to dull, drab hair. NO CHEMICALS. Marvelous results in 7 days or money back. SEND NO MONEY . . . 3 months supply $1.00 plus govt. charges.
Glamorine of Calif., 140 Borel, Dept. Y, San Mateo, Calif.

AMAZING OFFER—$50 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES
of entirely different new DeLuxe All-Occasion cards. Patented feature television card included. Each box sells for $1.00, your profit 50c. Surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Write today.
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-18, White Plains, N. Y.
WRITE FOR SAMPLES

CARE goes where hunger is! Send food packages overseas through

50 Broad Street
New York 4, N.Y.

Amazing New Creme
Re-Colors Hair In 22 Minutes

If you want to change streaked, gray, graying or drab hair to a new lustrous youthful-looking color, try Tintz Creme Shampoo-Tint today. It's a new hair coloring that re-colors hair at home as it shampoos. Takes only 22 minutes. No waiting for results. It's easy to use—no messy mixing. Caution: Use only as directed. Won't wash or rub out. Won't harm permanents. MONEY BACK Guaranteed. Get your choice of color today: Jet Black, Black, Dark Brown, Medium Warm Brown, Medium Ash Brown, Light Brown, Auburn (Henna), Blonde. SEND NO MONEY. Deposit with postman on delivery $1.25 plus tax and postage on MONEY BACK Guarantee of satisfaction. (Enclose $1.50 incl. tax. Tintz pays postage.) Mail order today to Tintz Co., Dept. 3-L, 205 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill. In Canada: 56½ Adelaide St. E., Toronto, Ontario, Canada

SAME NOSE—BUT WHAT A DIFFERENCE!

Before and after—what a difference! This example, typical of thousands, shows why no one need suffer the handicaps of an ill-shaped nose. For other real-life examples and answers to your questions about Plastic Surgery, send for fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE. Written by noted Plastic Surgeon. Contains 88 actual before-and-after photos. Mailed in plain, sealed envelope for only..... 25¢

FRANKLIN HOUSE, Books
1102 Fox Bldg., Phila. 3, Pa., Dept. 1-R

High School Course at Home Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, H314, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

EXTRA CASH INCOME HERE'S HOW!

FREE SAMPLES EXCLUSIVE
Name Imprinted Initial and Engraved Name Stationery

SELL NEW GREETING CARD ASSORTMENTS STATIONERY NOT OBTAINABLE ELSEWHERE
Your cash profits to 100% plus bonus. Complete line 63 different boxes. Sensational plastic greeting cards, napkins, gift wrappings, exclusive personalized stationery. Write today for free samples exclusive stationery and All-Occasion. Leader samples on approval. Special offers.
REGAL GREETING CARD CO.
19 W. Woodruff St., Dept. D-5, Hazel Park, Mich.

DRAW for MONEY

BE AN ARTIST!
Trained Artists Are Capable of Earning $65, $80 and More a Week
It's pleasant and interesting to study Art the W.S.A. way. COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING, CARTOONING all in ONE complete home study course. No previous Art experience necessary—hundreds have profited by our practical methods since 1914. TWO ART OUTFITS furnished. Full information in FREE BOOK, "Art for Pleasure and Profit." VETERANS! COURSE APPROVED UNDER G.I. BILL.

FREE BOOK gives details

WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART,
Studio 803-R, 1115 15th St., N.W.
Washington 5, D. C.

Name.....
Street.....AGE.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

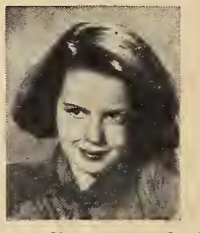
baby might have to have its entire blood supply changed at birth and they hoped she had the very best possible doctor. I think it's safe to assume she will have.

At the Round Hill Store where the Toppings do some of their shopping, the proprietor, Mr. Strain, said that their market list is no more exotic than the next person's and that they were much more likely to come in for a loaf of bread and a couple of cans of soup than for peacocks' tongues. He'd gone to school with Bob, he said, had known him all his life and genuinely liked him.

One young woman who had moved away from Greenwich and was back visiting her family said that her father, a real dyed-in-the-wool Yankee, thoroughly approved of young Mrs. Topping for two reasons—"She's sure pretty and, what's more important, she minds her own business."

All the people in the surrounding country who've known the Toppings all their lives feel that Lana must be okay or Bob wouldn't like her. "He never liked just any old girl," one woman reminisced. "They had to be special." The Topping boys, it's obvious from all reports, were well-liked. As youngsters they went to the Round Hill School, a small public school near their house, and it never occurred to most of the neighborhood kids that they were particularly wealthy. (Bob's grandfather parlayed a clerk's job in a foundry into one of the country's great fortunes.) One woman whom I cornered while she was out for a walk with her little girl said: "It hit us one year when we were about eight that those Topping boys must have all the money in the world. It was Hallowe'en and we went to their house for apples and stuff. The butler let us in and gave us punch and sandwiches in a room as big as my whole house. Then Bob's mother came in in a lovely long dress, and she said she wished to goodness she'd known we were coming—that she'd have dressed up and gone along with us. Next year when we went back, she was all dressed in a clown suit, for years after that she dressed up and went with us."

I heard some other little things about Lana that made her seem very real, very appealing to me: At a party, she doesn't latch on to a man and monopolize him. Maybe she did before she became Mrs. Topping, but no more. She's much more likely to talk to the women present—and guess what she talks about. Babies. Birth weights and formulas positively intrigue her. The wives of Bob's friends all like Lana. . . . She loves cheese, and has a tremendous sweet tooth. . . . She's mad about magazines and subscribes to dozens. What she doesn't get through the mail she buys at the Greenwich Stationery Store. (And, incidentally, she's a great one for browsing through an entire issue before she even gets it out of the store.) . . . Except for an occasion, she wears little jewelry—although Bob's bought her quantities of it, beginning with that fantastic engagement diamond. (He still sends her flowers.) . . . Her complexion even without make-up is absolutely flawless. . . . She used to use a hot-water bottle, but has recently invested in an electric blanket, which she loves. . . . And when she was getting ready for a recent visit from her mother and her little girl Cheryl, she was as excited as a 15-year-old preparing for her first date. . . . Momentous trivia about a legend who is also a very cute gal.



One of these days, the Topping home will be sold or Hollywood will beckon, and Lana will move away. She hasn't been in this neighborhood very long—but do you know, something tells me we're going to miss her.

THE END

new faces

STEPHEN McNALLY was enjoying a nice peaceful movie career as Horace McNally when someone thought it might be a good idea to change his name. That probably wasn't the reason he catapulted to stardom, but Stephen's career is no longer peaceful. He once wanted to become a lawyer, and after six years of training, tossed it aside for a stage career. Stephen was born in N. Y. on July 29. He's married and has a four-year-old son. After a wonderful performance in Johnny Belinda, he's now in Criss-Cross.

BEATRICE PEARSON was born 28 years ago, the daughter of an itinerant construction engineer, and spent most of her early life in California. At the age of 18, she took her life-savings of $85 and lit out for the New York stage. Working with the WPA theater, she finally landed walk-ons in Liliom and Life With Father, and was offered contracts by several movie scouts. The trip back to Hollywood was made eventful only by the fact that she refused all the roles that were offered. Now, Beatrice is co-starred with John Garfield in her first movie, Force Of Evil.

MARTA TOREN, who was such a sensational hit in her very first movie, Casbah, was born in Sweden May 21, 1927. Since Sweden has proved to be such good hunting grounds for Hollywood scouts, Edwin Blum, screen writer, thought he would try his hand at it too. Marta was the result. After studio execs saw her impromptu screen test, they wired Marta to take the next boat. She's 5'7" tall and has blue eyes and brown hair. You'll see her soon in Rogues' Regiment with Dick Powell.

BARBARA BRITTON always wanted to be an actress, but didn't do too much about it until a Los Angeles photographer snapped her picture during the annual Tournament of Roses. Paramount signed her and a series of tiny roles followed. It wasn't until Maureen O'Hara became ill, that Barbara got her first big break and was co-starred with Ray Milland in Till We Meet Again. She was born in Long Beach on September 29, 1920, and is married to Eugene Czukor. Her latest is Cover-Up, with Dennis O'Keefe.

THE AWKWARD AGE

(Continued from page 65)

has never approached the heights he knew as a child.

The saddest case of all was that of the other Jackie—Coogan, that is. Coogan was worth five million dollars before he could balance a full-grown bicycle. When he was eight years old, he rode around in his own $10,000 Rolls Royce.

All Coogan has left from those days are a few press clippings and that Rolls Royce. He still drives it, and once in a while it pays for its own gasoline by being rented to the studios for a special scene. Bad money-management broke Jackie Coogan. Today he and a partner have an air field and he sells airplanes. His picture bid has been made in company with Jackie Cooper in the Kilroy Series, which hasn't set any worlds on fire.

Take Mitzi Green. She was one of the biggest child stars in the early 1930's. She's never made it back to pictures. But Mitzi found another medium. She's been entertaining in night clubs, slaying the people with her visual comedy.

yesterday's children . . .

I've mentioned a few of yesterday's children who saw their names up there and reaped a share of moviedom's gold. Here are a few more. How many of them do you remember? How many of them have survived the awkward age?

Virginia Weidler, Cora Sue Collins, Baby Jane Quigley, Jackie Searle, Spankie McFarland, Dickie Moore, Jimmie Fay, Billy Lee, and Baby Peggy Montgomery.

Yes—it's an imposing list. But let's take a look at the other side of the ledger—at some young Hollywoodites thereon, who have taken the awkward age in stride.

Shirley Temple was the greatest child star there's ever been. She had already scored a sensation for the Fox studios by singing "Baby Take A Bow" in Stand Up and Cheer when Paramount borrowed her in 1934 for Little Miss Marker. Thereafter, for four straight years—from 1935 to 1938—the incredible moppet was national box-office champion.

When she left Hollywood in 1937 for a jaunt to Bermuda, 20th Century insured her for $1,685,000. They tell a little story about those days to show what Shirley meant on the lot at the time. Seems one morning two steam shovels began digging up the street near the executives' building. By the next day, the excavation was 40 feet wide and 20 feet deep. On the third day, the steam shovels were puffing away well below the surface in a hole 50 feet deep. Two vice presidents of the company happened by on their way to a conference. One of them had just returned from New York and asked the other what the digging was for. "I understand," he replied in hushed tones, "that Shirley Temple lost her ball."

In 1940, when she was 12, Shirley said to her mother, "Don't you think I'm getting too big to be cute?" Mother thought so, and Shirley retired with a $3,000,000 trust fund. It was planned that she'd not return to film-making until she was at least 16. But a year later, when she gave no indications of becoming lank and graceless, she made Kathleen. And, a year after that, Miss Annie Rooney. Following this, Shirley really did retire—for two years. But the major reason for this was educational—her parents thought a spell of uninterrupted schooling was for the best. Then, in 1944, David Selznick wanted her for the young daughter in Since You Went Away. So Shirley was added to the Selznick roster and has been active since.

You scarcely can say that Shirley is now reestablishing herself. Shucks, she never was un-established. All the awkward age did to Shirley was give her a brief breathing spell—and she didn't have to take it.

Back in 1942, a pretty little girl named Elizabeth Taylor, with bright blue eyes and a charming English accent, was one of the things that helped make Lassie Come Home an over-all delight. Born in London in 1932, Elizabeth had come with her parents to Beverly Hills to live at the outbreak of the war and Lassie was her first film. The next year, she graced The White Cliffs of Dover and Jane Eyre. (In the latter, Margaret O'Brien and Peggy Ann Garner were among her acting colleagues.) Then MGM began looking about for a talented child, who could ride and who had an English accent, for National Velvet. Elizabeth seemed to have all the qualifications—except that she was too short for the role. Suddenly she began to grow. In a few months she had sprouted three inches, and the part was hers. After they'd seen the film, so was a vast public.

Elizabeth continued to grow. Into awkwardness? Into one of the most beautiful girls Hollywood has ever seen. In no time at all, she bloomed into graceful physical maturity. At 14, she played a 16-year-old in Life With Father. Now, after a series of adolescent roles, the 17-year-old beauty is slated for grown-up starring assignments from here on in, beginning with The Conspirator, which she's making in England with Robert Taylor.

Awkward age? Never happened to Liz!

debut at two . . .

Then, of course, there's Mickey Rooney. He—Hollywood believed—was washed up at 12! Making his stage debut as a toddler of two in the variety stage show his parents were with, he toured in it for three years before his mother hauled him off to Hollywood. His first screen appearance was as a cigar-smoking midget in a Colleen Moore film called Orchids and Ermine. Then he beat out 275 other candidates for the lead in the Mickey McGuire comedy series when Mama dyed his yellow locks black with liberal rub-ins of burnt cork. He made 78 Mickey McGuires in the next six years—and then was considered superannuated. His starring days supposedly a thing of the past, he was relegated to bit parts. But somehow he landed an awful lot of them—in 18 months he flitted through 40 pictures for MGM. Then MGM broke down and gave him a contract in 1934. After he'd been loaned out to Warners in 1935 to play Puck in A Midsummer Night's Dream, the industry began to sit up and take notice. Robert Montgomery described him as the greatest scene-stealer in the business. Came 1937—and a low-budgeter entitled A Family Affair. The big name in the cast was Lionel Barrymore, playing a character called Judge Hardy. And Mickey, of course, played his son Andy.

The studio was baffled when this turned out to be a box-office bonanza, with the exhibitors reporting customers raving over Andy. The MGM executives, with no great enthusiasm, thought they might as well do a follow-up of this probable flash in the pan. Lionel Barrymore—perhaps because he'd been fed up with Mickey's

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.

2 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. For good grooming and longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1

Alan Ladd

FREE PHOTO (Large size) of your favorite MOVIE STAR

WRITE TODAY for your choice of movie star photos from our extensive list. Send name of your favorite star and 10c for handling charges.

HOLLYWOOD PHOTO PRODUCTS
P.O. Box 1446, Hollywood 28, Calif.

Buy U. S. Savings Bonds
The Best Investment In America Today!

MAKE MORE MONEY QUICK!

Sell New 1949 GREETING CARDS and STATIONERY

Tops in beauty, quality, value. Big line fast-selling $1.00 box assortments brings you up to 50c per box profit. Amazing variety All Occasion, Birthday, Plastic, "Little Folks" cards; Deluxe Gift Wrappings; Animated Books; Name Imprinted Golden Letters; raised Suede-Tone Initial and Floral Stationery. Extra bonus. Special offers. Write today for Feature All Occasion samples on approval. ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO., Dept. M-41, Elmira, N. Y.

FREE SAMPLES PERSONAL STATIONERY

ENDS GRAY HAIR

WORRIES IN 5 SECONDS

Quick, easy Floress Touch-up Pencil colors gray, faded hair at roots, parting, temples. Like lipstick. In metal swivel case. Won't rub off, but washes out. SEND NO MONEY. Deposit with postman on delivery $1 plus tax and C.O.D. postage on guarantee of satisfaction or Money Back. State shade: Black, Dark Brown, Dark Warm Brown, Med. Brown, Light Brown, Auburn or Blonde. Mail order now to:

$1 PLUS TAX

FLORESS CO., Dept. 4B, 205 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

Get Well QUICKER

From Your Cough Due to a Cold

FOLEY'S Honey & Tar Cough Compound

BE A Nurse

MAKE $35-$45 A WEEK

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. 50th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 233, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name _____
City _____ State _____ Age _____

CORNS

Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

THERE'S MONEY FOR YOU in PLASTICS

No Experience Necessary!

Here's CASH for you . . . easy! Show friends, neighbors amazing laundry-saving tablecloths, aprons, rainwear, babies' needs, etc. Tremendous demand. Sell on sight. BIG PROFITS, full or part time. Write for FREE Outfit.

LORAINE PRODUCTS, Dept. DM-121
411 So. Clinton Street Chicago 7, Illinois

"How to Make Money with Simple Cartoons"

A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address

FREE BOOK

CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 433 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in EVERYDAY CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

Show rich Satin and Velour Greeting Cards. Never before offered. Get easy orders FAST! Astounding value—16 for $1 Up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery, Floral Charmettes, Napkins, 25 other Assortments retail 60c to $1.00. SAMPLES ON APPROVAL. No experience needed. Start now—earn all year 'round. WRITE TODAY!

Satin and Velour Designs

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 95C, St. Louis 3, Mo.

EASY TO LEARN MILLINERY AT HOME

Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. Begin a profitable business in spare time. Low cost, easy terms.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 North Wabash Avenue, Dept. 183, Chicago 1, Ill.
Please send me your FREE catalog describing your training course in professional millinery.
Print
Name _____
Address _____

irrepressible hi-jinks during the making of the first one—was replaced by Lewis Stone and attention in the next story was concentrated on the character of Andy. So You're Only Young Once was made—in 18 days, at a cost of $181,000.

The success of this was even more tremendous—and the Hardy Family became a series. It's been the most profitable venture MGM has ever undertaken. When it wound up with Love Laughs at Andy Hardy in 1946, it had grossed about $27,000,000—and, in the course of it, Mickey had been box-office champion for three straight years—1939-40-41.

And there's an old friend of Mickey's who's another excellent case in point—Judy Garland. When Judy applied for a job with MGM back in 1935, she was right in the middle of the awkward age. Three other studios had already refused employment to the chubby 13-year-old with the long legs and impossible posture. But the MGM execs detected something in the girl the others had missed behind the coltish ungainliness—a wistfully humorous charm—and when they heard that astonishing, stadium-sized voice coming from the 4-foot-10 kid, they signed her at once. Her first assignment was a short subject, Every Sunday Afternoon, in which she was teamed with Deanna Durbin. After the studio failed to lift Deanna's option, and Deanna went right over to Universal to become a box-office phenomenon in Three Smart Girls, Judy was known around the lot as "the girl they kept when they let Deanna Durbin go."

Then 20th Century-Fox borrowed her for an epic called Pigskin Parade, a Grade B but very funny musical football satire in which Judy, in the role of a leather-lunged hill-billy, almost destroyed the sound apparatus with her all-out rendition of "It's Love I'm After." When Judy saw herself on the screen in this, she cried all night. "I look like a fat little pig in pigtails," she moaned. However, her low opinion was not shared by the press or public, who found her delightful. Judy had scored her first big hit.

She scored a much larger hit when, after she'd sung "Dear Mr. Gable" at a 1937 studio birthday party for Mr. G., the studio had her give a repeat performance in Broadway Melody of 1938. This firmly established Judy on the way to one of the most spectacular successes in Hollywood.

And it was just that way with Deanna Durbin. Three Smart Girls made her a star at 13—and throughout the years of adolescence she was box-office dynamite. Deanna has lately had career troubles—as recounted in last month's MODERN SCREEN—but long before those difficulties got underway, Deanna was well out of the awkward age.

Jane Powell's another who began her screen career in the midst of a theoretically terrible period. She was 14 when, on a vacation in Los Angeles from her home town of Portland, Oregon—where the citizenry were already cheering her wildly on her own radio show—she sang an aria from Carmen on Janet Gaynor's Hollywood Showcase program. The very next day she was signed as a guest on the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy madhouse. On this she created a national stir and, one week later, Jane was signing an MGM contract. Loaned out to United Artists, she made her debut in Song of the Open Road. Then, on her home lot, came Holiday In Mexico, Luxury Liner and all the other triumphs for Janie.

Peggy Ann Garner, having started in 1938 in Little Miss Thoroughbred with Ann Sheridan, and having gone onward and upward in such memorable flicks as The Pied Piper, Jane Eyre and The Keys of the Kingdom, was a Hollywood veteran by the time she was 12. As does Margaret O'Brien today, Peggy Ann faced the awkward age. And what happened? A Tree Grows in Brooklyn happened. The bugaboo has held no fears for Miss Garner—who, at 16, has one of the brightest movie futures of any young actress around.

And so, ladies and gentlemen, we give you Peggy Ann Garner, Shirley Temple, Elizabeth Taylor, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Deanna Durbin and Jane Powell—all living, breathing proofs that the growing-up period need not devastate a screen career. It is, we'll grant, still a problem—and yet, as every year more and more of the Hollywood young fry progress smoothly through the awkward age, the problem is becoming less and less a bugaboo.

Are you worrying, Margaret O'Brien? Then stop it! There's life in the old girl yet!

THE END

"Hey, Boss—Guess who's here again!"

SOLDIER OF GOD

(Continued from page 43)

anyone, any time—if he or she is serious and she can be of help. Great names in the industry, to whose homes and parties she is being invited with increasing frequency, are just beginning to know her. But down in the most dingy part of Los Angeles she has long been known by others—by broken, shambling men who gather in the Union Rescue Mission where she labors to help them find what she has found herself.

She has spent much time preparing for her work. At the Hollywood Presbyterian Church she not only attends two services on Sunday and a prayer meeting on Wednesday, but every Saturday morning at six-thirty (this early because the others have jobs to go to) she meets with a special group of young people to learn how better to serve in the path she loves.

Anyone who meets Colleen Townsend almost always asks the same questions. How came this girl to be as she is? Under what especially cloistered circumstances was she brought up? In how intensely religious an atmosphere did she live? And at what tender age was she tutored directly into the ways of the church?

Well, the answers run something like this. As to her home, it was broken up when she was a tot. Her parents separated and Colleen went with her mother, now Mrs. Stella Wilhelm, who promptly went to work to support them both. Colleen was born in Glendale, a superb of Los Angeles, but was raised all over the city, the location of her home changing almost from year to year as her mother pursued that which is still the city-dweller's dream—reasonable rentals.

As to cloistered atmosphere, with her mother at work Colleen was mostly alone all day, mostly on the street, occasionally with her grandfather for company. As to religious atmosphere, mother and grandfather believed in church but were not churchgoers; there was little time to go and less occasion to talk about it.

Colleen was then left to develop mostly by herself. At three she mastered roller-skating. At four she was proudly exhibiting new panties to all the neighbors in the block because they matched her dress. At six she started school but entered in the third grade (she didn't start at five because she would have had to go to and from school alone and her mother thought her a bit young for that). At seven she began to get a liking for sturdy sports and became a cycling expert—on borrowed bikes.

By degrees she worked up to rougher activities. When she was 12 and her mother moved to West Los Angeles, Colleen met the boys of the Barry Street football team—and immediately demanded a place on the team. The boys laughed merrily—but they just didn't know Colleen. Finally, to get rid of the pest, they allowed her to scrimmage. After a few plays Colleen became the new fullback.

But, after all, this sort of thing could last only so long. Up to now she'd paid scant attention when people called her a tomboy. Then it began to bother her. By 14 she compromised: She gave up football.

turning point . . .

Colleen was only 15 when a turning point came in her life, with two developments; the world began discovering her beauty and she discovered something else—a need for spiritual comfort. Her religious devotion came that simply: no soul-shaking experience or tragedy that shook her inwardly, just a seeking and a finding.

The world discovered her beauty this way: She was standing on a downtown street corner with a friend, waiting for the traffic light to change, when a man approached her. He was a little embarrassed, but very earnest. He wanted to know if Colleen would give him her address so he could call on her parents and discuss the possibility of her working in television plays. She didn't know for a moment what to do; then, after exchanging perplexed glances with her friend, she gave the fellow her number and told him to talk to her mother. A few weeks later Colleen was a member of the dramatic company presenting playlets over W6XAO, pioneer television station in Los Angeles. Some months later, a Warner Brothers talent scout saw her telecast and the next morning she had been signed by that studio.

It was while she was at Warner's that she began turning in various directions trying to establish some aim in life that would satisfy her growing spiritual unrest. She asked the teacher assigned to the studio by the state to give her a course in sociology and, in her spare time, she began doing volunteer work at the California State Orphanage. She found a happiness she had never known before in helping children.

At Warner's she played in a number of pictures and completed her studio high-school course. Then, when a shift of studio policy occurred, Colleen, who by now was 16, was released from her contract—seems she was considered too old for kid parts and too young for romantic roles. Her reaction to this was a decision to continue her studies in sociology.

By this time Colleen had an agent and he wanted to submit her to other studios. But Colleen would not be diverted. She found what she wanted, scholastically, in Brigham Young University at Provo, Utah, and left for there with enough money to keep her going for one semester. Where she would get the rest of the money for the course, she didn't know but she hoped that either she'd be able to find work in Provo, or that something else would happen.

Something else did—in the form of a

that's hollywood!

Yvonne de Carlo tells about the starlet who met another starlet and said, "Darling, you look wonderful. What happened?" . . . Description of a producer's wife, "She's so fat she outnumbers herself two to one." . . . Speaking about a pet hate, Ella Raines hissed, "If they'd cast her as Lady Godiva, the horse would steal the scene!" . . . "I guess it's true that men find beauty in a girl's mind, but it isn't where they start looking," remarks Judy Canova . . . "She looked good enough to eat," says Irving Hoffman. "And boy, did she!"

from "Hollywood Merry-Go-Round" by Andrew Hecht

YOU WON'T BE EMBARRASSED WHEN you use this higher type

INTIMATE FEMININE HYGIENE

Easier, Daintier...Yet One of the MOST EFFECTIVE METHODS!

Greaseless Suppository Assures Continuous Medication For Hours

Young wives are mighty enthusiastic about Zonitors. This higher type intimate feminine cleanliness is one of the MOST EFFECTIVE methods ever discovered. Zonitors are by far more convenient and less embarrassing to use — SO POWERFULLY GERMICIDAL yet ABSOLUTELY safe to tissues. They're positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-smarting.

Easy To Carry If Away From Home

Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories. They are not the type that quickly melt away. Instead, they release powerful germicidal properties for hours. They never leave any sticky residue.

No Tell-Tale Odor

Zonitors do not 'mask' offending odor. They actually DESTROY it. Help guard against infection. Zonitors kill every germ they touch. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE Zonitors immediately kill every reachable germ and keep them from multiplying. Buy Zonitors today!

Zonitors

(Each sealed in separate glass vial)

FREE: Mail this coupon today for free booklet sent in plain wrapper. Reveals frank intimate facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMR-39, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Don't take chances with acid indigestion

Take

TUMS

wherever you go!

Whenever you travel — by car, by plane, by bus, by train—buy Tums first! Tums relieve acid indigestion and heartburn almost instantly. You feel better fast! With Tums, nothing to mix or stir. And Tums contain no baking soda (bicarbonate). So, no danger of overalkalizing, no acid rebound. Travel in comfort. Travel with Tums! Night and day, at home or away, always carry TUMS. Quick relief for acid indigestion.

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

for the tummy

TUMS are antacid, not a laxative. For a laxative, use mild, dependable, all-vegetable NR Tablets (Nature's Remedy). Get a 25c box today.

Destroy UNWANTED HAIR

TEMPORARY RELIEF IS NOT ENOUGH

Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure unwanted hair is gone FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the Mahler Method safely and efficiently. Used successfully all over the world for 50 years.

Send 6c coin or stamps TODAY for booklet, "NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU."

Mahler's, Inc., Dept. 36-C, East Providence, R. I.

EAR NOISES?

If you suffer from those miserable ear noises and are Hard of Hearing due to catarrh of the head, write us NOW for proof of the good results our simple home treatment has accomplished for a great many people. NOTHING TO WEAR. Many past 70 report ear noises gone and hearing fine. Send NOW for proof and 30 days trial offer.

THE ELMO CO., Dept. 115, Davenport, Iowa

commercial photographer whose name is C. A. Peterson. He happened to see a Warner Brothers' publicity still of Colleen and went to the studio looking for her.

Meanwhile, things had started off rather badly for Colleen at Brigham Young University. She liked the place but the other students seemed to shy away from her. Most of them were extremely strait-laced and Colleen soon discovered that they looked with narrow-eyed suspicion on a person coming from California. When, in addition, a person happened to come from Hollywood—which, they'd heard, was a sink of wild revelry and sin—well, there were two strikes on her!

It took time to overcome this nonsensical prejudice—three semesters, in fact—but Colleen accomplished it. She was even elected "Friendly Queen" and given quarters in the honor house.

But that's getting a little ahead of the story. Three semesters took more money than Colleen had brought to Provo. That's where photographer Peterson comes in.

Peterson showed up at the university and talked Colleen into posing for some commercial shots that he thought he could sell to magazines and advertising agencies. He was right. Colleen made the covers of a dozen of the country's top periodicals. Her face and form began to appear in newspaper ads and on billboards. The money she got went for her tuition. But life still couldn't be lived lavishly. And that's what got Colleen and her roomie, Betty Clark, into trouble.

It was the second summer, and a hot day, when Colleen and Betty fell to talking about swimming. But neither of them had bathing suits. Colleen sighed and said she thought she'd go for a walk. Before she left she looked at the chintz curtains over the window. They were white with a green flower design. "Wouldn't that make up into dreamy swimsuits?" she murmured. Betty also looked at the curtains—and nodded slowly.

solid seamstress . . .

Does the rest of this incident have to be told? The day got warmer. Colleen returned. There were big missing gaps in the chintz and Betty was the most industrious little needlewoman you ever saw, sewing the gaps into bras and shorts.

So the girls had their swim. That evening, when the depredation was discovered by the house mother, both of them were thrown out on their pretty and still water-logged ears. Life got a little tougher. The two girls, and three others who happened to be roomless at the time, had to move into a two-room basement apartment.

It was on a vacation home from school that Colleen happened to visit the Presbyterian church several times and experienced a sensation that she explains only by saying, "I just felt that I was in the right place . . . that I was where I belonged."

She was still thinking of this toward the end of her third semester in Brigham Young when her money ran short again and she knew she'd have to leave school. Some time before, she had received word from her agent that he thought he could place her in a studio but she had declined again. She had even received a note from Ivan Kahn, head talent scout of 20th Century-Fox. He had wanted to know whether she was taking dramatic lessons and whether she'd be interested in a picture career. She had replied that she was not studying dramatics and was intent on continuing her school work.

Now she fished out this note from Kahn and wrote him again, asking if he would like to have her drop in and see him. She got an immediate and affirmative reply and a month later, when she returned home, she made two quick visits. The first was to Hollywood Presbyterian Church. The second was to Kahn.

She began her church mission activities and her studio work at the same time. She found she loved them both, but that some people couldn't understand the combination.

"They are so far apart," they said. The curious notion that there's something sinful about acting is a widespread belief.

She was troubled about that for a long time. Then she thought she had the answer. "If I felt that if it was God's will that I shouldn't be in the business I would leave it," she told her mother. "I love acting and see no reason, unless He leads otherwise, why I should drop it just because some people have the absurd idea that it's a naughty business."

And from what has happened since, Colleen feels even more certain that she is obeying God's will. She had minor parts in a few pictures and then was notified to take riding lessons because she was to be starred in Green Grass of Wyoming. For five weeks she was at the riding stables daily—and then the word came that Peggy Cummins was to get the part instead. It was in executive Ben Lyon's office that she was told and Ben prepared for tears after his announcement. But there were none.

Colleen was calm. She was already telling herself that this was the will of Someone who knew better. It would turn out as He desired.

There was no going home to be comforted by her mother or friends, no hysterics or mourning over hard luck or lost opportunity. There was a Christian College Conference going on at Redlands, California, where she could be helpful. She left for it immediately.

It was while she was at the Conference that she was summoned to answer a long-distance telephone call. It was Ben Lyon. It was true that she was not going to star in Green Grass, he said, but there were other plans. She was to get a top role in Walls of Jericho, and after that a star-making part in Chicken Every Sunday.

Colleen was thankful as she returned to the meeting after the call. She had come to help others and she had found out that she had been helped herself.

That, Colleen Townsend is convinced, is God's way. THE END

Solution to from play to film
(page 100)

We told you it was easy! Hope your definitions match the ones below.

PLAY	FORT
SLAY	FORE
SLAT	FIRE
SLOT	FIRM
SOOT	FILM
SORT

You'll find the screen story of Colleen Townsend's newest movie, Chicken Every Sunday, in the March issue of Screen Stories Magazine.

STATE OF THE REUNION

(Continued from page 19)

means pretty tough going, but John and I love each other—and now we really think we can make a success of our marriage."

John is to earn his $60,000 a picture and Gloria is to earn her $1,500 a week. All monies earned are to be pooled in common bank accounts or common investments for the mutual need of the family, and under no circumstances are Gloria and John to let their professional careers impinge on their home-life.

"In the whole history of Hollywood there have been very few professional couples who made a go of their marriages," said one of John's friends recently. "What Gloria and John are trying to do is a very difficult thing. Gloria's only 23. She's going to try to be actress, mother, and housewife, all in one. If those kids don't make some iron-clad rules, they're sunk. When they come home from their studios at night, they've got to park their careers in the garage right next to their automobiles. . . . They were, you must remember, married under a misapprehension, and it's taken them time to get adjusted."

mistaken idea . . .

Now, the "misapprehension" referred to was the belief on the part of John Payne when he married Gloria in 1944 that she was fully prepared to renounce her career, as promising as it was, for matrimony.

"I discussed it with her," John has said, "and she told me very definitely that it was marriage she wanted, not a screen career. I should have suspected at the time that she was just being carried away by the newness of her feelings. But I didn't, and that's the basis on which I married her.

"I thought she'd given up her career for good. After our first baby was born, however, it became clear to me that Gloria wasn't satisfied with being just a mother and a wife, and that's when our disputes started. She wanted something more."

And she wanted it badly, too, because despite her promise that her career, compared to marriage, meant nothing; despite the fact that she knew her return to film-work might upset John, she took the lead opposite Mickey Rooney in Summer Holiday.

That did it. Quibbles developed into quarrels. There was a fundamental breach in the marriage. Temporarily, life in the Payne household became unbearable and Gloria, with her nine-month-old daughter, left home and checked into the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel.

Eventually, she effected a reconciliation. In a few months she was pregnant again, and any thought she had of continuing her screen career were submerged by thoughts of the new family addition.

After Tommy was born in February 1948, there began to surge through Gloria once more that goading, driving, compelling desire to act, to sing, to get before the cameras. Gloria took inventory of herself. She was only 23. She had plenty of beauty, plenty of talent, plenty of experience.

"I've got show business in my blood," she explains. "I can't help it if I'm not content with cooking and taking care of children. I love John but we're two different people. We come from two different strains. John's folks come from Virginia and a settled, home-loving atmosphere. My people come from show business, and it's only natural for me to want to be in it."

Up until a few weeks ago, John Payne didn't agree with that premise which was why he and Gloria were separating every few months.

Stubborn by nature, Payne is a tough boy to move when he thinks he's right.

But he's also very fair-minded.

He is not unalterably opposed to separate film careers. He is merely wise enough to know that the divorce rate among married couples having separate movie careers is tremendous, and he doesn't want a divorce.

Basically an intellectual, John realizes that acting is tough work, that it frequently exhausts and irritates a man, that when an actor such as he comes home tightly-strung and tired, he likes to have a wife ready and able to calm and relax him. What sort of married life will he and Gloria have when they both come home tired and on edge? What sort of married life will they have when he's on location and she's at home and vice-versa?

John used to think that if he could keep Gloria happy at home, their marriage would be a success. Apparently, that isn't true. Some married women need two careers and can manage them. "In the past," says John, "I didn't think that Gloria could."

Now, however, Gloria has convinced John that she's entitled to the opportunity to prove that she can. At this moment in her life, as much as she loves John, Gloria simply cannot see staying at home day after day. Constitutionally, she just can't—not when she can become a great screen star, not when she can have her name flashing on theater marquees throughout the nation, not when she can stroll down Wilshire Boulevard or Broadway or Main Street with dozens of kids tugging at her sleeves for autographs, not when the whole dazzling world of success and admiration awaits with open, beckoning portals.

Belatedly, reluctantly, hopefully and with misgivings, John Payne has given in—and his wife is on her way to stardom. Whether Gloria will now rise to heights greater than her husband and lose him in her wake, whether she will win fortune and lose her heart, as so many have before her—no one at this point can say.

The fact remains that Gloria's state of reunion at this writing is not only a reunion with the man she so passionately loves but a reunion with the career she so passionately wants. THE END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Jimmy Durante arrived in town recently for a photographers' benefit. As he got off the train, Jimmy and the press exchanged exuberant greetings. Mr. Durante would rush forward, shake hands vigorously and shout, "I LOVE reporters." While this was going on, a little old lady was standing in the background, wistfully watching the gay commotion. Jimmy Durante spotted her, dashed over and said, "Are you a reporter?" She shook her head. "No? Well, I love you anyway." Then he gave her a great big hug which left her blushing and beaming. What a big moment Jimmy gave to a little life!

Margaret Ann McGuire
New York City

STOP CORNS!

CORNS—SORE TOES

CALLOUSES

BUNIONS

END PAIN INSTANTLY

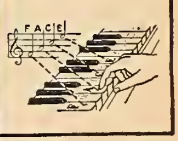
Take this famous foot authority's advice: At the first sign of sore toes from tight shoes apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Discomfort ends instantly and corns stopped before they can develop! But—if you have corns, callouses or bunions — thin, soothing, cushioning, protective Zino-pads will relieve your pain at once!

Remove Corns, Callouses

You'll marvel, too, how the separate Medications included with Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly remove corns, callouses. At Drug, Shoe, Department Stores.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

STOP Scratching



Relieve Itch in a Jiffy

Sufferers from the torturing itch caused by eczema, pimples, scales, scabies, athlete's foot, "factory" itch, and other itch troubles, are praising cooling, liquid D.D.D. Prescription. This time-proved medication—developed by Dr. D.D. Dennis—positively relieves that cruel, burning itch. Greaseless and stainless. Soothes and comforts even the most intense itching in a jiffy. A 35c trial bottle proves its merits or your money back. Ask your druggist today for D. D. D. Prescription.

Easy as A-B-C

Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher

LEARN AT HOME THIS MONEY SAVING WAY

Simple as A-B-C. Your lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. You read real notes—no "numbers" or trick music. Some of our 850,000 students are band LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. Soon you are playing popular music.
Mail coupon for our illustrated Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention your favorite instrument. U. S. School of Music, 1443 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y.10,N.Y. (51st Anniversary)

FREE BOOKLET

U. S. School of Music, 1443 Brunswick Bldg.,N.Y.10,N.Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).
Have you Instrument?.....Instrument?.....
Name.....
(Please Print)
Address.....

CAT'S PAW
Finest Rubber Heels & Soles!

A REAL MIDGET RADIO!
CARRY IN POCKET OR PURSE
Works on new diode—NEEDS NO TUBES, BATTERIES OR ELECTRIC "PLUG-INS." Plays years for nothing! IN BEAUTIFUL RED PLASTIC.
GETS 25-50 MI—GUARANTEED!
SEND ONLY $1.00 (bill, ck., mo.) and pay postman $2.99 C.O.D. plus postage or send $3.99 and we pay postage. SENT COMPLETE, READY TO PLAY ON simple attachment. JUST THE MIDGET TO LISTEN AT HOME, IN BED, IN HOTELS, SCHOOL, MOST ANYWHERE, ANYTIME! Wonderful gifts for anyone! Amazingly low-priced! Order Now!
MIDWAY CO. Dept. TMM-3 KEARNEY, NEBR.

HEMSTITCHER
Both for $1.00
Hemstitch on any sewing machine with this handy attachment. Does two piece, criss-cross, inlaid, circular and hemstitching for pleats; also tucking, smocking and picoting. Makes rugs, comforters, slippers, etc. out of any material. Easy directions included
BUTTON HOLER
Makes button holes on your sewing machine instead of by hand. Also darns stockings, sews buttons, zippers; and can be used for quilting. Sews in any direction—front, back or sideways.
SEND NO MONEY—Merely send your name, address and pay postman $1.00 plus postage on arrival. Or, send $1.00 with order, and we mail attachments postage paid. You risk nothing. Satisfaction guaranteed or $1.00 back
LELANE CO. Dept. DM39 Box 571 Kansas City 10, Mo.

FREE TO ALL WHO NEED MONEY
I'll help you get extra cash to fill your pocketbook—to live on. Supply my food and household products to regular customers. No previous experience or capital needed. I'll send FREE an assortment of fine, full-size products to test and show. Start near your home, full or spare time. Gift premiums, big monthly premiums. Rush your name and home address today for free outfit. Hurry!
BLAIR, Dept. 360-EC, Lynchburg, Va.

Are YOU a STAR OF TOMORROW?
YOU may have talent for motion pictures, radio or television. Act NOW for a career in SINGING, DRAMATICS, MUSIC, DANCING, ANNOUNCING!
SEND PHOTO OR SNAPSHOT TODAY FOR FREE UNUSUAL PLAN!
HOLLYWOOD CASTING DIRECTORY
5109 A HOLLYWOOD BLVD. HOLLYWOOD 27, CAL.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 48 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 4910, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!

Hair OFF Face
Lips...Arms...Legs
Now Happy! I had ugly superfluous hair...was unloved...discouraged. Tried many things...even razors. Then I developed a simple, inexpensive method that brought satisfactory results. Its regular use helps thousands retain admiration, love, happiness. My FREE book about Superfluous Hair explains method, proves success. Mailed in plain envelope. Also TRIAL OFFER. Write MME. ANNETTE LANZETTE, P. O. Box 4040, Mdse. Mart, Dept. 511, Chicago, Ill.

GOOD SKATES

(Continued from page 50)

than I do. We hustled over to the bright little stand that a fellow named Homer Shields runs. The aroma of sizzling frankfurters and frying doughnuts and hot coffee was almost too much to bear.

Homer's been doing a roaring trade for 15 years and it's easy to see why. He knows almost everybody in Hollywood who's ever been on skates, and he knows if they like coffee with or coffee without.

Soon as he spotted Donald O'Connor he whipped out a toasted bun, loaded it with mustard, popped in a frankfurter and handed it over without a word. For Gwen, he omitted the mustard and drew out a chocolate peanut bar.

"And coffee, please," said Gwen.

"Without sugar," said Homer. "And that goes for Marsh Thompson, too."

Marsh Thompson, at the moment, was going for Barbara, and almost dropped the cup.

time out . . .

Armed with paper napkins and spoons and popcorn and nuts and sodas and 'burgers and whatever else we could lay our hands on we marched off to the benches and started eating as if we hadn't for three months.

As we ate, we watched the professional skaters practicing. There were a few kids in their 'teens who'd been skating here every day for the past five years in the hopes that this year Sonja Henie would choose them for her show.

"I wonder how long it would take me to make the grade," mused Roddy.

I looked at him pityingly and offered him a peanut.

"No kidding," he said. "Maybe if I practiced real hard this afternoon . . ."

"We'll send a wire to Sonja," said John Derek. "Ask her to come down and watch."

"There are a couple of guys ahead of him," grinned Farley, pointing to the rink.

Roddy bit thoughtfully into his hot dog. Suddenly he said grimly, "Here goes," leapt to his feet and made for the ice. Lurching crazily, he scooted onto the rink.

"Look at me," he shouted. "No hands!"

"No feet either!" yelled back Marsh Thompson.

That unnerved poor Roddy completely. He careened toward a plump matron who was pulling a small red-headed boy by the hand, lost his balance completely, and skidded up to her feet, where he lay.

"Why, it's Roddy McDowall!" squealed the lady incredulously. "Look, Billy, it's Roddy McDowall!"

Billy gazed at the inert mass which finally raised itself on one elbow.

"How do you do," said Roddy feebly.

"Can I have your autograph?" demanded Billy.

"If I can still use my hand," said Roddy politely, struggling to get up.

The plump lady and her little boy clutched Roddy's waist and heaved him to his feet. Immediately, the three of them began to swing round in a circle. Faster and faster they spun until it seemed as if they'd surely take off.

By this time Donald O'Connor, Marsh Thompson and Farley Granger had dropped their hot dogs and dashed to the rescue. First they pried the little boy loose from Roddy; then they stopped his mother in her mad flight and separated her; then they managed to evade Roddy's wildly clutching arms and led him to the side railing.

But that was not the end. The plump lady approached Roddy menacingly.

"Young man," she announced, "I've never taken a spill in my life."

While Roddy thought of an answer to that one, the little boy inquired nastily, "What about that autograph?"

"Of course," said Roddy. "Delighted. Delighted." He hastily found his pen and scrawled a few lines which he handed to the boy's mother.

The effect was amazing. The matron beamed. "Oh," she cooed, "Oh, that's lovely."

Roddy had written: "To Billy: One of the finest skaters I've ever met. You have a great future, kid."

And that was that.

The rest of the afternoon was almost an anti-climax. Roddy stayed off the ice.

A few of us sat around just watching the skaters and talking a little. Barbara and Marsh told us about their wedding plans—the formal satin gown, the flowers in the church, the honeymoon in Mexico . . .

And they told us about this peculiar car of theirs that doesn't fit into any garage—or else maybe garages have shrunk lately. Anyway, they can't find a place to live because of this automobile—but it's their precious possession and they'd sooner sleep on Laguna Beach than part with it.

Meanwhile, out on the ice, Corinne Calvet had gathered an audience of admirers. She'd swung into the center of the rink and was improvising a little ballet. The way she did it you pictured a whole corps de behind her—or else the very lake in northern France where she'd first learned how. Then she stopped, a little surprised that people had been watching, and glided over to us for more coffee.

Before Roddy could talk her into giving him a lesson, Corinne and Pati were caught up in a discussion of their lives in Paris before they came here and married their American husbands. It must have been a fascinating conversation, even though it was in French, and so fast that the rest of us couldn't catch a word.

Suddenly, Pati put her hand over her

HOW TIME FLIES!

■ Robert Taylor was starring in The Crowd Roars, which our reviewer called "the best prize-fighting picture ever to come out of Hollywood." Of Taylor's performance it was said: "His bag punching and his expert handling of the gloves will win him many admirers among men."—From a 1938 issue of Modern Screen

* * *

On the set of The Son Of Frankenstein, the director asked Boris Karloff to please regain his composure so the scene could be shot. "I can't," giggled the monster, "Lugosi's making faces at me."—From a 1938 issue of Modern Screen

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL
MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST
Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.
Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c. (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading Druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925 Strathmoor Station, Dept. 2309, Detroit 27, Michigan.
SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE
©1935 LAKE LAB

HOT WATER QUICK!
Amazing Pocket-Size ELECTRIC WATER HEATER
PORTABLE!..HEATS WATER FAST!
Place in water, plug in electric socket, BOIL-QWIK goes to work at once. Thousands use for bathing, clothes, dishes, shaving, cleaning cream separators, milk pails, making mashes, watering fowl, etc. Pocket-size! Portable! Follow directions. FREE information. How to get a Second Heater without costing you money, sent with your heater. SEND NO MONEY! Rush name, address, we mail BOIL-QWIK at once. Pay postman $2.95 plus C.O.D. postal charges. If not pleased, return within 10 days for refund. WRITE TODAY!
$2.95
AGENTS Distributors Write for full details.
ZEVEX CO. 11 E. HUBBARD, Dept. C-67 CHICAGO 11, ILLINOIS

LIKE to DRAW?
Use spare time at home preparing for profitable art career. A complete home study course with money back agreement. For details and talent test give age and occupation.
AMERICAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL ART
DIVISION D, BOX 8066 . DALLAS 5, TEXAS

OVER $2.00 EVERY HOUR!
Sell name plates for front doors
Free Sample, Write Dept. 151
National Engravers
214 Summer St. Boston, Mass.

WRITERS
Conscientious sales service for your short stories, articles, books and plays. Send today for FREE circular "Your Road To Writing Success."
DANIEL S. MEAD LITERARY AGENCY
Dept. D-3, 264 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.

WIN CASH CONTESTS
WIN next contest you enter. GENERAL CONTEST BULLETIN has helped others win. Big winners tell secrets, teach how to win BIG PRIZES. Lists current contests.
SEND 25c FOR SAMPLE COPY.
GENERAL CONTEST BULLETIN
1609 East 5th St. Dept. 104C Duluth 5, Minn.

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter
KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. © I. P. Inc.
KLUTCH CO., Box 4987C, ELMIRA, N. Y.

mouth. "Oh, excuse me," she said, "I forgot I was talking French."

"Cela m'est égal," said Roddy with a nonchalant Gallic shrug.

"Well, I can't understand a word," said Geraldine Brooks. "Parlez English, please."

In English it was easy; it was noisy and confused. Geraldine and Farley went off for a spin, which made room for Bob Arthur on the bench. He borrowed Roddy's pen and drew a plan of his new house for Barbara and Marsh to look over. It was a modern style house on the top of a hill with a center pillar holding it there.

"We'll rent it," said Marsh.

"We'll buy it," said Barbara.

"I haven't built it," said Bob. After the threats had fallen, Bob promised to let them have the plans when the place was actually finished.

And then they all took a last turn on the ice—Bob and Betty, Don and Gwen, John and Pati Derek, Corinne and John Bromfield, Marsh and Barbara—that left Roddy and me warming the bench, sighing wistfully.

"I tell you—" Roddy said.

"I know," I answered wearily, "I know. It's really easy—like riding a bicycle . . ."

THE END

I'M NOT MARRIED

(Continued from page 21)

with whom I grew up around Bakersfield. I'm not a very envious guy—but a few weeks ago when I heard from Danny, I sure did envy him!

He told me that for the past year or so he'd been working in commercial abalone fishing in Laguna Beach. You know—wearing a rubber suit and diver's helmet, and pulling the abalone shells off the rocks and reefs along the shore. Six months ago he met a girl in Santa Ana, which is only about 15 miles from Laguna. When he phoned me the other day, it was to announce that he'd married his Phoebe, and he kidded me about all the talk there's been about Gail and me.

"Brother, how long, how long?" he asked. "I'll be a father before you're a husband, if you don't hurry up!"

I didn't try to explain, but I did ask him how often he'd seen Phoebe during the six months. He seemed surprised. "Why . . . every day, practically!" he replied. "What else?"

What else? Well, I remember when I first met Gail. I was visiting the Paramount studios and she was entering with Billy De Wolfe. Billy and I know each other and he introduced us, naturally. Seemed to me that Gail took the introduction quite casually, and this kind of hurt, because I'd been wanting to meet her for a long time. When I was in the Navy I saw her in Our Hearts Were Young and Gay. There was one scene in which she stood on a balcony, her eyes following the flight of pigeons all about her, and that stayed in my memory from then on.

But there she was . . . just casual . . . so I guess I tried to act the same way. Nothing might have come out of it if I hadn't run across her at a party weeks later. Her attitude seemed about the same but this time I decided to find out if I stood a chance. I asked her for a date—and the answer was yes!

That was to be our first date together—only I wasn't able to keep it. While shooting a bathtub scene, I slipped and both sprained and gashed my ankle. I sent word. There was no reply.

The next time we saw each other was when Gail was picked up by some friends

HERE IS THRILLING NEW HOPE
DO YOU WANT LONGER HAIR
THEN TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM FOR 7 QUICK DAYS
Just try this System on your HAIR 7 days and see if you are really enjoying the pleasure of LONGER HAIR that so often captures Love and Romance for you.
● Hair May Get Longer
when scalp and hair conditions are normal and the dry, brittle, breaking off hair can be retarded by supplementing the natural hair oils, it has a chance to get longer and much more beautiful. Just try the easy JUELENE System 7 days and let your mirror prove results. Your money back if not delighted. See if Juelene's tendency to help your hair to become softer, silkier, more lustrous than it has been before—in just one short week helps your hair gain its normal beauty.
SEND NO MONEY—Fully Guaranteed
Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. Then let your mirror PROVE thrilling results. JUELENE comes in 2 Forms ☐ Pomade. ☐ Liquid. SEND FOR IT TODAY! C.O.D. $1.00 plus Government charges. Fully guaranteed. Money back if not delighted. Write!
JUEL CO., 4727 N. Damen, Dept. P603, CHICAGO 25, ILL.

WANT TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE?
EASY TO TRAIN AT HOME
ACT NOW—HELP FILL THE NEED
Now you can prepare for practical experience as a Trained Practical Nurse in spare time. Many earn while learning. Ages 18 to 55. High school not necessary. Easy payments. Write for free information and sample lesson pages.
WAYNE SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL NURSING, INC.
2301 N. Wayne Ave., Desk K-38, CHICAGO 14, ILL.

BROKEN JEWELRY WANTED
All kinds. Highest cash prices paid for rings, jewelry, spectacles, gold teeth, diamonds, broken and usable watches, etc. Cash mailed promptly. Write for FREE shipping container.
LOWE'S, Dept. MS
Holland Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Help Relieve Distress Of MONTHLY FEMALE WEAKNESS
Are you troubled by distress of female functional periodic disturbances? Does this make you suffer from pain, feel so nervous, tired—at such times? Then DO try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. Pinkham's is famous to help girls and women troubled this way.
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Romantic

Golden Blondeness

thanks to NESTLE LITE

Yes, Nestle Lite leaves your hair thrillingly beautiful to look at—thrillingly soft to touch. This delicately scented creamy lather is quick, easy and delightfully pleasant to use. Its patented conditioning oil actually conditions hair as it lightens it—leaving not a hint of that dry, straw-y look you've always dreaded. Get Nestle Lite today!

DARK HAIR on arms, legs, upper lip bother you? Banish 'em from sight with Nestle Lite.

At drug and dept. stores—$1.00 . . . or

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

The Nestle-LeMur Co., Meriden, Conn.

Please send me (tax and postage paid) full size Nestle Lite with instructions. $1.00 enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State..... DSU-3-49

Nestle LITE — made by Nestle, originators of permanent waving and the famous Nestle COLORINSE.

red benson's movie matinee the radio show for every movie-goer!

LISTEN to this gay quiz show based on the pages of Modern Screen, your movie magazine. Hear members of the audience hilariously enact scenes from famous movies, and join them in exciting and novel movie-guessing games.

Saturday mornings on your Mutual station—See your local schedule

3:00 to 3:30 P. M. Monday through Friday, WOR, New York City of mine and taken to visit me in my apartment where I was laid up. When we did get around to our first night out together I was on crutches and not much fun, I guess.

Ever since, it's been pretty much that way—what with pictures, play and production schedules coming between us. In the past year Gail has made six pictures, each taking about six weeks. (The next one of hers you'll see, by the way, is El Paso.) In that time I've made two pictures, spent eight weeks in summer stock in New England, spent six more weeks in Texas, Oklahoma, San Francisco and New Orleans. How much time do you suppose this has allowed us to have together?

The most frequently-used greeting we have when we meet is, "Howdy, Stranger!"

Even my own father doesn't seem to understand our situation.

"I was 22 when I married your mother," he points out. "She was only 18 and we went together less than half a year."

If Gail and I had married six months after we met, it would have meant that we'd have to have gone before the altar after having seen each other only about five times!

a nice plan . . .

Recently I made When a Man's a Man for Allied Artists. Some of the scenes were shot on location in Arizona at a ranch about a hundred miles from Gallup, New Mexico. I learned from the shooting schedule one afternoon that I'd have a day free the following week—and that day was Gail's birthday. I wrote her I was "coming in on Tuesday"—but without mentioning I knew it was her birthday. I wanted that, and my present, to be a surprise.

Everything looked swell. Then Gail checked at the home office of Allied in Hollywood to make sure there was no change in the schedule and I'd be able to make it. Somebody stood on his head to look at the calendar and told her she must be mistaken—that instead of getting in the following Tuesday, I'd be in the Tuesday after that. Gail sighed . . . it was so typical of the way things go with us.

Well, I drove the hundred miles to Gallup on Gail's birthday and then took the four-hour plane trip to Hollywood and, I thought, Gail. But when I phoned on my arrival she wasn't home. I was pretty sore at first. But then I cooled down. Experience told me that something neither one of us could control must have gone wrong.

It took me two hours to locate her. Some friends had taken her out for a small birthday party at one of the valley clubs. We had a half hour together and then it was time to go back to lonesome Arizona.

Of course, Gail and I can see each other when we're making pictures. But it doesn't work out very well. If we wait until evening, there's hardly time to talk since we've both been up since dawn and generally have two to six pages of script to go over, and sometimes memorize, before we can close our eyes for the day. And generally you're too tired when evening arrives to go stepping—feel more like going to bed as early as you can so that the next morning won't come around too soon.

Early last summer, Gail and I had a wonderful invitation to make a Honolulu trip with two couples we know. The husbands and wives concerned have been close to us for years. The chances are they knew something like this would be our only opportunity to have a vacation together, safe from the interruption of work.

Boy! I remember how I pictured Gail and myself lolling around the beach at Waikiki! We talked about it excitedly, decided to accept, made hurried preparations.

And on the day the boat sailed, I was en route to New England for my stock work and Gail was rehearsing a new film!

We don't even kid each other about that Honolulu trip we never made. It's too touchy a subject. And nowadays we hesitate a long time before we plan any kind of a time together; Nothing is surer than elaborate planning as a guarantee we'll be apart when the time comes!

Okay. It's time for a natural question. In fact, a friend put it to me the other day:

"If you really care for each other, why do you let yourselves be split by your careers?" he asked. "Why don't you make up your minds that it's to be a married life together or your career—one or the other—and act accordingly? One of you could quit the profession—and that would solve the whole problem."

Should I quit?

If I did, the first thing I'd have to do is say goodbye to Gail—because it would take me years of work in any other line to establish myself to a point where I could marry and offer any sense of security.

Should I ask her to quit?

She's in the midst of a career into which years of hope and work have gone. Should I insist that she upset this status—which, after all, offers her a secure, comfortable way of life ahead—until I can, with reasonable assurance, guarantee the same sort of future?

Now, I'm not saying that Gail puts her career before anything else. In fact, I'm pretty sure she wouldn't let it stand in her way if she made up her mind to marry. But I want her to have that career—I wouldn't feel right taking it from her.

Of course, if I quit, that doesn't mean that Gail couldn't go on and be tremendously successful. And with your wife a big star a fellow wouldn't have to worry about money. But I'm just not that way.

I want to get married once—and once only. I want to support my wife and family, and I want to support them, not play at it. I think Gail agrees with my feeling in the matter.

It's not easy to go on like this—but we haven't any other good choice. All we know about ourselves can be said in a few sentences. We know we're young. We know we're interested in each other. We know we're interested in our careers. What else can we do but work it out from that point on?

THE END

"Miss Bennett, please! Just read that letter back to me."

IF YOU USE Lipstick,
YOU SHOULD ALSO USE
Maybelline*
Millions of smart, modern girls are realizing that made-up lips make neglected eyes appear dull and drab by contrast.
It's so easy to give your eyes their full share of beauty-magic—with MAYBELLINE! A few simple brush strokes of this famous Mascara will make your lashes appear naturally darker, longer and more luxuriant. And it's so easy to form graceful, expressive eyebrows with the soft, smooth Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Then behold the difference! Your eyes are so much lovelier! Your entire face is more attractive, for your make-up is perfectly balanced —completely flattering.
So never, never forget to accent your eyes, daytime or evening. Only be sure you use MAYBELLINE, the eye make-up in good taste—preferred by smart women everywhere.
1 MAYBELLINE CAKE MASCARA in beautiful, gold-tone metal vanity, $1. Refills, 50c. Velvet Black, Brown, Midnight Blue. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.)
2 MAYBELLINE CREAM MASCARA (applied without water) comes in handy leatherette case, $1. (Also in 25c and 10c sizes.) Velvet Black, Brown, Midnight Blue.
3 MAYBELLINE EYEBROW PENCIL soft, smooth quality, fine point — so easy to use! Purse size, 10c. Professional size, 25c. Black, Dark Brown and Light Brown.
4 MAYBELLINE EYE SHADOW smooth, creamy, in subtle shades: Blue, Brown, Blue-Gray, Green, Violet and Gray.
Maybelline
WORLD'S FAVORITE EYE MAKE-UP

Always Buy CHESTERFIELD

"Everybody likes Chesterfield because it's MILDER it's MY cigarette."

Linda Darnell

Starring in

"A LETTER TO THREE WIVES"

A 20th Century-Fox Production

"I've been smoking Chesterfields ever since I've been smoking. They buy the best cigarette tobacco grown . . . it's MILD, sweet tobacco."

M. H. Griffin

TOBACCO FARMER
BAILEY, N.C.

(FROM A SERIES OF STATEMENTS BY PROMINENT TOBACCO FARMERS)

MAKE YOURS THE MILDER CIGARETTE

Copyright 1949, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

MAR 10 1949

april 15¢

modern screen

SHIRLEY TEMPLE SPECIAL ISSUE

Exclusive!

Shirley's Dearest Memories

Intimate Photos at Home

Life Story in Pictures

Be lovelier... all over!

You can be lovelier from head to toe with the Camay Beauty Bath!
Bathe every day with new Bath-Size Camay and you give your arms, your back, your legs true complexion care. You'll rise from your bath clean, refreshed—your skin just touched with the flower-like fragrance of Camay, the Soap of Beautiful Women!

Bath-Size Camay

for your CAMAY BEAUTY BATH!

©CIB 181950

"Dentists say the IPANA way works!"

Junior model Mary Mohr shows how it can work for you, too

A dream dances . . . 21-year-old model Mary Mohr of Jersey City, clicks at a college prom. This popular gal brightens many a magazine page with a smile her beaux find irresistible!

"I follow the Ipana way to healthier gums and brighter teeth . . . because dentists say it works!" says Mary. Here's how her professionally approved Ipana dental care can work for you, too . . .

"See? The Ipana way is simple as 1, 2," says Mary:

1. Between regular visits to your dentist, brush all tooth surfaces with Ipana at least twice a day.
2. Then massage gums the way your dentist advises—to stimulate gum circulation. (Ipana's unique formula actually helps stimulate your gums. You can feel the invigorating tingle!)

Try this for healthier gums, brighter teeth, an Ipana smile. Ipana refreshes your mouth and breath, too. Ask your dentist about Ipana and massage. A good dentifrice like a good dentist is never a luxury!

YES, 8 OUT OF 10 DENTISTS SAY:

Ipana dental care promotes Healthier gums, brighter teeth*

Products of Bristol-Myers

P.S. For correct brushing, use the DOUBLE DUTY Tooth Brush with the twist in the handle. 1000 dentists helped design it!

*In thousands of recent reports from all over the country.

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

APRIL, 1949

modern screen

the friendly magazine

special shirley temple section

SHIRLEY'S 21! 37
I DISCOVERED SHIRLEY TEMPLE ..... by Jay Gorney 38
LIVING LEGEND 40
HOW DEAR TO MY HEART ..... by Shirley Temple 44
CURLY-TOP TODAY ..... by Kirtley Baskette 46
SHIRLEY THEN AND NOW 52
SHIRLEY'S NEW MOVIES 53

other stories

MITCHUM ON TRIAL ..... by Lloyd Shearer 19
SECRETS OF THE BRIDE (Linda Christian-Tyrone Power) ..... by Maxine Smith 20
MADE IN HEAVEN (Anne Baxter-John Hodiak) ..... by Louis Pollock 54
THIS LOVE OF OURS ..... by Esther Williams 56
WHAT PRICE GLORY? (Olivia de Havilland) ..... by Preston Wallace 58
NO LOVE LOST (Farley Granger) ..... by Carl Schroeder 60
THE CASE OF THE HESITANT HEART (Greer Garson) ..... by Hedda Hopper 62
HOLLYWOOD'S BEST-KNOWN MYSTERY (Howard Duff) ..... by Sheilah Graham 64
CAN JUNE HAVER FIND HAPPINESS? ..... by Florabel Muir 66
I DON'T BLAME RITA! (Rita Hayworth) ..... by Eduardo Cansino 68
DEAR DADDY (letters from Elizabeth Taylor) ..... arranged by Ted and Jane Morris 70

features

THE INSIDE STORY 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6

departments

MOVIE REVIEWS ..... by Christopher Kane 24
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed) 34
FASHION 74
MUSIC: "Sweet and Hot" ..... by Leonard Feather 90
THE FANS ..... by Gloria Lampert 92

ON THE COVER: Shirley Temple Color Portrait by John Michle

Other picture credits, page 33

WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, associate editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
CAROL CARTER, beauty editor
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
VIOLA MOORE, associate editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
GLORIA LAMPERT, assistant editor
BEVERLY OTT, assistant editor
IRENE TURNER, research editor
NANCY WOOD, food editor

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York

Vol. 38, No. 5, April, 1949. Copyright, 1949, the Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York. Published monthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicago Advertising office, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois. George T. Delacarte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacarte, Vice-President. Single copy price, 15c in U.S. and Canada. Subscriptions in U.S.A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as second class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post office Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious. If the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

SONG-HITS!

9 of 'em, naturally!
including.
"Take Me Out To The Ball Game"
"Yes Indeedy"
"The Hayride Song"
"O'Brien To Ryan To Fineburg"
"It's Fate, Baby, It's Fate"
"She's The Right Girl For Me"
"Baby Doll"

MGM scores again with a singing, dancing,
romancing smash in
COLOR BY Technicolor!

FRANK SINATRA
ESTHER WILLIAMS
GENE KELLY

Take Me Out To The Ball Game

WITH BETTY GARRETT
EDWARD ARNOLD
JULES MUNSHIN

DIRECTED BY BUSBY BERKELEY
PRODUCED BY ARTHUR FREED

Screen Play by HARRY TUGEND and GEORGE WELLS • Story by GENE KELLY and STANLEY DONEN • A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

Don't Parents Ever Grow Up?

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER–Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

IT ALL STARTED when someone casually mentioned that Shirley Temple would be twenty-one in April. We congratulated each other and went down for our daily lunch. Little did we suspect that thereafter our hamburgers would be far between. That very afternoon we were lowered into the file cabinets. "When may we come out?" we wistfully inquired. No one answered. Several weeks later, breathing heavily, we staggered into the office with twenty-one years worth of Shirley Temple pictures in our arms. (They're now on pages 37 to 53.) Sitting in what had formerly been our chair, busily engaged at what had formerly been our typewriter, was a handsome stranger. Mournfully, we reached for our hat. Before we'd made the exit we felt a gentle pressure on our arm. It was the stranger. "My name," he said, "is Jay Gorney." We blinked. We stepped back. "Jay Gorney!" we whispered. "Why, you discovered Shirley Temple!" He bowed politely. We threw our hat into a corner and waited while Mr. Gorney finished his story. It's on page 38, the first piece in our Shirley Temple Birthday Issue, all of which we present with pride—and a little prejudice. For we've thumbed through this issue ourselves. We've found "scoops" (Shirley's first by-lined story on page 44); we've found "exclusive" pictures (of the Agars' home on page 48); and we've found that with Shirley Temple's kind cooperation our little book is just about the way we'd planned it. So Happy Birthday, Shirley—and happy reading to all of you . . .

WE WONDER HOW Farley Granger does it. There isn't a beautiful girl in Hollywood whose number he hasn't got—or a beautiful girl who wouldn't give him hers. Farley takes them all very calmly. Even when he goes out dancing he leaves his heart at home—with his movie scripts. Really. Turn to "No Love Lost" on page 60, you'll see what we mean . . .

TEA LEAVES DON'T make sense to Hedda Hopper, but diamond bracelets tell her plenty. (See page 62.) The one on Greer Garson's wrist tells her Greer's dotty if she doesn't marry Bud Fogelson in a hurry. Fact is, if Hedda were on the prowl, she'd have Mr. Fogelson at bay in his own backyard—and it isn't because he keeps oil wells there, either. It's just that Bud is one of the nicest guys around . . .

TEN YEARS AGO, Bert Parry dropped his banjo, said goodbye to the Reseda Wranglers (for whom he also crooned) and bought a camera. Bert Parry is now one of our photographers—has been for two years. At the beginning, he thought he'd be a cameraman for Warners. Warners thought he'd make a better messenger boy. For a while they were both mistaken. He was a messenger boy who kept looking for angles. Finally, he clicked with Warners! During the war he photographed planes for the Navy. After the war he photographed stories for Holiday, Collier's, True, Life and other publications. Then the stars came into his life. He camped in the Gotham hotel in New York and caught them coming and going. He was doing fine, too, except for his homesickness. We fixed that. We offered him a job in Southern California. He came. We figure if we can't keep him—the weather will . . .

IT'S THE CHEER LEADER OF THE YEAR!!

Loretta Young

Van Johnson

MOTHER is a Freshman

Color by TECHNICOLOR

WITH RUDY VALLEE

BARBARA LAWRENCE

ROBERT ARTHUR • BETTY LYNN • GRIFF BARNETT • KATHLEEN HUGHES

Directed by LLOYD BACON • Produced by WALTER MOROSCO

Screen Play by Mary Loos and Richard Sale • Based on a Story by Raphael Blau

20th CENTURY-FOX

LOUELLA PARSONS'

Good news

When Keenan Wynn and Betty Butler decided to elope, it was late Friday night. The banks were closed, naturally, and Keenan's business manager, who countersigns all his checks, was at Palm Springs for the weekend.

So what does Keenan do but "swipe" the funds from the Motorcycle Club, of which he is treasurer.

"I had the collections from the meeting of the night before," the bridegroom told me with a big grin on his face. "Guess there was about $75 in the kitty. I dumped all of it into my pockets, drove over to Betty's house and asked her parents if they would give her hand in marriage to an absconder. Then, jingling as though I had just robbed a juke box, we were off to Mexico.

"The money got us through the ceremony, breakfast at a drive-in, tips to all concerned and a full tank of gas for the trip back home."

I laughed, "Now all I want to know is—are you still treasurer of the Motorcycle Club?"

"I put the money back," Keenan said. "And in view of the unusual circumstances, I think I am forgiven."

Keenan brought his blonde bride over to call just 24 hours after their surprise wedding. Betty is a pretty little girl and I'm sure they will be very happy.

She thinks everything Keenan says is hilariously funny and just about dies laughing. As though this weren't flattering enough to keep any husband happy, she's a motorcycle devotee, herself, and never nags when her bridegroom goes around constantly risking his neck in cycle races.

P.S. When I first received the "tip" that Keenan had eloped, I called Van Johnson and Keenan's former wife, Evie, to see if they had heard anything about it.

"Oh, we doubt if it's true," they both told

Wondo Hendrix wed Audie Murphy on Jonuory 8th in North Hollywood's Christ Memoriol Unity Church. (Below) Vonesso Brown, Ann Blyth ond Mory Hotcher offer congrats. The Murphys delayed their honeymoon when both cought colds.

all the brides wore white

Marguerite Chapman and attarney
Bentley Ryan were wed during Christmas week at the Santa Barbara Mission. The receptian at the Bel-Air Hatel was attended by 300. (Belaw)
Father O'Taale and Lauella Parsans pase gaily with the bride far a phatagrapher.

Marsh Thampsan and Barbara Lang cut their wedding cake at the end af January in the Westwaod Cammunity Church. (Belaw) Ricarda Montalban and his wife, Geargiana Young, wish the cauple lats af happiness at the small receptian in the chapel.

says JANE GREER:

"My skin looks so Perfect_Satiny Smooth _with New Woodbury Powder!"

JANE GREER,
starring in RKO's
"I MARRIED A COMMUNIST"

What Exciting new Quality made women prefer Woodbury to all other leading Powders?

You'll know—the first time you wear New Woodbury Powder—why thousands of women in a recent test chose Woodbury over all other leading brands.* New Woodbury Powder gives the smoothest, Satiny finish your skin has ever known!
No other powder gives this flawless finish... covers tiny blemishes so naturally! And—more magic—no powder can match in enchantment the delicious New Woodbury fragrance!

In a recent Nation-wide test, Woodbury won by the tremendous average of 4 to 1 over all other leading brands of powder!

7 Glow-of-Color Shades—Medium and "Purse" sizes 30¢ and 15¢. Large "Dressing Table" size $1.00, prices plus tax.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Betty Grable poses with a National Brotherhood Week poster. The entire motion picture industry got behind this anti-bigotry drive.

me, very surprised. "He never mentioned any such idea to us." Just goes to show what good friends they have remained in spite of all the malicious gossip to the contrary.

* * *

I took on an ear-splitting reportorial job when I called Tyrone Power and Linda Christian by transatlantic phone to get their wedding plans straight from Rome. I can tell you that I have seldom talked with a happier or more excited couple.

"We'll be back in Hollywood in August," they both shouted from 6000 miles away.

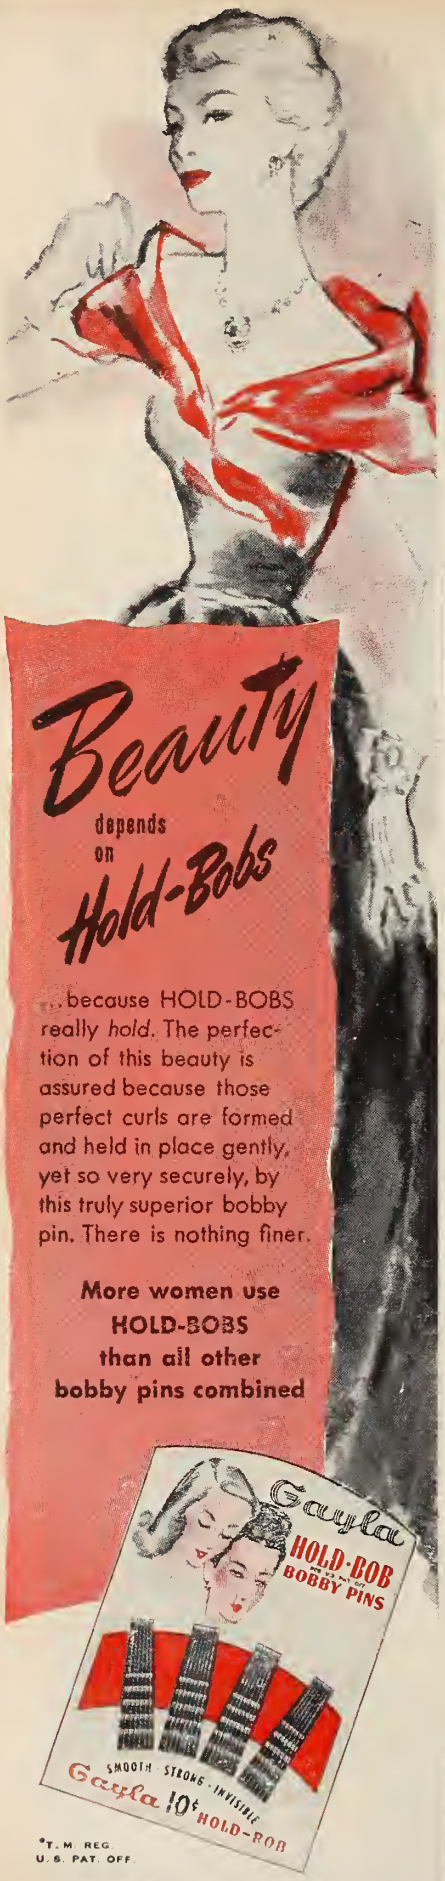
"And I'm going to give you a party—a great big party," I promised.

"We're going to hold you to that!" they said.

Linda has been described as an ultra-feminine girl—and that I can believe. Though the telephone bill was running higher and higher she gave me a seam-by-seam account of her wedding gown—white satin, trimmed with tiny pearls and a seed pearl cap on her head. (For Linda's description in her own words, see page 22.—Ed.)

* * *

Dreamy—just dreamy—is the term for the breathtaking party given by Mary and Jack Benny in honor of Jack's new radio boss, William Paley, and Mrs. Paley.



I can't remember seeing so many glamor girls at a single party—all looking so beautiful. "Maybe it's the candlelight," whispered Barbara Stanwyck as I passed by. Maybe Barbara was just being modest. (She was!)

The tent adjoining the house was lighted entirely by flickering candles. This happy idea belonged to William Haines, who did the decorations. Can you imagine a tent decorated by Hollywood's highest priced decorator?

Well, this was it.

Beautiful chandeliers, made completely of white flowers and candles, were strung from the ceiling. Individual tables, seating from 12 to 14, were covered with starched organdy that had glittering, brilliant stripes through the

"ALIAS Nick Beal"
No man ever held more Terrible Power over Women!
HE TEMPTED HER Into The Strangest Bargain Ever Made Between A Man And A Woman!
A Paramount Picture starring
RAY MILLAND
AUDREY TOTTER
THOMAS MITCHELL
with
GEORGE MACREADY · FRED CLARK
Produced by ENDRE BOHEM · Directed by JOHN FARROW
Screenplay by Jonathan Latimer • Original story by Mindret Lord
PLEASE don't tell your friends who—"Nick Beal" really is!

Bing at his annual tourney with Beverly Wilson, polio victim cured by the Sister Kenny Foundation—to which part of the proceeds went.

Tournament was followed by a stag party at Monterey Country Club. Jimmy Durante, with ex-partners Jackson and Clayton, did an act.

material. The place cards were gold-bordered, and adorned with corsages of five gardenias strung with pastel-colored ribbons.

The whole effect was that of a scene right out of fairyland. No wonder the orchestra took the romantic cue and played so many Viennese waltzes.

Who looked the prettiest? You'll never get me to stick my neck out that far! But I will say that Jennifer Jones took every eye when she swept in on the arm of David Selznick in a low-cut gossamer blue gown which might have been designed for a young princess.

Hollywood's queen of beauty, Hedy Lamarr, seemed rather quiet all evening, sitting out most of the dances.

Since Mrs. Paley is on the official list of "10 best-dressed women in America," naturally everyone was interested in what she wore. It was a dark, almost black, plum-colored satin, very form-fitting, except for a big flounce at the hipline. She wears her hair high on her head and was one of the few women present with long hair.

Where our own "best-dressed" stars were concerned, the majority seemed to prefer very pale blue or French gray. In addition to Jennifer, among the many who favored delicate, light blue were Jane Wyman, Joan Fontaine, Mrs. Charles Vidor, Mrs. Ray Milland and Dinah Shore.

Our hostess, Mary Livingston, was in filmy white lace, and Joan Bennett was another belle who looked beautiful in white—white tulle, embroidered in silver.

Clark Gable came all by himself, which is always so encouraging to the eligible gals. Just everybody was there—the Ronald Colmans, the Danny Kayes, the Van Johnsons, beautiful Deborah Kerr, Jimmy Stewart and Rosalind Russell. Rosalind was in pale yellow, very becoming to her brunette beauty.

But where was Judy Garland, who didn't notify her host or hostess that she could not attend, and was responsible for the vacant chair at the table of the guests of honor?

* * *

Joanne Dru, herself, told me several days before she made up her mind to divorce Dick Haymes, that Nora Eddington Flynn had nothing to do with the break-up of her marriage to Dick.

Joanne, who came from the set of All the King's Men, looked straight at me with those big black eyes and said: "It wasn't until after I had decided that Dick and I couldn't be happy together that I kept hearing that Mrs. Flynn was seeing my husband. I read in the newspapers that she and Dick were dining and dancing together.

"I asked Dick, when we were talking over the arrangements we planned to make about seeing our children, if it were true. He admitted that he admired Mrs. Flynn very much, and had been seeing a great deal of her."

I was very glad to hear Joanne say that Nora Flynn had not come between her and Dick. The Haymes' separated once before. Then, it had to do with her career. Now, it has to do with Dick's career.

The first time they parted, Dick wanted her to stay home with the children. There were two children then. She agreed, and had another baby. Then, strangely enough, Dick relented and told Joanne to go ahead with her work if she still wanted to be an actress.

At that time Dick was very successful professionally, and Joanne had been in one picture, the not-too-successful Abie's Irish Rose. Then fate played an ironic trick, and Joanne soared to the top in Red River, which is now being followed by All the King's Men.

Dick's career met a slump, and he's had a comparatively unprogressive year.

I feel very sorry for Joanne. She's a very honest, sincere little girl. She loves Dick, and she's tried hard to make their marriage a success.

When I expressed this sympathy, Joanne said: "Give Dick some of your sympathy. He's had a bad year, and he doesn't know what he wants. I'm sure he loves his children—but, I'm sorry to say, I believe he subconsciously resents some of the success I have had on the screen."

As for what will happen with the Flynns, nobody knows. At this writing, Nora is living apart from Errol in her own house. I have talked to Nora on several occasions about her break-up with Errol Flynn. She says she loves Errol, but there's no doubt that she's had her trials and tribulations with him.

Even while she was protesting her great love for the handsome screen hero, she was in Palm Springs, and he was in the hospital, very sick. After she told me she felt their marriage was at a definite end, she upped and went to New York with him.

So, at this writing, although they are defi-

Beloved Belinda TALKS!

"I didn't have a word to say in 'Johnny Belinda'. But now I can't say enough about the wonderful time I have with David Niven in 'Kiss in the Dark'. There's something in 'Kiss in the Dark'—something as warm and special in its own way as 'Johnny Belinda' was. You're going to have a new story to talk about again."

Jane won 78 CITATIONS for 'Johnny Belinda' —and she does it again!

WARNER BROS. PRESENT A BIG NEW TRIUMPH!

DAVID NIVEN and JANE WYMAN

"KISS IN THE DARK"

with VICTOR MOORE · WAYNE MORRIS · BRODERICK CRAWFORD

DIRECTED BY DELMER DAVES PRODUCED BY HARRY KURNITZ

SCREEN PLAY BY HARRY KURNITZ • FROM A STORY BY EVERETT AND DEVERY FREEMAN

ORIGINAL MUSIC COMPOSED AND ADAPTED BY MAX STEINER

The Most Wonderful Story
A Nation Ever Took To Its Heart!

TWO GREAT STARS AT THEIR BRILLIANT BEST!

SAMUEL GOLDWYN
PRESENTS
GARY COOPER
IN
"THE PRIDE OF THE YANKEES"
STARRING
TERESA WRIGHT
WALTER BRENNAN
and BABE RUTH Himself
Veloz and Yolanda · Ray Noble and his Orchestra
Directed by SAM WOOD
Screen Play by Jo Swerling and Herman J. Mankiewicz
Original Story by Paul Gallico
RE-RELEASED by RKO Radio Pictures Inc.

Jone Powell recently announced her engogement to Geory Steffens. She met him three yeors ogo when he wos Sonjo Henie's skating portner.

nitely separated, and she is seeing Dick Haymes as often as possible, I wouldn't want to bet she won't go back to Errol.

However, I am glad to say that, in spite of her apparent interest in Haymes, Nora is not responsible for the matrimonial troubles of Joanne and Dick.

* * *

Personal Opinions: Perhaps it was just an accident—but Joan Fontaine should never have permitted the silly, scatter-brained married couple in You Gotta Stay Happy to be named Goodrich. Goodrich is the real-life married name of Olivia de Havilland and Marcus Goodrich. Isn't there enough bad feeling between the sisters without adding fuel to the flame? . . . The most modest comedian, of stage, screen or radio, is Jack Benny. He not only "feeds" other comics at parties, he laughs longest and loudest at their jokes. He's particularly good when he's egging on Danny Kaye to be funny. . . .

Several Eastern scribes have commented that Shirley Temple's shorter-than-short haircut tends to make her look "matronly"! Now I've heard everything! . . . I certainly got a new slant on Jayne Meadows after I met her. When she walked out on her MGM contract last year, I had set her down as a very temperamental young woman. When I met her, she told me she was just plain "scared." "All the stars at MGM are so glamorous and you get such glamorous treatment there," Jayne told me. "I'm just a plain Jayne who wants to act. So I bowed out." I predict Miss Meadows won't have to worry after you all see her in Enchantment. . . . Ginger Rogers is one of the few stars holding out for the long, shoulder-length bob. Most of us in Hollywood are shorn to the ears.

* * *

Not long ago I reported what our most attractive bachelors had "agin" gals they dated. Now it is the ladies' turn to say what gripes them about their escorts. Fire away, girls:

Joan Caulfield: "Name droppers! The man who insists on telling you how he told President Truman how to run the country, or Louis B. Mayer how to make movies!"

ON the eve of the gay Mardi Gras, Orson Foxworth, financial buccaneer, gave a dinner at world famous Antoine's for seven extraordinary guests. One was beautiful young Odile St. Amant, mysteriously ravaged by a cruel paralysis. An unkissed wife, she ached with desperate longing for the embraces of Leonce, her playboy husband . . . embraces given wantonly to others, yet denied her.

And at the table sat Odile's younger sister, voluptuous Caresse, even more sultry than her name. She resided with Odile and her husband in the family mansion and she drove Leonce to a maddening desire to put an end to his wife so that he could possess her. And Foxworth himself had reasons of his own for wanting Odile out of the way!

What a setting for a story when these people and five others as deeply involved with one another meet for dinner at glamorous Antoine's! All the color, romance and intrigue of New Orleans creole society is packed into Frances Parkinson Keyes newest best-seller, Dinner at Antoine's. This book, PLUS another popular novel, Bride of Fortune, is yours for just a 3-cent stamp—yes, BOTH for 3¢—if you join the Dollar Book Club now!

One Passionate New Orleans Night . . .

that exploded into murder!

BOTH BOOKS Yours for a 3¢ Stamp to new members

THE MOST SENSATIONAL OFFER IN DOLLAR BOOK CLUB HISTORY!

Why Does the Dollar Book Club Make This Offer?

THE REASON: to give new members a truly bountiful sample of the wonderful reading entertainment and equally wonderful savings that nearly a million families now enjoy through the Club.

The Dollar Book Club is the only club that brings you popular current novels for only $1.00 each. Yes, the very same titles sold in the publishers' retail editions for $2.75 to $3.00 come to members for only $1.00 each—an incredibly big saving of almost two-thirds!

How are such values still possible, with book manufacturing costs at an all-time high? First, because of the great economies affected in printing huge editions for so large a membership. Second, the Club's own great new book plant, recently completed at a cost of millions of dollars, is designed for money-saving, large-scale production with equipment and methods never before possible.

and Also Yours:

BRIDE OF FORTUNE

Harriett T. Kane's wonderful story of a Mississippi belle and her husband who became one of the South's greatest heroes. It's yours PLUS Dinner at Antoine's — yes, BOTH books—for only a 3¢ stamp when you join the Dollar Book Club.

Take as Few as Six Books a Year!

Membership in the Dollar Book Club requires no dues of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year fulfills your membership requirement. In fact, for convenience, members prefer to have their books shipped and pay for them every other month.

Start Enjoying Membership Now

Upon receipt of the attached coupon with just a 3-cent stamp, you will be sent BOTH "Dinner at Antoine's" and "Bride of Fortune." You will also receive the current selection for only $1.00. Thereafter, every other month, you will receive the Club's Bulletin, which describes the forthcoming two months' book selections. It also reviews many other popular books which you may purchase at the Club price of only $1.00 each. But you may buy as few as six selections a year.

Just Mail Coupon with 3¢ Stamp!

When you see the books you get and realize they are typical of the values you will continue to receive from the Club for only $1.00 each, you will be delighted to have become a member! Mail coupon now.

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB, GARDEN CITY, NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAIL THIS COUPON

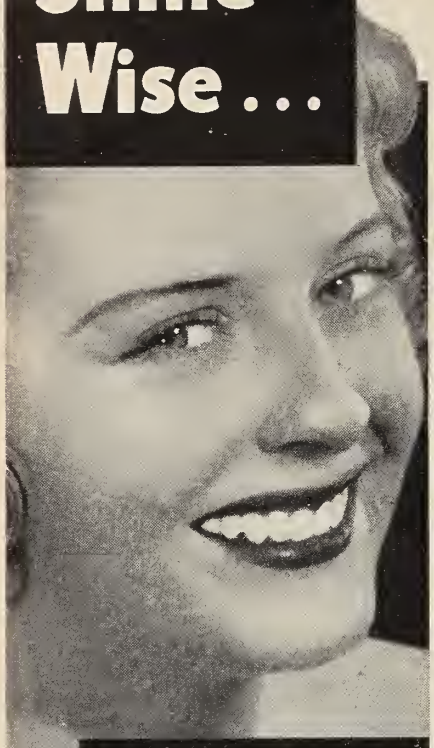
DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB, Dept. 4DMG, Garden City, N.Y.

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member and send me at once Dinner at Antoine's and Bride of Fortune—BOTH for the enclosed 3¢ stamp. Also send me the current club selection for $1.

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin" telling about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered at $1.00* each to members only.

I have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during each year that I remain a member. I pay nothing except $1 for each selection received plus a few cents shipping cost.

Mr. }
Mrs. } .....
Miss } Please Print



Address .....

City, Zone & State .....

Occupation ..... If under 21, age, please.....

* Same Price in Canada: 105 Bond St., Toronto 2

Be Smile Wise . . .

USE THE BRUSH WITH

Real Nylon Bristles

Made by the makers of
DR. WEST'S
MIRACLE-TUFT 50¢

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

At the Lino Ramay porty, Keenan Wynn, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lind Hoyes watch Pete Lowford's reactian to o typicol Lucille Ball jest.

Joan Fontaine's daughter, Deborah Leslie Dazier mokes her camero debut ot three manths. Mom's storting A Very Remarkable Fellow.

Ava Gardner: "The casual, lounging type who just can't be bothered opening car doors, or pulling out a chair, or lighting your cigarette. I can't abide these 'no manners' boys."

Ann Sothern: "The athlete who just can't forget how many times he plunged through the line for the winning touchdown—no matter how fat his tummy is now!"

Jean Peters: "Men who criticize or gossip about girls they used to go with. Don't believe they are scarce! Just remember—you're next, sister!"

Jane Wyman: "The eternal debater. If you say it's a nice day—you get a bitter argument."

Joan Evans (14-year-old Sam Goldwyn discovery): "Neckers! That's all—just neckers!"

June Haver: "The good old rousing intellectual. Educational snobbery can be just as painful as any other form of looking down one's nose."

Doris Day: "The dancing 'snuggler'. Yep—the guy who makes an ordinary dance position look like something banned by the censors. He's the boy who gets my private booby-prize."

* * *

There's something so sweet about the way Wanda Hendrix and Audie Murphy are starting out married life. No movie-star trappings about their flat, which is a unit in a four-family building.

Audie, who is definitely wearing the pants, insists on paying all the bills and they are going to live on his salary or else.

I got a good laugh when I dropped in on the kids and Wanda said, her face beaming with pride: "Look! What talent Audie has as a decorator." She pointed to the cornices which were put on upside down over the windows!

"Talent?" sniffed Audie who had a cold. "I just couldn't get 'em up the right way!"

"That's how original ideas are born," the baby bride insisted.

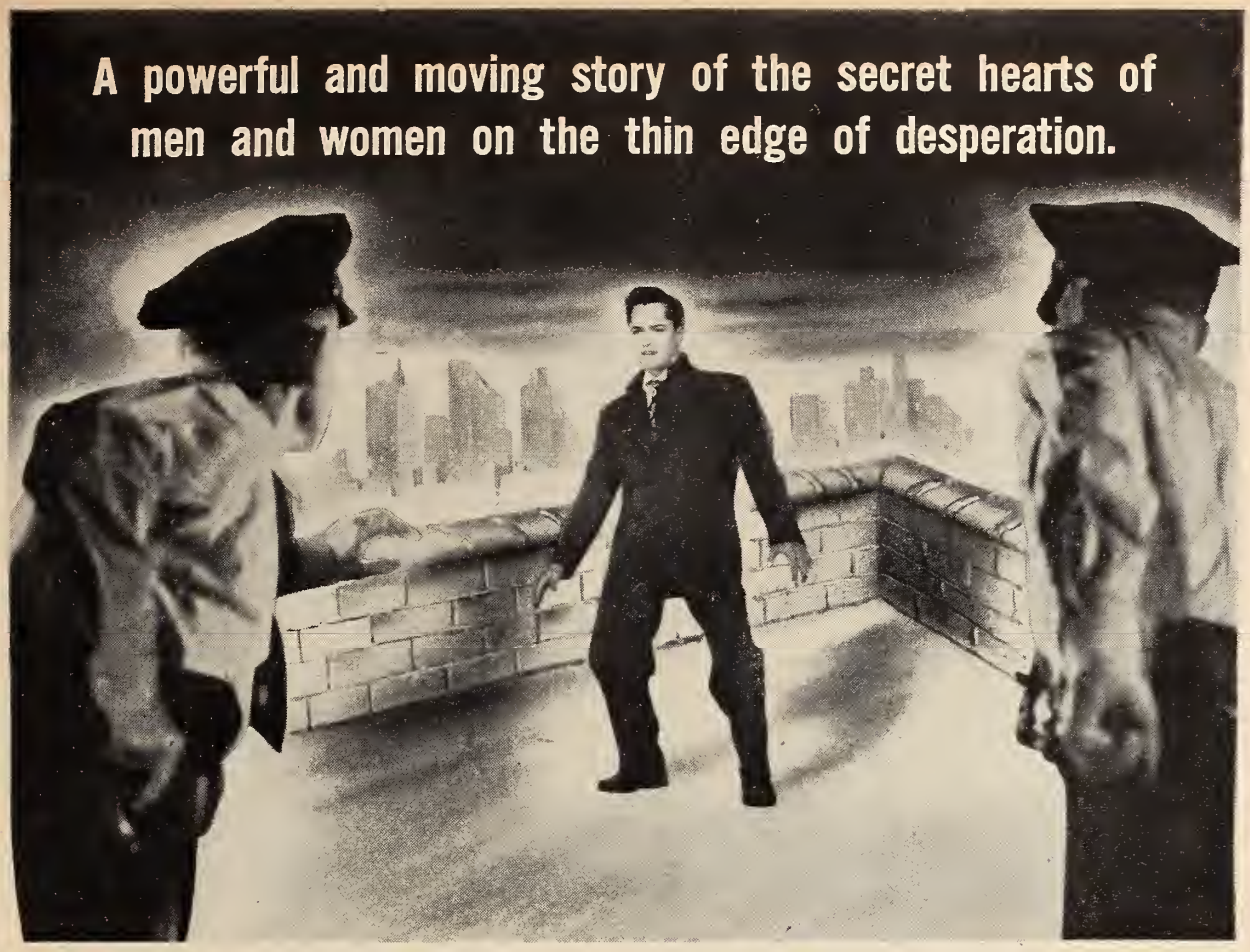
It was a cold, rainy day and the bride and groom were bundled up in sweaters and mufflers. Wanda said, "I caught a bad cold the day we were married. Audie caught his from me—poor baby."

If I am any forecaster, I can tell you right now that "poor baby" is going to be one of the screen sensations of 1949. I saw him in Bad Boy and this boy is going places in a great big way.

* * *

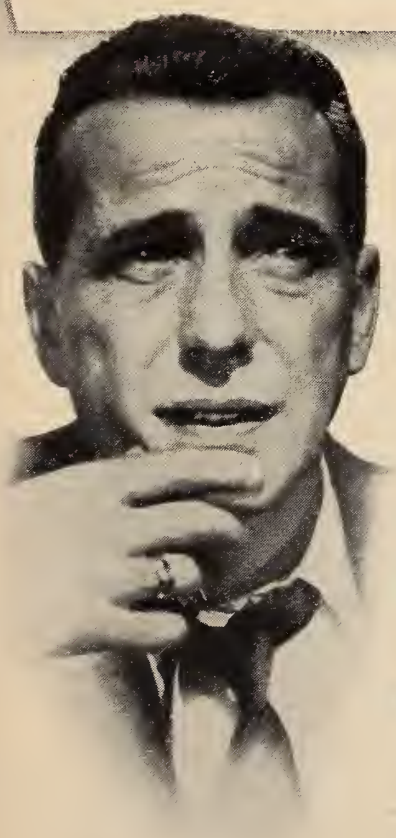
Now that Aly Khan has publicly admitted that he wants to marry Rita Hayworth, I wonder if this will have any effect on the blasts of criticism Rita has been getting from every direction?

Never in my years of reading and writing about stars have I read such scathing editorials as the British press turned loose on Rita and her Indian prince before their engagement was officially announced.



There was also a movement in women's club circles to boycott her pictures in this country.

Rita's boss at Columbia, Harry Cohn, may have said and honestly believed he was fighting mad at her because of her escapades. But I think he was more heartbroken than anything else.



Harry sponsored her career from the time she was a Miss Nobody until she became about the most glamorous star of the screen. It was a sad thing to him, and to everyone who ever worked with her, that this girl who worked so hard to get to the top was apparently throwing away so much.

Let me repeat the story of what I heard happened. when a worried assistant went in

A powerful and moving story of the secret hearts of men and women on the thin edge of desperation.

"Pretty Boy" Romano nears the end of his trail.

COLUMBIA PICTURES
presents

Humphrey BOGART
in
KNOCK ON ANY DOOR

introducing JOHN DEREK

with GEORGE MACREADY · ALLENE ROBERTS · SUSAN PERRY

Screen play by Daniel Taradash and John Monks, Jr.

A SANTANA PRODUCTION OF THE NOVEL BY WILLARD MOTLEY

Directed by NICHOLAS RAY · Produced by ROBERT LORD

DeLong

Bob Pins set the smartest
hair-do's
stronger grip—won't slip out

Your hair is short and to the point this season. The new brief styles are easy on the eyes—easy to set, yourself, with DeLong Bob Pins. DeLong Bob Pins, with their new rounded ends, slide in easily, stay in indefinitely. Get DeLong Bob Pins on the famous blue card.

The Short Halo— created by Helen Hunt, famous Hollywood hair stylist. Make 3 rows of pin curls. Work clockwise from left part toward face. Pull hair slightly forward as you pin. Brush out hair upward, away from face. Let ends fall forward. Brush back hair upward.

You're always "set" with DeLong
Curl Setting Pins • Hair Pins • Safety Pins
Hooks and Eyes • Snaps • Pins
Hook and Eye Tapes • Sanitary Belts

to tell Harry that the clubwomen were on the verge of boycotting Rita's pictures. The assistant delivered the bad news and added, "If this is true—we may lose a lot of money on Loves of Carmen."

They say Harry hit the ceiling. "Hayworth's movies have made us a lot of money, too," he yelled. "We've lost a lot more than MONEY!"

That's the way Rita's boss feels about her—or did, at least, before her marriage plans were definitely announced.

(How does Rita's father, Eduardo Cansino, feel about his daughter and Aly Khan? See page 68.—Ed.)

* * *

Bob Stack's best girl, Irene Wrightsman McAvoy, tossed a birthday party for him. Can you believe that the boy who gave Deanna Durbin her first screen kiss is now 30 years old?

Irene's rustic-type home on the Uplifters' estate, with it's huge windows looking toward the mountoins and the big open fireplace blazing away, is a wonderful setting for a party.

After the duck and wild rice dinner (Bob had gone hunting for the ducks), the guests turned loose and put on an impromptu show that would have been a riot in any night club.

Of course, Olga San Juan, who is expecting a baby in a few months, would never have done her wonderful Sponish songs and amusing dances anywhere in public. But she had the gay crowd convulsed doing some of the routines she did in a Bing Crosby picture—attired not in a Spanish costume but in a conceoling maternity gown and jacket.

Her husband, Edmond O'Brien, gave two marvelous recitations. He is really one of Hollywood's best actors on screen or in a living room.

But it remained for Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy to kill the people with an imitation of a movie star having lunch with an old friend from her home town in a studio commissary. Plenty cynical—but plenty funny.

* * *

Looking over this month's moil from you MODERN SCREEN readers—here is the score:

Wanda Hendrix came in for plenty of boosts. This little girl is really off to a big start. Running close among the newcomers is Janet Leigh.

Among the men, Montgomery Clift took the lead over Lew Ayres—but Lew is still getting plenty of attention on Johnny Belinda.

The consensus on Rita Hayworth is disappointment and disillusionment. But Ava Gardner is rating high in the glamor field.

Do I need add how much I enjoy your letters? Keep writing—and I'll see you next month!

THE END

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS!

May, June, and July are going to be your favorite months if you win a free subscription to MODERN SCREEN. Just fill out the questionnaire below, let us know which stories you liked best—and which one you liked the least. If you have some favorite stars (and who hasn't?), list them in order and we'll try to have stories on them in the near future. Remember—the May, June, and July issues, absolutely FREE if you're among the first 500 to send back the questionnaire.

QUESTIONNAIRE

Which stories and features did you enjoy most in our April issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT of your 1st, 2nd, and 3rd choices.

Mitchum on Trial ..... ☐
Secrets of the Bride (Tyrone Power-Linda Christian) ..... ☐
I Discovered Shirley Temple .... ☐
Living Legend (Shirley Temple) .. ☐
How Dear To My Heart by Shirley Temple ..... ☐
Curly-Top Today (Shirley Temple) ..... ☐
Made in Heaven (Baxter-Hodiak) . ☐
This Love of Ours by Esther Williams ..... ☐
What Price Glory? (Olivia de Havilland) ..... ☐
No Love Lost (Farley Granger) .. ☐
The Case of the Hesitant Heart (Greer Garson) by Hedda Hopper ..... ☐
Hollywood's Best Known Mystery (Howard Duff) ..... ☐
Can June Haver Find Happiness? . ☐
I Don't Blame Rita (Rita Hayworth) ..... ☐
Dear Daddy (Elizabeth Taylor) .. ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ..... ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....

.....

Whot MALE star do you like least?.....

What FEMALE star do you like least?.....

My name is.....

My address is.....

City..... Zone..... State..... I om ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

WILLIAM HOLDEN · WILLIAM BENDIX
MACDONALD CAREY · MONA FREEMAN

Amigos! ONE FOR ALL AND ALL FOR ONE!

Three men and a "Blonde Bobcat" fight for life and love on the Texas Plains until treachery turns one against the other!

in Paramount's

"Streets of Laredo"

Color by Technicolor

Produced by ROBERT FELLOWS · Directed by LESLIE FENTON

Screen Play by Charles Marquis Warren

Based on a Story by Louis Stevens and Elizabeth Hill

NEW COWBOY SONG HITS BY LIVINGSTON & EVANS, WHO WROTE "BUTTONS & BOWS"!

You can create a New Glamour Complexion starting Today!

YES! Max Factor Hollywood Pan-Cake Make-Up can be your secret of a new, flawless glamour complexion. In just a few seconds it actually creates beauty for you...hides tiny complexion faults... stays lovely for hours. Discovered for the Screen Stars...Pan-Cake Make-Up can be the beginning of a new found loveliness...a new fascinating glamour...for you!

Claudette Colbert
STARRING IN
"FAMILY HONEYMOON"
A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL PICTURE

PHOTO BY RAY JONES

LOOK in your mirror...study your complexion. Does it lack color?...Do tiny complexion faults mar your beauty?...Is it as lovely as you would like it to be?

TRY Max Factor Hollywood Pan-Cake Make-Up...see what a lovelier, softer, smoother, younger look it creates. Notice how complexion faults fade ...how new, delicate color in your complexion has added new glamour to your beauty.

*Pan-Cake (trademark) means Max Factor Hallywood Cake Make-Up

NOW enjoy your new, faultless complexion...how confident you feel now that you know you look your very best. Others will notice it too... a whole new world of beauty awaits you starting today!

MAX FACTOR * HOLLYWOOD Pan-Cake* Make-Up

THE ORIGINAL CAKE MAKE-UP

Complete your make-up in Color Harmony for your type

"I believe that cosmetic color harmony is the most important single feature in accentuating beauty and charm."
MAX FACTOR * HOLLYWOOD

FACE POWDER...creates a satin smooth make-up...in Color Harmony shades for your type ...the finishing touch.

ROUGE...to harmonize with your Lipstick...correct for your type...adds color, and accents your beauty.

LIPSTICK...3 flattering shades for your type: Clear Red, Blue Red, Rose Red. Correct for your coloring, correct for your costume.

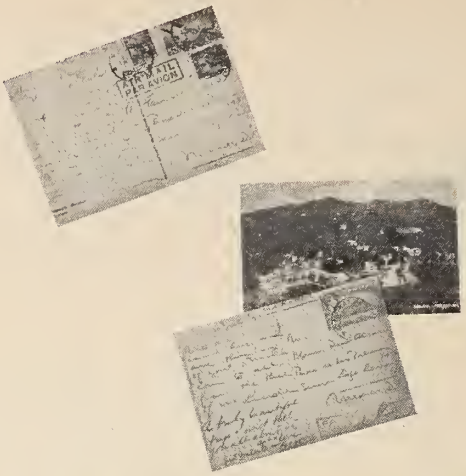
mitchum on trial

This is the dramatic story of a man facing his conscience before the world. Here are the facts as revealed in his trial.

BY LLOYD SHEARER

The following straightforward account of the Mitchum narcotics trial was written some weeks before Robert Mitchum appeared for sentencing. Now, as Modern Screen goes to press, the actor has been sentenced to one year in the county jail. He will be eligible for release on probation after serving 60 days of his sentence.

—THE EDITORS



■ Two weeks before Bob Mitchum appeared in court to experience the most painful moments of his life—trial for a narcotics violation—the rumor had spread all over Hollywood that "a fix" was in.

At Romanoff's, at Schwab's Drug Store, at a dozen quaint, over-publicized eateries where the inside boys gather to mastermind the destinies of the movie-great, it was always, "Mitchum'll never be convicted," or "I don't care what kinda case they got against the guy. They can't make it stick," or "You don't think he's got Jerry Giesler as his lawyer for nothin'?"

And yet 51 (Continued on page 85)

Bab Mitchum and his attarney Jerry Giesler at the caunsel table just befare Mitchum was canvicted af canspiracy ta passess marijuana.

Scoop! This exclusive story, based on Linda Christian's letters to her mother, gives an intimate view of a girl planning—and dreaming.

BY MAXINE SMITH

Secrets of the bride!

■ As this story is written, Tyrone Power and Linda Christian have just been married in Rome. In the past few months countless columnists and correspondents have been saying—publicly or privately—that this would never come to pass. But all along, those really in the know—and I've been one of them—have smiled at the reports about the "cooling" of the Power-Christian romance and the "easily readable signs of a break-up."

Months ago, Tyrone was eager to marry Linda. He was willing to by-pass conventions, the studio and California law—which forbids remarriage until the final divorce decree is granted. Tyrone's final decree of divorce from the French actress Annabella was scheduled for January 22, 1949. Ty didn't want to wait—he wasn't going to wait!

And then Linda's mother wrote to him: "My boy, waiting will give you that much more time to be sure. And waiting is best, for everything, present and future, in the life you and Linda will have together. Be patient, Tyrone, for all of us."

Ty stopped insisting. He had never been married to Annabella in church—therefore, the Catholic Church did not recognize his first marriage. Careful conferences with Roman Church bishops enabled Ty to obtain the consent of the Church. He would wait—but only until his divorce was legally final—no longer!

My knowledge of the way things were really going between Tyrone and Linda came from the intimate view afforded me as a close friend of Linda and her family and as an old friend of Ty. Just the other night I spent several hours visiting Linda's (Continued on page 22)

Ty and Linda visited the island of Gibraltar in July and snapped each other's pictures. Except for the heat, they thought it was terrific!

Linda, in Mexico City with her mother, Señora Blanca Amezquita, who recently became a mother again. Linda still hasn't seen her new brother.

Tyrone and Linda snapped while visiting the shrine of the Lady of Fatima near Lisbon, Portugal. Miracles are said to have occurred here. .

Tyrone Power and Linda Christian leave the Santa Francesca church in Rome after making final preparations for their wedding January 27.

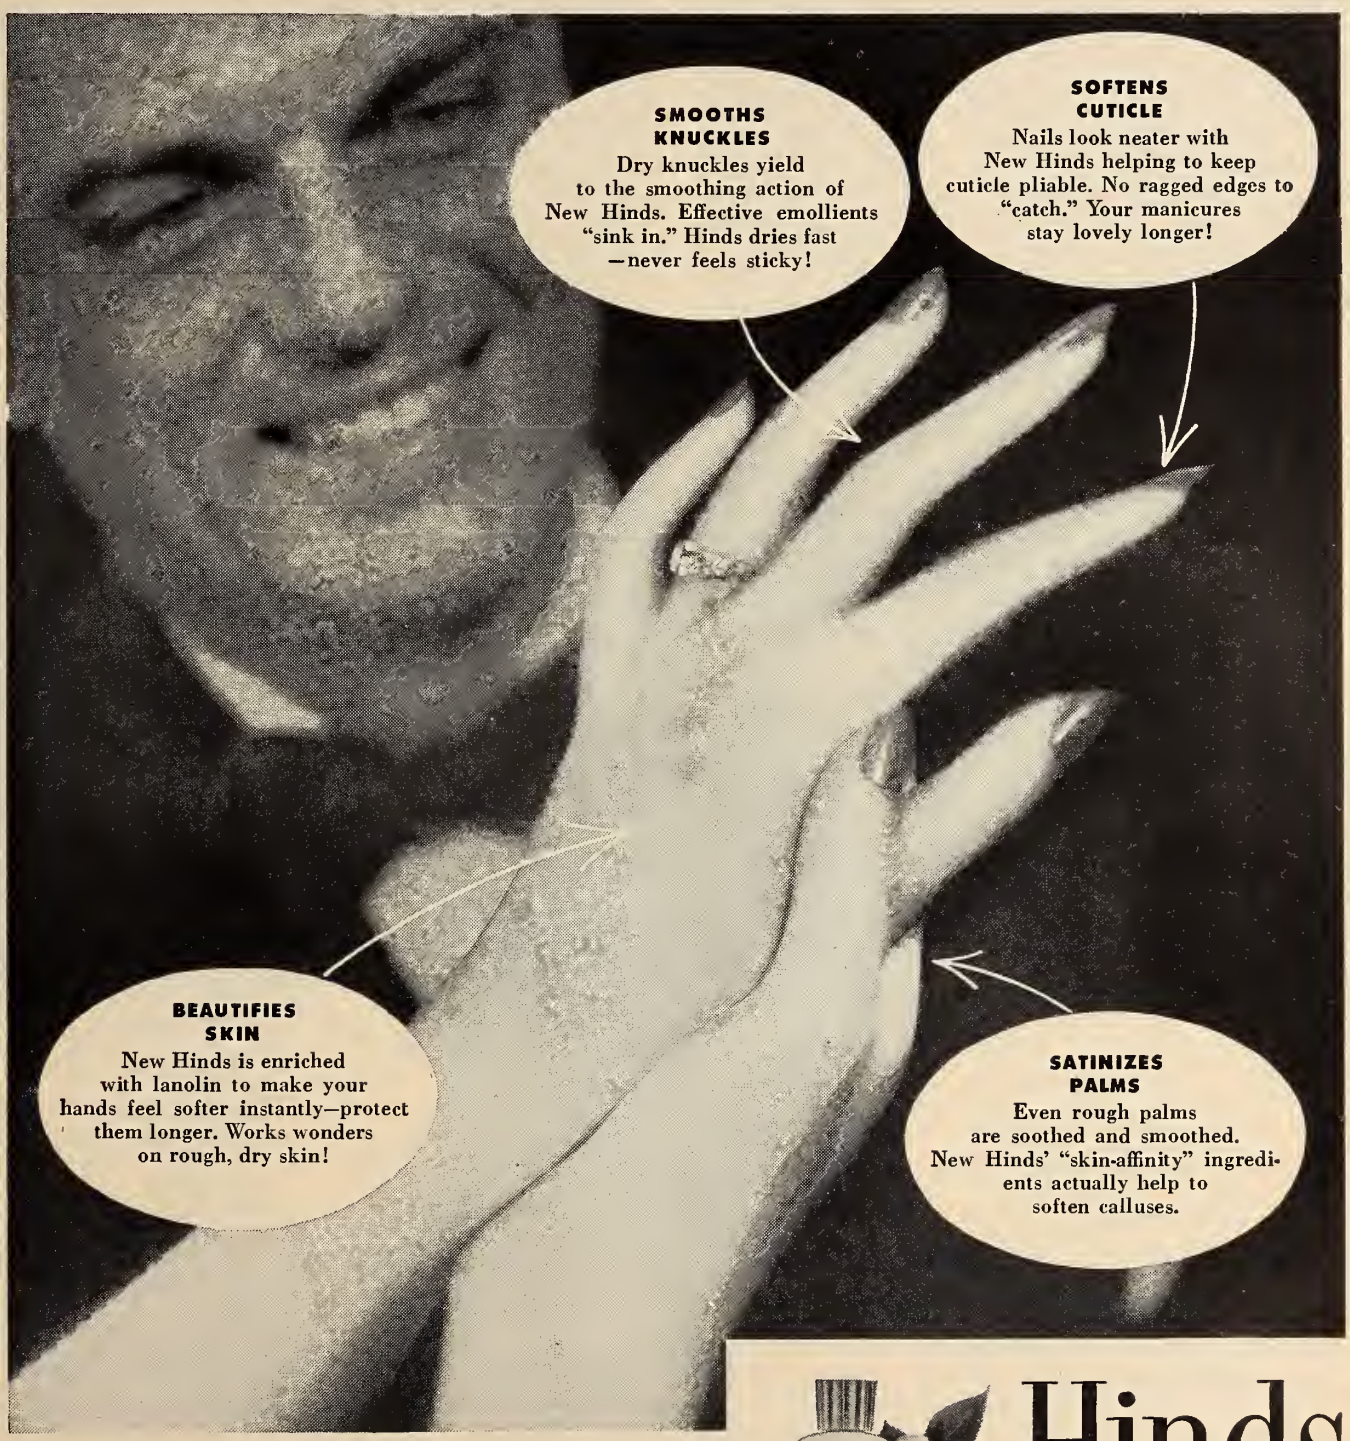
Secrets of the bride!

Linda Christian's wedding gown of fitted white lace tulle was made at Fontana's, Rome's leading fashion house. Right: Part of a letter to her mother in which Linda sketched three views of her gown.

mother, Señora Blanca Rosa Welter de Alvarez Amezquita. You see, we both live in Mexico City. I sat in a bedroom of her beautiful home in the exclusive Lomas de Chapultepec district while Blanca, in a pale blue housecoat, reclined on the oversized bed and gave José René his 7:30 bottle. José René, then all of one week old, is Linda's brother—whom, of course, she has yet to see.

The feeding over, Blanca spread on the blue coverlet the treasures I had come to see—messages sent to her by Linda and Tyrone from Europe—cablegrams, photographs, postcards. Unfortunately, Blanca had thrown away all their letters—except the latest one, dated January 12, 1949. In this, Linda wrote from Rome: "Mumsy Darling: We are nearly bursting from anxiousness over you. Every possible noise like a car or motorcycle which comes up the hill where we live, we say, 'The baby!' . . .

"Right now for us—this is a very busy and confining time, too. The holidays were a mad rush. On Christmas Day, we had about fifty people in the house. The tree was lovely with all the presents around it. We came back from Venice with only two days to prepare everything and from then on there wasn't a spare moment. We had so much to do, and so many places to go.



"We went to the opening of the Opera with all the 'other' important personalities of Rome. Every magazine cover has our picture and the newsreels are full of your three Pusses, too.

"New Year's was rather hectic and we kept on remembering our lovely '47-'48 and then Acapulco. This New Year's we spent in the snowy mountains of Austria near St. Anton, someplace. I persuaded Tyrone to go to Austria instead of Switzerland . . . it is much cozier there. . . .

"Now we are making all the arrangements for the wedding! We are waiting for a telegram from Tyrone's lawyer and if the 27th is all right, we are planning for that date. My dress is going to be a dream (white) with lace appliqued with seed pearls, tiny opal sequins and tiny, tiny beads. The dress will be fitted, but the train attached to the waist will flow freely."

At this point in the letter, Linda had sketched three different views of her wedding gown, with alternative bouquets and wedding veils. (Continued on page 81)

New lotion gives beauty protection to your WHOLE HAND!

WORKS WONDERS! Lanolin-enriched for extra effectiveness, New Hinds Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream keeps your whole hand feeling soft in spite of ravages of work and water. Use it to smooth elbows, arms and legs . . . try it as a powder base. Use Hinds to help protect babies' and children's tender skin from chapping! 4 sizes, 10¢ to $1.00.

PRODUCT OF LEHN & FINK

Hinds

Honey and Almond Fragrance Cream

NOW IN NEW LARGER BEAUTY BOTTLE

As The Fan begins, old Mrs. Erlynne (Madeleine Carroll) looks up old Lord Darlington (George Sanders) in London. He doesn't recall her until she mentions Lady Windermere—and reminds him of times past . . .

He'd met her a half-century ago when, with a friend (John Sutton), he was in a shop helping Lord Windermere (Richard Greene) choose a fan for Lady Windermere. Mrs. Erlynne was trying to crash Society.

MOVIE REVIEWS

by Christopher Rowe

Soon Lord Windermere was helping her. Lady Windermere (Jeanne Crain), upset at the scandal, almost ran off with Lord Darlington. But Mrs. Erlynne, with a noble gesture, straightened things out.

THE FAN

Cast: Jeanne Crain, Madeleine Carroll, Richard Greene, George Sanders, Martita Hunt. 20th Century-Fox.

Gentlemen won't go for this, but ladies should. It's Oscar Wilde's Lady Windermere's Fan, with minor changes, and as pleasant a little comedy-drama of period manners and morals as you could ask for. Lord Windermere (Richard Greene) loves Lady Windermere (Jeanne Crain). Lord Darlington (George Sanders) also loves Lady Windermere. These titled fellows—they're friends—meet a beautiful adventuress named Mrs. Erlynne (Madeleine Carroll) in a shop where Lord Windermere is buying a fan for Lady Windermere's birthday. Next thing you know, Lord Windermere is paying Mrs. Erlynne's bills, renting a house for her, and attempting to help her crash Society. News of this gets around to Lady Windermere through the Duchess of Berwick (Martita Hunt), an old gossip who spends most of her time trying to marry off her daughter. Lady Windermere, enraged out of her almost excessive refinement, is about ready to run off with Lord Darlington, just to hurt her husband, when she's saved from this step by Mrs. Erlynne. Mrs. Erlynne vows that Lord Windermere cares only for his wife, that the Duchess of Berwick's brother, Lord Lorton (Hugh Dempster), is actually supporting her, Mrs. Erlynne. Lord Windermere's simply been covering up for Lorton, who's scared of his sister's displeasure. This isn't true, but it satisfies Lady Windermere; she returns to her long-suffering husband, and Mrs. Erlynne leaves town. Lord Windermere has known all the while, of course, that Mrs. Erlynne is his wife's mother, and that's the reason he's been so generous. (Years before, when Lady Windermere was a baby, Mrs. Erlynne left her husband—Lady W.'s father—to run away with some other man, and become the scandal of several continents, but she's never wanted her daughter to know the sort of woman mamma was.) The Fan's cast is highly polished; it dispenses epigrams with marvelous correctness.

Are you in the know?

What's the best makeup remover?

- ☐ Soap ond woter
- ☐ Cold creom
- ☐ Smooching

Avast there, matey! Best you first slip make-up off with cream, wiping away with Kleenex* Tissues. Then wash your face. It takes cream to "fight" cream (such as most makeup bases are made of), and followed by soap and water, it helps keep blackheads at bay. Remove problem-day worries, too . . . with the aid of Kotex and that special safety center. An exclusive Kotex feature that gives you extra protection . . . self-assurance!

For the lowdown on that N. M. I. T.—

- ☐ Reod his polm
- ☐ Pry into his past
- ☐ Ask your brother

Before dating a New Man In Town, owl up on his character. Tea leaves or palmistry won't tell you, but you can depend on (guess who!) —your brother. Guys can size up guys, shrewdly. So ask your bro's advice about the mystery boy. As for girls, there are times when personal secrets must be kept. Then, you can depend on Kotex—for Kotex prevents revealing outlines. Those special flat pressed ends of Kotex don't show, don't tell!

Which "shortens" kingsize tootsies?

- ☐ Shell pumps
- ☐ Buckles n' bows
- ☐ Dork-hued shoes

You haven't a Cinderella-size foot? Any answer mentioned above can keep you out of her step-sisters' class! Shell pumps, with low-cut vamps. Big, silver or cut steel buckles, or soft perky bows—to flatter your instep. Dark shoes, to make these tricks more effective. Choosing the style that's for you is important—and so (on certain days) is your choice of Kotex absorbencies. Try all 3: Regular, Junior, Super Kotex.

What would you do in this situation?

- ☐ Smile ond switch
- ☐ Keep on doncing
- ☐ Ploy deof

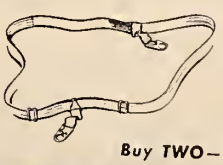
You're swaying on a dream-cloud with the prom Heathcliff. So? He's tagged by a stag. Sharp gals never refuse a cut-in; thus you smile and switch to the lethal lad. When your calendar tries to cut in on your bookings—switch to the comfort of the new Kotex. Talk about a dream-cloud! Kotex has softness that holds its shape—because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Dance after dance, you stay comfortable!



How to prepare for "those" days?

- ☐ Be a blu gnu
- ☐ Breok your dotes
- ☐ Buy 2 sonitory belts

Certain times are no time for moping at home. Brighten up! And freshen up—with careful grooming, immaculate clothes. And why not be prepared in advance with two Kotex Sanitary Belts—so you can change to a fresh belt when you change to dating togs?

You see, the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. Your adjustable, all-elastic Kotex Belt fits smoothly; doesn't bind. That's why—for extra comfort, you'll want the new Kotex Sanitary Belt. Buy two—for a change!

Kotex Sanitary Belt

Buy TWO—by name!

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

"It seems there was a Traveling Salesman..."

. . . and naturally, when he came home from a long trip, Mrs. T.S. was very happy—until she unpacked his bag.

The clean white shirts he took away always came back with a "mourning band" of railroad dust ground into the collars and cuffs. And the job of getting those shirts white again was not only a test of wifely devotion—it was very hard on the shirts.

The happy ending to this story came the first time Mrs. T.S. tried Fels-Naptha Soap Chips. To use her own words, "I never had any white shirts come out any whiter—and no rubbing!"

P.S.—Golden Fels-Naptha Soap gives you THE EXTRA WASHING HELP of TWO CLEANERS—MILD, GOLDEN SOAP and ACTIVE NAPTHA . . . This better laundry soap turns out cleaner, whiter washes in less time, with less hard, tiring work. Look for the Fels-Naptha Bar or Fels-Naptha Soap Chips next time you're out shopping.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Alias Nick Beal: Thomas Mitchell sells his soul to Roy Millond. Audrey Totter benefits.

ALIAS NICK BEAL

Cast: Ray Milland, Thomas Mitchell, George Macready, Audrey Totter, Geraldine Wall.
Paramount.

Paramount has wasted several good actors in this ridiculous story. The plot involves an emissary of the devil, Nick Beal (Ray Milland) who gets a good man (Thomas Mitchell) in his power. Mitchell's a District Attorney who likes a clean state and keeps it that way. His best friend is a minister (George Macready). Everything's going fine till Nick Beal comes along. Nick assists Mitchell in his fall from grace, and from then on Mitchell's doomed. His wife (Geraldine Wall) gradually loses influence over him while the influence of Audrey Totter (a girl of Beal's choice) increases. Gradually Mitchell loses all his friends—except Macready. The machines win him the governorship, and he can go on from there. But he doesn't. Once he's inaugurated he quits cold. Tells everybody what a reprobate he is. In what purports to be a stirring climax, Beal comes for Mitchell's soul, but Macready's standing by with a Bible. At the sight of it Beal sort of shrivels up and says, "Oh, no." Mitchell is left with his soul but not much else, since he's already sold his house to pay off his debts and salve his conscience, and since he's jobless as only an ex-governor can be. This simply isn't adult movie fare. The good people (Macready, for instance) are caricatures—bloodless and absurd; the bad people are menacing in the style of 1920, and the symbolism is about as subtle as the kind in "The Little Red Hen."

KNOCK ON ANY DOOR

Cast: Humphrey Bogart, John Derek, Allene Roberts, Susan Perry, George Macready.
Columbia.

Knock on Any Door is a social document, like Dead End or Grapes of Wrath. And it's very close to perfect. It deals with a boy named Nick Romano (John Derek) who grows up in a slum, his young mind seasoned by the evils that thrive around him. Nick finds robbery easier than working, he finds his hatred for law swollen by the treatment of a savage reform school, he finds himself, ultimately, dying in the electric chair for having shot a policeman. "Finds himself" is what I mean. He went Knock On Any Door: John Derek (center) grows up omid evil and turns into a criminal.

the way he had to go, the signs were there for him to follow. Society pre-dooms and predestines slum children, this picture says. Not the brilliant ones, perhaps. Humphrey Bogart (Nick's lawyer and long-time champion) is supposedly a graduate of the same Skid Row that housed Nick. He got out. But the boys with average brains—like most of us—and average good intentions, aren't strong enough to make it. There are times when Nick tries. Bogart takes him to the country for a week, and everything's fine until Bogart's law partner mutters, "you can't make a tame canary out of a jailbird." In a fury, Nick steals some money and heads back for town. At another point, he falls in love with a small, gentle girl named Emma (Allene Roberts), different from anybody he's ever known, and he tries again. Emma, who lives with a drunken aunt, says Nick's the first thing she's ever had that was really her own, and she believes in him. They get married, Nick achieves a few honest jobs, but he's always first to be fired, because of his record, and so he returns to robbery. He leaves Emma, says he's no good for her, and she kills herself by turning on the gas. The scene showing Emma's poor little funeral leaving the funeral parlor while a wet-faced Nick watches from a roof across the street is pitiful enough to break you in half. Unfortunately, one of the picture's few flaws is an important one. We see Nick savagely pumping bullets into a cop (the crime for which he dies) but we're never given any reason for this cold-blooded action, except that Nick was running away, after a robbery. (In Willard Motley's novel, from which this was made, the dead policeman was a killer himself, proud of the notches in his belt, happy in his ability to terrorize the neighborhood, and understandably despised.) Anyhow, Bogart admits Nick's guilty. Guilty of seeing his best friend killed in reform school, guilty of being fatherless, guilty of being thrown together with thieves and prostitutes and derelicts, guilty of being murdered before he'd ever lived. Bogart says Nick's dying accomplishes nothing, because until society does something about the conditions which produced him, there'll be a hundred, a thousand, Nick Romanos to take his place. Just go to Skid Row, and knock on any door. . . . The acting is unbelievably good here. Knock On Any Door is painful, and emotionally exhausting, but it very much needs to be seen.

Mirror, mirror on the wall . . . is my hair fairest of them all?

Even on shampoo day
Rayve Creme Shampoo makes hair behave
so beautifully!

Yet Rayve costs no more than ordinary shampoos

See the miracle in your own mirror! Even on shampoo day, your hair does just what you want it to—when you use wonderful Rayve Creme Shampoo! Rayve leaves your hair silky soft, clean and lustrous . . . yet so easy to manage!

Here's the secret! Your hair has a natural body that helps keep it softly in place. Now, Rayve Creme Shampoo contains a special blend of pure lanolin with other important ingredients to help preserve the natural "life" and body of your hair. That's why Rayve makes hair behave beautifully—right after it's washed!

Rayve is not a soap. Yet it billows into fragrant, active lather. Rayve rinses quickly, too. Without special after-rinses! No dulling soap film, no flaky dandruff remains. The perfect shampoo before and after home permanents!

To make your hair behave beautifully use wonderful Rayve Creme Shampoo. See your hair shimmer with highlights—your curls lie softly obedient—the very day you use Rayve!

In handy tubes or jars at drug and cosmetic counters.

Another fine product of Pepsodent

Gentlemen

Prefer Girls

(BLONDES • BRUNETTES • REDHEADS)

with Color Bright Hair

Let Nestle Colorinse give your hair sparkling, natural-looking color and highlights. Not a permanent dye or a bleach, Nestle Colorinse washes out completely with shampooing. Delicately scented, easy and absolutely safe to use.

Nestle COLORINSE

IN 10 FLATTERING SHADES

10¢—25¢ AT ALL COSMETIC COUNTERS.

LOOK FOR NESTLE COLORINSE...

in your favorite variety store during National Brands Week, March 4-12, 1949

Nestle - originators of permanent waving - Meriden, Conn.

Force of Evil: Beatrice Peorsan is sod at Jahn Garfield's numbers racket invalvement.

FORCE OF EVIL

Cast: John Garfield, Beatrice Pearson, Thomas Gomez, Marie Windsor. MGM.

John Garfield, a rich, devil-may-care lawyer for the biggest, crookedest numbers racketeer extant, gets thrown into sharp conflict with his brother (Thomas Gomez), a small, honest numbers racketeer. The fact that Gomez can hardly make ends meet, and that he loves his wife, seems to put the stamp of purity upon his business. Well, Tucker (that's the big racketeer) has decided to make himself a monopoly, and take over all the small "policy banks." Garfield's brother doesn't want to get taken over. Still, he has a weak heart, and he doesn't want to get ruined, either. So he strings along. Among the people who've been working for him is a girl named Doris Lowry (Beatrice Pearson). She falls in love with brother John. Tucker's sirenish wife (Marie Windsor) goes for John, too, but he doesn't reciprocate, just snarls something like, "You want a weak man? Go break your husband." Finally, Garfield's brother (whom Garfield's been earnestly attempting to protect) gets a little extra outspoken, and a little extra double-crossed, to boot, and is bumped off by a gangster. This enrages Garfield, he shoots up Tucker and the gangster both, and then goes out to take his medicine. After all, Beatrice is standing by. Beatrice, by the way, looks about nine years old, in her picture debut—much too young to be messing around with John. The acting's all okay, the dialogue's synthetic-tough, and a lot of passion is spent to no great avail.

A CONNECTICUT YANKEE

Cast: Bing Crosby, Rhonda Fleming, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, William Bendix, Virginia Field, Henry Wilcoxon. Paramount.

To say that a Bing Crosby picture doesn't quite come off is to put yourself in an awfully funny position, but I still claim this picture doesn't go anywhere, say anything, or even get funny on more than the lowest slapstick level. Since it is supposedly based on the great satiric novel by Mark Twain, it's a disappointment. Movie's about Hank Martin

Say farewell to "Touch and Go" lips!

GLAMOROUS, TEMPTING LIPS ... LIP BEAUTY HELD CAPTIVE

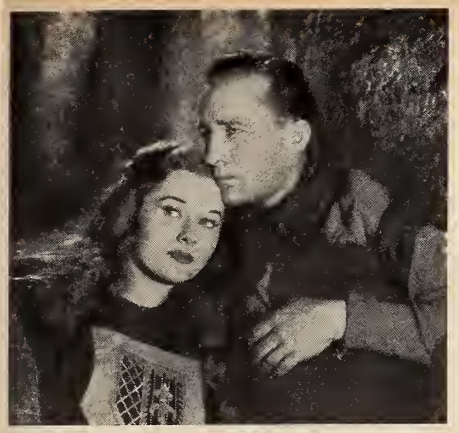
LIP-MAGIC by Durét

Lip-Magic is new—different ...it's a caress that preserves the contour—prevents smears! Simply brush on over your lip make-up. Enjoy a day and evening with no "lip slip"... no embarrassing prints on others. LIP-MAGIC is a clear liquid you apply right over your lipstick... harmless and non-irritating. Ask for LIP-MAGIC at your favorite cosmetic counter.

FOUR SIZES 60¢ TO $5.00

DURÉT, LTD., 404-4th Ave., New York 16

POP! POP! POP!
EVERYBODY LOVES
Manley's
Hi Pop
POPCORN



IN BAGS OR BOXES FRESH FROM Manley POPCORN MACHINES

IN PACKAGES FOR POPPING AT HOME

Get hot, fresh, delicious Hi Pop Popcorn anywhere—the Nation's popular food confection. Served from sparkling Manley Popcorn Machines at your movie theatre and variety store or wherever good popcorn is sold. Ask your food store for Hi Pop in the red and white candy cane package. Make your own popcorn at home. Remember—Hi Pop is the same fine corn movie shows feature.

A Connecticut Yankee: Bing Crosby meets Rhonda Fleming at King Arthur's court.

(Crosby), a blacksmith who gets beaned on the head and finds himself transported back to the days of King Arthur. He discovers Arthur (Sir Cedric Hardwicke) to be a silly old man with a perpetually runny nose, completely under the power of his court magician, Merlin (Murvyn Vye). Merlin's a wicked soul, likes to keep the people poor, and himself rich, and intruders dead. Bing comes under the last heading, but he's from a much later century, and therefore knows a little magic of his own (like letting the sun shine onto his watch crystal, and aiming the crystal at the seat of Merlin's pants, with devastating results), so Merlin can't hurt him too much. Bing falls in love with the King's good niece, Alisande La Carteloise (Rhonda Fleming), Merlin lets Rhonda's fiance, Sir Lancelot (Henry Wilcoxon), know about it, Wilcoxon and Crosby meet on the field of honor (Bing working with a lariat) and Crosby still comes out top dog. Eventually, however, Bing talks the king into coming along on a tour of the country to see his oppressed people, and the two, along with a hopelessly idiotic knight named Sir Sagamore (William Bendix) set forth. Merlin; the king's wicked niece, Morgan Le Fay (Virginia Field); and a rotter of a knight called Sir Logris (Joseph Vitale) lay a trap, capture the travelers, sell 'em as slaves, and nearly get them beheaded, but Bing saves the day with a total eclipse of the sun which scares the whole country half to death. That's about it. Except it's in Technicolor and contains some fair songs.

THE ACCUSED

Cast: Loretta Young, Douglas Dick, Robert Cummings, Wendell Corey. Paramount.

Loretta Young is a prim school teacher who's happy, though repressed. One of her students, a brash young man named Bill Perry (Douglas Dick), makes a pass at her one lonely night, and she bashes his head in with a blunt instrument. Then, since they're down at the beach, she proceeds to pump water into his lungs, so he'll look as if he drowned. After this, she tosses him over a cliff, and goes home. Perry's guardian, Robert Cummings, in town to investigate his ward's conduct, discovers he's too late, but sticks around anyway, and conceives a deep love for Loretta. Maybe you think this is an

That "Left-Out Feeling" is no fun!

Get back in the picture, Sis! That's where a dream-girl like you belongs. And never trust your charm to anything but dependable Mum. For Mum's unique, modern formula works entirely for your daintiness—contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Be a safety-first girl. Get a jar of Mum today!

Mum-Safer for Charm ... Mum checks perspiration odor for the whole day or evening. Protects against risk of future odor after your bath washes away past perspiration.

Mum-Safer for Skin ... Gentle Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Doesn't dry out in the jar to form scratchy crystals. Mum is harmless to skin.

Mum-Safer for Clothes ...No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Quick, pleasant to use. Economical, too—no shrinkage, no waste.

keeps you nice to be near

Product of Bristol-Myers

for hair men love to touch

Helene Curtis

creme shampoo

rich in emulsified lanolin half pound $1 (LARGE REG. SIZE, 60¢) more shampoo . . . more quality for the money

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Who knows what shampoo is best? Your beautician! Use this 2-to-1 favorite of professional beauticians. Leaves hair misty-soft, dazzling clean, manageable, glowing. Billows of foam instantly even in hard water. No soap film! Rich emulsified Lanolin prevents drying. America's greatest value.

The Accused: Loretta Young kills Douglos Dick when he gets much too affectionote.

embarrassing situation. You're right. For one thing, there's a detective—Wendell Corey—who doesn't think Bill Perry's death was an accident, and who's determined to find out why and by whom he was murdered. There are plenty of clues leading to Loretta, though it takes an unconscionably long amount of time for the police to absorb their significance, and in the end, even after everybody realizes she's the guilty party, there's nothing to worry about. Cummings is a lawyer, he defends her successfully—he says she was "afraid" and that explains it all. I wouldn't go around pumping water into anybody's lungs, expecting to get off that easy, if I were you, but aside from this whimsy, the picture's routinely suspenseful. Loretta blossoms into a loving woman under your very eyes (once you murder a man, you lose a lot of your inhibitions), and Wendell Corey is the best actor to hit Hollywood in months.

WAKE OF THE RED WITCH

Cast: John Wayne, Gail Russell, Luther Adler, Henry Daniell, Gig Young, Adele Mara. Republic.

Here's a big, noisy, lusty sea drama; what it hasn't got, sea drama needs. Life-long feuds, giant octipi, millions of dollars in gold—greed, sex, whee! A rich Dutch trader (Luther Adler) saves Captain John Ralls (John Wayne) from perishing in the Pacific Ocean. Wayne tells him of an island where there are pearls—the natives' pearls, of course, but who cares?—and they head Luther's boat in that direction. The island's got a French Colonial governor, or something of the sort. He's played by Henry Daniell, and his niece, Angelique, is played by Gail Russell. Ralls and Luther both want Gail; Gail cares for John, but gets promised to Luther by Unkie. John gets drunk, and nasty, and then the natives decide he's a god, and he has a fight with that octopus, and he gets showered with pearls, and quite by accident, he shoves Uncle into a pit of fire, and this upsets Gail so badly she marries Luther. Friends, the feud's on. John sees Gail a couple of times back in England—she knows now she's made a fearful mistake, and she even dies with his name on her lips (he carries her to the window AMAZING!! NEW!!

"DEW"

SPRAY DEODORANT

IN THE MAGICAL "SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TROUBLES! Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.

DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! "Dew" never touches hands. Not messy. Squeeze flexible bottle, spray on gentle mist.

ONLY DEODORANT CONTAINING "RETSELANE" to stop perspiration trouble, avoid perspiration stains on clothes. Removes odor.

WON'T ROT CLOTHES! Can't irritate normal skin.

SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax Less than 2¢ a week

SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW" ® SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

FREE PHOTO

DIRECT FROM HOLLYWOOD

LARGE SIZE OF YOUR FAVORITE MOVIE STAR

INTRODUCTORY OFFER! You will also receive FREE handsome catalogue containing names of all the stars, including various pictures and poses. Send name of your FAVORITE STAR and 15¢ to cover handling and mailing.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER Box No. 2309, Dept. L-49, Hollywood 28, Calif.

Coets

FOR MAKE-UP AND OTHER COSMETIC USES

HANDY COTTON SQUARES

LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

Wake of the Red Witch: John Wayne is a two-fisted skipper in a two-fisted tale of the sea.

a la Wuthering Heights)—and eventually, John sinks one of Luther's ships. With a fortune in gold bars. He refuses to tell Luther the whereabouts of the sunken ship, and they play a cat-and-mouse game all over the seven seas. When, at length, they meet again, a hapless lad named Sam Rosen (Gig Young) who's been sailing with John, falls in love with Luther's niece, Teleia Van Schreevan (Adele Mara) and they conduct a romance, while John and Luther badger one another. (There's a grudging admiration between them.) In the end, Luther makes a bargain with John, they sail away to rescue the sunken gold, and John dies like a dog when the sunken ship caves in, on and over him. Several miles above the surface, Luther's sitting sad-faced. "There'll never be a man like him again," he says mournfully.

STREETS OF LAREDO

Cast: Macdonald Carey, William Holden, William Bendix, Mona Freeman. Paramount.

Macdonald Carey, William Holden, and William Bendix are three outlaws roaming through Texas. Carey's the brains of the outfit, the other two are willing, but kind of dopey. They meet a kid (Mona Freeman) whose uncle has just been shot, and whose barn has just been burned down, by a smiling character named Charley Calico. Calico collects "protection" from Texans who'll pay it, and punishes Texans who can't or won't. Mona, alone in the world now, follows our threesome until they ditch her at the ranch of Pop Lint (Clem Bevens). She's very agreeable, settles down to keep house for Pop, and grow up. Years pass. Carey's caught by the Texas Rangers—they're attempting to bring law and order to Texas—and slung into jail. Holden and Bendix join the Rangers, figuring they can get him out from the inside. When Carey skips jail, however, he goes without his old pals. Left to their own devices, Holden and Bendix decide they like being Rangers, and by the time they meet up with Carey again, they're sold on the honest life. Carey's been figuring on using them. Rangers always know when there's going to be a gold shipment, etc. They don't want to play. He gets mad, and promises he'll force them out of the Rangers. His exploits become the talk of the country. He commits crimes right under

I dreamed I was buying my silverplate.
It was the kind with these nothing but the best for my dreams you know, and what lovely patterns!
Danish Princess and Lovely Lady and Youth.....All of them inlaid with the two blocks of sterling silver at the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks to stay lovelier longer!
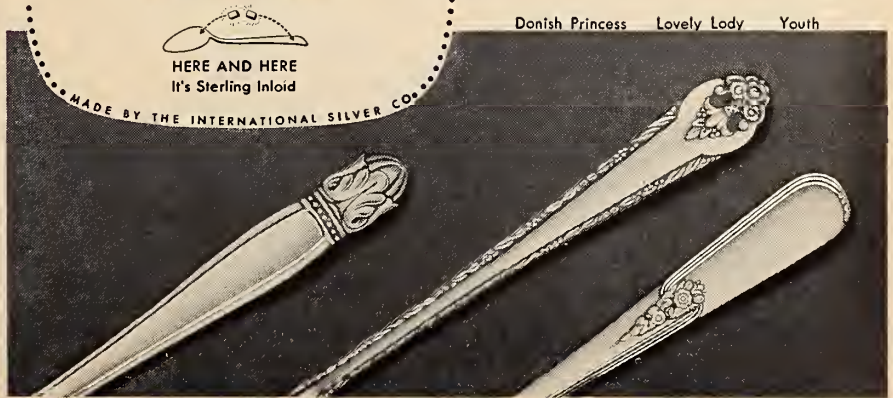
Such beautiful silverplate!
Such a wonderful dream!
I hope it comes true!

SEE Holmes & Edwords at your jewelry or department stores. In this, the finest of silverplate, you'll find the loveliest of patterns. All made in the U.S.A.



BUY Holmes & Edwords now! It is the greatest silverplate value your money can buy... and the price is only $68.50 for the 52-piece service for 8 with chest, $99.95 for the 72-piece service for 12.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID* SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.

Donish Princess Lovely Lady Youth

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

If you're in that rapidly disappearing class of envelope-lickers, learn a lesson from Professor Dry Seal! Switch to SELF-SEAL* envelopes—the really modern envelopes that need no licking, no messy moisteners. All you need do is turn the lower tab up under the upper flap. pass one dry finger across— and your envelope is sealed.

Self-Seal envelopes come in two sizes; in cellophane-wrapped packs. Writing paper to match is also available.

You will find Self-Seal envelopes, too, combined with fine writing papers, in beautiful gift boxes. At your favorite stationery counter.

SPECIAL "Get Acquainted" OFFER

Far a trial cambination package af Self-Seal envelapes and writing paper, send a dime ta U.S. Envelape Campany, Dept. 9, 21 Cypress St., Springfield 2, Mass.

* T. M. Reg U. S. Pat. Off.

Self-Seal Envelopes- Manufactured by UNITED STATES ENVELOPE COMPANY Springfield, Mass.
World's largest Manufacturer of Envelopes

Streets of Laredo: Bill Holden wins Mona Freemon in the course of much sixgun shootin'.

the Rangers' noses, and finally, Holden's given orders to go get him. He refuses, and is tossed in a cell. So Bendix goes to get Carey instead, Carey shoots him dead, and sends his body back to the Rangers. Now Holden's mad. He's willing to track Carey down. Carey's been hiding out at Pop Lint's place—Mona always nourished a secret yen for him—but after she sees him shoot Bendix, she decides he isn't a nice person. Holden cleans up Carey—and Charley Calico, incidentally—and gets the girl. He never seems to be the girl's first choice in a Western movie (Glenn Ford recently beat his time in The Man From Colorado) but he always comes out of it all just dandy.

BAD BOY

Cast: Audie Murphy, Selena Royle, Lloyd Nolan, Jane Wyatt, James Gleason.
Allied Artists.

Variety Clubs International, an organization of theater men, actually does run a Boys' Ranch in Texas, for the purpose of rehabilitating young criminals, and this picture is based on true stories of that ranch. Here we're concerned with a boy named Danny Lester (played by war hero Audie Murphy) who's caught trying to rob guests at a hotel where he's a bellboy. (Previously, he's committed 62 other felonies.) He comes up before a judge (Selena Royle) who wants to send him to reform school, but Marshall Brown (Lloyd Nolan) director of "Boys' Ranch," asks for his custody, and the judge grants the request. At the ranch, Danny remains a smart-aleck. He doesn't get along with any of the other boys, he makes himself cordially hated. Brown (convinced there aren't any hopeless delinquents) sets out to investigate Danny's background. He discovers that the boy's mother (Barbara Woodell) had suffered from a painful form of heart disease, but hadn't been allowed by her husband—a health cultist—to have a doctor, and that she'd died shortly after taking some sedatives which Danny, who couldn't bear to see her suffering, had stolen from the drugstore where he'd worked. His step-father'd accused him of killing his mother, and the boy, wild with grief, had run away from home. Thinking himself a murderer, he'd gone on to commit many small crimes. By the time Brown finishes tracking down this story, Danny's already sneaked into town from the ranch, and robbed a store. He gets caught, but now Brown thinks he understands the boy, and can really help him. First step is to assure him that his mother died a natural death, and relieve him of the terrible burden of guilt he's been carrying. From there, it's comparatively easy to help the boy make a decent life for himself. This picture states its case simply, the people involved in it seem honest, and you come away from it wishing there were more men like Matthew Brown, and wishing all bad boys had the chance that was given to Danny Lester. Acting's uniformly excellent; cast includes Jane Wyatt as Mrs. Brown, and James Gleason as Brown's chief aide.

Bad Boy: Audie Murphy, instead of being sent to prison, gets reformed at a ranch in Texas.

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page the photographs which appear in this issue.

6 Bud Fraker—7 T. Lt., Bot. Lt., Bert Parry, T. Rt., Bot. Rt., Bob Beerman—8 Warners—10 Marty Crail—12 Wide World—14 T., Bob Beerman, Bot., Henry C. Rogers—19 Wide World—20 Courtesy of Linda Christian—21 T., Ciro's S.A., Mexico, D.F., Lt., Courtesy of Linda Christian, Rt., Wide World—22 Wide World—37 Bert Parry—38 Bob Beerman—39 T. Lt., Courtesy of Jay Gorney, T., Educational Films, Bot., 20th Century-Fox—40 20th Century-Fox Exc. Bot. Rt., Paramount —41 20th Century-Fox Exc. Bot. Lt., Wide World, Cen. Rt., International News Service 42 T. Lt., Wide World, T. Rt., International News Service, Cen. Lt., Wide World, Cen. Rt., Vanguard Films, Bot. Lt., Bob Beerman, Bot. Rt., Columbia — 43 T. Lt., RKO, T. Rt., Bob Beerman, Cen. Lt., Press Association, Cen. Rt., Gus Gale, Bot. Lt., John Miehle, Bot. Rt., Bob Beerman—44 Bob Beerman—45 Bert Parry—46 Bob Beerman—47 Bert Parry—48, 49 Bob Beerman —50, 51 Bert Parry—52 20th Century-Fox —53 T., RKO, Bot., 20th Century-Fox—54 20th Century-Fox—55 Bob Beerman—56 Wide World—57 Bob Beerman—58 Don Ornitz—59 Schuyler Crain—60 Bert Parry Exc. T. Lt., Hal McAlpin—61 Bert Parry—62 Gus Gale—63 New York Daily News—64 Donald Arden of the Stork Club News Service—65 Gus Gale—66 Bob Beerman—67 T. Lt., Bob Beerman, Bot Lt., Modern Screen staff, Bot. Rt., International News Service—68 T. Wide World, Bot. International News Service—69 Wide World—70 MGM—75, 78 Jacques Simpson of Pagano Studios—114 20th Century-Fox.

Abbreviations: Bot., Bottom; Cen., Center; Exc., Except; Lt., Left; Rt., Right; T., Top.

To Introduce New Film-Removing Pepsodent

Amazingly Improved!

REGULAR PRICE 50¢

2 TUBES 25¢ 33¢

YOU SAVE 17¢

Another Fine Product of Lever Brothers Company

New Film-Fighting Formula for Brightening Teeth . . . Cleaning Breath!

Thrillingly different! New film-removing Pepsodent foams wonderfully — goes to work faster removing the film that makes your teeth look dull.

Moreover, Pepsodent's amazing new formula routs "bad breath" germs that lurk in film — germs that cause food particles to decay and taint your breath.

Try new fast-foaming Pepsodent with Irium. See if it doesn't give you brighter teeth; cleaner, fresher breath. Hurry! Act while money-saving offer lasts!

Act today!

Pepsodent's twin-pack bargain on sale March 14, at all drug counters

For limited time only!

Advertisement

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Don't be Half-safe!

by

VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush of womanhood many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nothing "wrong" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deodorants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. In fact, more men and women everywhere use Arrid than any other deodorant. It's antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate protection is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears. Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, is guaranteed not to crystallize or dry out in the jar, or new jar free on return to Carter Products, Inc., 53 Park Pl., N. Y. C. The American Laundering Institute has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Arrid is safe for the skin—non-irritating—can be used right after shaving.

Don't be half-safe. During this "age of romance" don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter — only 39¢ plus tax.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

also showing . . .

capsule criticisms of films previously reviewed

ADVENTURES OF DON JUAN (Warners)—Errol Flynn, as a sort of Errol Flynn of Old Spain, outwits the enemies of his beloved Queen, Viveca Lindfors. It's neither art nor history—but it is quite a rousing load of fast excitement.

CHICKEN EVERY SUNDAY (20th-Fox)—Dan Dailey is a nice guy who does great things for his town but stays poor doing them while Celeste Holm, his long-suffering mate, keeps the family going by taking in boarders. Colleen Townsend's their daughter, admired by Alan Young and Bill Callaban. A warm and pleasant film.

COMMAND DECISION (MGM)—Clark Gable is an Air Force general, sticking doggedly to his heartbreaking task of sending bombers on high-casualty missions over Germany. The all-male cast includes Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson, John Hodiak, Brian Donlevy, Charles Bickford and Edward Arnold. A grim, brilliant and completely absorbing drama.

CRISS CROSS (Univ.)—Burt Lancaster finds he still has a yen for his ex-wife, Yvonne de Carlo. So he goes into business with her new hnsband, Dan Duryea. The business is crime, and you know what that's like—it's noisy and gory and it doesn't pay. Maybe it's time Burt got into something else.

EVERY GIRL SHOULD BE MARRIED (RKO)—Cary Grant is finally overwhelmed by the all-out tactics of Betsy Drake, bent on matrimony. Diana Lynn, Franchot Tone and Eddie Albert get caught in the middle of the rumpus. A bright farce.

FAMILY HONEYMOON (Univ.)—Fred MacMurray marries widow Claudette Colbert—and then circumstances force them to lug her three tots, Gigi Perreau, Peter Miles and Jimmy Hunt, along on their honeymoon. The picture sags now and then, but there are some memorably hilarious points, too.

HIGH FURY (U.A.)—Madeleine Carroll, Michael McKeag, Michael Rennie and Ian Keith in a tight drama laid in the Alps. The climax comes in a mountain-climbing sequence that's one of the most terrifyingly exciting episodes in film history. Extremely well worth seeing.

JOAN OF ARC (RKO) — By no means a great movie, yet it does have its impressive moments—some supplied by Ingrid Bergman, but most of them by the Technicolor pageantry. José Ferrer is easily outstanding in the colossal cast.

JOHN LOVES MARY (Warners)—Ronald Reagan, to oblige pal Jack Carson, marries Jack's English girl, Virginia Field, just to get her back to the U. S., where he plans to divorce her at once and turn her over to Jack. Then it develops that Jack already has a wife and a child. What a fix—for Ronald's engaged to Pat Neal. It all works out, and very amusingly, too.

THE KISSING BANDIT (MGM)—Frank Sinatra, as a shy fellow who can't ride, goes out to early California where he's expected to be the dashing outlaw his father was. A diverting Tech. color song-and-dance romp that also employs the gifts of Kathryn Grayson, Ann Miller, Cyd Charisse, Ricardo Montalban and J. Carroll Naish.

KISS IN THE DARK (Warners)—David Niven, a longhair pianist, suddenly becomes owner of an apartment house. He's indifferent to the pleas of ex-owner Victor Moore to make it fit to live in until he meets tenant Jane Wyman, who teaches him about life and jazz music. The story's moderately original, it's nicely performed, and there are a number of chuckles in this so-so comedy.

LET'S LIVE A LITTLE (Univ.)—In the course of making up his mind whether to marry cosmetics queen Anna Sten or lose her million-dollar advertising account, advertising executive Robert Cummings becomes a patient of psychiatrist Hedy Lamarr. Lots of laughs here.

A LETTER TO THREE WIVES (20th-Fox)—A mischievous lady writes to Jeanne Crain, Linda Darnell and Ann Sothern to state she's leaving town with one of their husbands—which one, she doesn't say. This leads to a flashback examination of the girls' married lives with, respectively, Jeffrey Lynn, Paul Douglas and Kirk Douglas. A fresh and superbly executed comedy.

LIVE TODAY FOR TOMORROW (Univ.) — Jndge Fredric March goes on trial for the mercy-killing of his wife, Florence Eldridge. Geraldine Brooks is their daughter. If the makers had dared state any honest opinions in this film, it could have been forceful and dramatic. But though the acting's first rate, the result is pretty pointless agony.

THE LUCKY STIFF (U.A.) — An exceedingly involved murder mystery-comedy with Dorothy Lamour, Brian Donlevy, Claire Trevor and assorted corpses. If yon don't mind not knowing jnst what's going on, you may enjoy this.

THE MAN FROM COLORADO (Col.)—Glenn Ford and Bill Holden are Union officers who, after the Civil War, return to Colorado where Glenn's elected federal judge with Bill as bis marshal. Glenn has become kill-crazy in the war, and his reign as judge gets bloodier and bloodier. Finally his wife, Ellen Drew, Bill and most of the citizens tnrn agin bim. A fine Western with terrific pace.

MY OWN TRUE LOVE (Para.)—Ex-British Army officer Melvyn Douglas, a widower, is introdnced by daughter Wanda Hendrix to Phyllis Calvert, for whom he falls. His son, Philip Friend, retnrns from the war embittered and resents his old man's chance at bappiness. An interesting, medium-weight drama, well acted.

THE PALEFACE (Para.)—Bob Hope, Jane Russell, Technicolor, the Old West, and abont 16 loud laughs a minute. If you don't love this, we'll hate you. And oh, yes—"Buttons and Bows" originated here.

PORTRAIT OF JENNIE (Selznick)—A strange and beautiful love story in which Joseph Cotten, a struggling artist, finds his great inspiration in a young girl, Jennifer Jones, who comes to him in Manhattan from beyond time and space. Ethel Barrymore, David Wayne, Cecil Kellaway and Lillian Gish head a distingnished supporting cast. An extraordinarily fine film.

THE RED SHOES (Eagle-Lion)— A British-made Technicolor drama dealing with ballet people that rises to a magnificent peak in a full-scale ballet featuring ballerina Moira Shearer. This is something you could enjoy seeing over and over.

THE SNAKE PIT (20th-Fox)—Olivia de Havilland loses her mind and goes through the horrors of a typical state mental hospital. Mark Stevens as her husband and Leo Genn as a sympathetic psychiatrist are excellent, as are dozens of others in minor roles—but Olivia de Havilland is even better in one of the finest performances ever given in motion pictures. A great film in every respect.

SO DEAR TO MY HEART (RKO) —The ups and downs of a farm kid, Bobby Driscoll, as he strives to raise a tiny lamb to win a county fair blue ribbon. Burl Ives is his uncle. There are several cartoon sequences. One of the best movies Walt Disney has ever created—a thorough delight.

UNFAITHFULLY YOURS (20th-Fox)—Rex Harrison is a symphony conductor who suspects his wife, Linda Darnell, is carrying on with his secretary, Kurt Kreuger. As he conducts, he daydreams of various ways of dealing with the problem. Barbara Lawrence and Rudy Vallee are also present in this unusual Preston Sturges comedy.

WHEN MY BABY SMILES AT ME (20th-Fox)—Betty Grable, faithful wife of burlesque comic Dan Dailey, brings him back to respectability after alcohol downs him from the Broadway heights. A corny but effective tale of the Prohibition era, filled with first-rate dancing and songs.

WHISPERING SMITH (Para.)—Railroad detective Alan Ladd keeps on trusting his old buddy, Preston Foster, until Preston wrecks one train too many Plenty of action in this bang-bang Western.

WORDS AND MUSIC (MGM) —Based none too firmly on the lives of the famed songwriting team of Rodgers and Hart, this Technicolor musical is as full of good things as a fruitcake. Mickey Rooney and Tom Drake have the leads, and popping in and out to sing and dance are Judy Garland, Gene Kelly, Perry Como, Vera-Ellen, Cyd Charisse, Lena Horne, Betty Garrett and a horde of other talented and good-looking people.

Which Twin has the Toni?

(and which has the $15 beauty shop wave? See answer below)

Compare Toni with any other permanent—any home wave, any beauty shop wave—and you'll find there's no finer wave at any price!

Now's the perfect time to give yourself a Toni—before the rainy spring weather starts! No more struggling then with limp, straight, rainy-day hair. Rain or shine, your Toni wave is soft and curly, beautifully natural-looking! But before trying Toni you'd like to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?
Of course. Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?
Amazingly easy! If you can roll your hair on curlers, you can give yourself a Toni. It's so surprisingly simple that each month more than two million women use Toni.

Why do most women prefer to use TONI?
Because the Toni Waving Lotion is not a harsh, hurry-up salon-type solution. Instead it's a mild creme lotion—made especially for home use. So gentle it just coaxes your hair into soft waves and curls. That's why your Toni wave looks more natural, even on the very first day.

Will my TONI wave be loose or tight?
With Toni you can have as much curl as you like, from a loose wave to a halo of soft ringlets. Just follow directions.

How long will my TONI last?
It's guaranteed to last as long as a $15 beauty shop wave...or your money back.

How much will I save with TONI?
The Toni Kit with plastic curlers costs only $2. You can use the plastic curlers again and again. So for your second Toni wave all you need is the Toni Refill Kit. It costs just $1 . . . yet there is no finer wave at any price.

Which twin has the TONI?
The blond feather-cut curls belong to Marcelle and Jeanne Pastoret of Long Island, N. Y. Jeanne, on the left, has the Toni. She says: "I've never liked a permanent so much before. My Toni curls feel so soft and natural." And Marcelle says: "From now on we'll both have Toni waves!"

The wave that gives that natural look...Toni

Now! In Palmolive's Famous "Beauty Lather" You Get Something

Thrillingly New!

New Fragrance!
New Charm!
New Allure!

And Doctors Prove Palmolive Soap—Using Nothing But Palmolive—Can Bring Lovelier Complexions!

Millions of women will prefer this "Beauty Lather" Palmolive over all other leading toilet soaps . . . the minute they try it!

And small wonder! For Palmolive's famous "Beauty Lather" has a new, clean, flower-fresh fragrance for new allure, new charm.

And using Palmolive Soap, the way doctors advised, is so effective that all types of skin—young, older, oily—respond to it quickly. Dull, drab skin appears brighter . . . coarse-looking skin finer. Even tiny blemishes—incipient blackheads—disappear or improve remarkably.

So do as Doctors advised. Stop improper cleansing! Instead, wash your face with Palmolive Soap three times each day, massaging Palmolive's wonderful "Beauty Lather" onto your skin, for sixty seconds each time, to get its full beautifying effect. Then rinse! That's all.

But 36 doctors—leading skin specialists—advised this way for 1285 women, and proved Palmolive can bring lovelier complexions to 2 out of 3 in just 14 days. Get Palmolive Soap and start today!

SHIRLEY'S 21!

■ On April 23, 1949, a girl named Shirley Temple will celebrate her 21st birthday. Newspapers and radio stations all over the world will devote thousands of words to her coming-of-age. For Shirley Temple is much more than a Hollywood actress: she's a living legend.

To aging men and women in the dark corners of the world, Shirley is a reiteration of hope, decency and the wonder of youth. To Americans in their thirties and forties, Shirley is like a daughter—a fine daughter who "grew up" in their time. To young people and children, Shirley represents a full realization of their own good young hopes and dreams.

When we of MODERN SCREEN noted Shirley's approaching birthday, we wanted to celebrate it in a big way. So, for the first time in its 18 years, the magazine is publishing a "special issue" dedicated to one star. Beginning here, you will find 17 pages given over to a comprehensive picture-and-text story of Shirley, her background and her life today. This is, in a way, a birthday present to Shirley, to John Agar and to their little girl, Linda Susan. It is also, though, a testimonial to a way of life that made these nice people possible; a way of life that was itself made possible by nice people everywhere.

Adele H. Nichols
EDITOR

Shirley and the scripts of every major film she's ever made. In all, the imposing array comprises 35 movies.

For the complete story of Shirley Temple, see the next 16 pages.

by Jay Gorney

I discovered SHIRLEY TEMPLE

Jay Gorney, composer, writer, film and theatrical producer, has written the scores and worked on the scripts of dozens of movies and Broadway musicals. Among his many song hits have been "The Stars Remain," "A Fellow and a Girl," and "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" Currently in New York, he bears the impressive title of Director of the Musical Play Department of the Dramatic Workshop of the New School for Social Research—and is producing a new edition of his famed revue, Meet the People.—THE EDITORS.

■ I'd never seen a more depressingly artificial little girl. Her hair had been bleached a dazzling platinum and stiffly curled, her cheeks looked rouged and, I suspected, even those long lashes had had a beauty treatment.

"All right, honey," said studio chief Winfield Sheehan, who was showing me, as a newly-hired composer, about the Fox lot. "Show Mr. Gorney what you can do." He smiled fondly.

And, with all the spontaneity of an animated doll, she went into an "imitation" of Mae West. Every inflection, every gesture, every smile was given with terrible and calculated archness.

At last the dreadful routine came to a close—"C'm up and see me sometime. . . ."

Sheehan turned to me, beaming. "Well, what do you think of our future star? Isn't she terrific? She's terrific!"

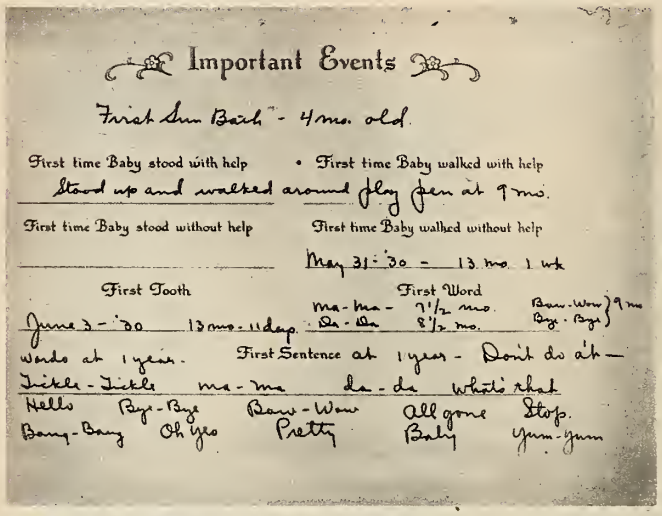
"She's—she's quite a youngster," I said. What else could I say to the head of the studio? We went on with the conducted tour.

When it was over, I dropped in on producer Lew Brown. "I've seen the great child discovery," I said.

"Fine!" said Lew. "She's wonderful, isn't she?"

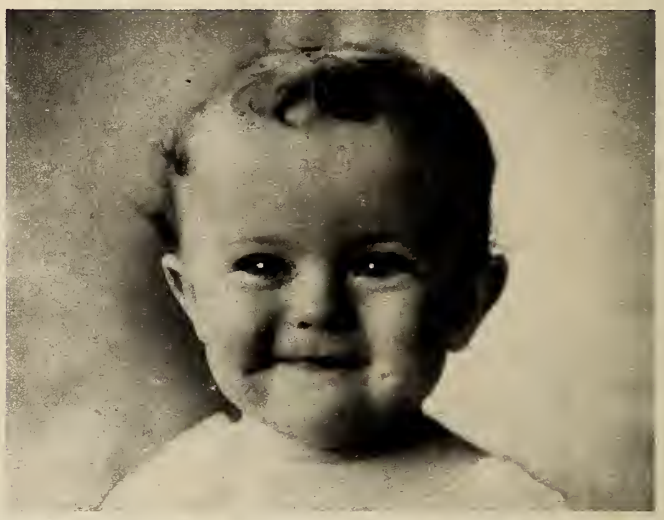
"To put it mildly," I said, "I think she's unnatural, precocious, and revolting. If we're going to try to give the public a new child star, she'll at least have to (Continued on page 112)

In 1932, before her discavery, Shirley was making "Baby Burlesk" shorts far Educatianal.



Stand Up and Cheer, with Warner Baxter, was Shirley's first Fax movie, and a personal triumph.

Shirley, who still retains all her early charm, stands before a portrait of herself as a child, painted by the late Di Gaggeri.

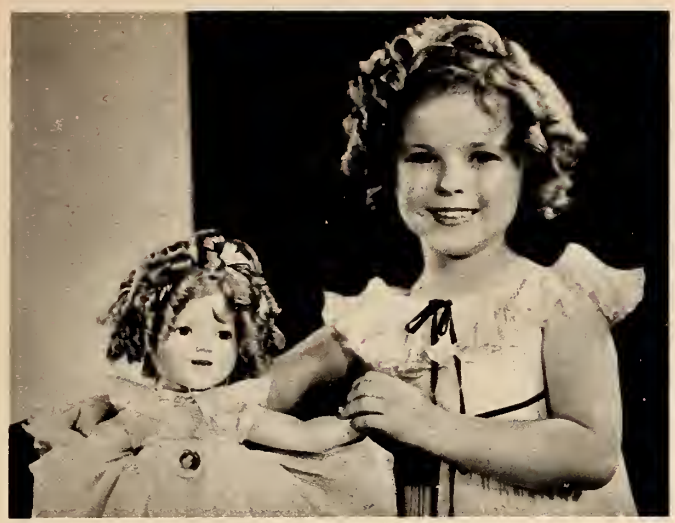


From baby to star to legend: this is the phenomenon of Shirley Temple.

LIVING LEGEND

■ With the possible exception of royalty, no single child in modern history has ever attracted as much attention as has Shirley Temple. Having been discovered (see preceding page) her star blazed up overnight. Fan letters poured into her studio. Her salary increased by bounds. She lent her name to dolls, dresses, toys and gadgets. Her face became familiar in the most remote parts of the earth. And as the years raced by, she transcended, through the medium of the movies, the position of a movie star. To millions of young women Shirley began to represent the American dream. To people of other lands she became a symbol of much that is phenomenal in American life. Today, at 21, Shirley Temple emerges a living legend.

1928: Shirley Temple was born an April 23rd, 1928, in Santo Monica, Cal. Her early records—like the obave—indicated her birth date ta be 1929. Shirley herself didn't knaw her real age until she was 12.



1928: Nat yet a year ald, Shirley already displayed her naw famaus dimples. Her vacabulary consisted of faur wards—"Mo-ma, Do-da, baw-wow and bye-bye." Holding an, she could walk in her playpen.

1934: After her discovery by Jay Garney (see poge 39), Fox offered Shirley $150 o week and a role in Stand Up And Cheer. Shirley ond her father seem quite hoppy os Mrs. Temple signs the cantract.

1934: Paramount succeeded in borrawing Shirley for Little Miss Marker, with Adolphe Menjau. After the picture's release her weekly salory jumped to $1,250 ond she was the darling of the Fox lat.

1934: As Shirley's popularity began to zoom to unprecedented heights, dozens of "Shirley Temple" dolls, toys, dresses ond occessories mode an oppeorance in shops throughout the nation.

1935: When she starred in The Little Colonel, with Bill Robinson, Shirley became Number 1 ot the box-office. Her fother, formerly o bank manager, was now her agent. Her mother took over as monoger.

1935: The American Legion commissioned Shirley os its youngest Honorary Colonel. Shirley snappily solutes Colonel Reginold Borlow of Hollywood Post No. 43 as he hands her the certificate.

1935: Shirley, who won o speciol Academy Aword, talks it over with Claudette Colbert—who copped the Oscar for It Happened One Night. By the end of the yeor, Shirley had made 11 major pictures.

1938: Still First Lody of the box-office, 10-yeor-old Shirley is visited on the set of Little Miss Broadway by onother First Lody, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. Later that yeor, Shirley met the President.

1940: Young People ended the little-girl phase of Shirley's career. A sturdy 12-yeor-old ond growing rapidly, Shirley wos retired for about 14 months to better her educotion at the Westloke School.

LIVING LEGEND

1942: Tempororily out of films, Shirley studied earnestly, mode "B" grades at the Westlake School. Her professionol work was limited to radio oppearonces, chiefly in the CBS Junior Miss show.

1942: Although Shirley received her first screen kiss in Miss Annie Rooney from Dickie Moore, her mother refused to allow pictures mode of the event. This photo is from the actual movie negotive.

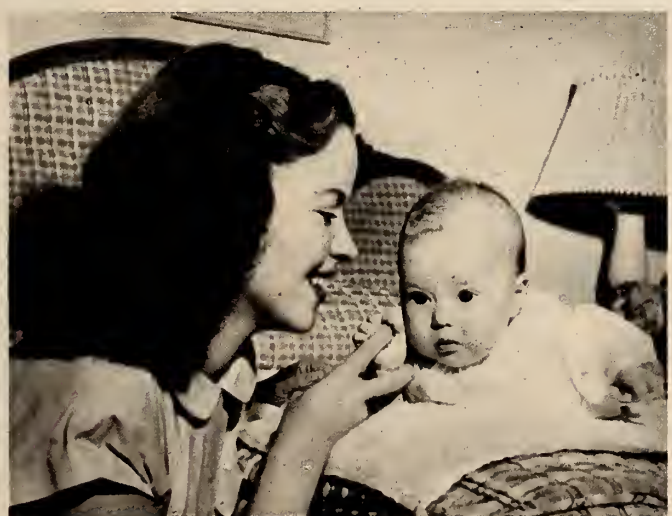
1944: Servicemen visiting the glamor-filled Hollywood Canteen found Shirley a pretty and willing waitress. During the wor, she also appeared in mony radio ond camp shows to aid home-front morole.

1944: Following o brief obsence from the screen, Shirley signed a contract with a new boss, David Selznick, ond Since You Went Away marked the beginning of o new upsweep in her coreer.

1944: Shirley hod her first reol beau—Roy Hotchkiss of the U. S. Army, who squired her around whenever he could get leave. Though she'd met John Agar the year before, Roy was still her favorite.

1945: Shirley was 17 and starred in Kiss and Tell—which put her firmly back in the groove. She announced her engagement to John Agar, the son of a well-to-do Beverly Hills widow.

1945: Crowds gathered for blocks around Hollywood's Wilshire Methodist Church when Shirley and John were married on September 19. Chums from the Westlake School acted as Shirley's bridesmaids.



1945: The wedding was delayed half-an-hour by the late arrival of David Selznick (shown here with Mrs. Temple). Another distinguished guest was Governor Earl Warren of California (also late).

1946: Shirley's work in The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer (Cary Grant, Rudy Vallee) emphasized her comedy talents. In this picture she had her first movie drink, satisfied critics by making a face.

1947: Shirley was the first kid star to receive a special Oscar in 1935—and 12 years later, she Oscared Claude Jarman (The Yearling), right, and Harold Russell (Best Years of Our Lives).

1948: The birth of Linda Susan on January 30, aroused even more interest than Shirley's marriage. The child was born after Shirley completed Fort Apache, which also starred John Agar.

1948: More than any other picture of Shirley Temple, the photograph above marks the completion of an amazing cycle. No longer child or adolescent, Shirley the woman is publicly kissed by her husband.

I remember Daddy reading the Oz books . . . and when I was five I fell in love. I remember making cement pies . . . and the first night I danced with Jack.

How dear to my HEART

by Shirley Temple

Through all her 21 years, Shirley Temple has always held secret a part of herself, refusing—until now—to tell her own story in her own words. The appearance of the following story is thus not only a long-awaited event in publishing and a signal honor for which MODERN SCREEN is duly grateful, but also an exciting experience for readers, who can now share Shirley's own feelings as she recalls with fondness the treasured moments in a crowded and wonderful life.—THE EDITORS.

■ First thing I remember is my brother Jack pushing me to the grocery store in a Taylor-tot—the kind I just bought for Linda Susan. Seemed to me we were going pretty fast—and, knowing Jack, we probably were. . . . And it must have been 'round about then that I started not liking cats very well. Because once while I was napping, my eyes opened, and a cat who'd been curled in a corner of the room was halfway to me, and next he was up on the couch, staring right into my face. No privacy at all. (The other night we went to James Mason's house, with dozens of cats around—well, anyway, eight—and I thought, ye gods, what'll I do? But I minded my own business and they minded theirs, which was a nice arrangement. Just the same, I've always liked dogs better and always will.'

I remember clearing the dishes off the table. Mother believed—as (Continued on page 95)

←Dolls have been sent to Shirley from all over the world. A small part of her vast collection is shown here.

Along with groceries, Shirley stores the prints of all her movies in the Agar cellar. The collection is complete but for on early comedy—she's still seeking thot.

Shirley's press clippings have been preserved through the years in scrapbooks by secretories Gwladys Drake (center) and Ynez Hendricks.

Curly-Top TODAY

by Kirtley Baskette

Adult beyond her years, Shirley at 21 is poised and competent.

■ When Shirley Temple and John Agar were married, three years ago, newspapers all over Europe bannered the glad news in headlines—but the pictures of Shirley they printed were taken when she was seven years old.

This hatched a swarm of indignant letters which flew to her mother, Gertrude, like stinging bees.

"How could you permit such a horrible thing to happen to your precious child?" they demanded in various languages. "What goes on in America anyway?" The angry implication was plain: Ozark child-bride weddings had spread to Hollywood, with the world's dimpled darling the innocent victim.

Shirley was almost 18 when that happened, is now the mother of a year-old child, and this April 23rd attains her majority of 21 years—at which time she can vote, sue and be sued, qualify for jury duty and even be hanged if she murders somebody. And yet in her public's mind, obviously, it's no fair for Shirley Temple to grow up.

She has made seven adult pictures in the past five years—yet she still receives dolls for her collection from all over the world. The other day, driving her blue Cadillac a fraction over the speed limit, a traffic cop wailed her down and handed her a ticket with a sheepish grin.

"You really weren't going so fast," he admitted, "but I couldn't resist the chance to tell my kids I'd arrested Shirley Temple."

Living down the "Princess Shirley" legend is a large order for Shirley Temple, grown up or not. Luckily, she enjoys it. Luckily, she finds it a challenge, especially since she's picking her own pictures, planning her own career, handling her own deals, running her own house, and in general paddling her own canoe—very swiftly, too. Luckily, the inevitable changes in Shirley's face and figure, her likes and dislikes, tastes and temperament, private and professional life have dimmed not a whit the world-wide worship which still wells up at the very mention of her name.

Recently a foreign wire service asked her to talk over the transatlantic telephone to Paris. She agreed and the alert was flashed to France: "Shirley Temple will talk to you at such and such an hour, such and such a day."

Shirley was immediately flooded with cablegrams from Shirley's cottage in Brentwood is just down the hillslope from her parents' house. Here on the lawn are the Agars, Lonny (their collie) and Chris (Mrs. Temple's boxer).

Jack and Shirley try out the floor in the downstairs playroom of their house. This photograph is one in an exclusive series that continues on the following pages.

CURLY-TOP TODAY: These exclusive pictures tell the story of the Agars' quiet life.

Shirley's miniature lamp collection is kept in her bedroom. Last New Year's Eve, Jack filled the lamps with lighter fluid—a nice surprise until all the shades caught fire!

other countries. "If Shirley Temple will talk to Paris, why can't she talk to us, too?" She ended up spending two weeks, off and on, gossiping globally to foreign capitals from Helsinki to Cairo, and enjoying every minute of it.

At 21, Shirley Temple is an amazingly unchanged adult edition of the golden-curled goddess who ruled Hollywood in the thirties. She's still cute, round, sunny, sweet, merry and bright. Her face retains the smooth, doll-baby beauty and bisque skin, the agate-brown eyes, the naturally-delicate eyebrows, the pen-point dimples beside her mouth. Only lipstick and powder feature her makeup, and she uses clear nail polish. Her hair has darkened a touch from the honey-gold of her famous curls to a bronzish red.

Shirley today has a throaty laugh, a speaking voice on the contralto side. Smiles, chuckles and merry mannerisms punctuate her personality. She carries herself ramrod-straight, walks briskly, talks breezily. Her figure is daintily round, although definitely mature and feminine, especially since she (Continued on page 51)

The Agar living room is one of the largest in Hollywood. Furniture groupings divide it into den, music nook and dining room.

Shirley's bedroom doubles os study. Except for o guest room (now Lindo's nursery) nothing hos been odded to the cottoge, but Shirley redecoroted the entire inside.

At dinner time the Agors move to this corner of their French Provincial living room. Shirley went to cooking school ond wos o good pupil, but now she hos time only to prepore menus.

The sodo bor wos moved downstoirs when their cottoge, built in 1940, wos remodelled. Beyond it live the dolls—1,500 in oll. Shirley herself vocuums them twice yeorly.

CURLY-TOP TODAY

Shirley's home life centers around baby Susan's needs and amusements.

Linda Susan (called Su-Su by her adaring parents) is na prablem child. She eats happily and daesn't mind a bath ar a new diaper.

Su-Su daesn't find dressing up much fun, but she enjays having her hair brushed and going for a fast whirl araund the living raam.

(Continued from page 48) became a mother. She looks swell in sweaters, trim in her favorite Adrian-tailored suits. Her normal weight is 103 pounds. She wears a size 9 dress, but her 4½ shoe has spread to a 5 since Linda arrived. She stands five-feet-two —which, in combination with her dainty features, makes her an oddity in the Temple family: her brother, Jack, is six-feet-four and brother George, the ex-Marine who wrestles professionally, is six-feet-one and weighs in at 220 pounds.

A sharp and sometimes impish sense of humor spices almost everything Shirley does, just as it did in her childhood. She adores gags, practical jokes and plain jokes, and always has. She had one juvenile killer she used to slay them with around Fox in her moppet days.

"What's one and one?" Shirley'd ask practically anyone she could catch.

"Two," they'd calculate.

"What's one and one again?"

"Two."

"Who wrote 'Tom Sawyer'?" came next.

"Twain." (Continued on page 101)

Susan hasn't walked sola yet—but it's only a matter af days.

Anthony Ugrin, who made all of Shirley's famous portraits when she was a kid, poses her again during the shooting of Mr. Belvedere.

"Then and now" pictures tell a graphic story of Shirley's growth.

■ One sentimental day a few months ago, Shirley Temple came back to work for her old studio, 20th Century-Fox. It was a great day for her but an even greater one for studio employees. Prop men, sound engineers and technical advisers all turned out to greet her. Many of them had worked with Shirley on such movies as Bright Eyes and The Littlest Rebel when she'd been everybody's darling—and especially theirs. They'd missed Shirley. But there was one former Fox associate present—Mary Lou Hurford—who had kept right on being Shirley's stand-in as the two little girls grew up. Then someone dug out a few stills of Shirley that had been in the files for more than 15 years. Besides some of Shirley with Mary Lou, there were ones of her with still photographer Anthony Ugrin and sound engineer Gene Grosseman. It was a simple matter to take shots of them operating professionally with Shirley just as they had years ago. The results you see here.

Shirley has always had the same stand-in, Mary Lou Hurford. Left: making Stowaway in 1936. Right: at 20th-Fox two months ago.

Shirley asked engineer Gene Grossemon to let her listen to the sound track in 1934—and she did again while making Mr. Belvedere.

In RKO's Baltimore Escapade, Shirley's a 1905 girl crusader for the Rights of Women. Here she goes for a spin with Michael Shea.

Shirley's screen future is brightened by two comedies.

■ Simple, unsophisticated comedy is obviously the best bet for Shirley Temple today. Happily, that's just what she wants to do and what her employers are currently giving her. Both Baltimore Escapade and Mr. Belvedere Goes to College, her latest pictures, allow full scope to the forthright charms the young star retains from her childhood days. Both films sparkle with the sunny hilarity so cherished by U. S. family audiences. In the prospect of a long series of films of this character, Shirley Temple at 21, still the most beloved motion picture personality of all time, is possibly on the threshold of the brightest chapters of her phenomenal and matchless career.

Clifton Webb, Sitting Pretty's Mr. Belvedere, is pursued by co-ed reporter Shirley in 20th-Fox's Mr. Belvedere Goes to College.

THE END

MADE IN HEAVEN

"They have nothing in common," columnists wailed when John Hodiak and Anne Baxter were married. But today their marriage is regarded as perfect.

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

John spent hours explaining his roomful of fishing equipment to Anne, and now she's an authority. It's only one of many interests they've learned to share. Anne is in Yellow Sky. John, Command Decision.

■ When Anne Baxter was six years old, her mother gave her a copy of The Settlement Cook Book, a longtime favorite in the American kitchen. On the cover of the book was an illustration showing a long line of little-girl cooks all bearing trays of steaming food and walking toward an enormous red heart in the background. To leave no doubt that this big heart was that of MAN there was a printed line of explanation reading, "The Way To A Man's Heart."

Her mother didn't have to tell Anne the significance of the book. Anne knew. She treasured it from then on. On the first morning home after her honeymoon with John Hodiak, she got up early, propped the book up in the kitchen, checked the contents of the refrigerator, took a quick look around to see if everything else was ship-shape—and then marched back to the bedroom where her brand new husband was still sleeping. She patted his cheek gently until one eye came open.

"I've got a big surprise for you," she said. His eye blinked. "Yes," she went on, "you just tell me what you like for breakfast, anything at all, and I'll make it for you."

This was the moment she'd dreamed about ever since she'd been given the cook book almost 14 years before, so she almost bubbled over in anticipation of the big, pleased smile that would break over his face.

She saw John's eye stare at her for a moment and then slowly close.

"John!" Anne said. "Didn't you hear me? What's your favorite breakfast? I'm all ready to make it."

"Fav'it bek'fiss?" he mumbled.

"Yes."

"Coffee," he replied. "Jus' coffee."

Anne went back to the kitchen, seized The Settlement Cook (Continued on page 93)

MS SHORT FEATURE

I could think of a thousand things to say about our love.
They might sound corny,
but to Ben and me
they'd all be new and true and wonderful.

This love of ours

BY ESTHER WILLIAMS

Esther in her dressing room on the set of Neptune's Daughter. She expects to have her first baby in August.

Ben Gage and Esther designed and decorated their own Santa Monica home. Ben even helped build that essential item—the Swimming Pool.

■ As long ago as my freshman days in high school, I dreamed up my own special if maybe not too original version of Prince Charming. He was tall, blond and handsome. (Blond—I guess that part was a little original.) He was sweet and considerate. He had a wonderful sense of humor and a hearty, contagious laugh to go with it. And, as far as he was concerned, Esther Williams was the only girl in the world.

So when, a few years later, someone said casually at a party, "Esther, this is Ben Gage," I said to myself (not so casually!), "Esther, I've got a hunch this is the lad."

For he fitted all those dream specifications perfectly, except the last one—and I set to work on that deficiency at once.

Looking back on the three-and-a-half years since our marriage brings to mind all the old clichés that I may have scoffed at when others used them. Old chestnuts like "it seems like three weeks instead of three years" and "when you're in love, the days fly." But I've learned an amazing thing about those clichés: People keep saying them because they're true!

Though neither of us has ever put it into words, our love is a complete sharing of each other's dreams and hopes, problems and interests. We enjoy being together every possible moment. We're miserable when we're apart. Many marital experts look on such absolute dependence as being unwise, claiming that happy marriages are more solidly built on frequent holidays apart, on the husband's having an occasional night out with the boys, and the wife pursuing a hobby of her own.

Well, could be those experts are right.

But that's not our idea of a double order of happiness. I don't mind admitting that whenever Ben and I are separated for more than hours, I'm lost. And I think he is, too . . . otherwise, why should he keep showing up every few days whenever I'm away on tour?

Once last spring when I went East for personal appearances, he turned up in four different towns and, being Ben, he'd have to make each surprise visit (Continued on page 104)

Olivia de Havilland,
the year's most honored star, can take over as First Lady of Hollywood if she chooses—but will she want to play the part?

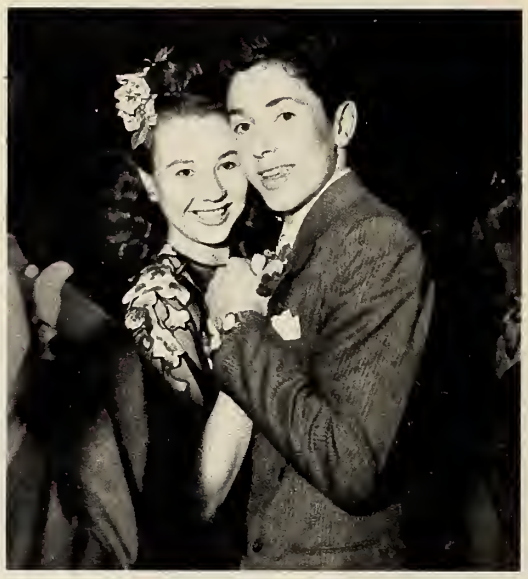
BY PRESTON WALLACE

what price glory?

If Olivia de Havilland were to become Hollywood's first lady, these quiet, homey scenes with husband Marcus Goodrich might be disrupted.

■ It looks very much as if from here on in, Olivia de Havilland may be having a rugged time living her life the way she wants to.

Whether or not Olivia cops an Academy Award—as so many seasoned observers think she will—for her spectacular performance in The Snake Pit, she'll still emerge as the year's most honored thespian. She has already been acclaimed top actress of 1948 by the National Board of Review, by the New York Film Critics, and by the San Francisco Drama Critics Council.



All this, added to the prestige she gained with her Oscar for To Each His Own a couple of years ago, has lifted the girl into position to step onto a glaring pinnacle as First Lady of Hollywood—a status in which she inevitably will be under the fiercest sort of pressure to engage in the public whirl she hitherto has managed to avoid. From here on in, if she accepts the distinction and all that goes with it, the shy but strong-minded little fighter will have a real battle on her expressive hands to keep the world from an unwanted intrusion into the quiet, happy existence (Continued on page 115)

They don't have to brief him on night-spots, or on how to kiss a girl—
Farley Granger's been around.
But no matter where he goes, he always leaves his heart at home.

BY CARL SCHROEDER

No love lost

1943: Forley met Jane Withers when both worked in North Star—his first film. They doted at the Palladium, ottended school together, were friends—nothing more.

1944: June Haver come into Forley's life while he was moking The Purple Heart. Then the Novy took him to Howoii where he reod of June's coming morrioge.

1946: Cothy O'Donnell storred with Farley in Your Red Wagon. They soon discovered they had one love in common—work. They were pals, but Forley never proposed to Cathy—and she never wanted him to.

1949: Forley admits he's concentroting now on Shelley Winters—but whether or not they're in love is something he's been keeping to himself.

1948: Geraldine Brooks lived near Farley in Laurel Conyon, ond when they hod time they had dinner together. Rumors obout romonce were only rumors.

■ Farley Granger is on a spot.

Abruptly, Farley has become a Big Man of 1949. It's true that he didn't see the miracle coming, and as he faces the heavy barrage from people who now want to pry into the intimate details of his life, he doesn't know whether to hide and shut up, or stand still and give out.

This six-foot-one-and-a-quarter-inch, heavy-browed, cleft-chinned, sturdy actor from San Jose, California, has never backed up in his life. Yet, he faces a problem as he inherits the mantle once worn by such men as Bob Taylor, Tyrone Power and Van Johnson when they were Hollywood's most romantic bachelors.

Farley Granger protests that he is not one of Hollywood's m. r. b.'s.

"Hell's bells!" he explodes. "When these reporters bear down on you, you're really target for today. Look at this clipping!"

It was a brief item: "Farley Granger is in love with two women! He is now dating and apparently swooning for Geraldine Brooks, but directly after he finishes Roseanna McCoy, he's dashing to England to see Pat Neal. He will then make up his mind which woman he loves and which gets his proposal."

When Farley saw this paragraph in print, he turned a color of red not yet invented for Technicolor. He'd lived through the not-too-gentle lambasting an actor gets in the Navy. He'd even ceased to be self-conscious about the necessity of wearing his hair over-length for certain roles. But how could he explain that (Continued on page 107) columnists ask:

"IS SHE IS OR IS SHE AIN'T?"

The following items are from Hollywood news columns and trade papers.

APRIL 19, 1948: "Begins to look like an honest-to-goodness romance between Greer and Texas oil millionaire, Buddy Fogelson."

APRIL 30, 1948: "Other night Greer and her new boy friend, Buddy Fogelson, showed up at Cafe Gala, took one look at Richard Ney with Ruth Brady, and flounced out of the joint."

MAY 3, 1948: "Trills that her dates with Buddy Fogelson, the wealthy Texan, are gossamer things."

JUNE 28, 1948: "Greer Garson's in love again. How do I know? She's changed her telephone number."

JULY 9, 1948: "Greer Garson has said yes to Texas oil millionaire, Buddy Fogelson . . . I am positive she will marry the Texan once her divorce from Richard Ney becomes final in September . . ."

AUGUST 11, 1948: ". . . is sizzling over the report that she is engaged to Buddy Fogelson . . ."

AUGUST 16, 1948: "After our story about her romance with Buddy Fogelson, Greer was ready to take to the tall timber, there were so many calls. Well . . . I still stick to my story of her marriage."

AUGUST 30, 1948: "will not marry Buddy Fogelson for a year at least, if at all."

SEPTEMBER 27, 1948: "Everyone in our town is asking the same question—is Greer going to marry the rich Texan, Buddy Fogelson, or isn't she? . . . in a few months if both feel as they do now, they will marry."

OCTOBER 7, 1948: ". . . I don't believe it will be long before she becomes Mrs. Buddy Fogelson."

OCTOBER 11, 1948: "Greer's loading up on new clothes and/or a trousseau."

OCTOBER 22, 1948: "Buddy Fogelson and Greer Garson hosting her mother at La Rue."

NOVEMBER 5, 1948: "Buddy Fogelson's friends in Texas are betting as high as $20,000 that he and Greer will marry before 'The Forsyte Saga' starts."

DECEMBER 11, 1948: "Buddy Fogelson . . . keeping the telephone wires hot to Greer Garson."

DECEMBER 13, 1948: "Garson and her bridegroom-to-be Buddy Fogelson, buying Xmas pretties together at the silver shop next to Romanoff's."

JANUARY 2, 1949: "Garson wedding postponed to June."

JANUARY 17, 1949: "Greer has promised Buddy Fogelson, the moneyed Texan, that she'll set an early Spring date and stick to it."

the

CASE OF THE HESITANT HEART

by hedda hopper

Both of Greer Garson's previous marriages ended in failure. Her second, to Richard Ney, was a war-time marriage and they were often away from each other.

Buddy Fogelson, who may be Greer's next husband, is well-liked by all in Hollywood. He recently gave her a spectacular bracelet.

By the time this is printed, Buddy Fogelson and Greer Garson may be man and wife. Up to press time, as we huddled expectantly around our pipeline to Hollywood, the lady still hadn't said yes to her Texan admirer. "Honest to Betsy," we kept yelling to Hedda at the other end, "we don't see how she resists this guy." "That's what I said," yelled Hedda. Yes, that's what Hedda had said—in the following straight-talking story.—THE EDITORS.

■ "See here, Greer!" I exclaimed, "if you keep this wonderful man dangling much longer I'm going to take him away from you—and," I added, "if I can't, I'll find someone who can!"

By golly, if I were 10 or 12 years younger, I wouldn't have been kidding, either! In fact, I'm not so sure that I was. The way the Duchess of Garson keeps putting off marrying Buddy Fogelson is strictly a case of cruelty to male animals—and in this case to one of the best.

I was at Mike Romanoff's cocktail party when I decided to take off my gloves and try to connect somewhere over the heart, over two hearts for that matter, two that seemed to tune up romantically in three-quarter time and then settle down to a draggy "Someday, Sweetheart." First pair I spied when I walked inside were Greer and Buddy.

I went right over to them and as I was saying hello something on Greer's wrist suddenly caught the light and twinkled like a Fourth of July sparkler. I looked closer and—wow—I never saw such a bracelet! A solid band of diamonds at least two inches wide, with huge roses in sapphires on top. I didn't have (Continued on page 118)

Columnists have speculated about the Greer Garson romance. Here's the truth of the matter.

by sheilah graham

Who is Howard Duff, what is he and why is he?

There, my friends and fellow sleuths, is the beginning of a mystery story whose solution would baffle even radio's Sam Spade—or would, if it weren't for the fact that Sam Spade is played on the airways by Mr. Duff himself.

The more you know about Howard, the less you know him. Some columnists describe him as a nice guy. Some term him a so-and-so. One day you read that he's quiet, peaceful and friendly. The next, you read that he carries an explosive chip on his shoulder and is fond of asking other males at parties and nightclubs if they wouldn't like to step outside and do battle. You hear that he's very eager to get ahead with his career—and hear also that he's highly uncooperative in the publicity matters so important to his career's progress. You read that he and Ava Gardner are a pair lost in love—and you read that they have frequent tiffs and that neither will discuss the possibility of their getting married.

Yes—Howard Duff is the best-known mystery in Hollywood!

Like any good detective on a fascinating case, I first look for clues. The most obvious—and the most beautiful—clue to Howard Duff the man is Ava Gardner the woman.

"She treats me like a dog," Howard once told me (Continued on page 91)

Howard Duff and Yvonne De Carlo (below) were engaged soon after they met. That was before he'd really learned to know Ava Gardner (right).

hollywood's

Even his best friends have a tough time figuring out all the conflicts in Howard Duff's baffling behavior.

best-known mystery

June Haver and Dr. John Duzik do not plan to marry until she receives a special dispensation from Catholic Church officials in Rome.

Can June Haver find happiness?

Her first marriage was a tragic, impulsive mistake. Now June seeks another chance with the man she really loves.

by florabel muir

Among the many marital tragedies of Hollywood, none in recent years has held the poignance of June Haver's. A very young girl indeed, and luckily in love with the "right" man, she somehow slipped into a quick, headlong mesalliance with another man who proved very wrong for her. Now, two years later, she is within days of winning a final divorce. She may also win that rarest of good things—a chance to go back and start over again. This story tells how.—THE EDITORS.

■ June Haver has her ideal man, Dr. John Duzik, and is all ready to walk down the bridal aisle with him after March 25, when she will have her final divorce decree from band musician Jimmy Zito.

But there is one great obstacle to be surmounted first: Before she remarries she must, as a devout Catholic, have the consent of the Congregation of the Rota, which is made up of a committee of cardinals of the Catholic Church in Rome.

Her petition for this dispensation has been filed by the Diocesan officials in her home parish in Beverly Hills, and is based on alleged evidence that before the marriage Zito withheld facts about himself and that, accordingly, (Continued on page 111)

Apartment house bought by Dr. Duzik is called Duhoven Manor. June (next to be seen in Look For the Silver Lining) supervised the decorating.

June with her sisters Dorothy (left) and Evelyn and her mother (right). Her mother insisted June was out of her element when she toured with a band.

June and Jimmy Zito (above) knew each other for seven years and were finally married in March 1947—but after a year of separations and reconciliations, they divorced.

I don't blame rita!

by eduardo cansino

I have seen my daughter fall in love before, and each time I wished her well. For I know she loves only from the heart, and would do nothing wrong.

In the Aga Khan's chateau near Cannes, France, Rita poses between the Aga and his wife, Her Highness the Begum. In the rear are banker J. G. B. Campbell and Aly.

Rita's daughter Rebecca, four, accompanied Rita and Aly to Murren, Switzerland, where they were joined by Aly Khan's two sons. At this time, the world still speculated about their plans.

Shown here on a road in Murren, Rita and Aly Khan left soon afterward for his father's Riviera chateau, where Aly announced his intentions.

No proposed marriage since that of Edward the Eighth to Mrs. Simpson has created such world-wide stir and controversy as that of Prince Aly Khan to Rita Hayworth. We asked Rita's father, Eduardo Cansino, to state his views on the matter. He does so in the following forthright story. —THE EDITORS.

■ When Rita Hayworth came back to Hollywood after her vacation in Europe last year she called me right away, as she always does, and we chatted a long time, catching up on each other's lives.

Of course I'd read the newspapers. So—"What about your romance with the prince?" I teased her. "What goes on?"

"I can't tell you anything definite—yet," she laughed.

But that was before she'd met and had been approved by Prince Aly Khan's father, the Aga Khan. Now it's been announced that Prince Aly is to be her husband. That will make him my son-in-law and that will make me very happy—not because he's a wealthy man and a prince, but because my Rita loves him.

Since I'm her father, people of course ask me, "How does it feel to have Rita engaged to a prince of India? What do you think of it?"

And I answer, "I think it's wonderful and I am for Rita all the way." I love my daughter and it has always made me happy to see Rita happy. The way I feel this time is as I have felt each time Rita has given her heart—"She is in love. She should marry him." (Continued on page 105)

It's as simple as that...to glorify waffles—(pancakes, French toast, hot biscuits and fritters, too).

Everybody loves the rich, maple-y flavor of KARO* Syrup, Green Label...as a spread and in cooking. Try it both ways, soon.

2 EXTRA • SPECIAL SUGGESTIONS for serving GREEN LABEL KARO

HOT-BUTTERED KARO

Place 1 cup Green Label KARO and ¼ cup butter or margarine in sauce pan. Bring to a boil and stir until sauce is well blended. Serve hot over pancakes, waffles or fritters. Makes about 1¼ cups.

DESSERT SAUCE

Place ⅓ cup brown sugar, firmly packed, ¾ cup Green Label KARO, 1 tbsp. butter or margarine and 1 tbsp. water in small sauce pan. Mix well. Place over medium heat and bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Boil rapidly one minute. Remove from heat. Serve warm over waffles for a delicious dessert. Wonderful as a sauce for puddings, ice cream and other desserts!

Just mail a post card, with your name and address, for FREE booklets giving many new and exciting ways to use all three types of KARO Syrups in cooking, candy-making, canning and freezing. Address KARO, Dept. K, Box 1541, Trenton, N. J.

KARO Syrups are available in 1½, 5 and 10 lb. sizes.

*KARO is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Co., N. Y.

Letters to her fath from Liz Taylor

"Dear Daddy"

■ The following letters from Elizabeth Taylor to her father in Beverly Hills were written while she was in England recently making MGM's The Conspirator with Robert Taylor. Arranged by Ted and Jane Morris, these notes reveal the warm and delightful nature of a girl who is, clearly, one of the nicest persons in the movies.

THE EDITORS.

Monday

Dear Daddy,

Guess what? I'm going to the Film Command Performance the end of this month—and I'm going to be introduced to the King and Queen—isn't that wonderful?

I'm going to try to talk the studio into letting me wear that beautiful pink evening dress to it. You remember the one Helen Rose made for the picture. Oh, I hope they let me wear it, for it would be just perfect.

Princess Elizabeth had her baby—everybody is so excited about it. That's all they talk about.

We sure do miss our Daddy. Do you miss your little girls? It must be nice to be tucked away in our cozy little house in sunny California—not that it's really cold here, but it gets a little lonesome and sort of depressing at times. I guess we're homesick.

We drove out to Raspet Hill for tea yesterday afternoon and I have never seen anything so beautiful in all my life as the countryside clothed in its autumn colors. And you should have seen the sunset—it was just as if the whole world was on fire. And as the sun was going down, the moon was coming up on the other side of the sky, so there was a moment when one side of the sky was a fiery red, and the other was turning silver. It was so beautiful it made you want to cry. If you hung such a picture at the gallery, people wouldn't believe it.

We love you and miss you, and Howard [Elizabeth's brother] too. Hugs and kisses, lots of them, from your,

Liz

* * *

Wednesday

My dearest Pappy,

The picture actually started shooting and everything seems to be going along beautifully. You should have seen my dressing room on the opening day. It was simply packed with dozens and dozens of the most beautiful flowers from just everyone. One bouquet had 23 orchids in it!

Well, I reckon I better go study my script for tomorrow's work. "Maw" says to tell you she's still unpacking trunks and will write tomorrow. Call Ima and Ralph up [Mr. and Mrs. Davis] and give them my love and tell them I'll write real soon, I'd have written before but we've been so busy.

All our love, Daddy dear,

Lizabeth

* * *

Saturday

HI PAPPY,

Mother and I are sitting in the windows, here at the Dorchester Hotel—mother in the bedroom and I in the bathroom—watching the crowds waiting across Park Lane where the royal pavillion has been erected, for the King to arrive to review the "Territorials." The band is playing and you never saw so many people.

8:30 a.m.: I didn't get to finish this yesterday, there's so much to do—and you

Eliminate guesswork in your next home permanent

Her "Rayve Number" is 13
Find yours on the Dial-a-Wave

The New Rayve HOME PERMANENT

brings you the exclusive Dial-a-Wave

that personalizes your wave

At all leading drug and cosmetic counters

COMPLETE RAYVE KIT. Everything you need for a perfect permanent. Includes 60 improved "easy-wind" plastic curlers, the "Dial-a-Wave", and simple step-by-step instructions in booklet form. $2

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

RAYVE REFILL KIT. Complete except for curlers and bands. Includes "Dial-a-Wave". $1

A Rayve wave is faster, yet gentler . . . far easier, too!

There's nothing hit or miss about your Rayve cold wave. It's personalized. The "Dial-a-Wave" quickly gives you the professionally correct timing procedure for every kind of hair. With Rayve, you can be sure of the finest permanent you've ever had.

Rayve waving times are up to twice as fast as old-type home permanents. Yet Rayve's improved formula makes waving action noticeably gentler. Over 50,000 women pretested Rayve . . . found it far easier, more comfortable.

A Rayve wave is long-lasting—yet softer, more natural. No frizz or fuzzy ends . . . even from the first day. So much more natural looking . . . so easy to fix in becoming hair styles . . . that once you've tried Rayve, you'll never again be satisfied with any other kind of wave.

Your "Rayve Number" is your guide to the one righ wave for your kind of hai

The new, easy-to-use "Dial-a Wave" that's in every Rayv package takes the guesswork ou of your home permanent. Yo simply set the dial for the tex ture and condition of your hai and the kind of wave you lik best . . . and find your "Rayv number". This number is you guide to the individual timin procedure that's best for you particular kind of hair.

FROM THE FAMOUS PEPSODEN LABORATORIES

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

know, darling, I have to write to Glenn....

The parade was wonderful—thousands and thousands of "Territorials" all in uniform, with their different bands. Then our car and our driver came for us and we went for a drive to show Miss Anderson [Elizabeth's school teacher] the sights. Then back to the hotel where we ordered dinner and got it—two hours later!

You should see the pandemonium. We are cooped up in such a little bedroom, mother and I and all the luggage. There's an automobile show in town, the first since the war, and every room in every hotel is taken. Mother says we'll probably go dotty before they find us something better. And to make it funnier, everyone sent us large bouquets of chrysanthemums which we have in vases on top of the trunks—and every time we walk by, the vases fall over. Last night we laughed until we cried.

That's all for today, Daddy, from your little dotter,

Elizabeth

* * *

Monday

Hi Daddy, Hi Howard,

We are sitting in the dressing room at the studio waiting for make-up. Everyone is so nice here. The supervisor couldn't be nicer. She's going to bring us in a hot plate so we can make soup and tea. There's a commissary where we get lunch—the food everywhere is much better than last year. Not that there's much meat—just fish or fowl—but it's sort of fried, not just plain boiled—last year it was all plain boiled.

Later: Jeepers, I didn't think we'd ever finish with school today. That's one thing—school is the same here or anywhere.

We miss you, both of you, and love you so much.

Liz

* * *

Tuesday

(At the bottom of a letter from Mrs. Taylor.)

P.S. Hi, Daddy, it's just little me. I'm going to a Film Star's ball tonight, and I'm wearing the orchid Glenn sent me yesterday and the Date With Judy evening gown.

* * *

Wednesday

Dear Daddy,

I got Glenn's "A" pin today! Call Ima right away, Daddy, and tell her. I was so excited, I guess I screamed for joy. Everyone came running to our dressing room to see it. I'll write to Ima, so will Mother, the minute we have time—but you call her, Daddy and tell her how hectic it is.

The part is a very emotional one and I have pages to learn every night. Mother says it takes a lot out of both of us!

Nigh-night, Daddy, hugs and kisses, dozens, from

Liz

* * *

Sunday night

Daddy darling,

It's bedtime—we've just finished dinner and I'm trying to pep Mother up. She's awfully lonesome.

We went for a drive this afternoon on the road to Guilford. We have a big black Buick and a nice chauffeur. This morning he took us to Petticoat Lane and Cutler Street. It's a sort of Caledonian Market Place—we got some darling old silver lockets and chains and some gold ones.

Oh, before I forget, would you send us some lipstick and nail polish for Catherine Delaena (a girlhood friend of Mrs. Taylor's). It's the kind I get at the drug store in Beverly, the one on the corner near Newberry's, and it's called "Pink Ribbon" by Naylon. Get three lipsticks, Daddy, and two nail polishes—we want to take them with us when we go to visit Catherine.

Do you see Ima and Ralph? Mother and I are so tired and feeling so dull tonight, we wish we were with you. I don't know what I'd do without Glenn's letters.

Ever so much love,

Liz

* * *

Thursday

Dearest Daddy,

Bob Taylor was just telling us about a marvelous vet they have for their dogs, Dr. Cooper, on Beverly Blvd., east of Chassen's. He gave their dog penicillin shots and cured him of a fungus skin condition that sounded like the same thing Spot and Twinkle had. I think it should be good for Tweeny's ears. Does Tweeny miss me?

The studio is going to let me wear the pink gown to the Film Command Performance. Isn't that super?

We miss you so much. Much love,

Liz'beth

* * *

Sunday

Dearest Daddy,

Today we went to see Culver and Gladys [the Taylors' former chauffeur and cook] and their children, Ruth and Richard, and took them some of our candy—from the boat, and cigarettes, salted nuts, mother's grey cloth coat and some red sweaters we can manage without.

Daddy, they were so happy to see us. Gladys made tea and we had to have it. They said they had their tea but I doubt it, tea is terribly rationed. Gladys said she had enough money to pay their way to America and they are crazy to come to us. You can imagine mother, she practically has them installed already. Wouldn't that be grand? We could manage, couldn't we, Daddy? Say yes.

They're calling me now. Bye, bye. Ever so much love,

Liz

* * *

Wednesday

Dearest Daddy,

I'm doing a scene where I tear out of the house and down the stairs. It went on for forty-five minutes—someone did something wrong every time and we had to do it over and over.

Daddy, I'm so excited about the Command Performance. I'm just sorry the King won't be there. Today Mr. Jack Hulbert, the famous English comedian, rehearsed and rehearsed us. There are forty of us to be presented and Laurence Olivier will act as master of ceremonies. We each have to say something. The little speech they gave me was to say how ripping it was to be back in England. But no American girl would really say that, would she? So I asked them to let me make up something of my own. We just about froze, I kept on my coat—we all did. Mine was the black and white plaid and Joan Caulfield was crazy about it.

Wish you were here for the big night. Lovingly,

Liz'beth

* * *

Friday

Dearest Pappy,

It's all over and oh! it was wonderful! I was so excited that quite truthfully I can't remember one word the Queen said. But she looked lovely all in white georgette with diamonds. All I remember was turning to Myrna Loy and telling her I felt violently ill. If she hadn't taken my arm and steadied me, I'm afraid I'd have disgraced myself just as the royal party reached me.

Bob Taylor says the Queen asked if he and I were related! Princess Margaret was there too. She's very cute.

Anyhow, I didn't disgrace us. Much love,

Liz

THE END

Gail Russell Told me The Truth about Men!

Men never got serious about me.

One date, or two—but nothing more. I couldn't understand it 'til I read Gail Russell's words: "A man wants his special girl to be feminine . . . wants her hands to be soft and romantic." The magazine said Gail Russell uses Jergens Lotion on her hands, so—I decided to try Jergens too!

What a difference! My hands felt smoother, looked lovelier overnight. And soon, Bill noticed! "Such beautiful hands!" he said. And tonight he told me so again . . . when he slipped his ring on my finger!

Your own hands can be so much lovelier—softer, smoother—with today's finer Jergens Lotion. Because it's a liquid, Jergens quickly furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. And no stickiness! Still only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

Hollywood Stars Use Jergens Lotion 7 to 1 Over Any Other Hand Care

Used by more Women than any other Hand Care in the World!

Dan River checks you from head to hem

It's checks this Spring for that crispy flower-fresh look. And it's Dan River's Starspun, the gingham weave that's fast color, pre-shrunk, always comes up laughing on wash day. Dan River Mills, Inc.*

Dress and hat by Lady Alice of California. Heliotrope, green, blue or black. Sizes 12 to 20. Both dress and hat about $13 at The Hecht Co., Washington, D. C.

*Residual shrinkage not more than 3% fashion looks ahead to summer

connie bartel, fashion editor

■ If your calendar seems to say that it's much too early to think about summer clothes—your calendar doesn't know much about fashion. Believe it or not, now's the time to think about hot weather.

Fashion, you see, is always a jump ahead of the weather. The prizes of any designer's line are always the ones that are featured first. The result is that the most attractive summer clothes invariably make their appearance in early spring. The minute Easter comes and goes, your favorite shop windows will begin to take on a summery look.

Naturally, there will be plenty of summer clothes later, too, but somehow the cutest and prettiest are always snapped up ahead of time. The summertime sweetheart on the opposite page, featured right this minute, will give you an idea.

Same goes for undies. The prettiest for spring and summer are ready for you now—fresh, crisp and delicious! So on pages 76 through 78 we show you the pick of the crop—the very latest and laciest lingerie for the coming season. Our idea is that as long as you'll be buying summer undies anyway, you might as well be smart and buy now while you have the widest choice. And don't forget, slips and nighties make super Easter gifts, too.

allyn mclerie symbolizes summer-to-come

Allyn McLerie, whose zing and sparkle have earned her a triumphant personal success in the New York smash musical "Where's Charley?" illustrates our point that the prettiest summer dresses always turn up ahead of time.

If you're looking ahead to being a sweet girl graduate—a bridesmaid—or just a girl with a heavy romance in June—here's your dress.

It's a fine yarn dyed combed cotton chambray by Bates. Comes in moss rose, forget-me-not blue, pussy willow grey or aqua. Junior sizes 9-15.

By Lil' Alice of California $12.95.

Wanamaker's, New York City
Olds, Wortman & King, Portland, Oregon, Buffum's Long Beach, California.
For additional information see page 79.

modern screen fashions

Easter undies pretty underlings for Spring clothes!

1. Nylon taffeta half-bra, by PETER PAN, $4. Back-buttoned cotton batiste petticoat by MISS SWANK, $2.95. 2. Hi-there bra with wonderful outside elastic bosom-raiser, $3. Satin and satin lastex contour crotch girdle, $7.50. Both by FORTUNA. 3. Satin bra, $1; satin girdle, $3.50 by MAR-GRO. 4. Four-gore crepe slip, $1.98, by STARDUST. 5. Rayon satin bra, $2; with all-over elasticized girdle in figured leno with front satin panel, $5. Both by PERMA LIFT. 6. Front-laced strapless plunging bra in satin, $2, by EXQUISITE FORM. With lace-flounced half slip in Bur-Mil crepe, elastic top, $3.98, by SEAMPRUFE. 7. Fitted lace-trimmed princess slip in rayon two-bar tricot, $2.95, by STRUTWEAR. 8. Frou-frou slip with ruffles of nylon lace on hem and bodice, $2.98, by POWERS MODEL.

9. Rayon-cotton bra with nylon net inserts, $1.50, by BESTFORM. Worn with heart-sprinkled satin lastex pantie girdle, $5, by YOUTHCRAFT. 10. Jersey slip with molded lace top, $2.98, by BLUE SWAN. 11. Bow-trimmed satin slip with ribbon run through beading on lace neckline, $2.98, by MONTEREY. 12. Baseball bra with faggoting in contrasting color, $1.50, by BEAUTIS. Worn with tummy-tucker nylon power net girdle, $5, by YOUTHCRAFT. 13. Plunging neckline bra in nyralon, $2.50, by FLEXAIRE. Pantie girdle has removable crotch plus extra crotch, $10.95, by FLEXEES. 14. Gay Paree strapless crepe slip with built-in bra, $6.98, by SHO-FORM. 15. LIFTEES bra with front eyelets and adjustable uplift strap for individual cup fit, $1.98, by WEGMAN. Jersey panties, 59c, by MONTEREY. 16. White camisole top crepe slip with navy, black or brown slit bottom, $5.95, by RO-JENE.

For where to buy these Modern Screen fashions, see page 79.

Dream Boats

1. Short and sweet—cotton batiste briefie with lacy collar, eyelet and ribbon. Pink, blue, white By Gracette. $2.98.
2. Sleeping beauty with off-shoulder cap sleeves and shirred waist. Rayon jersey in pink, blue, maize, white. By Blue Swan. $2.98.
3. Bare midriff from the Arabian nights—shirred top, separate floating skirt. Blue, yellow or pink rayon jersey. By Strutwear. $4.95
4. Dots to dream in—on crinkled cotton crepe. Tiny ruffle, waist-molding midriff. Blue or red dots on white. By Strutwear. $3.95.
5. Charming calico—styled like a dress, and decked with tiny fluted ruffling. Blue, gold, red, green. By Tommies. $5.95.

For where to buy these Modern Screen fashions, see page 79.

WHERE YOU CAN BUY MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

(Prices may vary throughout country)

Summer-to-come pink dress worn by Allyn McLerie in color photograph (page 75)
Long Beach, Calif.—Buffum's, Pine Ave. & Broadway, Teen Shop, 3rd fl.
New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Broadway & 9th St., Mimi Shop, 3 fl.
Portland, Oregon—Olds, Wortman & King, 921 S. W. Morrison St., Town & Country Shop, 2nd fl.

Lingerie shown on pages 76 & 77

(#1) Peter Pan nylon taffeta bra
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, 420 Fulton St., Lingerie, 2nd fl.

(#1) Miss Swank half slip
New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Broadway & 9th St., Lingerie, 2nd fl.

(#2) Fortuna hi-there bra and contour crotch girdle
New York, N. Y.—Blackton Fifth Ave., 5th Ave. & 36th St.

(#3) Mar-Gro satin bra and satin girdle
Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh Co., Washington & Avon Sts.

(#4) Stardust four-gore crepe slip
New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, 33rd St. & Ave. of Americas, Downstairs

(#5) Perma Lift satin bra and elasticized girdle
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, 5th Ave. & 34th St., 3rd fl.

(#6) Exquisite Form front-laced strapless bra
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, 420 Fulton St., Lingerie, 2nd fl.

(#6) Seamprufe lace-flounced half-slip
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, 59th St. & Lexington Ave., 2nd fl.

(#7) Strutwear rayon princess slip
Portland, Oregon—Meier & Frank, 621 SW 5th Ave., Street fl.

(#8) Powers Model lace trimmed slip
New York, N. Y.—Bloomingdale's, 59th St. & Lexington Ave., Basement, Underwear.

(#9) Bestform rayon-cotton bra
New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, 33rd St. & Ave. of Americas, Downstairs

(#9) Youthcraft heart-sprinkled girdle
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, 5th Ave. & 34th St., 3rd fl.

(#10) Blue Swan lace top jersey slip
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, 34th St. & Broadway, 3rd fl.

(#11) Monterey bow-trimmed satin slip
Write: Monterey Undergarment Co., Inc., 118 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

(#12) Beautis baseball bra
New York, N. Y.—Gimbels, 33rd St. & Ave. of Americas, Main fl.

(#12) Youthcraft tummy-tucker pantie girdle
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, 5th Ave. & 34th St., 3rd fl.

(#13) Flexaire plunging neckline bra and Flexees pantie girdle
New York, N. Y.—Saks-34th, 34th St. & Broadway, Foundations, 5th fl.

(#14) Sho-Form gay Paree bra-slip
New York, N. Y.—McCreery's, 5th Ave. & 34th St., 3rd fl.

(#15) Liftees bra with front eyelets
Order by mail from: The S. J. Wegman Co., 9 East 45th St., New York 17, N. Y.

(#15) Monterey lace trimmed jersey panties
Write: Monterey Undergarment Co., Inc., 118 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

(#16) Ro-Jene camisole top crepe slip
New York, N. Y.—Wanamaker's, Broadway & 9th St., Lingerie, 2nd fl.

Nighties shown on page 78

1. Gracette cotton batiste shortie
New York, N. Y.—Oppenheim Collins, 33 W. 34th St., Street fl.

2. Blue Swan shirred midriff jersey gown
New York, N. Y.—Stern's, 41 W. 42nd St., Lingerie, 2nd fl.

3. Strutwear bare midriff jersey gown and
4. Strutwear polka dot gown
Portland, Oregon—Meier & Frank, 621 SW 5th Ave., Street fl.

5. Tommies calico print gown
Baltimore, Md.—Hochschild, Kohn & Co., Howard & Lexington Sts., 4th fl.

Sophisticated polka dot half size dress (page 80)
Boston, Mass.—Jordan Marsh Co., Washington & Avon Sts., Main Store, 4th fl.
Brooklyn, N. Y.—Abraham & Straus, 420 Fulton St., Daytime Dresses, 2nd fl.
Kansas City, Mo.—Emery, Bird, Thayer Co., 11th & Grand Sts., Home & Town Shop

HOW TO ORDER MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS

1. Buy in person from stores listed.
2. Order by mail from stores listed.
3. Write Connie Bartel, MODERN SCREEN, Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y., for store in your vicinity.

DIANA LYNN,
in the Hal Wallis production,
"BITTER VICTORY",
for Paramount . . .
featured in Strutwear's wispy nylons, knitted in reverse for extra-sheer, dull beauty.

Strutwear . . . For the girl with a flair

REVERSE KNIT PROPORTIONED NYLON HOSIERY

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

STRUTWEAR, INC., MINNEAPOLIS 4, MINN. • GOWNS • SLIPS • PANTIES • PAJAMAS • HOSIERY

easter polka dot

and it's a half-size!

■ For a sophisticated spring—
French crepe polka dot with expensive looking faggoted tucks on bodice—a march of buttons to the hem. In navy, copen, grey or coral.
Half-sizes 14½-24½. By Pam Paterson,
$8.95. Abraham & Straus, Bklyn.
Jordan Marsh, Boston.
Emery, Bird, Thayer Co., Kansas City.
Other information page 79.

A MODERN SCREEN FASHION

SECRETS OF THE BRIDE

(Continued from page 22)

"I don't know yet," the letter continued, "whether a short veil or a very long one. (See drawing No. 3.) As the dress is not ready yet, we have not been able to judge. On my head will be a (Juliet) fitted cap, also embroidered. Maybe you can help me as to whether I should have a tiny bouquet of flowers (see Sketch No. 1)—a big one (Sketch No. 2) or, instead, an embroidered muff (Sketch No. 3) with three white orchids on it. This would be quite different and in keeping with the dress. What do you think? I must tell you that the embroidery is so fine that it looks like spun glass and makes it glitter very faintly."

"I wrote her I preferred the muff with the orchids, and a short veil," her mother said. "Now, we'll see if she takes my advice!"

(Linda's actual outfit was a compromise: She wore a Juliet cap, a long veil, the white satin gown as described—embroidered with lace, sequins and beads—and a muff covered with white orchids.)

The letter went on: "Arias [Ariadna, her sister] and Lulu will be the bridesmaids. [Lulu is an old school friend of Linda from Florence, Italy.] They will wear dainty dresses of lace—white, with pink petticoats (Lulu) and aqua or pale blue (Arias). We haven't completely decided yet. . . .

love from the pusses . . .

"Before I forget, would you ask René to insure my diamond (engagement) ring of 8¾ karats, first color—round cut. I think $4,500 would be enough. It is set in a platinum setting with two small baguette diamonds. You won't forget, 'cause if I should lose the ring—it would be catastrophic!"

"Catastrophic indeed!" smiled Blanca, refolding the letter. Then from a huge envelope, Blanca extracted a cablegram and handed it to me. It was from Linda and Tyrone in Rome, addressed to JOSÉ-RENÉ ALVAREZ, and read: "WELCOME JOSÉ-RENÉ HOPE TO MEET YOU SOON OUR LOVE TO YOUR FATHER AND MOTHER. (Signed) THE THREE PUSSES."

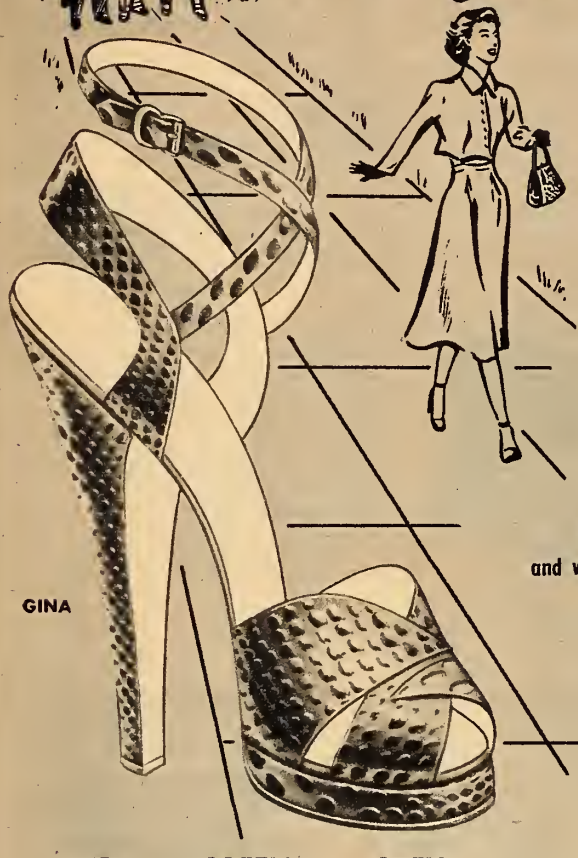
The third puss was Ariadna, Linda's 18-year-old sister, who had been living with her in Rome.

Leaving the pile of souvenirs for a later moment, I urged Blanca to go over the details of her daughter's exciting romance as she had seen it first-hand in the past year.

"Well," she began, "if I recall your first story about my 'Pusses'—in last April's MODERN SCREEN—it ended with Linda and Tyrone together again in Hollywood after spending New Year's with us here in Mexico City and in Acapulco last year."

I nodded, and she continued: "I went to Hollywood to visit Linda and Tyrone last February and also again in May. My first night with them, on my first trip, we all had dinner together at Tyrone's home in Brentwood. His lovely mother was there. She is a delightful, very intelligent woman and I was very happy to meet her. Linda was living in Westwood with an old family friend, the Countess Rose Van Horn, whom we have known for many years. It was nice seeing her again, too. And it was even nicer to watch Tyrone being so kind and thoughtful and considerate of me and our friends, whom he didn't know.

"Tyrone would kiss me 'hello' when we would meet, 'goodnight' when we would leave his home. He loves the



MAN-MADE

Python

FOR LOOKS THAT LINGER!

$3.99

When simulated Python looks and wears like the real thing . . . that's news. And at this price it's big news!

GINA

TINA

RED • GREEN • GREY

Sizes 2½ - 10 B Width 6 - 9 AA Width

MATCHING HANDBAG $1.99 plus tax

Mary Jane

Stores in principal cities

ORDER BY MAIL

Send check or money order and we'll pay postage

MARY JANE SHOES, 119 Beach Street, Boston, Mass., Dept. MSC-4

Please send me.....prs. of man-made Python shoes at $3.99 a pr.

Style Name	Color (1st choice)	Color (2nd choice)	Size	Width
GINA
TINA

Please send me ..... matching bags at $1.99 plus tax ($2.39 total)
Color .....

☐ Check
☐ Money Order
☐ C. O. D.

Name.....
Address.....
City.....Zone....State.....

When ordering C. O. D. customer agrees to pay all charges.

SANFORIZED Realcraft COTTON SLIPS

It's sheer flattery the way Realcraft's Style 6155 accents your lithe lines! It's a four-gore slip, cut full and straight, to swathe your figure. Adjustable ⅜ inch shoulder straps. Dainty eyelet embroidery...Sanforized for permanent fit. Sizes 32 to 40, $2.98. Other styles, from $1.50. At leading stores everywhere.

GUARANTEED FOR ONE YEAR

UNITED MILLS CORPORATION
makers of the famous "NO HIKE" SLIP • Mt. Gilead, North Carolina • 180 Madison Avenue, New York City

'family feeling' and seems content to have dinner at home, spend his evenings at home—especially when he is making a picture, which is practically always. But he does enjoy traveling when he isn't working.

"While I was there in May—I had gone to Hollywood this trip to say au revoir to Linda and Tyrone, who were leaving for Europe in June—Tyrone gave a farewell dinner in his home. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Gary Cooper; Clark Gable and Anita Colby; Mr. and Mrs. Rex Harrison; Clifton Webb and his charming mother; Prince Mike Romanoff; Van Johnson and his new wife, Evie—and a number of other celebrated people.

"I did the cooking, and the table—buffet style—was laden with shrimp in mayonnaise (I made the mayonnaise, Dutch style) there was a string-bean salad, and I don't remember what kind of dessert, and coffee. Everybody went crazy over the string-bean salad, which was made from another old Dutch recipe of mine.

"Tyrone was like a little boy on a picnic, watching his guests return to the buffet time and time again for refills. He kept telling them proudly, 'Yes, my future mother-in-law is a wonderful cook—don't you think?'"

On June 20th, Linda and Tyrone flew to Lisbon aboard a Trans-World Airways Clipper. Then began the stream of letters and postcards which they sent to Blanca and the family in Mexico City. The first postcard, dated July 7, 1948, was from Lisbon, with a picture of the centuries-old "Batalha Monastery" and the following scribbled message: "Much love from both of us. Your loving rabbit—Linda."

The next one, dated July 8, 1948, was from Madrid, Spain, and featured a colored picture of the Virgin of Hope. The message: "Much love to all. This is such a beautiful place. Your two faraway Pusses. Linda." (Also signed separately by Ty.)

royal road of romance . . .

Then came a wonderful, romantic photograph of the two of them standing on the Rock of Gibraltar, dated July 10, 1948.

Postcard number 4 was sent from Barcelona, dated July 20, in Linda's handwriting, signed by both Linda and Tyrone: "Hello there! This is quite a place, with very excitable people! As Ty says: 'The natives are restless tonight.' We are having so much fun and hope you, too, can join us in Spain, and that everything is well and [you're] both as happy as we. Love, Linda and Tyrone."

From Nancy, France, on July 24, 1948, they sent the following postcard: "Tomorrow we leave for Ste. Paul—remember, from last year? It's close to Nice. We are having a perfectly heavenly time. Love to all. Your loving—Rabbit." Tyrone adds this note—"Just to add my love and to say again that we wish you were with us. By the way, we had Spain! Always, Tyrone."

Two weeks later, on August 8, they sent another card from Portofino, Italy, with a fantastic photograph of the dream city at the edge of the lake. They wrote: "Just a 'hello' from this lovely little place. Your loving—Rabbit." (Tyrone signed it, too.)

They were making this trip from Lisbon to Rome in an extremely roundabout way, like ordinary tourists. With them was Linda's sister, Ariadna, who was on vacation from her finishing school in Lausanne, Switzerland, and who had met them at the airport in Lisbon. They toured in Tyrone's new Mercury sports car which he had thoughtfully shipped to Lisbon ahead of them.

Many more postcards came during this period. Tyrone's latest picture, Prince of Foxes, filmed entirely in Italy, took him and Linda and Ariadna on location jaunts to such enchanting places as San Marino, Florence and other historic spots. The castle at San Marino, atop a towering, jutting, sea-pounded rock, fascinated them. Tyrone wrote to Blanca, telling her of the exciting scenery and of the odd little Republic of San Marino—smallest in the world—with its six policemen! They were there for three weeks and were continually under the spell of the place.

The next two weeks found them on location in Florence, where Linda was constantly surrounded by her former schoolmates from the "Poggio Imperiale," a young women's finishing school located in an old castle of the Medicis in the mountains at the edge of Florence. Legend claims that "once upon a time," when Bacchus (the god of wine) was returning to Paradise, he took Ariadna (the goddess of the Straight-and-Narrow) to these mountains for the purpose of introducing her to the heavenly wines of Tuscany. (Linda's sister, Ariadna, was named for this goddess.)

They returned to Rome to film interiors at the studios, and Prince of Foxes was completed January 6.

On January 4th of this year, Tyrone organized a world premiere of his picture, That Wonderful Urge (in which he is co-starred with Gene Tierney), at the Cinema Barberini of Rome. The cream of Rome's society was on hand, headed by Italy's Premier de Gasperi. The benefit was for Italy's poor children and the campaign fund was under the name of "Ragazzi di Don Bosco." This Don Bosco was Italy's patron saint of poor children (ragazzi). Ty's première was a great financial success.

coming events . . .

When Tyrone stepped to the stage to make a brief announcement before the collection boxes were passed, a news photographer snapped a picture of Linda together with Premier de Gasperi—and the picture hit page one of one of Italy's leading news magazines. (She sent the front cover to Blanca—for the collection.)

Insofar as Blanca had told Linda, Tyrone and Ariadna that she and her husband already had a name selected—in case the new baby were a boy—the three European globe-trotters made a game of selecting a name for the baby—in case it were a girl. Linda wrote:

"We have been thinking terribly hard about a girl's name. Tyrone likes 'Maya' Alvarez Amézquita. Sounds lovely! I like 'Nora' and Ariadna likes 'Fiamma' (Flame) or 'Fiorella' (Little Flower) in Italian."

In a revealing letter to me from Rome, dated January 16, Linda wrote: "Dearest Maxine: Your letter arrived this morning—so I want to drop you a line. . . . We are getting married the 27th of this month. . . . . our honeymoon . . . we plan to spend in the snowy mountains of the Austrian Tyrol! (Deep dark secret!)

"I can tell you already that it will prove quite interesting—being the first time that I will try skiing! . . .

"This is a hectic period, believe me, and I don't know if I am coming or going. Tyrone will make another film beginning in March—The Black Rose—in North Africa and Scotland—to be finished in London. We are looking forward to it.

"We were delighted with our new brother, José René! Ariadna is staying in Rome to make a film for an Italian company, as she already has mastered the language. Besides, she did a nice little scene with Tyrone in Prince of Foxes.

"Excuse my dreadful scribble, but I did want to drop you a line. How is the hubby? Please give him my best. And

Calypso Music is in the Air ♪♪

Seamprufe Slips are everywhere

IN CALYPSO COLORS THAT SING—

that brighten the underworld of feminine fashions. These captivating colors, inspired by the romance of West Indian islands, add a new dimension of beguilement to your lacy figure-proportioned Seamprufe Slip.

QUERIDA "Loved One"
—designed for you to cherish, to cherish your figure. New fashion-favored plunging neckline, inlaid lace midriff and flared hemline work undercover flattery. In finest multifilament crepe with Alencon type lace. About $7.95
Other styles from $3.95-$7.95

CALYPSO COLORS Caribbean blue yellow jasmine oleander pink waterlily mauve seaspray green white coral Trinidad tan black olive

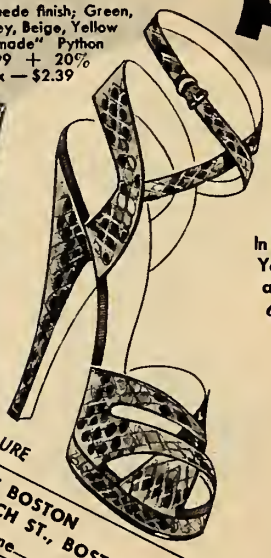
MADE OF Bur-Mil QUALITY RAYON FABRIC

Seamprufe® INCORPORATED
FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 18, N. Y.
SLIPS • PETTICOATS • PAJAMAS • GOWNS

FAME AND FORTUNE CAN BE YOURS . . . Pictured is lovely Cindy Lou Bayes, last Stardust Beauty Contest winner. Enter our 1949 contest now. YOU may be the lucky winner of $500 first prize plus a modeling and television career under Harry Conover management, or 27 other awards! Just send recent non-returnable photo with height, weight, bust, waist and hip measurements before May 1, 1949. Decisions of famous beauty judges are final. Mail entry to P. O. Box 65, Murray Hill Station, New York.

STARDUST, INC. Empire State Bldg., N.Y. 1



LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNDIES, GIRDLES, GARTER BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES

Matching Handbag $1.99
In Black suede finish; Green, Red, Grey, Beige, Yellow "man-made" Python $1.99 + 20% tax — $2.39

man-made PYTHONS

In Black suede; Green, Grey, Red, Beige, Yellow "man-made" python. "Charmer also in Cuban heel.
6 to 9, Narrows; 4 to 9 Mediums.

ORDER by MAIL

ALLURE

VICKI OF BOSTON
89 BEACH ST., BOSTON, MASS.
Please send me_____Prs. @ $3.98 D-4

STYLE	SIZE	HEEL High only	COLOR	2nd CHOICE
Allure
Charmer

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
Handbags @ $2.39, Color_____
Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C.O.D. ☐
Send check or money order and we will pay postage.
Customer agrees to pay postal charges on C.O.D.'s

Send for FREE 1949 Catalog.

3.98

CHARMER

Vicki OF BOSTON

for you, a great big 'abbrazzo' (hug). Love, Linda."

Tyrone adds this footnote:

"Dear Maxine: Just a line to say hello and to wish you all the best of everything. Always affectionately, Tyrone."

With Ty's new picture coming up, it will be several more months before he and his new bride can see her family—either in Mexico City or in Hollywood, but in the meantime there will always be the letters, the photographs and the cablegrams and postcards for the family album.

When I asked Blanca what this marriage would mean—what Linda could give to Tyrone—she said simply:

"Linda will try to be a good wife and a good mother, because Linda loves him! There is no substitute for love in a happy marriage. It is the thing that enables us women to be patient, to overlook faults.

"There is no question about Tyrone's being famous and important. And certainly, Linda loves glamour and glitter and fun. She is young. But she is a good, serious and honest girl who truly loves Tyrone. Yes, she will give him the thing he has always wanted—a happy, comfortable and loving home. She will give him love and complete understanding. These months together in Europe have given them both time to know each other. They are not questioning anything about the future. They are not confused. Each has a deep respect for the other—and mutual love."

Linda's mother also told me another bit of inside news. Linda and Tyrone are trying to persuade the long-time family child governess, Annie Stainer, to return to the States with them, and care for their children—just as she cared for Linda and her sister and brothers. Annie now lives in the little village of Gabletz, near Vienna. She was with Linda's mother until 1939, in Yugoslavia, but had to return to her native Austria when war began.

In a recent letter, Linda wrote her mother: "We will send Annie to you—on a sort of a loan—for the new baby when it comes. But, you must understand this will be a loan because we hope to be needing Annie ourselves, eventually."

From 'way down Mexico way, so far from the quiet church in Rome and from the snowy mountainsides of the Austrian Tyrol, we send Linda and Tyrone a very warm and sincere prayer for a lifetime of married happiness—complete with the "family of three" which they both desire.

THE END

"Two together?"

MITCHUM ON TRIAL

(Continued from page 19)

minutes after he strode into the Superior Court of Judge Clement D. Nye, Bob Mitchum was found guilty of conspiring to violate the state narcotics law, a crime for which he might have been sentenced to six years of hard labor behind the walls of San Quentin.

Now, how did this come to pass, this great hiatus between conjecture and actuality, this tremendous gap between anticipation and reality?

Why did this young, likeable actor with the straight brown hair and thin, sensitive mouth—why did he abandon his Constitutional right to trial by jury and throw himself and his future on the mercy of the Court?

Of the 30 persons who were available for jury duty on the day of his trial, 24 were women. He could have had six, eight, perhaps ten women in his jury. With women in the box and shrewd veteran Jerry Giesler to defend him, he might have won an acquittal.

But he wouldn't make the try; and the reason was that he knew the evidence was overwhelmingly, incontrovertibly against him.

"Robert Mitchum," the Judge said, "are you willing to waive trial by jury and let the Court decide this case?"

no defense offered . . .

Mitchum rose slowly. He was dressed in a conservative pin-striped suit of brownish-gray. His hair, ordinarily long, was neatly trimmed. He wore a dark shirt and a maroon tie. He looked like a young bank clerk. His voice was firm. "Yes, Your Honor."

And then Jerry Giesler, one of the most famous trial lawyers in the United States—a man who has defended Errol Flynn, Charles Chaplin, Alexander Pantages and a score of other well-known persons—rose slowly from his seat. It was so silent in the courtroom you could have heard a spider spin.

"If it please the Court, Your Honor," he began, removing his spectacles and chewing on their edges, "if it please the Court, the defense stipulates that the evidence produced at the Grand Jury hearing be submitted as the sole evidence in this case, and that no defense will be offered."

Those of us in the courtroom knew immediately what that meant. Bob Mitchum was not going to take the stand. Giesler was not going to let him testify. There would be no cross-examination. No fireworks! Nothing sensational!

Mitchum was throwing himself on the mercy of Judge Clement Nye. And it was all right with the two special deputies from the District Attorney's office. They had the goods on Mitchum, and they knew it.

Sitting there watching Bob, you couldn't help but feel sorry for the boy. Lila Leeds, a 20-year-old blonde who had been arrested with Mitchum, sat at his left. From time to time, she sought to catch his eye. But Mitchum didn't turn towards her. He kept his eyes focussed directly ahead. His face showed no visible signs of emotion. Lila laughed and blew a smile to the gentlemen of the press when the Court announced that Vicki Evans, one of the other defendants, had wired that she was broke in New York and unable to appear in California for the trial. But there were no smiles from Mitchum, only one small, embarrassed grin when he was quoted in the testimony as exclaiming, "Oh, daddy!"

There was a minute before the repre-

Tonight!..Show him how much lovelier your hair can look ... after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

NOT A SOAP!
NOT A LIQUID!
BUT KAY DAUMIT'S
RICH LATHERING
CREAM SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN
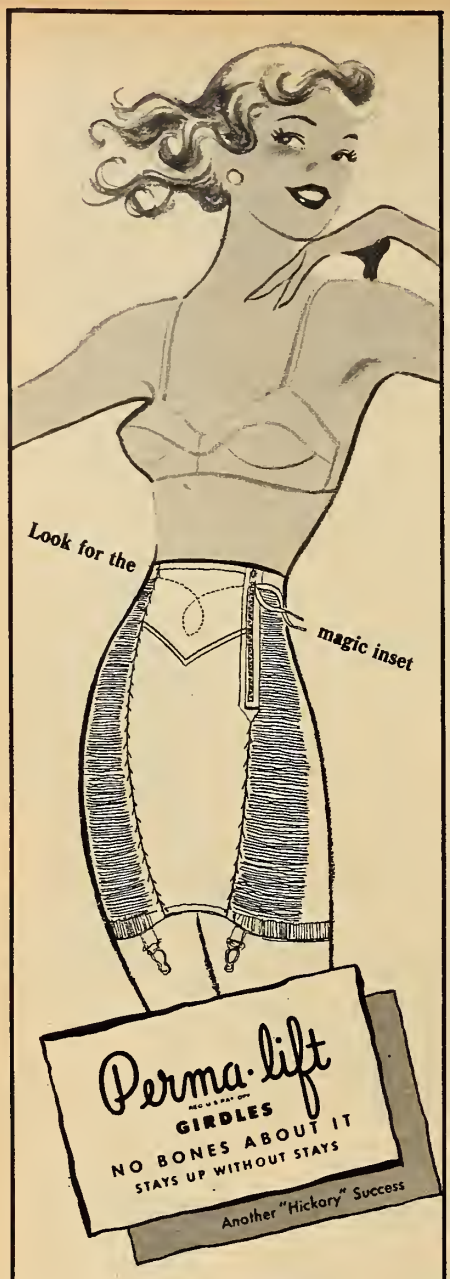
for Soft, Shimmering
Glamorous Hair

4-oz. jar $1; smaller jars and tubes, 49¢ and 25¢



No other shampoo gives you the same magical secret-blend lather plus kindly LANOLIN . . . for true hair beauty.

Tonight he can SEE new sheen in your hair, FEEL its caressable softness, THRILL to its glorious natural beauty. Yes, tonight, if you use Lustre-Creme Shampoo today!

Only Lustre-Creme has Kay Daumit's magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin. This glamorizing shampoo lathers in hardest water. Leaves hair fragrantly clean, shining, free of loose dandruff and so soft, so manageable!

Famous hairdressers use and recommend it for shimmering beauty in all "hair-dos" and permanents. Beauty-wise women made it America's favorite cream shampoo. Try Lustre-Creme! The man in your life—and you—will love the loveliness results in your hair.

Kay Daumit, Inc., 919 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

NO BONES ABOUT IT

Stays up without stays

Featherweight—smooth as silk and Oh! so comfortable is your new "Perma·lift"* Girdle, Best of all—it's made entirely without annoying, uncomfortable bones, yet it won't wrinkle, won't roll over. Yes, it stays up without stays. For a real comfort thrill, ask for a new "Perma·lift" Girdle today at your favorite corsetiere—$5 to $12.50.

● Also enjoy the lasting lift of a "Perma·lift" brassiere—America's favorite bra with "The Lift that never lets you down."

*"Perma·lift and "Hickory" are trade marks of A. Stein & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

sentatives of the People of the State of California began to introduce the evidence against Robert Mitchum on the single count of conspiracy to possess marijuana. In that single minute, many of us in the press section wondered what thoughts were passing through Bob Mitchum's mind. When the trial was over, I went up and asked him precisely what he was thinking about at that moment. He said softly, "I was just wondering how I ever let myself get into such a mess."

The answer was fairly simple, I thought. How do most kids get into such a mess? For the most part, they have come up the hard way, with few advantages. When they need society badly, society deserts them. When they need parental supervision desperately, such supervision isn't present. Mitchum's early life is a case in point.

When Bob was three, his father died, leaving the family penniless. Bob grew up a child of the depression. At 16, when he was bounced out of high school, he was bitter, tough, cynical and disillusioned. He began to bum around the country. He looked for work. He tried to learn a trade. He rode the freights. Half the time he was hungry and cold. Once in Georgia the police picked him up for panhandling and rode him out of the state.

Life to him became a ceaseless battle of wits, an endless struggle for survival in a world of economic insecurity. The only break he ever had in his early years was when he bummed to California and landed a job as business manager to an astrologer.

This gave him a thin ray of hope and a modicum of money, and he married. But soon after, he lost his job, and his wife announced that a baby was on the way.

Luckily for him, jobs were plentiful by then. The war was on. Bob became employed at Lockheed Aircraft operating a drop hammer. In 1942, when an agent found him a bit in a Hopalong Cassidy film, he left Lockheed. He appeared in eight Westerns and then began free-lancing. Things for the Mitchums were picking up, but then Bob was drafted and sent to Camp Roberts for eight months. When he got out, Phil Berg and Bert Allenberg, two high-pressure agents who handle Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Alan Ladd, and many other stars, put him under their wing.

They sold him to Selznick. It wasn't long before Mitchum, who had never had a spare ten-dollar bill in his life, was earning $1,500 a week, then $2,000, then $3,000.

The boy began to play too hard, too dangerously. On the night of August 31, 1948, he drove to his "reefer" rendezvous, and eventually to the commission of the crime which brought him face to face with Judge Clement Nye of the California Superior Court.

Following Giesler's statement to the Court, Judge Nye asked Special Deputy Adolf Alexander to read the proceedings of the Grand Jury that had indicted Mitchum. Alexander began to read the testimony, excerpts from which follow:

Q. Mr. Barr, are you a police officer of the City of Los Angeles?.

A. I am, sir.

Q. Are you attached to the Narcotics Detail?

A. I am.

Q. Are you one of the arresting officers in this case?

A. I am, sir.

Q. And where and when was the arrest made?

A. On the 31st day of August, 1948, at [address deleted] in Hollywood at approximately 11:45 and 12:00 P.M.

Q. Did you go there with anyone?

A. My partner, Officer McKinnon, J. B. McKinnon. . . .

Q. And who came into the house . . . ?

A. The door was opened by Miss Leeds, and Robert Mitchum, known as Bob Mitchum, entered the house first, followed by an unidentified man at that time, later identified as Robin Ford.

Q. And where were you when the two men arrived?

A. At this rear window, that I stated was equipped with a French window which was open—and I was on the outside of this window at the rear of the house, looking directly toward the front door.

Q. Now, will you go ahead and tell us what you saw and what you heard . . . ?

A. It appeared that the phone rang . . . and Miss Leeds went around the bed and picked up the phone and sat down on the edge of the bed and talked over the telephone.

Q. Could you hear what was said? . . . What did she say?

A. She says, "Okay, boys, come straight up the hill and hurry. The lights are on in front of the house. You can't miss it. It has a long stairway." And she hung up.

Q. After ringing off, did Miss Leeds say anything?

A. Yes, she was turned around to Vickie and she said, "That was the boys. They are lost at the bottom of the hill, and they are on their way now, and are they loaded."

Q. Now, will you go ahead and tell us what you saw?

A. As Mr. Mitchum entered, he came in the house a few feet. [According to Officer Barr, the following conversation transpired between Mitchum and Lila Leeds]: Mitchum: "Hello baby." Lila:

Special offer to our readers

The 1948-49 edition of MODERN SCREEN's exclusive "Super-Star Information Chart" is something no real fan should be without. It's a 32-page pocket encyclopedia on over 500 of your favorite stars—complete with birthdates, hobbies, real names, recent pictures, and inside facts. To obtain your copy, send 10c in coin, plus a large self-addressed, stamped (3c), envelope to Service Department, MODERN SCREEN, P. O. Box 125, Murray Hill Station, New York 16, N. Y. Send soon!

"Hello, I hope you brought some good stuff." Mitchum: "We always got good stuff." Lila: "Oh, you've got brown ones and white ones. I want some of the white ones."

Barr [continuing]: At that time I saw Lila raise a cigarette—what appeared to be a cigarette—in her hand and put it in her mouth. . . . and as she turned around she faced me and I could see Mr. Mitchum at that time. . . . Lila struck a match and lit. . . . She held the cigarette in her mouth, oh, I estimate, three or four seconds, and handed the cigarette to Mr. Mitchum. He took the cigarette and put it in his mouth, and she blew the smoke directly towards me. And at that time I overheard Miss Evans say, "Oh, this tastes funny. What if it knocks me out?" And Mitchum said, "Oh, daddy!"

Q. Where was your partner at that time?

A. He was around at the rear of the house at first, sir, then he left and then he returned. . . .

lawful entry . . .

It was at this point, Officers Barr and McKinnon testified, that they decided to break down the door of the little cottage.

"What happened then?" Special Deputy Henderson asked.

A. Well, we were going to kick the door in, and in doing, monkeying with the latch, why we made a small noise. And we heard a voice, later identified as the voice of Vicki Evans, state, "It is those - - - - dogs at the kitchen door."

So we heard footsteps and the door became open, and as it opened, I drew my gun and I had it in my right hand and my flashlight in my left, and as she opened the door I grabbed her by placing my left arm all around her and I said, "We are police officers," and simultaneously I pushed her into the front room. I took her with me. As we entered the front room I shoved her to the right and I said, "We are police officers. Stay where you are and nobody will get hurt."

Q. Were there other people in the front room?

A. Miss Lila Leeds was reclining with both feet on a—I believe it is called a chaise longue. . . . Mr. Mitchum was seated on a dark red davenport. Between two fingers he had a brown cigarette; and at that time I couldn't tell whether it was brown or white. But he had a cigarette, because of the fact there was a red glow on the end of it, extremely red glow. He held that cigarette in that position for a split second. And as he looked at me, he took it and crumpled it and put it down by his left side . . . and at that instant, I said, "I will take that," and I placed my revolver inside of my belt and

THE CRITICS' CORNER (WHICH PAPER DO YOU READ?)

"Every Girl Should Be Married" gets monotonous at times, drills away at this one theme, a girl's efforts to trap a reluctant stranger into marriage. The girl, as pathetic and neurotic as she is funny, stands in great need of psychiatric guidance. She has none, nor does the picture seem to think her a medical case. The film sympathizes with her chase, tactless and tasteless as it may be.

Eileen Creelman
The New York Sun

"Every Girl Should Be Married" is a comedy delight, loaded with laugh-provoking dialogue and heartwarming situations.

Lee Mortimer
N. Y. Mirror

Have you ever wondered if you are as lovely as you could be—are you completely sure of your charm? Your deodorant can be the difference . . . and you will never know how lovely you can be until you use FRESH.

FRESH is so completely effective, yet so easy and pleasant to use . . . Different from any deodorant you have ever tried. Prove this to yourself with the free jar of creamy, smooth FRESH we will send you.

Test it. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for your free jar.

use FRESH and stay fresher

my flashlight in my left pocket and I immediately recovered that cigarette just as Mr. Mitchum had had it between these two fingers [demonstrates]. And as he placed his hand down, he crumpled it and partially the fire fell on the davenport, and as he opened his hand, the cigarette was practically in his hand but was falling on the davenport. I recovered that cigarette, and as I did so I burned my right index finger as the ashes were hot.

Q. What did you do then?

A. I turned around to Miss Leeds and I observed her at that time with her right hand down between what appeared to be the arm of her chair and her right hip . . . and she was putting her hand down further. And I said, "Let's see what you have got in your hand." And I went over and I took her hand from beside her, and as I took it, she opened it and she had two brown paper cigarettes, a small portion of a white paper cigarette and a small portion of a brown paper cigarette commonly known as roaches.

I said, "What is your name?" And she said, "Lila." And I said, "Lila Leeds?" And she said, "Yes, how do you know?" And I said, "I have known you for a long time, Lila. I have been working on you." And she said, "I might as well give you the rest of it." And she reached into her pocket . . . and withdrew a paper . . . and I opened it and found within, a piece of Kleenex, eight tablets which in my opinion were benzedrine, from seeing them before, and three brown paper cigarettes. And I says, "Is this all the stuff you have got, Lila?" And she said, "Yes." And she said, "This is awful!"

Q. What did you say to Mitchum and what did he say to you?

According to Detective Sergeant Barr, the following conversation took place between him and Mitchum:

Barr: "How long have you been smoking marijuana?"

Mitchum: "Oh, I have been smoking since my early youth, two or three years."

Barr: "When is the last time you were smoking besides tonight?"

Mitchum: "I was blasting weed last week."

not blaming anybody . . .

Barr: "How much of this cigarette did you smoke tonight?"

Mitchum: "I only got a few drags of that tonight when you came in."

Barr: "Who lit your cigarette, Bob?"

Mitchum: "I don't know."

Lila: "I lit it."

Barr: "That is right, Lila. I saw you light it. It seems we are going to get along all right."

Mitchum: "There is no use getting excited."

Vicki: "Well, this is just like the movies."

Mitchum: "It is not like the movies to me. This will ruin me. This is the reason my wife left me."

Barr: "You have no one to blame but yourself. This has been going on for some time."

Mitchum: "I am not blaming anybody. I was smoking it tonight. I know it. I just didn't realize how serious it was and the chances I was taking. This is it, I'm through."

After listening to all the testimony of the arresting officers and accepting as evidence the 19 sticks of marijuana, the eight benzedrine tablets, and the two "roaches" or marijuana cigarette butts found in possession of Mitchum and the two other defendants, Judge Nye quickly announced his decision.

There were no dramatics and no one stood up. The judge merely said, "I find the defendants guilty on the count of conspiracy to possess narcotics. Sentence will be passed on February 9, at which time disposal will be made of the first count."

Mitchum was indicted on two counts, possession of marijuana and conspiracy to possess marijuana. Before the trial got under way, his attorney asked for a severance of counts. The State agreed to try the actor on the second count.

When Mitchum had been declared guilty, Giesler immediately announced his intention to file a written application for probation. The attorneys for Lila Leeds and Robin Ford followed suit.

When the trial was over, I went up to Mitchum. We both knew he was facing a possible 90-day stretch in jail, and I asked him how he felt about the trial.

"I made a mistake," he said, "and I'm big enough, I hope, to realize that and pay for it."

"How will this affect your relationship with Mrs. Mitchum?" I asked.

"That's the only wonderful thing about this entire horrible business," Bob said, smiling a little. "Before I came down this morning Dorothy told me that she'd stick by me, win, lose or draw. If I'm grateful for anything, it's for my wife. Nobody could ask for a better, more loyal girl."

I threaded my way through the crowded courtroom toward the stolid, balding Jerry Giesler. Flash-bulbs glared behind me as the photographers circled around Mitchum. A plump, sweating man in a sports jacket brushed against me, grinned, and said, "I don't get it. I figured Jerry would fight. I sure don't get it."

When I reached Giesler, I asked him if he would appeal the sentence if Mitchum were placed in the county jail and not probationed.

"No," said Jerry, "we won't appeal. We're going to abide by Judge's Nye's sentence." He slipped into his overcoat, moved over to Mitchum and rescued him from the pressing, crowding photographers.

With Giesler at his side, Bob Mitchum walked down the center aisle of the court. He seemed visibly relieved now that the strain was over. As he reached the door, a little wisp of an elderly woman clutched at his sleeve. I had noticed her before. She had waited from 6:10 A.M. until 9:00 in order to enter the courtroom.

"God bless you, boy," she said.

Mitchum stopped and looked at her.

"Thank you," he said. "Thank you, ma'am."

He turned away quickly, evidently embarrassed by his emotions. A moment later he opened the door and lurched headlong into the mob of screaming fans.

THE END

When he is not writing for the screen, radio, or the magazines, Lloyd Shearer, author of "Mitchum on Trial," may be found in Romanoff's Restaurant playing chess with its fabulous proprietor who, Shearer insists, won the Boer War singlehandedly.

Despite this allegation, Shearer at 30 is regarded in Hollywood as a frank and honest writer. He is therefore carefully avoided by the movie colony's timid, and ardently cultivated by its truthful.

In this latter category he places Bob Mitchum of whom he wrote us two days after the trial: "Mitchum may be serving time when my story of his trial appears in print, but he has the strength and fortitude to take it, and the character to come back. Let's hope Hollywood and the public will let him."

New!... Penaten in Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream

Cleanses Skin Cleaner

Today, for beauty as never before... a wonder cream that cleanses skin cleaner, brighter! Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream contains Penaten — new miracle cleansing aid that penetrates. Reaches deeper into pore openings. Cleanses today's heavy make-up as no cream ever. Delightful — the clear, fresh radiance of your skin!

Glorious smoothness, too! Penaten carries Woodbury's rich skin softeners deeper, to smooth more effectively. Just one deep smoothing cleansing—just one jar of Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream—will convince you! Penaten truly glorifies your skin!

Jars with smart pink-and-gold labels. Trial size, 20¢ to largest luxury sizes, $1.39. Plus tax.

3 Your cleansing tissue proves it!

If your skin's dry... New, Deeper Softening with PENATEN in Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream

New... quicker to velvetize your skin! Rich in lanolin's benefits—plus four special skin softeners. Now Penaten helps carry these smoothing emollients deeper—right into pore openings. Never before has a cream softened tiny lines so soon... smoothed dry skin to younger-looking beauty!

Beauty is my business—

And SWEETHEART Beauty Baths Make My Skin Look Softer... Smoother... Younger— HELP PREVENT CHAPPING!

• "A model who poses in evening gowns needs soft, pretty arms and shoulders. So now I play safe! I put aside casual skin care and started to use only SweetHeart for daily baths and complexion care. In one short week my skin felt soft as creamy satin. It looked petal-smooth, radiantly young—with sparkling freshness!"

You see, SweetHeart's soft, creamy lather has a Floating Lift action! Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings. Lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. One week after you start SweetHeart beauty baths, see the amazing difference! Your skin actually looks younger! It feels softer and smoother, too.

Beauty is my business, too!

• Patricia Callahan, 11 months old, has started her modeling career! And pure, mild, fragrant SweetHeart Soap has always been used for her baths.

For baby's bath—for your family's tubs and showers—you can now also get SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

NEXT WEEK HAVE A LOVELIER COMPLEXION!

• Be done with casual care! Every night and morning, massage your face with SweetHeart's rich lather. Rinse with warm water—then cold. This gentle SweetHeart Care reveals your complexion's true beauty in seven short days.

SWEETHEART

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

sweet and hot

by leonard feather

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No stars: Average

FROM THE MOVIES

MY DREAM IS YOURS—"My Dreom Is Yours" and "Someone Like You" by Doris Day* (Columbia).
A dreamy ballad and a bright rhythm number from Doris' new picture. She's one of the few ex-band vocalists who didn't "commercialize" or otherwise ruin her vocal style for the screen. Too many good singers have been "developed" by Hollywood into mediocre ones.

GIVE MY REGARDS TO BROADWAY—"Let a Smile Be Your Umbrella" by the Andrews Sisters (Decca).
Strictly for the older folks with a taste for nostalgia, and I con't guarantee they'll like it either.

SO DEAR TO MY HEART—album* (Capitol).
Strictly for the younger folks with a taste for Disney, and I can guarantee that they'll find it delightful, with members of the original cast plus music by Billy May. It's an effective adaptation of the movie, featuring Bobby Driscoll, Beulah Bondi, Ken Carson, John Beal and Luana Patten.

WORDS AND MUSIC—"Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" by Lennie Hayton (MGM). "Where or When" by Lena Horne (Victor).
In addition to the original cast MGM album listed last month, you can get the above single release featuring two sides of "Slaughter" from the sound track, with Lennie's great MGM studio orchestra, proving that the music sounds just as fine when it isn't sharing your attention with Gene Kelly's and Vera-Ellen's dancing. Lena's Victor record is an earlier version of the song she also sings in the MGM album.

JAZZ

LIONEL HAMPTON—"How High The Moon"* (Decca).
During my "How High The Moon" week on MGM I aired 36 versions of this No. 1 jazz tune. In case you're one of the many who collect records of it, don't miss other recent "Moon" releases by Ziggy Elman (MGM) and Howard McGhee (Black & White), the latter thinly disguised and retitled "Oodie Coo Bop".

COLEMAN HAWKINS—"Rifftide"* (Capitol).

WOODY HERMAN—"Sequence In Jazz" album (Columbia).
Here's some beautiful modern music, an album you'll treasure for years; Ralph Burns' two great compositions "Summer Sequence" (on four sides) and "Lady McGowan's Dream" (two sides). No matter what your taste in jazz may be, I'm sure you'll agree this is thrilling stuff.

JUST JAZZ—"Groovin' High,"* "Blue Lou,"* "One O'Clock Jump,"* "Just You Just Me"* (Modern).
All recorded at jazz concerts in Hollywood. First two tunes take up two sides each; the other two run into four sides apiece, each in an album. Best moments are provided by such stars as Benny Carter (alto sax on "One O'Clock"); Wardell Gray, the new Benny Goodman tenor sax discovery; and the superb Errol Garner piano on "Blue Lou." Recording is better than usual for these affairs, and the audience noises don't interfere too much.

STAN KENTON—"How Am I To Know" (Capitol).

JAMES MOODY—"Tin Tin Deo"* (Blue Note).

HOLLYWOOD'S BEST-KNOWN MYSTERY

(Continued from page 64)

with a rather pained grin. And I heard that when he telephoned Ava a little later, and the maid said Ava wasn't home and asked who she should say had called, Howard replied: "Tell her 'Rover'!"

So I deduce they have their quarrels.

Maybe they have them mainly because Howard wants to marry Ava and she won't say yes. But neither will admit a marriage possibility—although they see each other regularly, at least three times a week, and always during the weekends.

Ava does appear devoted to Howard, even though she kind of plays cat and mouse with him. At Christmas she gave him a pair of beautiful cuff-links made from old Grecian coins that she'd searched California to find. "What did he give you," I asked Ava. A dreamy look half-closed her eyes. "A big bottle of perfume," she told me, and named a famous brand. "He remembered that a long time ago I said it was my favorite. He's very thoughtful."

That's putting it mildly.

two in new york . . .

When I recently asked Howard how he met Ava, it was interesting to discover a slight change in his previous all-enveloping reticence. He actually told me! Usually, when you ask Howard anything personal he draws that cloak of mystery about him and clams up.

"I was first introduced to Ava on the set of Brute Force," he said. "She dropped in to see Burt Lancaster and the three of us had a few laughs. I liked her immediately. I didn't see her again until I was in New York making The Naked City, when Mark Hellinger brought her over to our table in 21.

"After that, I called her and took her down to the Village for a lobster dinner. . . . It was my first visit to New York—in fact, the only time I was ever there."

I believe it was also Ava's first visit to Manhattan—a solid link for two people who are attracted to each other, as any movie detective can tell you.

The strange part of Howard's being attracted to Ava on the set of Brute Force is that this is the picture which resulted in his brief but stormy engagement to Yvonne de Carlo. Howard had never met Yvonne, either, until he began work on Brute Force. His first scene with her was a violent kiss. It embarrassed him to pieces. He soon got over that and in no time at all had slipped a big diamond ring on Yvonne's important finger and, to everyone's mystification, was engaged to the girl! It couldn't last, of course, the glamorous Yvonne and the somewhat intellectual Mr. Duff just aren't each other's type.

When I corner Howard and ask him, to use a fresh phrase, the $64 question about Ava, he squirms, then says in that mystery-drenched baritone, "Who knows? I think I'd like to get married very much—if I could find the right combination." The boy tries to be cagey, but gives himself away completely with, "Ava's a very intelligent girl. She's vivacious without being phony, very down to earth and the most beautiful girl I've ever seen." I ask him what they talk about—not to be nosey, but to get a clue to Howard's character. I draw a blank. A little diplomatic prodding and I learn: "We both like music—Ava especially. Me, I have a tin ear. I'm not very hep to classical music. I'm not much of a man on the dance floor either, as Ava will vouch for."

She did indeed. "He's a very bad dancer," said Ava with her usual frankness when we discuss Howard. But she softened the criticism. "Very few men are good dancers—even Artie Shaw, and you'd expect him to be good, wouldn't you? But he was terrible—always anticipating the beat."

From further investigation of Mr. Duff, I learn that there's one column item guaranteed to infuriate him—the paragraph in which he's made to look like the amorous suitor who's always been rejected—usually by Miss Gardner.

"He's a pretty sensitive kid," I am told by his best and closest friend, Mike Michakoff. Howard and Mike were in the Army together. He is now Howard's agent and they share the same house. "Publicity embarrasses him because it's about himself," says Mike. "He's covered with confusion when he has to talk about himself." And that brings us a little closer to solving the mystery of Mr. Duff.

We're all of us the sum total of our experiences. It's what happened to us yesterday that makes us what we are today. What happened to Howard to make him cagey, contradictory, and psychologically afraid of people? (He has talked more to me, I believe, than he has to anyone else, except Ava and Mike.) Why does he give the impression of not liking people or trusting them?

Well, here's what I have dug up about Mr. Duff—I mean about the events that shaped the man before he came to Hollywood. His family background was very poor. Sometimes his father had a job, but usually not. The Duffs lived in a very modest bungalow in Seattle, always in the shadow of insecurity. Howard learned early to regard fate as a fiend who knocks you down, just when you think you're riding high.

acting comes first . . .

"I got out of high school in the middle of the depression," Howard told me. "It was in 1932. I had to get work right away. I landed a job as a bus boy in a big chain restaurant. I was fired after two weeks because I broke too many dishes." He was paid all of $14 a week.

"And," says Howard, "it was rather a tragedy—because I really needed the money. Eventually I got another job—as a pick-up boy in a store, bringing the window trimmings to the guy who fixed them. I was acting at night at the Seattle Repertory Playhouse. I lost my job in the store because they had a sale and wanted me to work late at night and I told them I couldn't, because I had a performance at the theater." (He will always put acting first—even, I think, before Ava.)

Then came radio work in San Francisco and Seattle. He was paid $15.00 a week as a disc jockey, toiling for 12 hours a day. At night he was constantly working in little theaters. "Then, just when I was beginning to feel that I was ready to do exactly what I'm doing today—Sam Spade on the radio and leading roles in pictures—I was drafted."

He began in the infantry, went to Saipan—"but I was never in any terrible danger,"—and wound up in the Armed Forces Radio Service. After Howard was discharged, director Jules Dassin, who worked with him in the Actors Lab started him on the road to Hollywood success in Brute Force.

"I get sick in my stomach when anyone calls me lucky," Howard tells his

IT'S ALL PLEASURE

IT'S ALL PLANNED FOR YOU

IT'S A GREYHOUND AMAZING AMERICA TOUR

Just for You! "Not Conducted"

Here's a thrilling spring tonic for you—one of Greyhound's famous Amazing America Tours! Greyhound makes the reservations, selects the best of sightseeing and entertainment, plans the whole trip. All you do is relax and enjoy yourself! Here are a few of the dozens of low-cost tours available.

4-DAY LOS ANGELES TOUR $13.25
Includes hotel, sightseeing trips of Hollywood, Santa Monica Beach, Beverly Hills and San Gabrial Mission. ☐

7-DAY MEXICO CITY TOUR $68.60
Accommodations at Hotel Geneve, four sightseeing trips to points around Mexico City. Six meals included. ☐

6-DAY COLONIAL VIRGINIA TOUR $40.45
Hotel accommodations, sightseeing, admission to famous historic spots in Williamsburg, Lexington and others. ☐

4-DAY BOSTON TOUR $24.00
Accommodations at Bradford Hotel and sightseeing trips to Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord, Plymouth Rock. ☐

5-Day New York City Tour, $25.05 ☐. 5-Day Washington, D. C. Tour, $25.85 ☐. 3-Day Salt Lake City Tour, $8.50 ☐. 4-Day San Francisco Tour, $15.55 ☐. 2-Day Kentucky Cave Tour, $21.10 ☐. 11-Day Florida Circle Tour, $73.20 ☐. 6-Day Miami Tour, $28.45 ☐. 3-Day Chicago Tour, $11.95 ☐. 5-Day Montreal, Quebec Tour, $35.05 ☐. 4-Day 1000 Islands Tour, $35.95 ☐. 5-Day Smoky Mountains Tour, $78.00 ☐. 4-Day Mackinac Island Tour, $35.80 ☐. 3-Day Detroit Tour, $12.10 ☐.

Tour prices subject to change without notice.
(Add price of Greyhound ticket to above rates.)

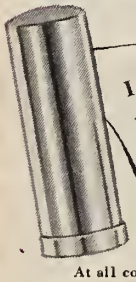
MAIL THIS COUPON FOR TOUR INFORMATION

Fill in this coupon and mail it to: GREYHOUND HIGHWAY TOURS, Dept. DM49, 105 West Madison, Chicago 2, Ill. Be sure to put check-mark opposite tour which interests you.

Name_____



Address_____

City & State_____ DM 49

Irresistible
NEW, LONGER
LIPSTICK
Professional size... only 39¢

For the beautifully shaped lips men admire, try softer, smoother Irresistible Lipstick in the new long "make-up-artist" case of mock-gold metal. WHIP-TEXT to stay on longer . . . smoother.

Irresistible lipstick in new mock-gold metal swivel case. JUMBO SIZE 25¢

At all cosmetic counters

Put a love song in his heart! Tonight, use IRRESISTIBLE PERFUME

10c and 25c sizes

friends. "I don't believe in overnight success. I've worked tremendously hard all my life."

Howard has always been so busy working to become a top actor that he's more or less neglected to learn the slick patter that makes group conversation easy, or how to accept graciously the adulation that automatically goes with being a successful movie star.

He was happy in New York when he did The Naked City—"because no one knew me then." It was different when he was in San Diego recently. He loathed the gawkers and the autograph seekers and was shy and difficult with the press and the public. When he arrived at the airport, a girl dashed up to him and said, "Pardon me, I'm supposed to welcome you." "That's nice," said Howard awkwardly and shook hands. "No, no!" said the girl. "I'm supposed to kiss you." This happened three times with three different girls. "My, you sure have a lot of welcoming committees," the confused Mr. Duff finally muttered to an angry-looking gent who introduced himself as the President of the Chamber of Commerce. "Sir," said the dignitary, "I am the welcoming committee."

Howard is sometimes unpopular with people who don't understand that some of his harsh remarks are caused by his lack of glibness. He's still trying to explain to the smouldering citizens of Kanab, Utah, that he didn't really mean his published crack—"My God, don't go to Kanab." He recently devoted a whole broadcast to plugging Kanab. You know how it often is—you want to say something funny and, since you're not Bob Hope or Milton Berle, it comes out crude and graceless.

when do we eat? . . .

After questioning pal Michakoff, I learn that while Howard doesn't have an inch of fat on his body, he eats like a wolf. (But he certainly doesn't behave like one!) "He fancies himself as a cook," says Mike. "He loves to fix his own breakfast and makes a big production out of eggs, bacon, toast and coffee."

"He'll eat anything," says the girl who perhaps knows the 31-year-old bachelor best—Ava, of course. "He's always hungry. The other night my sister was cooking and she said, 'We've got all this food, what'll we do with it?' 'Don't worry,' I told her, 'we can always count on Howard.'" (I wonder if Ava really can?)

Ever since he has lived in Hollywood, Howard has searched for the right house to harmonize with his personality. While he waited, he rented a house at the beach. This was nice for the neighbors, for during the summer they could view Gardner in a bathing suit every day that she wasn't working. "Now," says Howard, "I have found the ideal house for me. It's in just the location I like—high up in the hills." (A fine setting for a mystery!)

Another thing he likes is to get into bed with a bottle of beer and read until two or three in the morning—even when he's working. And, Howard frequently dashes off on long trips by car all by himself.

"Sort of trying to get away from himself," is the way one of his few intimate friends explained it to me. "And," he added, "his acting is really an escape from himself."

Personally, I don't know why he should try to escape from himself. In my opinion, there's nothing wrong with the world of Mr. Duff that outstanding success and security—which obviously are coming his way—won't cure.

And that winds up the Sheilah Graham casebook on Howard Duff—Hollywood's best-known mystery.

Well, I love a mystery—especially when he's Howard Duff. THE END

the fans

MODERN SCREEN FAN CLUB ASSOCIATION

We're only human and that's why we'd like you to help us. Most of you have received our activity reports and know exactly how to use them, but for new clubs in our midst, we'd like to urge you to fill them out very carefully and send them in at the very end of each month. Don't forget to write in the number of members you have and please list any activity (no matter how small) in which your club took part. Many of you feel that your good deeds are overlooked and the best way to overcome that is to send in your activity reports promptly. News: We have new clubs for Richard Widmark (prexy June Cornetta), Peggy Lee (prexy Jeanne Mundell) and Howard Duff (prexy Bob Ingle). We'll send the full addresses to any one sending us a stamped envelope. . . .

9th semi-annual TROPHY CUP CONTEST 2nd Lap.

Our ENGER-KRESS wallets really must be seen to be appreciated. They're genuine leather and come in beautiful shades of blue, green, yellow and red. The wallet is called Candlelight and it has various compartments for money, coins and papers. We know you'll love it just as we do. For you editors, we really have a super prize. It's a REVLON KING'S RANSOM set consisting of one gold lipstick holder plus 7 refills all in different shades and handsomely boxed in black velvet. You lucky MSFCA correspondents are really going to get a break this time. For you we have ELGIN-AMERICAN compacts with large clear mirrors, and finished in jeweler's bronze guaranteed to wear and wear. Every girl will want one of these. And for you talented club artists there are TANGEE TRIP KITS. A handy carrying case for that trip you've been planning, filled to the brim with TANGEE'S terrific cosmetics. (Of course, we'll make suitable changes for boys who win.)

This Is My Best: (100 points) "Blind Singer," Rosemary Carley, Whitemore and Lowe Journal. "Autumn Tide," Beverly Grime, Philip Reed Journal. "The Little Things That Count," Ginger Bagnall, Alice Frost Journal. "Why, of course—," Betty Fitzgerald, Charles Korvin Journal. "How To Make Democracy Live," Connie Tannenbaum, Sinatra's Crusaders (Bradley). "Dear Johnny," Joyce Clegg, John Garfield Journal. Best Journals: (500 points) League 1. Gene Autry Journal. League 2. (tied) Bob Crosby Journal and Contino-Peck-Melari (Diefenbach) Journal. League 3. Charles Korvin Journal. Best Editors: (250 points) League 1. Jean Meade, Roy Rogers Journal. League 2. Margaret Staley, Perry Como Journal. League 3. Rita La Rossa, Danny Scholl Journal. Best Covers: (250 points) League 1. Roy Rogers Journal. League 2. Musical Notes Journal. League 3. Dave Willock Journal. Membership Increases: (100 points) League 1. Nelson Eddy (Mottola). League 2. Jeanette MacDonald (Riley). League 3. June Allyson. Worthwhile Activities: (250 points) League 1. Gene Autry (Charity check, CARE packages, gift to "shut-in"). League 2. (tied) Jeanette MacDonald (Riley) (Xmas donation to charity). Rise Stevens (Donation to Red Cross). League 3. (tied) Dorothy Shay (Contribution to Sister Kenny Fund). Arthur Kennedy (collected stamps, tinfoil and Xmas Cards—cancer fund donation). Best Artist: (150 points) Lois Robinson, Cornel Wilde Journal. Candid Camera Contest: (100 points to first prize winner, 50 to others). Joyce Moison, Sinatra Bowtie Club. Shirley Warren, Richard Jaeckel Club. Kathy Campbell, Darryl Hickman Club. Beverly Bush, Melody of Frank Sinatra Club. Ron DeArmand, Ron Randall Club. Evelyn Fish, Peggy Lee Club. Best Correspondent: (50 points). League 1. None qualified. League 2. Ruth Ness, Bing Crosby Club. League 3. Pat Bellinger, Penny Edwards Club. Leading Clubs So Far: League 1. Gene Autry 850, Jane Wyman 700. League 2. Joan Crawford 850. Contino-Peck-Melari 600. Bob Crosby 600. League 3. James Melton 700. Charles Korvin 700.

MADE IN HEAVEN

(Continued from page 54)

Book and slammed it, little-girl cooks, big red heart and all, into a cupboard.

This little side-note of frustration was the first indication to Anne that her marriage wasn't going to fit the dream mould she'd made for it—but was going to develop along its own lines. And she soon saw she'd have to change to keep up with it.

She has. So has John. Now, rounding out their third year, they're giving every evidence of being one of the happiest young partnerships in Hollywood's boy-girl history. In achieving this state, they've had to contend with other issues besides John's being a no-breakfast man. Some of these issues they've settled, some they've compromised on, and the rest—well, as Anne reports, they're "working on them."

A whole, handsome skin-full of problems is presented to an impulsive girl like Anne by a husband like John who skips breakfasts, deliberates before making decisions (with some exceptions to be noted later in the story), instinctively dislikes social to-and-fro'ing and the clothes that go with it, and always prefers to leave well enough alone. On the other hand, a wife like Anne—independent, hating routine, loving to do herself up at the slightest excuse and go out and mingle, and full of ideas of the Onward and Upward type—well, she's a threat to the emotional equilibrium of a fellow like John. When a pair like this can get along so well, they must have something.

the winner always loses . . .

Anne doesn't try to drag John along to her way of thinking—she works hard and carefully to make him want to come along. And John doesn't try to make Anne stay put—he tries to calm the restlessness of her soul so she'll be content to linger longer in between leaping. Which reveals what they have—a realization that it's impossible for either of them to win his or her way in any argument without both of them losing something far more important.

Here was Anne during the first year of her marriage wanting her husband to appear as neat and spruce as a Man of Distinction. And here was John showing up in an old pair of slacks every day—the same old pair of slacks, for that matter! What to do? Jump him for being careless about his clothes? Nope—that wasn't it. Instead, she skipped the clothes but lost no opportunity to ring in a word about how well he looked no matter what he wore. From that she went on to the subject of his general handsomeness. Later, she lightly remarked upon how few men there are who can do clothes justice and how lucky she felt that John was one of these men.

And—oh, boy!—it began to work. He passed up the droopy slacks for a day . . . and then two and three days at a stretch. Soon he was thinking in terms of an outfit when he dressed—matching ties and socks. Then, in time, it became a regular habit with him—and she knew she'd won. And it was not only a sweet "together" kind of victory that they can discuss and laugh about now—he's grateful to her for it!

Here was John, the man of the house, yet realizing that his Anne had lived alone for five years and was in the habit of running her household and attending to any needs without a thought of consulting anyone else. No wood in the fireplace? Anne would come staggering in from the back door almost keeling over from the weight of an armful of logs. The front door bell

"I dress for an evening date... at 8 o'clock in the morning!"

1. "For my everyday duties, a smart, sophisticated bronze and black taffeta and wool ensemble, studded with scatter pins. And, of course, I rely on gentler, even more effective Odorono Cream . . . because I know it protects me from perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!"

New Odorono Cream brings you an improved new formula in a bright new package. Stays creamy smooth, too . . . even if you leave the cap off for weeks!

2. "For my evening date, I remove the jacket and set off the gleaming dress with a tawny leopard print stole, black velvet belt and gloves. I'm confident of my charm all evening, too, thanks to new Odorono Cream . . . because the Hálgene in Odorono gives more effective protection than any deodorant known."

It never harms fine fabrics, and is so gentle you can use it right after shaving! You'll find it the perfect deodorant.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!

Radio Star Gossip

Barbara Luddy

Leading Lady

"FIRST NIGHTER" Reveals Secret!

Twice winner of a national poll, as America's Best Radio Actress, diminutive hazel-eyed Barbara Luddy says:

"One of the true secrets for success as a radio, stage, movie actress or career girl is to have a flawless-looking, lovely complexion.

"That's why I'm so completely happy with the new cream make-up—Magic Touch—which I consider the finest make-up I've ever used.

"Magic Touch, being a cream, never dries my skin. And it's absolutely magical the way it hides little skin faults, blends so quickly and easily, gives your complexion a look of perfection—without ever making you appear 'made-up'."

Take a tip from Barbara Luddy, use Magic Touch. Send for FREE Beauty Booklet of make-up secrets. Campana Sales Co., 1000 Lincoln Way, Batavia, Ill.

ringing? Anne would spring up to answer it. Guests present? Anne would dash to the kitchen to wrestle with bottles, ice cubes and glasses while John, less trigger-minded, sat red-faced with their visitors, unhappily filling the role of the lazy host whose wife has to save the day.

What to do? Lecture Anne? Lay down the law? Mope? That wasn't it. John waited. Soon, a typically impulsive gesture of Anne's brought her to grief. A curtain in the living room loosened from its fastening one night as they sat talking. In a split second, Anne was perched with one foot on a chair and the other on the edge of the piano trying to fix it. The chair tilted, Anne slipped—and landed on the piano—fortissimo.

Now was the time. John picked her up, set her down on the couch, and then gently expounded on the wear and tear on her life—and his nerves—as a result of her explosive-like moves around the house.

He recalled the time she forgot it was his job to slice the ham at a dinner they were giving and jumped to the task herself, succeeding in cutting off one slice of ham and almost half of her thumb. He mentioned the time she decided to store some suitcases in the cellar and didn't wait until he got home to do it—and the resultant crashing descent with, as the doctors say, profuse contusions and lacerations.

the interior decorator . . .

He went on to bring up other mishaps. Anne remembered. With the bruises from her fall on the piano aching, she was ripe to see his point. From now on, she vowed, she'd attend to nothing in the house except slow crocheting.

"That's better," said John. "Now I'll take care of the curtains."

He pushed the piano out of the way, carefully set a chair solidly under the curtains and set about fastening them. In due time he was finished, got off the chair, and replaced the piano.

"There you are," he said. "Just let me know what you want and I'll do it."

Anne's eyes were on the curtains. John had fastened them so they were twisted away whopper-jawed from the window. But she only nodded. John's idea was right—even if he would never make an interior decorator. . . .

An unexpected feature of their marriage, as far as Anne and John are concerned, are the things it has revealed about themselves that they never knew before. For instance, Anne always had the idea that she slept like a baby, quietly and peacefully. Then, one morning, John announced that he had news for her about her sleeping. Anne quailed.

"No! Not that!" she said. "I couldn't stand it."

"Not what?" asked John, bewildered.

"That I snore," she said. "As you do."

"Who, me?" cried John, forgetting his news. "I snore? are you sure?"

"Of course," replied Anne. "And if I thought I did . . . Do I?"

John, still thinking about his snoring, and looking sunk, shook his head. No, Anne didn't snore. She laughed and giggled in her sleep—not just in a subdued way, but sometimes with such a high-pitched, rolling lilt to it that, coming in the dead of the night, it sent John bolt upright in bed shivering with sudden horror until he realized what was happening.

He'd been planning, he said, to talk to her about it; maybe she could control the habit. But now . . . now that he'd learned about his snoring—well, he said, he felt he had little right to say anything.

Anne quickly sought to comfort him. His snoring wasn't too bad, she said, and besides she'd discovered a trick to overcome it. It only bothered her when, just as she was about to fall asleep, it would startle her awake again. One night, at such a time, she had cried out in annoyance—just a loud, complaining kind of "Oh!" Immediately she had felt John start for a second, and then the snoring stopped long enough for sleep to retake her. Now she had her system down pat, and knew just how loud to cry out to get him to stop and yet not awaken him.

"If it stopped long enough for you to fall asleep, how do you know I started in again?" he wanted to know.

"Because some nights you start in again before I fall asleep, and I have to yell twice," she replied.

"Oh," he said.

"So," said Anne, sticking out her hand, "we are fellow sinners. And every night when we go to sleep I'll think 'Here we go . . . laughing and snoring!' "

They shook on it and that was settled.

Two impulsive habits John had (and traces of them still linger, says Anne), involved his penchant for quick friendships and his lack of sales resistance. The first resulted in their becoming involved with people who turned out to be other than wonderful—at which point John would go cold on them altogether and it would be up to Anne to ease out of the situation gracefully. The second kept working out so that if Anne asked him to pick up a French earthenware casserole for her at the store because she'd have no chance to shop, he'd return with some sort of copper contrivance resembling a flattened samovar that the salesgirl had assured him was even better for casseroles than casseroles.

The list of differences on which Anne and John have found a common meeting ground is a long one. Then there is another sort of list. John doesn't like Anne to drive. Anne doesn't like to drive when John is along because he sits beside her, his eyes fixed on the speedometer, fidgeting and muttering things like, "Easy, easy now. . . . You got a red light . . . Watch it, that car's pulling out . . . Don't look at me, look at the road!"

When they walk together—they don't. John takes slow, long steps. Anne takes short, quick ones. She always finds herself out in front and alone.

These, and a few dozen other items, make up this second list of issues that have yet to be settled. What are they going to do about them? Who will give in to whom? And how? And when?

"Well," says Anne, looking doubtfully at John, "I don't know. . . ."

"Well," says John, looking back at Anne, "I don't know, either. . . ."

They continue looking at each other and then suddenly have to break out into smiles—and one has the feeling that it's going to take a lot of happy years finding the answers. THE END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Quite some time ago I was having dinner at the Cocoanut Grove in Hollywood. The girl at the next table excused herself to go to the powder-room. While she was gone her date slipped out his billfold and shyly counted his money. Evidently he had the cost of the evening in mind. The couple was Ginger Rogers and the not yet famous Jimmy Stewart.

Roberta Kettlewell
Baton Rouge, La.

HOW DEAR TO MY HEART

(Continued from page 45)

I do—that children should be given some responsibility at the earliest age, even if they're more of a nuisance than a help. As soon as I could walk, part of my duty was to help clear the table. Usually, I guess, I did it pretty well. But this particular night, with my tummy full and all, I was feeling quite gay and decided to do a spring dance. While thus happily occupied, I slipped and fell against the point of a chair, and cut my lip wide open. (The scar's still there.) An ambulance came and took me to the hospital, and it was all very sad.

The memory of those days that stands out most sharply is my falling in love for the first time. He was such a handsome cowboy—he played my father in a Western—and he'd bring me little bottles of milk and I'd sit on his knee and drink while he strummed on his guitar. I thought he was marvelous. This was at Big Bear Lake and after we got home, I didn't see him again. But suddenly one day I heard somebody say he'd been killed, and I cried for about two days. My brothers and I had fixed a big jigsaw puzzle, and there was an earthquake that night and it knocked the puzzle all to pieces. The puzzle was gone, the cowboy was gone, and I was through with life, I was finished. . . .

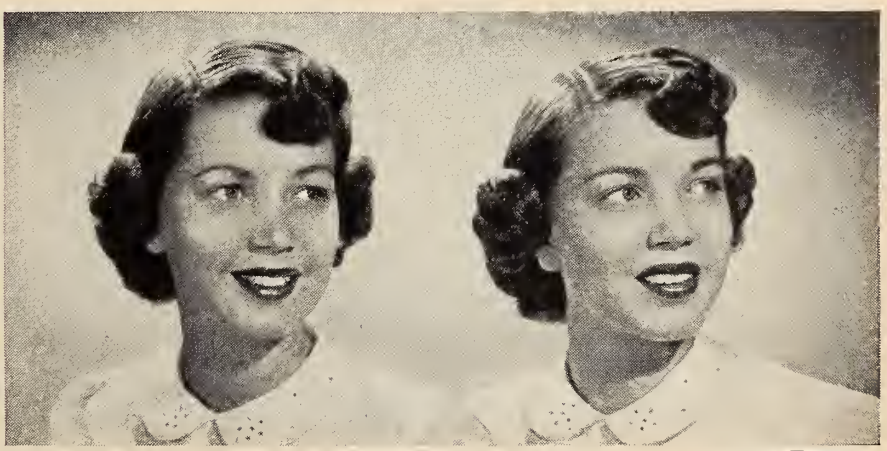
i get another bump . . .

Somehow, though, I must have survived, because next thing I remember is rehearsing the big dance number for Stand Up and Cheer with Jimmy Dunn at Fox. Afterwards I had a nap, to be fresh for the dress rehearsal, and then we went over to the Café de Paris on the studio lot to get something to eat. Again I was feeling good, again doing my spring dance and again I fell and got a nice big bump. Which is how that spitcurl originated. I'd never had it before, but Mother put it there to hide the bump and there it stayed.

I'm not going into all my pictures—only Little Miss Marker, because that's the one so many people ask about. I remember a pair of pajamas—the kind with feet—that they made in a hurry, for me to wear in that movie. When I stuck my legs in, the pins were still there and I jumped all over the place. I remember my great crush on Dorothy Dell. I remember the red velvet costume I wore on the charger, with a kind of veil. I always loved velvet and still do, and that costume was like being a fairy princess. I remember the charger who was pure white and quite handsome in a horsy way, and very fairy-tale looking. I remember how he reared, and the little girl was supposed to fall off. They did that with wires, and I went way up to the top of the set with the gaffers to watch. I thought that was the funniest thing in the world. Mother said they could hear me laughing all over the place. . . .

I remember something that wasn't so pleasant, and I think it should be told, just to show that you can't be too careful about children. Mother was always with me on the set—not off in a corner somewhere, but right beside me. This was because some people thought it funny to say to a child things like, "Go over to that man and tell him he's fat." Being a child, you might do it, and he'd think, "What a fresh little monkey!" Mother soon learned about things like that, and put a stop to them. Then there were people who'd keep telling you how well you did this or that. Such things are always nice to hear, but they're dangerous. Pretty soon you might think you're something special. Mother

TONI TWINS prove magic of SOFT-WATER Shampooing



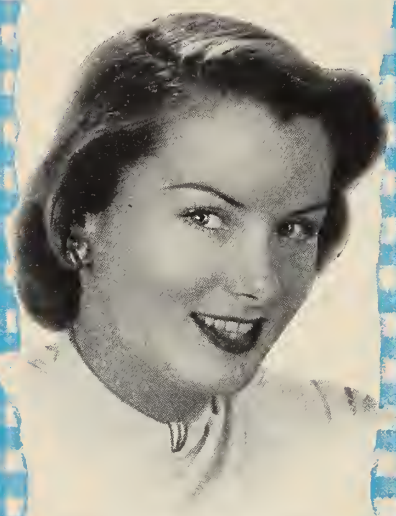
LATHER . . . WAS KATHERINE'S PROBLEM.

"My shampoo simply would not lather right", complained Katherine Ring. "I'd rub and rub but still my hair never had much glint to it!" And no wonder! Katherine was using a soap shampoo, and soaps not only fail to lather as well in hard water—they actually leave a film on hair that dulls natural lustre! So your hair lacks highlights, looks drab and lifeless!

BUT KATHLEENE GOT HEAPS OF IT!

"Look at all this lather", smiled her twin, Kathleene. "I discovered that Toni Creme Shampoo gives Soft-Water Shampooing even in hard water! I never saw such suds! Never saw my hair so shining clean before, either!" That's what Toni's Soft-Water Shampooing means. Even in hard water it means billows of rich, whipped-cream suds that leave your hair shimmering clean!

NOW IT'S TONI CREME SHAMPOO FOR TWO!



Yes, it's Toni and only Toni for both the Ring twins from now on. Because Toni Creme Shampoo gives Soft-Water Shampooing in hard water! That creamy-thick lather rinses away dirt and dandruff instantly. Leaves your hair fragrantly clean, gloriously soft! And Toni Creme Shampoo helps your permanent to "take" better—look lovelier longer. Get a jar or tube of Toni Creme Shampoo today. See it work the magic of Soft-Water Shampooing on your hair!

Enriched with Lanolin

TO A WOMAN WHO ISN'T QUITE SURE ABOUT TAMPONS . . .

Go Meds...
Go Merrier

KNOW that Meds is designed by a doctor and is—

Acceptable for advertising in the Journal of the American Medical Association

KNOW that Meds has earned the trusted seal of Good Housekeeping Magazine

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

KNOW that Meds has been tested —commended by Parents' Magazine —earned the right to use this seal

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

And know that Meds is The Modess tampon used by more nurses each month.

Buy a purse-size box of Meds today. Or write for a free sample package in plain wrapper to Personal Products Corporation, Dept. MS 4, Milltown, N. J. (U. S. only)

Regular and Super never tore me down, but she never overpraised me either. "You did it well," she'd say, "but you could have done it better."

Anyway, she was always right there till we came to the crying scene in Little Miss Marker. First, I ought to explain that Mother and I had a way with each other so I could cry to order if she was just around. We'd go stand in a corner, and she'd say, "You know they want you to cry, Shirley—" and I'd sort of let my mind go blank, and pretty soon I was crying. It was a very easy way. I enjoy crying. I think all women do.

But the people on the set didn't know about this, so they asked Mother to go off on some excuse or other. Meantime, they told me there'd been a terrible accident—that "a big man with green eyes had taken Mommy away." Well, I got hysterical. Even after she came back, it took me a long time to quiet down. They couldn't shoot the scene anyway, because I was crying harder than what it called for. After that, no matter what reason they gave, Mother never left me again. . .

I remember a dinner, with speeches going on and everything sort of dull. To pass the time, I took some hard rolls and started breaking them up. I remember Mother whispering, "Shirley, I think they're going to give you something. If they do, say thank you." That's when they gave me my little Oscar. I thanked them, and said, "Can we go now, Mommy?" It was all quite boring then, but times have certainly changed. . . .

I remember another crying scene in Now and Forever. Somebody said Dorothy Dell had been killed in a car accident. I didn't believe it, after the incident with Mother. I thought, "They're just trying to get me to cry for the scene." When I knew it was true, I was gone again—same as with the cowboy.

Luckily, things like that don't stay with a child. Most of it was just fun. My stand-in, Mary Lou Isleib, and I were the only two children on the set. We ate lunch and had school in that lovely little bungalow, which was like another home. On Sundays and days off I played with the neighborhood children. I don't ever remember being conscious of doing anything in the world they weren't. I don't know why. Probably the way I was treated at home had a lot to do with it. No more fuss was made over me than any other child. And my brothers were strictly the kind who wouldn't take any nonsense.

i fall in love . . .

I remember flirting. That must have started at a very early age. Mother would take me driving, and occasionally men passing by would wave. When she'd look at me, I'd be looking straight ahead. But finally she caught me red-handed, waving and smiling first. . . . Being fickle, I formed many attachments.

George Murphy was a great love of mine. So was anyone, in fact, who danced well. I thought that automatically made them romantic. This was a feeling that stayed with me right through high school. Any really good dancer I could generally get a crush on. On the other hand, Robert Young didn't dance, and he was pretty tough to stay away from. And I'll never forget my first day with Gary Cooper. He was so cute—kind of shy with children, I guess, as with everyone else. He sent out and got me a bunch of electric toys, then he sat in his chair with a big newspaper. Pretty soon I'd notice the paper sliding down, but when I looked up, he'd be back behind it again. So I stopped playing with the toys, because it was more exciting to see the newspaper going up and down.

But probably Jimmy Dunn was the biggest crush of my young life. I resented seeing any other woman even speak to him. Once Alice Faye sat down beside him, and I went right over, climbed on his knee and took his hand. I was very upset about it. So you can imagine the blow when he brought his bride to our house one Christmas Day. Up to then it had been such a lovely Christmas. But when he said, "Shirley, I want you to meet my wife," that was the end. I think I cried. Anyway, I know I was very rude, and wouldn't even speak to her. You see, he'd given me a little bracelet that said I LOVE YOU, in pearls. To me, that was like a proposal, and I felt he'd deserted me, which was very confusing.

All this led to some funny moments later on. Sooner or later these men would come back into your life, and pretend not to understand why you didn't want to sit on their knees any more. I used to love Bill Seiter, the director, because he wore some wonderful shaving lotion, and I called him Cuddly. Well, I visited his set at Columbia once—I must have been about 16—and he looked kind of shocked, the way everyone did when they saw I was growing up. "Aren't you going to hug me," he asked, "the way you used to? Aren't I Cuddly any more?"

mistaken identity . . .

But I think the biggest joke was with Gary Cooper. He used to call me Wigglebritches, because I was always moving around so fast. Just about three or four months ago, he was calling for his wife at a beauty shop. My mother-in-law happened to be there, and he heard someone say, "Mrs. Agar. . . ." So in he tore and yelled, "Wigglebritches!" My mother-in-law, who's a pretty dignified lady herself, didn't know what to make of it. As for poor Mr. Cooper, he just took one look and sneaked away on his long legs. . . .

As far back as I can remember, we had a dog. Then we had a parrot, and rabbits in the yard of my studio bungalow, and horses and things. I feel that people who don't own a dog or some kind of pet usually aren't as happy as those who do.

Another thing that goes as far back as I remember is Daddy reading me the Oz books, while Mother did my hair at night. If he left out a word, I'd know it, and he'd have to start all over again. I loved "Freckles" too, and anything to do with the Mounties—but especially I loved Oz. . . . And I remember one Christmas, while we lived on San Vicente Boulevard, my room was all fixed up with pictures of me as Little Bo-peep, and the little lambs dragging their tails behind them. I'd sit there on Daddy's lap and he'd say, "Some day we'll have a beautiful big home and a beautiful big playroom just for you." That went on for a couple of years. Then I remember we drove around looking for lots. We stopped at one and walked on it. Out of the big bush where the fishpond is now, came a mother and father quail and a whole string of little quails, and that settled it for me. "This is the place," I said. I don't think the family exactly took my word for it. I imagine they looked into it more. But the quails won out in the long run, and we started building.

And I started selling cement pies. My great ambition just then was to be a pie salesman. Winnie Sheehan, the head man at Fox, gave me a darling little pie-wagon with a striped top, and I'd sell pies all over the set, and the money used to go to the Babies' Milk Fund. But those were real pies, which made a little sense. The others were different. We spent days at the lot while the house was going up. The minute they started putting the cement in, I'd disappear and turn up by the roadside, selling cement pies to tourists for 25 or 50 cents.

Eventually, of course, Mother and Daddy found out about the pies and their darling daughter, and that was the end of my business venture. I remember we moved into the house before it was finished. We ate off packing-cases, and my room didn't have all the windows in, and I just about froze to death. But this didn't bother me a bit.

As a child, I didn't get to see many movies. I saw my own, which didn't impress me very much—it was more fun making them than looking at them. I did see the Disneys, which I loved, and Bring 'Em Back Alive, which I hated, because I hate to see animals hurt or fighting. And there was one in which Rogers and Astaire danced in the moonlight, and I asked, "Are they getting married now, Mommy?"—because it was so beautiful, and I thought it must be a wedding.

The last actor I fell in love with was Charles Laughton. I must have been around 11 then, when my maternal quality started. I was so sorry for that man in The Hunchback of Notre Dame, I just wanted to take care of him. There was a benefit one night, and he was on the stage, doing the Gettysburg Address in that wonderful voice, and I was in the wings with the tears rolling down my cheeks. Later, we were introduced, and I simply couldn't utter a sound. . .

Then came the time of my leaving Fox. What made it easier for me, leaving the studio, was being between pictures at the time, so I didn't have to say goodbye to the people I'd worked with and loved. Of course I was upset about it for a while, then Mother told me I was going to Westlake School for Girls—and that took care of that feeling. Besides, I never thought it would be forever. . .

i'm engaged! . . .

I can't tell you how wonderful Westlake was—I wouldn't have missed it for anything in the world. The girls broke me in quickly to everything girls and teachers do, and those years just flew till all of a sudden it was graduation day, with my whole family there and a few close friends. (And to make it doubly exciting, an engagement ring that I'd had for about two months!) First thing I did after getting back to my seat was to open my diploma and make sure it was signed. Every other girl did the same thing, I noticed. Because we'd had an awfully good time that year, which didn't go too well with studying. But now there was nothing left to bother us. We were all very smart young women. We'd passed our exams and were absolutely ready for the world. . .

Now I have to go back to the day Mother told me Mr. Selznick wanted to sign me to a contract. She told me everything about it, then she said, "It's up to you, Shirl. You're old enough now to decide for yourself." Well! Mr. Selznick's name was kind of magic. When you've been in the movies since you were three, a call like that is a call you can't help answering. So I played Brig in Since You Went Away. . .

Oh, yes—I did mention an engagement ring, didn't I? Well, it started like this: One Sunday I was down at the pool with a lot of my friends, when one of them, Ann Gallery, brought a young man over. They only stayed a few seconds, but I said to Mother later: "He'll be back." Jack doesn't believe it. He assures me he had no intention of coming back. As for me, I had a boy friend. He was in the Army and rather distant, to be sure, but still he was my heart interest of the moment, so I can't for the life of me tell you why I said it. unless from sheer instinct.

Matter of fact, I probably wouldn't have seen him again except that Ann's mother had a tea and Jack brought his mother,

For the skin that doesn't like heavy foundation

Sheer beauty for the skin that doesn't like to feel "coated"! A greaseless base that makes powder cling—yet leaves your skin feeling free to breathe Petal-light Powder Base! Greaseless! Holds powder without "coating"!

If your skin prefers a delicate, more natural foundation—smooth on a thin, thin veil of Pond's Vanishing Cream before powder. It's completely greaseless! Disappears instantly, leaving only a protecting, translucent film. No streaking. No discoloring. Powder goes on beautifully—and stays!

Beautifying Mask before make-up . . . Makes skin brighter, smoother in 1 minute!

Always when you want to look your prettiest—have a stimulating pick-up with a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Cover your face, except eyes, with a generous cloak of the Cream. After one minute tissue off clean. The Cream's "keratolytic" action loosens clinging dirt and dead skin flakes. Dissolves them off! Lovely young Mrs. Whitney says, "A Mask gives my skin a smoother, clearer look—a perfect finish for make-up!"

Mrs. Robert Bacon Whitney says: "I always have a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream before I go out! This one quick little 'special-occasion' beauty treatment does so much for my complexion."

Just Whistle...

by Bissell

What do you do when your cherub child trails cookie crumbs over your newly cleaned rug? Spank? No . . .

Just whistle . . . and get out your Bissell Carpet Sweeper. See how that new "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action gets the dirt, at a touch! No need to bear down . . .

This miracle brush adjusts itself automatically to any rug nap, thick or thin. Sweeps clean under beds and chairs, with the handle held low!

Save your vacuum for occasional cleaning, and whisk through quick everyday clean-ups with your "Bisco-matic" Bissell®!

Exceptional values. "Bisco-matic" Bissells with "Sta-up" Handle and easy "Flip-O" Empty as low as $6.45. Other models for even less. Illustrated: the "Vanity" at $8.45.

Bissell Sweepers

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co.
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg U S Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush and Ann said how about a double date that evening? Jack was her date, and mine was a very attractive marine lieutenant named Bud.

Actually the marine was the one I favored, which was fitting and proper, since he was my date. But Jack impressed me as being sophisticated, and I wanted to impress him the same way. So I wore a beautiful Adrian suit of gold wool—the first I ever owned—and a hat with a slight veil, and imagined of course that I looked much older.

The following Saturday, when Ann phoned about double-dating, I wanted to know if Jack would be there. Later I found out she phoned him too, and he asked if I'd be there. That night he asked me to dance. "You know," he said, "I've never danced with a short girl before."

"Well, I'm not so short. I'm five-foot-two. That's not very short."

He smiled. "My mother's about an inch taller than you. It's kind of fun, dancing with a short girl."

He's not so bad, I thought.

So we kept on double-dating, and meanwhile the marine came over during the week, and he and I were getting quite serious. Generally, he phoned around seven, so when the phone rang at seven one Friday, I rushed to answer, and who of all people should it be but Jack!

"I know it's not Saturday night," he said, "but we've double-dated so much, why not go out alone tonight?"

the other woman . . .

I couldn't think of a single good reason why not. We had a wonderful evening, and next night we double-dated as usual. It went on like that till I didn't know what to do, with Bud going overseas, and my heart interest in the Army—and now Jack. Finally, the whole thing was settled. Jack left for camp, and everyone was gone, and I was left sitting alone, trying to figure out which one I was in love with. Jack wanted me to come up to camp with his mother, but I started giving him the brush. So he wrote to his sister Joyce, who was in my class at Westlake, knowing full well she'd show me the letters. Maybe he even asked her to show them—I wouldn't put it past him—all about a beautiful WAC he'd met.

By now I was past 16, and Jack started proposing. I said, "No, I'm not ready to get married yet." "Then I'm going to marry the WAC," he'd write. And I'd write back, "Don't do anything rash. Fun's fun, but why carry a joke too far?" And this went on till he came home on leave unexpectedly.

"Jack's down in the library," Mother said.

"Good," I thought. "Now I can tell him off. He's been pretty nasty, he and his WAC."

Well, we just looked at each other and ran to each other, and that was it. The others simply faded out. . .

What I remember most about my wedding is being very happy and calm, not shaking or anything. Jack was the nervous one. When it came time for the rings, which were both lying in the minister's hand, he picked up his own big one and tried to stick it on my finger. And toward the end, there was a drop of perspiration on the end of his nose, which made me laugh.

Dad was kind of choked up, but poor Mother really did the weeping for the whole family. . .

After Jack's discharge, while our house was being built, we lived in a tiny place on San Vicente Boulevard, with a hanging lamp in the dining room that Jack hit his head on regularly. Then our house was ready. Both mothers put flowers all over the place, and the living room looked so huge and beautiful to me that I hardly could stand it.

Another very exciting thing was when we heard that director John Ford wanted Jack for Fort Apache. Jack was under contract to Mr. Selznick, and crazy to get going on a picture, so he was just in the skies over it, and so was I. Only I kept wondering who the girl would be. You see, I'm quite jealous. Jack isn't—or maybe he is, and doesn't show it. I'm very open about it, and the idea of Jack kissing some other girl had me worried for about two months. Then Mr. Ford told Mr. Selznick he needed a girl. "What kind of girl?" "Oh, someone of Shirley Temple's type." "Then why not use Shirley Temple?" Pretty good reasoning, I call it. So when they told me I was going to be the woman in the case, I relaxed. Only the depressing part was, we didn't have a single love scene together, and all that worry was wasted. . .

Now I have to go back once more to the time when my clothes were being fitted for That Hagen Girl over at Warners. One day they'd be fine, next day they'd be tighter here and looser there, and I couldn't understand it. Then I'd start getting dizzy and think, "Ye gods, if I don't sit down or have a glass of water, I'll faint." So presently a light dawned, and I went to the doctor and asked him to phone the minute he was sure, but not to use his name. I remember we were doing a very sad scene when they called me to the phone, and Dr. Bradbury said: "Mrs. Agar, this is the florist. Your roses will be delivered some time next winter. I think it'll be a very fine selection."

WELL! I couldn't phone Jack or Mother for fear of someone overhearing. But I couldn't contain myself either. So I got Mary Lou into the dressing room and told her, and we both went wild. Even out on the set we kept giggling and laughing like a couple of zombies, and how I ever got through that sad scene is still a mystery. The minute they let me go, I tore home and told Jack—just the way the doctor told it to me—about the roses. He strutted around with his chest out, and stuck cushions behind me that I had no use for. Then we went over to Mother's. All she did was look at my face and sit down, smiling and crying all at once.

such goings-on! . . .

But the funniest thing was when I went to tell Mr. Selznick and Mr. O'Shea. "Mr. Selznick," I said, "I'm going to have a baby." He just sat down and grabbed his head, and Mr. O'Shea walked over to the window and looked out, and you'd have thought I was going to commit suicide or something. I couldn't help laughing. "My, you're enthusiastic!" So then they relaxed and thought it was wonderful and wanted to give it to the press, and you never saw such goings-on as at Warners the next day. Nobody said a word, but here comes an easy-chair and there come cushions and glasses of milk and vitamins every five minutes. And London's on the phone, and China's on the phone. I couldn't make China understand a thing. I'm sure they thought I was going to have triplets.

On January 29th, everything happened. Ching had an operation, our parrot got sick, and I started having pains. When Jack came home, I decided to wait till after dinner to tell him, but of course I just blurted it out. "I'm going to the hospital tonight, I think." Which was a sad mistake, because he went all to pieces —took a spoonful of soup and dropped it, got up, sat down, asked me every other second how I felt, till I finally realized something had to be done. "Let's go over to Mother's and play Oklahoma." Well, it was my night. I felt completely calm, and they were so nervous they couldn't keep their minds on the game, so I won and won and won.

At home I phoned the doctor, who said to take one of the sedatives he'd left me, and go to bed. "But suppose I don't wake up in time?" "If it's the real thing," he said, "you'll wake up all right." I must have been sleeping for about an hour, when suddenly I sat bolt upright in bed, clear-headed and awake as possible, and called the doctor again. He came over, and here we sat on the couch, laughing and talking and timing my pains while Jack slept on. Finally Dr. Bradbury said, "Suppose you come to the hospital around two." "But what about Jack?" "Well," he laughed, "you'll just have to wake him up." So I got into my prettiest maternity dress and high-heeled shoes, which I'd been wearing right along against the doctor's orders and everyone's orders, because when you're five-foot-two, you need *some*thing to help. I made coffee and put on my mink coat, and then I woke Jack. He was panicked. "What happened?"

"Nothing happened. We're going to the hospital."

and baby makes three . . .

I was still perfectly clear-headed when we got there, but not for too long. They told me afterward that as soon as the baby was born at 7:15, Dr. Bradbury yelled in my ear, "You have a little girl," and I said, "Is she cute?" That part I don't remember. Everybody in the whole world knew I had a baby except me. I didn't know till eleven, when I finally woke up, and Jack said: "We have a darling little girl."

Then they asked, would I like to see my baby, and brought this little rosebud in. Golly, she was cute! I always wanted a baby with wide-spaced eyes and practically no nose, and that's what she had—plus four chins and very red cheeks and a little red fuzz on her head.

Jack went home to sleep. Mother and Dad had been up all night too, so the whole family was unconscious while I was having the time of my life. Somebody phoned and asked for my nurse, and I said, "This is Shirley," and the girl nearly passed out. From then on I called everybody. It was really silly, because I wasn't all there. I'd talk to people and forget what I wanted to tell them and just drift on. I'd say to the nurse, "Mary, meet so-and-so," when nobody else was in the room. Telegrams came, and I'd hold them way off and couldn't read them, my eyes being out of focus. I was crazy as a loon, and ready to go home right then. I remember Mother telling me about one of her friends who sang out at the top of her lungs in the hospital, "This is the day they give babies away with a half a pound of tea." That's not what I did, but that's what I felt like.

When Jack had thoroughly recovered, he came back. The nurse brought the baby in and said, "Here's your daughter," and laid her in my arm. We just looked at her, and then at each other. You know, a thing like that—you have to realize it over and over again. People would say to Jack, "Congratulations, Daddy," and he'd look all over to see where the daddy was. Same with me. I knew it was true, but suddenly I'd think, "Golly, I had a little baby!"—and the whole thing would sort of sweep over me again. When the nurse said, "Here's your daughter," it swept over us both. . .

Of course there's lots to remember about our first year with Susan. But it sounds to me as though I've remembered enough for once. Besides, I'm a sentimental mother myself now. I like to think of our daughter, not even 12 hours old, lying in my arm between her daddy and me.

I guess it's a pretty good place to stop. . . .

THE END

How Swift's Strained Meats help your baby grow sturdy and strong

Look what baby gets in every luscious serving of Swift's Strained Meats!

High-quality proteins—your baby needs for growth. Actually, baby needs 3 to 4 times more of these proteins, for his size, than you do!

NOTE: Meat proteins are complete, Mother, because they provide all the essential amino acids (body builders). Baby must get all of them at the same time for soundest growth.

Natural B vitamins—vital protective nourishment to guard baby's health and keep his appetite keen!

Food Iron—an essential mineral baby needs to help build good red blood—avoid infant anemia.

Extra-soft and smooth textures make Swift's Strained Meats easy to feed earlier in life. Baby's choice of delicious beef, lamb, pork, veal, liver, heart.

Simply heat and serve. Swift's Strained Meats cost lots less than if you prepared them at home!

YOUR DOCTOR— is best qualified to say how early your baby should start Swift's Strained Meats—ask him.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

All nutritional statements made in this advertisement are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

P.S. (PERFECTLY SUPER) DICED MEATS for—

CRAWLERS (just starting to chew)

"FUSSY" EATERS (to tempt lagging appetites)

MOTHER'S CONVENIENCE (no chopping or cooking—just heat and serve)

Tempting—Thrifty—Time-saving

SWIFT ...foremost name in meats ...first with 100% Meats for Babies

SWIFT & COMPANY, CHICAGO 9, ILLINOIS

"Rapture Pink"
by Westmore
HOLLYWOOD'S VIBRANT
SPRING COLOR

59¢ PLUS TAX

Westmore again creates the beauty color-sensation of the season. It's "Rapture Pink," vibrant with beauty—fresh and radiant as Spring! In lipstick and rouge, with foundation cream and face powder to complement.

"Regardless of Price You Cannot Buy Better"

Westmore Cosmetics

At cosmetic counters everywhere
In U. S. A. and Canada

Colleen Townsend, 20th-Fox starlet, really means business when she brushes!

brush up on tooth care

BY CAROL CARTER, Beauty Editor

■ If you have a great big, gorgeous smile, full of the fun of living and showing fine, healthy teeth, we'll bet you a raisin cooky you've got a waiting list of beaux! It shows that you're good-natured; full of pep and, probably, that you brush your teeth correctly and often. Also that you think of those twice-yearly visits to your dentist's as beauty treatments rather than horror scenes.

Proper tooth-brushing should clean the teeth by raking food particles from between the teeth, and should massage the gums. Let your tooth-brush sweep downward on your upper teeth and upward on your lower teeth in a sort of rolling movement originating in your wrist. Swishing both up and down pushes the bits of food up against the gum line where it is likely to lodge and work mischief. Of course, everybody knows that you might as well not brush them at all if you're going to see-saw cross-wise! The smart thing to do is take your tooth-brush to your dentist and ask him to coach you.. You might also ask your dentist to recommend a dentifrice, although there are so many fine ones on the market you just can't go wrong. Brush your tongue, too, since often bad breath comes from an unbrushed tongue.

Your dentist is sure to suggest the use of dental floss as well as brushing. Using a five or six-inch length of floss, slip it in the space between teeth and draw it back and forth several times. Draw it out sideways to make sure you're making a clean job of it.

Remember, too, your teeth thrive on plenty of fruit and vegetables containing vitamin C. Do drink lots and lots of milk.

If it irks you to have to pay that 20% excise tax on your toilet preparations, write today to your senator or congressman (or both) in Washington, D. C., asking for its repeal. Your druggist or newspaper can give you their names.

CURLY-TOP TODAY

(Continued from page 51)

"Say it all together."

And out, of course, came "Two-two-twain."

"You'll probably say 'locomotive' when you get a little older," was Shirley's wow-line.

On her sets she "gets tired" if she goes alone to her dressing room between scenes. But playing jokes and laughing with the crew keeps her happily charged-up like a battery.

Not long after Shirley and Jack Agar were married, Shirley wanted a gold bracelet watch to match the gold earrings and necklace Jack had given her. One day she wandered inside a Beverly Hills jewelry store, found a beauty and bought it.

"Wrap it as a gift and send it," ordered Shirley on a whim. "And deliver it around 6:30 please," she added. She knew Jack would surely be home then.

When the packet arrived, Shirley opened it, gasped "Oh, you darling!" and gave baffled Jack a big hug and kiss. "Just what I wanted—how did you know?" she bubbled.

"I didn't send you that," blurted Jack. "Maybe your dad did."

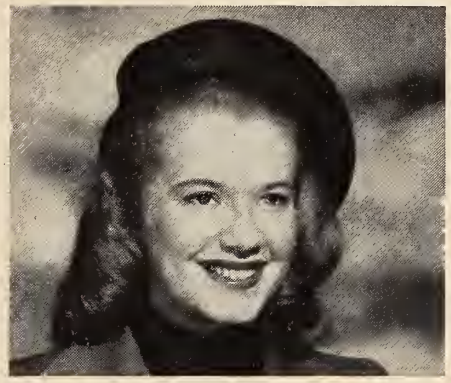
But her father said, "Not guilty." Also her mother, and both brothers. The only answer was an unknown admirer and that, Shirley innocently guessed out loud, was what it was—a gift from a mystery man. She kept Jack on the anxious hook for two months before she exposed the "mystery man" as herself. Jack was so relieved he soon came through with a twisted gold bracelet for her other wrist. She never takes it off (the bracelet, that is) except to wash dishes or bathe Baby Linda.

culinary institute . . .

Mrs. John Agar is far from domestic in a gingham-girl sense, although she knows her way around a kitchen and did handle the Agar family meals when she was an early bride. In her practical way, she enrolled, right after her honeymoon, at the Hillcliff Cooking School on Wilshire Boulevard, where she travelled faithfully twice a week for five weeks. She wore her old Westlake School uniform, flat heels, no jewelry or make-up and, by some miracle, sailed through the course unrecognized, which tickled her thoroughly.

Many Los Angeles families send newly-hired cooks to Hillcliff to sharpen up their table talents. They were Shirley's schoolmates and while she was deep in the intricacies of learning how to make a chocolate roll (her supreme effort and specialty today) it pleased her to pose as a little slavey whose employers were mean to her.

Sometimes she worked up such a tearful tale of downtrodden abuse that she got cluckings of sympathy. "The nerve, picking on a little thing like you, Honey," one of her colleagues flared. Next morning she greeted Shirley triumphantly. "Look—tell 'em off. I've got you a place where I work—second maid—and Thursdays and Sundays off!" At that point, Shirley had to ease up on her play-acting. But nothing pleases her more than to get by as just another girl, instead of Shirley Temple.



But one day, on the way to Hillcliff, she ran across from the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel (where the newlywed Agars stayed 11 days while waiting for their Santa Monica honeymoon house to be ready) to Adrian's to buy Jack's sister a present. She forgot she had on her glamorless Hillcliff getup and—after picking out a bauble at

New York – Gorgeous Pat Barnard always looks "just right." "Noxzema is part of my regular beauty routine," says Pat. "It's certainly helped improve my complexion."

Vancouver—"Noxzema has helped my skin so much," says charming Bette Morphett, "that it's now my regular night cream, hand cream, and powder base."

Montreal –"My skin was so dry and flaky I couldn't use powder," says lovely Pat Heselton. "But since using Noxzema as my powder base, rough, dry skin is no longer a problem."

Washington – Mrs. Betty Bridges first used Noxzema for sunburn. Now it's her all-purpose cream. "I use it every night to help keep my skin looking smooth, free from blemishes."

Do you know their startling

NEW BEAUTY SECRET?

If You Have Some Little Thing Wrong With Your Skin—Read On!

● Recently we've been calling on scores of women asking about their beauty problems. Here are the views of four typical women who are using a new idea in beauty—Medicated Skin Care.

New Beauty Routine

Now there is a simple home treatment developed by a doctor. 181 women from all walks of life took part in a skin improvement test supervised by 3 noted skin specialists. Each woman had some little thing wrong with her skin.

Based On Scientific Testing

Each woman followed faithfully Noxzema's new 4-Step Medicated Beauty Routine developed by a skin specialist. At 7-day intervals, their skin was examined through a magnifying lens. Here are the astonishing results: Of all these women, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in just two weeks!

If you want an aid to a lovelier-looking skin, if you suffer from rough, dry skin, externally-caused blemishes, chapping or other similar skin troubles—get acquainted with this startling new beauty secret now.

4-Step Beauty Routine!

1. Morning—bathe face with warm water, apply Noxzema with a wet cloth and "cream-wash" your face.
2. Apply Noxzema as a powder base.
3. Before retiring, repeat morning cleansing.
4. Massage Noxzema lightly into your face . . . a little extra over blemishes.

Used By Millions

Try it. Start using Noxzema regularly, morning and night. See why over 25,000,000 jars are sold yearly. See if you aren't amazed at the astonishing way it can help your skin. At all drug and cosmetic counters, 40¢ 60¢, $1.00 plus tax.

There is a GOLDEN GLINT Rinse for BOTH!

GOLDEN GLINT RINSE gives the finishing touch to your shampoo. Whether you want added brightness to glorify your natural hair color . . . or whether you merely want cleaner, more lustrous hair without added color, there is a Golden Glint Rinse for you.

Golden Glint Lustre Rinse (colorless) dissolves dulling soap and hard-water film instantly. Tangles and snarls vanish. The natural color and lustre of your hair is revealed in all its glory, and your hair is so responsive to your comb that setting it is no problem.

Each of the eleven other shades matches a natural hair color, adding just a whisper of true color for a tiny tint highlight. Whether your hair is raven black, platinum blonde or any shade between, there is a RIGHT shade of Golden Glint Rinse for you. The color shampoos out, but will not rub off.

SIMPLE, EASY TO USE

A Golden Glint Rinse after your permanent leaves the curls tight, but the dull lifelessness of your wave is gone. Even hair that changes color an inch or so from the scalp can be naturally blended with a color rinse.

So simple, so easy, so economical to use, Golden Glint should be a regular part of your shampoo. Buy a package today. Try it tonight. A single rinse will show you why America's loveliest women have bought over 60 million packages.

5 RINSES, 25¢ – 2 RINSES, 10¢

SEE COLOR CHART AT COSMETIC COUNTERS IN DRUG OR DIME STORES

the jewelry counter—gasped hurriedly, "Charge it, please," and started to speed away. The salesgirl placed her arms on her hips and grated, "Are you kidding? Charge it! Why you couldn't pay for that in ten years!"

She had a little trouble and lost some precious time proving who she really was.

Shirley was a credit to dear old Hillcliff for three months after her "graduation," until she found herself too busy making The Bachelor and the Bobby-Soxer. By the time she'd cooked, cleaned up the place and washed the dishes, she didn't have time to visit with Jack. That was when—and why—the housekeeper joined the household, but Mrs. Agar still abides by her cooking-school tenets. She still makes out the daily market list for Jack to pick up, compiled according to the text's chapter, "Ordering—Food For Two." (The other day she jotted down "one pound tomatoes," just as it said, and Jack came home with one large one. She never dreamed the things weighed that much.)

Jack Agar's picky about his food, whereas Shirley is still Plain Jane, gastronomically speaking. Her favorite fare is still lamb chops, chicken, peas, baked potatoes, greens—the same simple diet she grew up on. But since exposure to Jack, Shirley's also learned to like highly-seasoned dishes, rare meats and salad dressings heavy with garlic and herbs.

For her part, Shirley has influenced a number of Jack's habits—particularly in the sleep department. Agar was strictly a 10-o'clock-curfew boy before he married Shirley. Now he finds himself staying up all hours to keep her company. Shirley takes after her mother, who seldoms gives up her reading or knitting before 3 A.M. Shirley reads (a new novel, or perhaps that medical book she discovered at Westlake that still fascinates her); or sometimes knits (she's still struggling on an afghan she started for Linda Susan and says now "it'll have to be for my next baby"); or listens to symphony records—but whatever the excuse, she's a confirmed night-owl, and more than six-hours' sleep makes her feel slow and draggy. Shirley's health ticks along steadily as ever, unmarred by illness. When the epidemic "Virus-X" laid her low on the Mr. Belvedere set recently, it was her first bed-sickness since early girlhood's measles.

evenings at home . . .

Being a stubborn stayer-upper (Jack's nightly complaint is, "When are you coming to bed!") doesn't mean that Shirley's a playgirl. She just likes to stay awake. However, both Jack and Shirley like to go out dancing, especially at that perennial movietown favorite, the Cocoanut Grove, although they take in Ciro's and Mocambo, too, occasionally. She doesn't like to samba; her favorite step's a slow fox-trot and the dreamier the music the better.

Most of Shirley's and Jack's fun evenings are spent at home, usually playing bridge or a minor-league brand of "the game." They're good at bridge, with sessions sometimes far into the night, but not long ago when they trotted over to boss David Selznick's for an evening of "the game" they were badly outclassed by his more sophisticated charade set.

Shirley sticks pretty much to a group of 20 or 30 old childhood friends and former Westlake school chums, augmented by Jack's own school set and his service pals. None are actors, professionals or Hollywood "names." Shirley and Jack get around to Hollywood parties, though, where Shirley can be gay, if she's in the mood. One night not long ago she started out jitterbugging with Van Johnson and wound up beating out fancy riffs on the drums. And at a recent dinner party which Elliott Nugent—her director—gave with Clifton Webb and Jimmy Cagney on hand, she started out doing a Pavlova ballet with the boys and wound up in a mile-a-minute soft-shoe routine when Jimmy Cagney (an expert tapper) grabbed her and whirled her away. "Wow!" panted Shirley when they finished. "You had me doing steps I never saw or heard of before!"

Shirley never took to piano lessons as a girl (which she now regrets)—but she did get fairly sharp on her vibraphone and drums. She let her singing and dancing go with the kiddie years too, although she's planning on taking lessons in both anew, for she thinks she might be needing them again on the screen.

Jack and Shirley and "Su-Su" or "Cheeks" (as they're prone to call Linda Susan), live with the baby's nurse, the housekeeper, a collie named Sir Lancelot of Brentwood (he gets just "Lanny"), and two chattery parakeets named "April" and "Angel," in an English cottage near her parents' home. It was built in 1940 to serve Shirley as a party place to bring her friends and have her fun at home. It had a stage then in the big front room and a movie projection booth too, as well as a soda fountain and a huge niche to display Shirley's amazing doll collection. But it was always a separate building, with its own drive, and masked from the big house by high shrubbery.

a doll's house . . .

The Agars moved there after three months in a rented honeymoon bungalow on Santa Monica's San Vicente Boulevard, a place Shirley still thinks so "darling" that she occasionally strolls over and visits it to sit and sigh. She keeps a honeymoon-house scrapbook picturing every nook and corner, which she loves to leaf through. The ex-party house suffered a major remodeling before they moved in. The stage vanished and the soda fountain moved downstairs, as did the dolls—all 1500 of which get vacuumed regularly twice a year by Shirley herself.

What was left is one of the biggest living rooms in the movie colony—and "living room" is right. Besides the huge recessed fireplace, before which are placed an extra-long sofa and quilted chairs, it contains a "den," a "music room," and a "breakfast room"—all very real and separate rooms to Mrs. Agar's vivid imagination, but actually just corners where furniture and usage suggest the impressive titles.

A short butler's pantry connects the living room with a regulation kitchen. Jack and Shirley's bedroom and bath and Linda's nursery—the only room that was enlarged—snugly complete the house.

Linda Susan was one year old last January 30th—the day before her dad's birthday—and had her first party. She weighed 23 pounds then, was wolfing meat and potatoes and ice cream, crawling like a demon, starting to toddle and pulling everything within reach. She could say "my mama," "daddy," "bye-bye," "bow-wow," "baby," and "love"—"love" being recognizable if you started imagining from "la-la"; she patty-caked expertly, and had already indicated last Christmas that she knew what it was all about with delighted screams which clearly demanded "more presents!" Christmas Eve, a friend of Shirley's dropped in and asked, in Su-Su's presence, what Santa Claus had for her. "A h-o-b-b-y h-o-r-s-e," spelled out Shirley.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the girl, "why are you doing that?"

"She's a very advanced child," explained Shirley soberly.

Su-Su's a stand-offish, dignified, appraising baby, slow to make friends. She's almost a true combo of Shirley and Jack for looks. She's fascinated with diamonds, which are Shirley's birthstones, not hers. Shirley has no mama-dream plans for Linda beyond the Sunshine Pre-School in Westwood and then the Brentwood Town and Country Day School nearby. At the suggestion that Linda follow in her career footsteps she shrugs, "Maybe, maybe not." But there's already been a strong hint: Linda loves cameras, loves having her picture taken.

Three careers in the Agar household might be a crowd, but two—Jack Agar's and Shirley Temple's—pose no problems at all. On the contrary, Jack's eagerness in tackling a camera career has infected Shirley with a new ambition herself. Until Jack turned actor (his own decision, not influenced by Shirley, and at the insistence of David Selznick) Shirley'd become so used to being a movie star she had almost taken it for granted. "It had been my life," as she puts it. In her teens, her work became a sort of amusement or hobby. Now she's dead serious again and plotting and planning the best moves for her own career. Jack's is strictly his business.

severest critics . . .

They don't even let each other read the scripts they're considering. If one asks for criticism of a picture job, though, the other gives out, with no punches pulled. In Jack's first picture with Shirley, Fort Apache, he asked her advice several times about how some scenes should be played, and she told him what she thought. Invariably, the next day John Ford would tell him just the opposite. "I was just getting him all mixed up," says Shirley, "so I stopped."

It's pretty hard to ruffle her sunny nature, but one sure-fire touch-off to Shirley's temper is to refer, even jokingly, to her husband Jack as "Mister Temple." At Ciro's one recent evening, an acquaintance of theirs, also married to a screen star, called himself by his wife's name and called Jack "Mister Temple" too. To make matters worse, a newspaperman was sitting at the next table and heard it. Shirley stretched a broad smile and said, "I don't think you'd better say that." Because she smiled, the joker thought she was enjoying it and kept it up. Things almost exploded. What he didn't know was that, like her brother George, Shirley always smiles when she's really mad—the madder she gets, the broader, grimmer and more fixed the grin gets. Her brother does the same thing when he's wrestling someone.

Shirley Temple has faced up intelligently to the pretty intricate problem of being a world legend, dream princess, and busy star while also being the wife, sweetheart, helpmate and companion of a novice actor. She knows her prime job is being Mrs. Agar and Linda Susan's mom. She keeps herself sympathetic to Jack's tastes and pleasures, keys in with his dreams and desires. He's a golf enthusiast, and although Shirley's taken lessons, she just can't make it around even nine holes in much less than a hundred. But she keeps trying and encourages Jack to spend his off studio hours on the links, because she knows he's the nervous type who has to have plenty of exercise to work off steam. They often putt out a game of peewee golf together on a miniature course on Pico Boulevard. (On a recent holiday to Ojai, Shirley came in third in a putting contest. "Three contestants," she explains.)

Her return to make Mr. Belvedere on the Fox lot was a big event in Shirley Temple's life. She'd refused to go back before, even for lunch, because she thought

LITTLE LULU

"Don't be a public pest—use Kleenex!"*

Little Lulu says: Block that sneeze and those germs with soft, strong Kleenex Tissues to help keep colds from spreading. Be considerate in another way, too. Don't just "drop the Kleenex"—use that waste basket!

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Just the thing to ADD fresh COLOR and LUSTRE to your hair after a shampoo or home permanent

For you who do your hair at home, Lovalon is a must. It rinses gorgeous fresh color into your hair. Gives hair sparkling highlights, leaving it attractive, soft and manageable. Blends in yellow, grey streaks. Lovalon comes in 12 flattering shades . . . has none of the disadvantages of a dye . . . washes out with each shampoo. 10¢ and 25¢ at toilet goods counters everywhere. Try Lovalon—today.

LOVALON

—the Hair Beauty Rinse

millions of women have learned to trust Tampax

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

Only a short time ago, who would have thought it possible that millions, actually millions, would soon be using a product as downright revolutionary as Tampax in the field of monthly sanitary protection for women?... Here is a complete reversal of the traditional practice. The traditional form is external; Tampax is internal. The traditional requires belts and pins; Tampax requires no support. The ratio of bulk is: traditional 9, Tampax 1.

The success of Tampax is based upon other facts as well....You can wear it in your tub or shower — or in swimming. Being worn internally, it can cause no bulge or ridge under clothing. Insertion is quick and easy, by means of neat applicators (your hands needn't touch the Tampax). No odor, no chafing, no disposal difficulties....

Doctor-invented, Tampax is made of pure surgical cotton. A whole average month's supply will slip easily into purse. At drug and notion counters in 3 absorbencies. Compare the price of Tampax now with other forms....Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

it would make her sad to be no longer a part of the studio in which she spent so much of her girlhood. She still thinks it's the most beautiful lot in Hollywood, still goes in by the old "Kentucky" gate on Santa Monica Boulevard, as she used to, although it's a longer way for her. Her first trip in, she marvelled that the hill which had seemed like a mountain grade to her as a kid, now is only a mild slope. "I'd have made a picture at Fox for nothing," Shirley says, "just to bring back those memories."

First day on the lot she asked to be left alone, and wandered in a memory mist to all the familiar corners—her old bungalow, now transformed into a dental office ("That just kills me!" wails Shirley); the school where she learned her readin' and writin'; the little park where Ching, her Peke, used to romp. She popped unannounced into the offices of her former producers, directors and song writers still around Zanuckland—in to Sam Engel's (he wrote Stowaway), in to Mack Gordon's (he wrote so many of her hit ditties in the old days). Mack trotted out his piano and they sang "Good Ship Lollipop" and such Temple hits together—and wound up all dewey-eyed and drippy.

But Shirley Temple isn't looking backward at this point, even if her sentimental heart tugs her that way, to the golden years when she was Crown Princess of all Hollywood and the wonder girl of the wide world. Instead of sighing for past glories, she's planning new ones as she turns 21 on this very big birthday.

She's sizing herself up, professionally as well as personally, and making plans for the new screen career that faces her—a career which, she's resolved, will match the old one in achievement and success. She thinks comedy is her best bet and perhaps, later on, some gay song-and-dance parts. She's dying to do Coquette, which brought Mary Pickford, another ex-Hollywood child star, grown-up greatness and the 1929 Academy Oscar. Shirley has five scripts she's looking over carefully right now—all stories she uncovered herself. One in particular, she's simply crazy to make. She won't tell what it is—yet—but, "when I get it all settled I'm going to take it over to the studio," she says, "and they'd just better let me do it, too!"

When Shirley Temple makes a statement like that today, she eyes the baby Oscar she won back in 1935 with a determined gleam.

"I'm after its daddy now," she says.

THE END

THIS LOVE OF OURS

(Continued from page 57)

spectacular. Like the time in New Haven, when he came right to the theater from the airport. He took a bouquet of roses from a bewildered usher and carried them down the aisle himself, hiding his face in the foliage. Approaching in a stealthy stoop so I wouldn't recognize that 6-foot-5 frame of his, he came right up on the stage and suddenly peered from behind the flowers. I was scared into a weak shriek. All I managed to say to the startled audience was a foolish, "This is my husband!"

I used to boast that Ben and I had never had a quarrel. But people would look at me in such frank disbelief that I stopped mentioning this phenomenon. Here and now, however, I stubbornly repeat: We never have.

For one thing, Ben just won't fight. Not that he's namby-pamby, but his gentle understanding or his ever-ready sense of humor always finds a better solution.

Our story is an old familiar one to many happily married couples. From that first meeting, no one else seemed to matter. Ben was in service and I didn't see him often. But I lived for the times when I did. Then he was discharged—and the very next day we were married.

For a honeymoon, there was a wonderful week in Mexico. . . . We have a special hold on the spell of our honeymoon. We've built a tiny hacienda on our favorite hilltop in Acapulco, overlooking the breathtaking beauty of the bay. Whenever we can, we go back for occasional memory-stirring weekends. . . .

Being in love on a Mexican hilltop would be a breeze for anyone. Being in love every day on a down-to-earth homemaking basis is the real test. In Hollywood, home for us is a small house on the Santa Monica palisades, high above the ocean—a small house, but with a big heart, for we've put a great deal of sentiment into its planning and fixing. We were our own decorators. I made the curtains, Ben did much of the carpentry. He even helped build our tiny swimming pool.

Ben thinks I'm a good cook, and I like to cook. So I get dinner every night that we're home, and this is the nicest part of our day. It's fun to have him hanging around the stove, tasting and joking and reviewing current doings. We always have a dozen projects under way, ranging from painting the bathroom to going into the construction business, as we did recently in partnership with my brother, David. Besides having his radio assignments, Ben is my business manager, so of course there are always a millon topics of conversation. After dinner in the dinette, we drink our coffee in the soft glow of the living room fire. . . .

We rarely go to big parties. Social functions for us are usually family gatherings of the Gage and Williams growing clans. Even so, feeding 20 or 30 grown-ups and youngsters in a dinette and living room is quite a trick!

Ben and I have wonderful examples of enduring love affairs in both of our families. Dad and mother have been married 44 years—and I know they've been in love every minute. Ben has the same easy-going, kindly temperament as my father. And as for me—well, Mother always insists that when the Lord decided to send the Williams their fifth child, Esther, He must have said to Himself, "This one's just for laughs." I do think I can say I've always been blessed with a sense of humor.

Now that we expect our first baby in August, we feel that we're two of the luckiest people in the world. We're certainly the happiest, and we expect to keep on being so for as long as we live. Whatever the years bring, we'll always be rich in companionship and love . . . And who can ask for more?

THE END

The screen story of Esther Williams' latest movie, Take Me Out to the Ball Game, is a bright feature in the April issue of Screen Stories — another fine Dell magazine.

I DON'T BLAME RITA

(Continued from page 69)

I have not interfered with my daughter's life or given her advice since she signed her first studio contract and changed her name from Margarita Cansino to Rita Hayworth. She was barely 18 then. Before that I cared for her, raised her, taught her all I knew, guided and groomed her for a career. I gave her her first dancing lesson at four. At 16 she was my professional partner. I helped arrange her first screen part, coached and advised her. But when I realized she was grown up and ready to lead her own life, I left that life to her—professional and private. I know she is capable of living it wisely and worthily. I have never worried a minute about her.

I do not know Prince Aly Khan. I know only what everyone knows—that he is a wealthy, distinguished man who is in love with my daughter and wants to marry her. I am proud of that—but I would be just as proud and just as pleased if it were anyone else worthy of her.

What happens to Rita does not affect my life, because I am happily absorbed in what I am doing—teaching Spanish dancing, which is my family tradition, to the American people. As long as I can, I will. So whatever fortune comes Rita's way has nothing to do with me—or with her family, her uncles, aunts, brothers, cousins.

But I know I speak for all the Cansinos when I say whoever wins Rita's heart wins ours, too. She has our blessing.

There are some who are writing and saying unkind things about Rita, her fiancé and their engagement. I think that is narrow-minded and un-American. But I shrug. In America we are free. Isn't Rita free to fall in love with whom she likes, marry whom she loves? She is an American, too.

rita's heritage . . .

And in her veins, also runs the blood of Spain. On her mother's side, Rita's ancestry is Irish-English, but on mine it's all pure Spanish. The Cansinos are from Seville, where I was born, and the people there are a gay, carefree folk who love just being alive. There in the south of Spain, the people are inclined to think with their hearts instead of their heads. And Seville is the city in Spain which breeds artists of all sorts—dancers, toreadors, opera singers. It is Spain's town of talent, emotion and joy of living—and all of that is Rita's heritage.

We Spaniards are inclined to let life flow through us instead of fighting its current. We do not try to run another's life in affairs of the heart, such as love and marriage, which we deeply respect.

Whenever any member of my family—and that goes for Rita too—has fallen in love with someone, our hearts are gay and we ask only,

"Do you love him?"

"Yes."

"Ah—that is good. That is as it should be." And though perhaps we don't say it, what we believe thoroughly is, "That is your fortune—and your affair."

Rita's life has led her to a Mohammedan prince of India, and Rita is a grown woman. She is past 30 and she has been married twice before. She is no silly girl. She has been a celebrity and a screen star for over a dozen years. That, of course, is why there is so much fuss being made over what is her own private affair. But that is the penalty of fame. Rita knows that. I don't say she likes it,

Flame-Glo FOR MAGNETIC Lips—

There's a hidden beauty in every woman's lips... let Flame-Glo light that spark of magnetic allure in yours! Once you try it you'll know why so many stage and screen stars, models and society women choose Flame-Glo for extra glamour, extra beauty... NO smudges, smears or blurry edges ever! Protected by a water repellent beauty film, Flame-Glo stays lovely for hours longer! Whatever your coloring, there's a Flame-Glo shade just for you among the dozen exciting fashion tones. There's no finer lipstick at any price!

NEW 49¢ SIZE
IN GOLD FINISH SWIVEL CASE

FRANCES RAFFERTY,
starring in
"An Old Fashioned Girl"
an Equity Production released thru
Eagle Lion Films

KEEP KISSABLE WITH Flame-Glo LIPSTICK
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

POPULAR 25¢ SIZE
IN METAL CASE

now with FASTENOL for longer-lasting color brilliance

THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE FLAME-GLO AT ALL POPULAR-PRICE COSMETIC COUNTERS says IRENE KULBACK, lovely PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS stewardess

PAA

Irene really gets around, in Pan American's big transoceanic Clippers—but, anywhere in the world, she finds the few minutes needed for her regular streamlined shampoo with GLO-VER. No other shampoo can do more for your hair—for that natural-looking hair-beauty! Contains mild, efficient cleansing agents, made from fine blended vegetable oils. Rinses out instantly—no trace of unsightly film. Removes loose dandruff, cleanses scalp. Ask for the regular size package at Drug or Cosmetic Counters —or mail Coupon for free Sampler.

GLO-VER
Beauty Shampoo

FREE TRIAL APPLICATION

Be Glover-wise . . . glamorize with GLO-VER Beauty Shampoo, Glover's Mange Medicine, Glover's Hair Dress! One complete application of each in hermetically-sealed bottles—all 3 in free Sampler Package not sold in stores. Mail Coupon today.

Glover's, Dept. 854
101 West 31st St., New York 1, N. Y.

Send free Sampler Package in plain wrapper by return mail—GLO-VER Shampoo, Glover's Mange Medicine and Hair Dress, in 3 hermetically-sealed bottles, with free booklet. I enclose 10¢ to cover cost of packaging and postage.

Name.....
(PLEASE PRINT PLAINLY)
Address.....

but what people say over the radio and print in the newspapers is not going to change her mind for a minute.

She knows what she is doing. Her real nature is quiet, plain, and unaffected. She would do nothing that is wrong—that I also know.

The prince she loves, I understand, may someday be the spiritual leader of twelve million people. He is the son of one of the world's wealthiest men and he is of royal blood. But I know Rita loves him for himself, because that is Rita's way. She is not bedazzled by glamor, wealth, or position. After all, she has had a good helping of those herself. I am proud that she is true to herself and to what her heart tells her. And I'm proud she has the courage to live her life to the full and wherever it leads her. She would not be a Cansino if she did not.

farewell party . . .

Her grandfather—my father, Antonio—was 84 when he decided to revisit his native Seville not long ago. "But, Padre," we protested, "should you make this trip alone, at your age?" He gave us a scornful glance and soon we were seeing him off at the airport. He would have flown the Atlantic, too, as he'd planned, only the officials found out his age and stopped him. He can still dance a jota as sprightly as any Cansino can. Rita gave him a wonderful farewell party at her house for all our family, the day the old man left. And recently she brought her fiance, Prince Aly, down to Seville, and Rita and her grandfather danced the sevillanas together like a couple of youngsters. That's the kind of mettle and vitality Rita Hayworth has in her veins. I have never been afraid for her.

In this Hollywood world, people concern themselves with so many things that are the stars' personal affairs—not theirs. With the matter of religion, for instance. Prince Aly is a Mohammedan by faith. Rita was raised a Catholic. I do not expect her to become a disciple of Mohammed, although her future husband, if and when she marries him, is said to be a direct descendant of Fatima, the Prophet's daughter. But, one's religion is, again, one's own private concern.

Rita has been thundered at for her spotlighted romance with Prince Aly. But it is not her wish that it be spotlighted; neither she nor the prince has made a dramatic show nor sought publicity. It is their burden that they are both famous people whose every move is news. And another thing: all over America—and everywhere else, too—men and women fall in love who are not legally divorced, as the Prince finds himself. But he has lived apart from his wife for three years and his divorce has long been in the process of being arranged. Since when is true love a crime? Nor does the fact that Rita took my granddaughter, Rebecca, to Europe with her, seem odd or unnatural to me. On the contrary.

When Rita told me she was taking Rebecca back with her, I said, "Good!" I knew that she would be a long time abroad, that she had plans to marry. Rita is a good mother and devoted to her baby, and to me it is a wholesome sign that she wants her daughter with her to share her new life.

Rita has also been censured for leaving Hollywood when her studio wanted her to begin a picture. To my mind, no picture is worth pitting against love and happiness. As for her right to a long holiday—Rita has been working hard ever since she was 10 years old, off and on.

I know how very hard she worked before her first European vacation, because I'd been working with her in The Loves of Carmen. I'm inclined to agree with Orson Welles, her ex-husband, whom I still like and with whom I am still friendly, that having worked steadily and hard for as long as Rita has, she deserves some fun.

But I know there is a question here—a question all of the millions who love to see Rita Hayworth on the screen would like to have answered:

If and when Rita becomes an Indian princess, does that mean her career is ended—that she will never make another picture?

I don't know the definite answer to that. But I can guess—and my guess is: No.

Entertaining is in Rita's blood, and with professional people like the Cansinos, it's something impossible to eradicate or forget. Recently I visited New York and saw my niece, Carmenita, dance on the stage of the Winter Garden. I danced on that same stage in 1917 and as I watched, I had to grip the arms of my seat tightly to keep from running up there and joining her. I love my work, and as long as I live—I know—I will be a dancer, wrapped up in helping other people learn grace and rhythm, the oldest art form and expression known to the human race. Acting is Rita's love, and Rita Hayworth is my daughter.

I know she will have to return to Hollywood to attend to business and legal matters some time soon, probably before Prince Aly Khan is free to make her his wife. Of course, if the marriage is arranged, that will be first in her thoughts, as it should be. Of course, she will have no time for a picture then. But later—well—none of the Cansinos yet who has had a taste of show business has ever deserted it. My belief is that Rita, too, cannot, no matter whom she marries, or how her life changes.

But whatever she does, and whatever the future holds for her, I know I shall always want Rita to live her life to the fullest, as everyone should. And I know that if she is a princess, a star, or just another Cansino dancing her way through life, I shall always be immensely proud that I am the father of Margarita.

THE END

that's hollywood!

At Le Directoire, Abe Burrows is telling audiences: "I like the Babes In Arms type of movie. You know, where a group of youngsters befriend an old man who owns a restaurant where they all hang out. One day the kids discover the old man is about to lose his restaurant. They try to think of ways to save him. One of them finally says: 'I have it—let's put on a show.' At that moment, who should be passing by but Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Alan Ladd, Ray Milland, Sonny Tufts, Paulette Goddard, Gary Cooper and Theda Bara. The kids beg these stars to help them out and they finally agree to do it after a heart-warming appeal from one little kid whose father is president of their studio."

Irving Hoffman
Hollywood Reporter

NO LOVE LOST

(Continued from page 61)

gossip item to two girls with whom he wasn't in love and hadn't said he was?

"Suppose that silly report were true," he said to the first friend who called him up. "Then I might propose to both girls and get turned down—how would that be? It happened to me once a long time ago, but the girl had sense enough to know neither of us meant the little stories we were telling each other. Anyhow, I haven't gone out on a limb since."

All this worried Farley for several weeks—though it needn't have, for the two girls involved told him they realized that things like this happen every day.

And so they do. When you're 24 and no less a person than Louella Parsons broadcasts to some ten million people that you are her personal choice as the discovery of the year, and then on top of that you're a bachelor—brother, look out!

This is why Farley Granger decided to jump the gun. He was going to fire a barrage of information before he could see the whites of a regiment of eager reporters' eyes. In one swoop he was going to set the public straight, via MODERN SCREEN, on "the women in his life."

Farley got off to a flying start on this laudable project by bringing up the name of a girl with whom his name has never been linked.

"I guess it's safe to talk about it now," Farley said, "because she's happily married and has a husband who's a good friend of mine—as she still is too.

constant friend . . .

"Back when I was going on 18, I had a crush on Jane Withers. She's really a wonderful girl, and we were thrown together when we worked in North Star. Movie business was new to me then and I had a boyish pash for Jane.

"We had a whale of a time away from the set, too. Went dancing at the Palladium to the tunes of Tommy Dorsey and the other big bands. We had so much to do, it seemed, that we never did get around to holding hands seriously—but Jane became one of my most constant friends, particularly when I went into the service."

Now, how about June Haver? Back in 1943, at the time when Farley began to graduate out of the great unknown status, columnists made note of their dating.

Farley met June while he was doing The Purple Heart, just before he became a Navy man, and the truth is that but for several quirks of fate he and June might have become much more important in each other's lives than they really were.

"Any single male who met June at that time and didn't go a little crazy over her had to be out of his mind. I remember that I owned a beaten-up old Willys at the time. June lived in a white Colonial house just a few blocks from 20th Century with her mother and sister. We used to spend a lot of time over there, raiding the ice box and delving into music.

"Anyway, to get back to the Willys. It worried me. June was becoming quite an important young lady and I didn't think it was quite right that she should be hauled around in a junk heap.

"One night we went to a première. I didn't have the nerve to drive up in front of the Cathay Circle theater and leave my car with an attendant, so we located a parking lot a block away. When we came out of the theater the loudspeaker system was booming away: 'Calling Mr. Zanuck's car . . . Calling Miss Crawford's

How a wife's false modesty can wreck Married Happiness!

If only she'd learn here scientific truth she can trust about these INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS!

Often a young wife is too timid or shy to learn these intimate physical facts. And because of this her husband may become sulky and resentful. She feels her marriage is breaking up—heading for divorce. Yet she finds herself helpless.

It's this pitiful young woman who definitely needs to be instructed on how important vaginal douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and married happiness—to combat one of woman's most offensive deodorant problems. And what's EVEN MORE IMPORTANT—why she should always use ZONITE in her douche.

She should learn: NO OTHER TYPE LIQUID ANTISEPTIC-GERMICIDE OF ALL THOSE TESTED FOR THE DOUCHE IS SO POWERFUL YET SO SAFE TO TISSUES AS ZONITE!

Developed By World-Famous Surgeon and Scientist

What better assurance could you want than to know that a famous Surgeon and Scientist developed the ZONITE principle—the first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world with such a powerful germ-killing and deodorizing action yet ABSOLUTELY SAFE to delicate tissue lining. ZONITE is positively non-poisonous, non-irritating. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury.

A Modern Miracle

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective—it kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can FEEL CONFIDENT that ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Scientific douching instructions come with every bottle. Any drugstore.

Zonite
FOR NEWER feminine hygiene

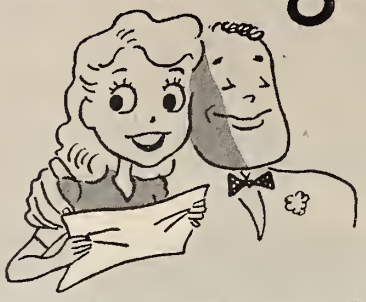
FREE! NEW!



For amazing enlightening NEW Booklet containing frank discussion of intimate physical facts, recently published—mail this coupon to Zonite Products, Dept. MR-49, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

so strong!

SITROUX TISSUES
soft . . .
absorbent
NOW FINER THAN EVER
. . . say
SIT-TRUE

To Tampon Users...

Tibs*

is the Tampon with Rounded Ends

the only Tampon "Quilted" for Comfort

"Quilted" for Safety

Tibs

Next time try (internal sanitary protection)

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

car . . . Calling Mr. Power's car . . . Calling Mr. Powell's car.' We inched our way through the crowd to old Willy. I stepped on the starter. She shuddered—the car, not Junie—and we were off. But we were caught in the traffic that was channeled by policemen right past the front of the theater—at which point, Willy took a deep breath, coughed loudly twice and quit cold—squarely in front of all Hollywood and 5,000 movie fans!

"It was a great place to make a personal appearance. While hundreds of people yelled advice, June took the wheel. I got out behind and pushed, mortified no end, while a chant rose up: 'Calling Farley Granger's car . . . Calling June Haver's car.' Suddenly I realized that this was fun, and how many friends we both had. As for June, she exclaimed as Willy finally woke up and sputtered away, 'Don't ever get rid of this car. It's priceless! How else could anyone get so famous in one night?'"

What would have happened between Jane Withers and Farley, or between June Haver and Farley, had the war not interfered, is a matter of conjecture. While he was stationed in Hawaii, Farley discovered that even though Hollywood was as remote as Tibet, he knew everything that was going on—or thought he did. "I'd seen a lot of items in the papers people sent me about who went with whom and how soon they were going to get married. Then, all of a sudden, I'd get news that they'd married somebody else. It occurred to me then, that reporters aren't too inaccurate. It's just that when people in Hollywood get ready for the big step, they usually throw out a smoke screen. It must be murder to be a Hollywood reporter."

janie gets married . . .

If Farley had been really serious about Janie or Junie, it would have been murder for him. One night when he'd just settled down in his bunk to sleep he was awakened by a buddy.

"Hey, Granger—you're wanted on the phone. New York calling."

"Funny fellow," Farley muttered. "Drop dead."

"I said New York is calling. Get up."

Farley staggered to the pay phone at the end of the hall. Sure enough, New York was calling, a minor miracle which could happen now that the war was falling apart.

"This is Janie," a voice said. "Farley, I've got wonderful news. I'm going to be married!"

"MARRIED?"

"Uh-huh. You know him. I'm engaged to Bill Moss. I wanted to talk to you anyway, and I didn't want you to read about it first in the papers."

"That's swell," Farley said, and meant it. "Congratulations!" He didn't see the gang of guys hanging around, soaking up his end of the conversation. When he hung up, they let him have it.

"Oh-ho," they whooped. "Great big actor loses girl friend. . . . Gonna go to the wedding? . . . Here comes the bride!"

"The guys got a big kick out of it, but fortunately they didn't know who I'd been talking to. They didn't know that Jane and I were just close pals, and it made all of them who were worrying about their best girls feel better. Pretty soon, somebody got hold of a newspaper clipping predicting that June Haver, who 'had been dating Farley Granger,' was also getting married. They razzed me about that, and because I was so nonchalant about it the guys figured I was suffering, deep down inside. When I tried to tell my buddy I wasn't in love with June, he growled, 'Don't try to fool me. Why, if you aren't in love with a girl

"SPECIALISTS FOR LITTLE FEET"

Sizes 1 to 5 only

Send for our CATALOG D illustrating large variety of styles you can order by mail!

Cinderella of Boston

59 TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON 11, MASS.

Foot Relief

Instant-Acting, Soothing, Cushioning Foot Plaster

To instantly relieve painful corns, sore toes, callouses, bunions, tender spots, burning on bottom of feet—use Dr. Scholl's Kurotex. You cut this soothing, cushioning, flesh color, superior moleskin to any size or shape. At Drug, Shoe, Department and 10¢ stores.

Dr Scholl's KUROTEX

Relieve Misery of ITCH

Relieve itching caused by eczema, athlete's foot, pimples—other itching troubles. Use cooling, medicated D.D.D. Prescription. Greaseless, stainless. Quiets itching fast. 35c trial bottle proves it—or money back. Ask your druggist for D.D.D. Prescription.

WANTED

all beauty-conscious women to rush to leading Five & Ten Cent Stores' Cosmetic Counters today! Why? To get the sensationally new, purse-size Blue Cross Cuticle Shaper. Only 25c! Nothing ever like it! It's filled with rich, creamy lanolized cuticle remover that instantly dissolves dead, cracked, ragged hangnails. No cutting. No soaking. Just a drop of this lanolized miracle liquid on each fingernail (toenails, too!), then gently work off all ugly skin tissue. Used exclusively by professional beauticians for 12 years. Never sold at retail before. Big refills, too, only 25c. At Five & Ten Cent Stores. Or send 30c (stamps) to Vonett Sales Co., Dept. 8, 645 N. Martel Ave., Hollywood 36, Calif.

hey! no fooling!
the may issue of modern screen has alan ladd
on the cover.
on sale
april 8

like June Haver, you must be an idiot.'"

So Farley went out to the beach and sat there, looking toward Hollywood. He figured out that maybe he'd been a little in love with Janie, and with Junie too, even if not all the way. And when you're so far away from home in a sailor suit, people you know getting married is a little sad, at that. "From then on," he remembers, "I put on a better performance for the boys."

When the war was over, the uninvolved Mr. Farley Granger became involved again. "But please," he begged, "let's not add this up to the assumption that I'm losing all my best girls, or anyway not winning them."

For instance, there's Cathy O'Donnell. She became Farley's "girl" along about 1946. The Willys had folded up and been assigned to the dump heap. Sam Goldwyn had given Farley a brand new Ford, and Farley was living, but doing no acting—at least not for the cameras.

"I've got a hobby, an ambition, a great desire," Farley explains. "That's acting, period. Mr. Goldwyn held me off the screen for a year and I did nothing but study. It was the same with Cathy O'Donnell. We met almost every day with Florence Enright, the marvelous coach who has introduced so many young people in Hollywood that she's sort of an unofficial date bureau.

"Cathy and I had one great liking in common: Work. And we were working together, for we were to be a team. We got so lost in what we were doing that we saw each other a lot outside the studio.

"We were darned close friends, though, and our mutual interests were so important that two or three times a week, if we didn't have dinner at my parents' home out in studio city, we'd throw together a dinner at her place. Wherever we were, we'd put the scene we were studying into the actual locale in which we happened to be at the time. The net result was that we'd play a scene from His Girl Friday in her kitchen, and maybe the next night we'd be doing it with accents in a Hungarian restaurant on the Sunset Strip. The results were fantastic.

"Then came Your Red Wagon, in which we worked almost two years ago. It's just now being released. This was to have been the kickoff for a big series of pictures co-starring the two of us, but circumstances worked the plot out differently. Releasing problems somewhere along the line changed all that. . . ."

Cathy's marriage hasn't at all altered

The Intimate Story of General Ike at War...and Play by the one woman who was his constant associate

"Eisenhower was my Boss"

by Kay Summersby

Only a woman could present such an intimate, human portrait of "General Ike" . . . and only one woman—Kay Summersby—his personal secretary, was in a position to tell it!

Now you can read the complete text of this frank and revealing book for only 25c . . . in a Dell Book!

Complete text!
A DELL BOOK
25¢

If you connot obtoin copies in your locality, send 25c for eoch copy ordered to Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Shinolo's scientific combinotion of fine woxes helps keep shoes flexible—ond new-looking longer.

2 Shinolo is eosy to opply ond economicol to buy. For good grooming ond longer wear—KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. In Canada it's 2-in-1

Van Johnson

FREE PHOTO
LARGE GLOSSY PICTURE of your favorite
MOVIE STAR
INTRODUCTORY OFFER
direct from HOLLYWOOD, home of the STARS. Send name of your FAVORITE with ten cents to cover handling and mailing.
★ Hollywood Stars ★
4633 Hollywood Blvd., Box 9747, Dept. D-2, Hollywood 27, Cal.

You can have LONGER HAIR

Enjoy love & romance with LONGER HAIR. GLAMORINE with PURE LANOLIN helps stop dry, brittle ends from breaking. Gives hair chance to get longer. Helps improve hair damaged by permanents, dyes, bleaches, sun. Adds glamour to dull, drab hair. NO CHEMICALS. Marvelous results in 7 days or money back. Send 1.00 for 3 months' supply or if C.O.D. pay postman 1.57.
GlamorineofCalif., 140BorelAve.Dept.W,SanMateo,Calif.

Lovely Cluster Ring "GIVEN AWAY"
Made special in 1/30 10k Gold plate. Fully Guaranteed.

A ring you will admire for years to come. Has filigree shank set with simulated ruby center, surrounded by eight sparkling brilliants, and GIVEN for selling only 4 boxes Rosebud Salve at 25¢ a box, returning $1.00. Order 4 salve—Send No Money. (Or we will mail Ring and 4 salve NOW if you send $1.00 with order) State size of ring desired.
ROSEBUD PERFUME CO. Box 30, WOODSBORO, MARYLAND

the way Farley feels about Cathy. He never proposed to her. And she never wanted him to. They were friends, and if that friendship became a "romance" it existed only in the imagination of the press.

"Hey," wait a minute!" Farley exclaimed to me as he looked over the list that had been jotted down for the purpose of a complete report on all the Hollywood girls he's ever known. "You left out a couple. One's a beautiful girl I once saw waiting for a bus. My car had broken down and there I was. There she was, carrying a big load of bundles. When the bus came, I offered to help her. We got off at the same stop. She dropped a package and when I picked it up, she said, 'You're Farley Granger, aren't you?' I said I was. She had the most sensational brown eyes, an athletic figure and blinding smile. She said. 'I'm ——,' but at that second the bus roared off. 'It's been nice seeing you,' she exclaimed before I could ask for her name. Then she wheeled off down the street. If you really want to know—if she wasn't already married, there was the one I might have asked to become Mrs. Granger. And I haven't ever set eyes on her again. . . .

"And then there's Ann Blyth. Ann and I dated for a couple of months every now and then, even got our names in the paper, although we didn't plan it. . . .

"What's next?"

dancing on air . . .

1947. The big boom year. The year a lot of things happened and a fella by the name of Granger saw quite a bit of a girl named Vera-Ellen. He met her on the Goldwyn lot. "That sort of thing," Farley admitted, "is going to go right on happening off and on, because this is the biggest small studio in town. If a fellow is crossing the lot, he's going to meet a pretty girl and they'll be introduced. If he's lucky, he'll get a date. I was lucky with Vera-Ellen. When we went out, which was only occasionally, we usually went to one of the clubs to dance. I don't have to remind anyone that Vera dances like a syncopated wisp of cloud. Before long I figured that I was a pretty good dancer, and I really enjoyed it. Matter of fact, I'm a pretty poor dancer, but Vera was such a perfect partner that a man could do no wrong. We had a lot to talk about because we, too, worked with Florence Enright, coaching us for roles."

Now it was time for Farley to talk about Shelley Winters. "Well," he said, "shortly after Pat Neal left for England to work in The Hasty Heart, a friend and I went to Victor's restaurant for dinner. (The steaks there are wonderful, and don't cost you your next week's salary.) Everything was fine, and—as it didn't say in the story which reported that I was trying to make up my mind whether to propose to Gerry or Pat—I didn't have a problem in the world.

"So, I'm sitting at Victor's, trying to make up my mind whether it will be soup or salad. In comes a girl named Shelley Winters. If you lead a completely unimportant life, just being an actor and trying to learn your lines, things like this can happen to you. Life is like that. Anyway, my friend introduced me to Shelley and a few minutes later the friend said to me, 'Farley, my boy, I can see you are going to get lost for a while.'"

Farley did. Farley freely admits that he's been concentrating on Shelley lately.

At Christmas time he gave her an etching by John Hirsch, called The Hecklers. And one of those multi-colored scarves that are the fad now.

"But," Farley pointed out, "it would be nice if nobody mentioned that I gave her the etching so she'd invite me up to see it some time. Otherwise she might be moved to strangle me with the scarf."

This Shelley is a one. She's a fine tennis player and matches are about even with Farley who's no slouch himself. Shelley has a sense of humor which doesn't require gag lines from memory. Her lift from living comes with doing the unexpected at the appropriate moment.

Farley called her up the other night for a date. Shelley talked with him for a moment, gradually growing more and more hysterical. "I can't go out with you tonight," she screamed. "I'm going out of my mind—I'm crazy—mad, absolutely insane!"

She stayed that way for days because she had to go out of her intelligence for a scene in Take One Step, which she is doing with Bill Powell. Farley got used to her drawing insane pictures on tablecloths and making statements that made no sense at all. Things like this happen to him, too.

Now the tempo of all this is stepping up. Shelley is immensely popular. Farley didn't get to spend Christmas Eve with her as they'd planned because she beat it off to entertain at an Army hospital. Several days later an alert columnist reported that Douglas Dick had "moved in" on Granger. Maybe he did. Perhaps, though, it was just that Farley had to work that night in Roseanna McCoy.

"There's a phrase I like," Farley said. "It's called 'steady duo.' But in the picture business you usually have 'dipsy duos,' and it could be that Shelley and I fall into that classification."

Could he fall in love with her? Has he fallen in love with her? Is this the real thing?

Should a reporter ask Farley Granger that question, he'd get this reply: "Could I? Have I? Is this? Well, this is a free country. I can fall in love with Shelley Winters if I want to. And she can fall in love with anyone she wants to. In a way, that's the heck of it."

See how cagey a fellow gets after awhile?

"I wish somebody would say that I don't consider myself God's gift to women," he concluded. "Gift? I'm certainly no gift. I'm in love with acting."

And Shelley Winters, maybe? Well, maybe. . . THE END

MODERN SCREEN

"No money, no cor—just this lousy little statue?"

CAN JUNE HAVER FIND HAPPINESS?

(Continued from page 67)

the marriage had not been a valid one.

Whether this tragic muddle, brought on by a young girl's mistake in rushing into an unhappy marriage, will ever be straightened out, is anybody's guess. The whole thing looked pretty hopeless to June the last time I talked with her. It appeared hopeless to her young man, too, for Dr. Duzik is also a Catholic. Both he and June will doubtless feel bound by the church officials' ruling.

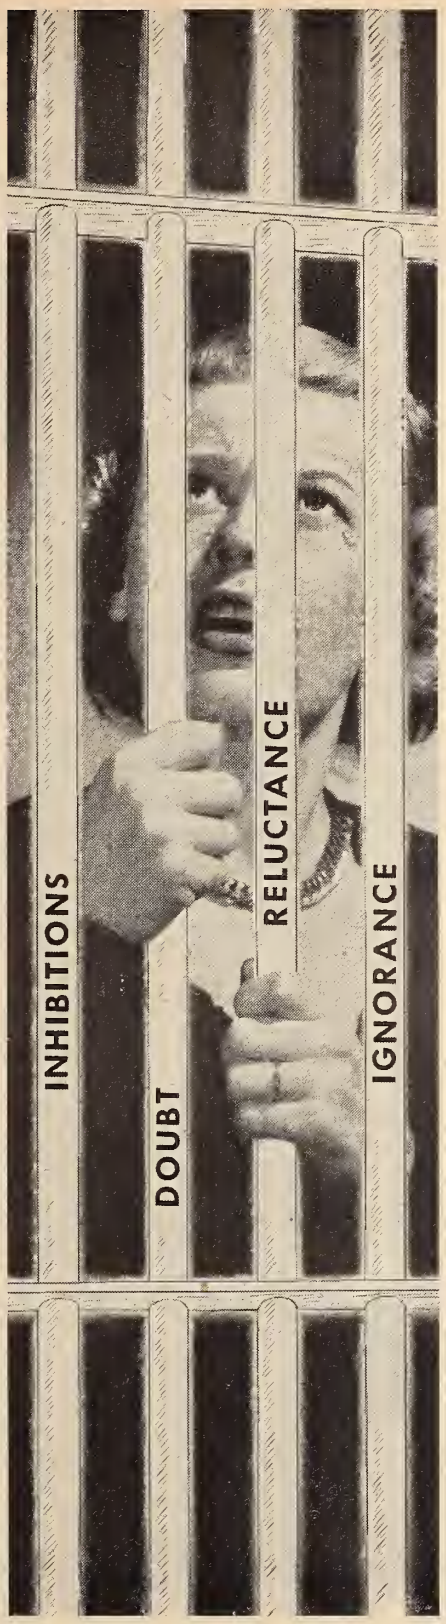
The tragic part of the whole thing is that John and June were dating for several months before she eloped to Las Vegas, Nevada, with Jimmy on March 26, 1947. Duzik, who is a dentist with a prosperous practice in Beverly Hills, was stunned by June's elopement. He was in love with her and thought she loved him, too.

"If I had only known what I was doing," June said to me recently. "I could have been the happiest girl in the world right now if I'd stopped to think. How blind I was! How could I ever have thought it was Jimmy I loved instead of John?

"I guess the truth of the matter is, I didn't really appreciate what a fine man John is until I began vacationing in Wyoming. There I met his family and the honest, real people who are his friends. In that country—under that clear blue sky, with the great mountains in the distance—boys have a chance to grow into strong, good men. And that's what John did.

too young to know . . .

"Why I couldn't see this when I first met him I'll never know. But at that time I was still under the magic spell of life with a band, singing in night clubs, making one-night stands . . . the excitement never ending . . . the jive talk . . the hep gang. It seemed to be in my blood. Today, I can see that getting to be a singer with a band was just an accident in my life. It seemed at the time to be such a great opportunity to make money and get ahead. But now I know it wasn't ever what I really wanted. Yet how can a 15-year-old kid figure out where she's going to wind up? That's how old I was when I started singing with Ted Fio Rito's band.



"I realize now I was always out of my element with band musicians. My association with them was a thing apart from all the family life and ideals I always had known. My mother used to tell me this—but I didn't think she knew what she was talking about. If only I'd listened to her!"

I must say that June made every effort to make a go of her marriage to the young musician. She went back to him several times, flying in the face of advice from her mother and the 20th Century-Fox officials who felt that, as Mrs. Zito, she'd never find happiness.

On one occasion that I know about, she even took a chance of completely wrecking her own career to save him from a situation which she felt would have damaged his career. When her studio bosses heard what she'd done, they had her up on the carpet to tell her what a foolish little girl she'd been.

She answered simply: "He is my husband. It was my duty to help him."

However, there came a time when she could go on no longer with Jimmy. The paths of his life led far afield from the

BEFORE LOVE BECOMES MERELY ...A MEMORY

Don't let this one intimate neglect bar you away from your husband!

THE true, tender love of marriage can endure and survive a lot. But not the one intimate neglect of which too many wives are guilty.

This unfortunate neglect can in time actually cause married love to cool and die.

Don't risk this neglect! Do use effective, feminine hygiene . . . such as regular vaginal douches with reliable "Lysol." With this wonderful hygienic protection, you can be confident of your appealing feminine daintiness.

Germs destroyed swiftly

"Lysol" has amazing, proved power to kill germ-life on contact . . . truly cleanses the vaginal canal even in the presence of mucous matter. Thus "Lysol" acts in a way that makeshifts like soap, salt or soda never can.

Appealing daintiness is assured, because the very source of objectionable odors is eliminated.

Use whenever needed!

Yet gentle, non-caustic "Lysol" will not harm delicate tissue. Simple directions give correct douching solution. Many doctors advise their patients to douche regularly with "Lysol" brand disinfectant, just to insure daintiness alone, and to use it as often as they need it. No greasy aftereffect.

Three times as many women use "Lysol" for intimate feminine hygiene as any other liquid preparation! No other is more reliable. You, too, can rely on "Lysol" to help protect your married happiness . . . keep you desirable!

For complete Feminine Hygiene rely on . . .

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

A Concentrated Germ-Killer

Product of Lehn & Fink

NEW!...FEMININE HYGIENE FACTS!

FREE! New booklet of information by reputable gynecological authority. Mail coupon to Lehn & Fink, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

*Name*_____

*Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

D.M.-494

GET $$$ EASILY

Selling greeting cards, napkins, coasters, stationery and a complete line with name on. Costs nothing to try. Send for samples and Selling Plan on approval.

JEWEL
1217 Market St., Dept. E Philadelphia, Pa.

BOSOM BEAUTY

AT BUDGET PRICES $1.00 to $1.50

Mar-Gro BRAS

FREE: Write for "Bosom Beauty" Booklet, Dept. 12
Mar-Gro Bras, 37 West 26 St., New York 10.

ones on which her feet were firmly planted. One or the other had to change—and she felt that she would be sacrificing all her ideals if she followed his way of life. So she called it a day.

I saw June on the arm of young Dr. Duzik at the wedding reception for Diana Lynn following Diana's marriage to John Lindsay.

"Isn't Diana a lovely bride?" June remarked. I couldn't help remembering when June herself was a lovely bride, starting her wedded life with all the high hopes only young girls can have. Within three months, bitter disillusionment had dimmed her eyes.

I have known Dr. John Duzik all his life. He was born in my hometown—Rock Springs, Wyoming—where his father, Nick Duzik, operates a grocery store in connection with his cattle ranch on the Wyoming-Colorado border. John went to public school at Rock Springs and to the University of Southern California, from which he was graduated as a dental surgeon. Later he took a course at Harvard. He has always been a fine boy and has made his father very proud of him.

When it became evident that John was deeply interested in her, I wanted to tell June she should hold onto him—but of course I didn't know she was planning to elope with Jimmy until it was too late to give her any advice.

All I could do was kiss her and wish her happiness when I went to her church wedding—a ceremony held three weeks after she and Jimmy had been married by a justice of the peace in Las Vegas. But watching her and Jimmy together at their wedding reception in the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel, I was afraid she had made a terrible mistake. How well-founded my fears had been was evident when I saw her a couple of months later. She had found out by then—and her bubbling, child-like gaiety had vanished.

Duzik stood patiently by while June went through the throes of making up her mind about her divorce from Jimmy. She left Jimmy and went back to him several times during the summer months—and even made a tour with him and the band in the Northwest, playing towns in Washington and Oregon. She sang with the band as she had in the old days, but found that the old lure was gone. It just wasn't her way of life at all.

Finally, just a year after she'd been married, she went to court and got her divorce, charging mental cruelty. Jimmy, she testified, would sit for hours without speaking to her. She stated that he said he hadn't loved her when they were married. She told the judge that she'd done her best to make her marriage succeed but that when she'd gone back to him after the first separation, "it became apparent to me that he did not want a reconciliation."

I hope June will find a way out of her dilemma. I hope she'll be able to marry John Duzik. She wants to have children—she told me if she isn't able to marry again, she'll adopt some.

"June is such a wonderful girl," young Duzik told me. "She is the only girl I'll ever love. We have so many things in common—and I know if we're able to marry and have the family we both want, our life will be—well, it will be Heaven."

Will they be able to have that happiness together? Will June, now still trapped by the profound and far-reaching consequences of an infatuated mistake, be freed to go to the yearning arms of the man she so deeply loves? THE END be fresh and natural. Not an artificial little monster like that, Lew!"

I DISCOVERED SHIRLEY TEMPLE

(Continued from page 39)

"Your enthusiasm," said Lew, "is overwhelming. "But since it happens that Mr. Sheehan and I think she's very, very wonderful—then it happens that this marvelous little actress goes in the picture. Suppose you just write the music and leave the casting to us."

I looked at him steadily for a moment.

"Yes, sir, boss man!" I said.

He laughed and we went out and had a drink together. I like Lew Brown.

Those, in effect—though I'll admit that maybe I haven't recalled the richly dramatic dialogue with complete accuracy—were the circumstances surrounding my introduction to a child actress named . . . well, what do you suppose? Shirley Temple? I should say not! Never mind what the name of the unfortunate tot was. She's probably somebody's mother by now.

* * *

I'd been called out to Hollywood late in 1933 after my song, "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?", became a national hit. The famous songwriting team of Lew Brown, Buddy DeSylva and Ray Henderson had parted company—and Lew Brown wanted me for his collaborator. Lew was producing pictures for Fox and my first assignment was to write the score for a musical he was doing called Stand Up and Cheer.

The studio planned to introduce a new child star in this film. The script called for her to be presented in a dance number in which she and James Dunn would sing a song entitled "Baby, Take a Bow." As you've gathered, Lew Brown and the top executive at Fox, the late Winfield Sheehan, had already picked out the youngster—and my reaction to her I've tenderly described above.

Well, I went ahead and wrote "Baby, Take a Bow"—I thought it a pretty nice number—but the more I thought of the terrible tot scheduled to deliver it in the film, the sadder I got. Especially after I'd heard her sing it in her brassy little voice—with Mae West leers!

One afternoon early in January, my wife and I went to the movies—to the Fox-Ritz Theater on Wilshire Boulevard. For the life of me I can't remember what the picture was—but I'll never forget what happened as we were going through the lobby on our way out.

As we trudged slowly along with the other departing customers—I suddenly stopped and put a hand on my wife's arm.

A few paces ahead of us, intently examining the framed stills of coming attractions, was a tiny girl, her pretty head covered with reddish-gold ringlets. As she peered earnestly at each picture in turn, she hummed softly to herself and moved her feet in jiggling little dance steps.

"Have you ever seen a cuter child?" I murmured.

"She's adorable!" my wife agreed.

We just stood there watching her. Completely un-selfconscious, happily absorbed in the fascinating black-and-white scenes on the wall, she was a completely engaging picture of childhood.

I looked about at several small groups standing in the lobby to see whom she was with, but no one seemed to be paying any attention to her.

So I went up to her. "Hello," I said.

ARE YOUR "DIFFICULT DAYS" DRIVING HIS LOVE AWAY?

It's true—Monthly Blues just don't go over with a man! So don't let nervous tension, periodic headache and cramps play havoc with your romance! Instead—help relieve those symptoms with wonderfully effective Chi-Ches-Ters Pills. Be sure to take according to directions, a day or two in advance. 3 convenient sizes. Ask your druggist today for

The Improved

CHI-CHES-TERS PILLS

DIAMOND BRAND

For relief from "periodic functional distress"

FREE—New illustrated booklet of intimate facts every woman should know. Mailed in plain wrapper. Write today! Chichester Chemical Co., Dept. 4-E, Philadelphia 46, Pa.

NEW! smart idea!

For home permanents, cosmetics—special top holds wave lotion, package gives you clean cotton as you need it! Get it today.

COTTON PICKER ®
Cosmetic and Nursery Cotton

A CURITY Product

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

LEARN AT HOME
TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates.

HIGH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED

50th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women, 18 to 60. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 234, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

*Name*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____ *Age*_____

WRITERS

Conscientious sales service for your short stories, articles, books and plays. Send today for FREE circular "Your Road To Writing Success."

DANIEL S. MEAD LITERARY AGENCY
Dept. D-4, 264 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.

NOW—HOME COSMETIC
For GRAY HAIR!

Give your gray hair natural-looking color again, yourself, in the privacy of your own home. Mary T. Goldman's, wonderful clear liquid cosmetic, stops gray hair worries for thousands! So easy! Simply comb Mary T. Goldman's through hair. Won't bother wave, nor spoil hair texture. Guaranteed to give gray hair the youthful-looking shade you want or your money back. Get Mary T. Goldman's today at your drug or department store. Accept no substitute!

FREE TRIAL: Send coupon below for free trial kit.

MARY T. GOLDMAN CO.
W-13 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul 2, Minn.
Send FREE sample. (Check color desired.)
☐ Black ☐ Dark Brown
☐ Light Brown ☐ Medium Brown
☐ Blonde ☐ Auburn
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

She straightened up, stuck out her stomach, and turned her face up to me with a smile. Now I noticed the dimples. "Hello," she said.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"Shirley. Shirley Temple."

"That's a nice name. . . . You seem to know how to dance, Shirley."

"Sure!" she exclaimed—and then and there went into a very skillful little clog.

"Who taught you to do that?"

"My Mommy."

"She did? And where is your mommy?"

"Over there!" And she pointed to a pleasant-looking woman talking to a couple near by. "Mommy!"

Her mother looked toward us inquiringly, excused herself to her friends, and came over.

"MEET THE PEOPLE"

Only a few of the gifted youngsters who aspire to a place in show business ever even get a hearing. Jay Gorney holds the movie industry could do much to help this tragic situation, and at the same time establish a gold mine of the fresh performers it's always seeking, by subsidizing stage shows employing those wasted talents.

Back in 1939, Mr. Gorney, in association with Henry Myers and Edward Elisen, wrote and produced a revue called Meet the People. All told, 200 youngsters appeared in the three editions that ran four solid years in Hollywood, New York and on the road. Of those 200, 40 have gone on to establish themselves firmly. Among them are Peggy Ryan, June Haver, Virginia O'Brien, Nanette Fabray, Jan Clayton and Fay McKenzie.

"It's a cinch that right this minute," says Mr. Gorney, "a dozen June Havers—and Shirley Temples—are vainly knocking on closed studio doors in Hollywood."

I introduced myself and my wife, told her I was with Fox and that we thought Shirley was a mighty cute kid. I asked Mrs. Temple about Shirley and learned that she'd had a bit in a Paramount Western, To the Last Man, and in several shorts of Educational's Baby Burlesk series.

I admitted that I hadn't seen any of those epics. Mrs. Temple smiled sadly and said that frankly, Shirley's screen appearances to date had evidently created no great impression anywhere. In fact, right now Shirley was unemployed, with nothing in sight.

"Well," I said, "how'd you like to bring Shirley to Fox for an audition?"

Mrs. Temple thought this over for about a third of a second.

"When?" she said.

"Could you make it tomorrow morning at eleven?"

"We most certainly could!" beamed Mrs. Temple.

"Cer'nly could!" said Shirley.

First thing next morning, I saw Lew Brown and gave him an account of Shirley.

"Lew," I said, "she'd be an absolute natural for Stand Up and Cheer."

Lew said, "I thought it was understood that—"

"All I'm asking," I said, "is that you have a look at this kid. Her mother's bringing her over this morning."

He lighted a fine cigar. "Okay," he said. "I'll see your genius. I guess I'm just in one of my foolish, benevolent moods today. But remember! There'll be no casting changes in Stand Up and Cheer—and that's final!"

I said, "Of course! You're the producer."

I accepted a fine cigar and returned to my office to wait for eleven o'clock.

Avoid underarm irritation...

...use

YODORA

the deodorant that is ACTUALLY SOOTHING

Looks bad, feels bad, when underarm skin gets red and irritated. That's why more women every day turn to Yodora, the gentler cream deodorant. Yodora stops perspiration odor quickly, safely...it is actually soothing to normal skin, because it is made with a face cream base, with no harsh acid salts to cause irritation. Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢.
McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Depilatory. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

Don't Let

A Blotchy Skin

Ruin That Date

Start today, the Resinol routine that so many people are talking about. Wash face with the fluffy lather of mild Resinol Soap–then smooth on skilfully medicated Resinol Ointment–leaving it on overnight. It works fast to soothe itchy irritation and help improve your skin.

SAVE BY MAIL

ORDER DIRECT FROM MILL REPRESENTATIVES

CITATION

GUARANTEED FIRST QUALITY FULL FASHIONED SHEERS 51 GAUGE DUPONT

NYLONS

$1.00 Pr. 3 Pr. for $2.95

51 Gauge DuPont Nylon from top to toe. Specially flattering for that special occasion look. Order in any or all of three captivating shades – Warm Beige, Medium Cocoa, Dark Cocoa – in any size from 8½ to 11.

ALL SALES CARRY OUR MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

THE MARBA SALES CO., Dept. M
303–4th Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.
Please send ____ pairs of Citation NYLONS. ($1.00 Pair or 3 Pairs for $2.95). ENCLOSED IS CHECK ☐ MONEY ORDER ☐
SHADE ____ SIZE ____
we prepay all shipments
Print Name and Address Along Margin

Eleven o'clock arrived—but no Temples. I heard nothing from Mrs. Temple that day—and, as I'd absent-mindedly neglected to get her address or phone number, I was unable to get in touch with her. But since she'd obviously been so happy about the whole thing, I felt certain that I'd hear from her soon.

But she failed to show up the next day, either. Or the next. Or the next. Naturally, I was beginning to get a little peeved. I tried in vain to locate her through the telephone company, through Paramount and Educational.

Three weeks went by. And then, one morning, the phone in my office rang—and Mrs. Temple was on the line. It developed that she'd been bringing Shirley to the studio every day since the date of the original appointment—only to be turned away by the guard at the gate! The guard had insisted that there was no Jay Gorney at the studio—as had the telephone operators.

What had happened was typical of the chaotic conditions at Fox at the time. It had taken over three weeks for the office management to get my name on the list of personnel! So if it hadn't been for Mrs. Temple's persistence, Shirley Temple's career may well have died aborning.

baby takes a bow . . .

As it was, Heaven be praised, the Temples came right up to my office that morning. I spent the rest of the day teaching Shirley "Baby, Take a Bow"—and then arranged for Lew Brown to hear her the next morning.

At the scheduled time, in Lew's office, I hoisted Shirley to the top of the battle-scarred grand piano, sat down on the stool, struck a chord—and we were off on "Baby, Take a Bow."

Shirley was perfect—joyous, relaxed, innocent, inventive, lifting that little song into something twinkling and warm and beautiful. Halfway through the first chorus, I glanced at Lew sitting there beside the tense Mrs. Temple. His poker face seemed a bit strained. At the end of the chorus, Shirley went into a dance. She was like a small inspired sunray, bouncing and tapping around that piano top. Then she finished the song, gave an earnest bow, sat down, and, all panties and smiles, slid off to the floor.

The Temples left the room.

"Well?" I said.

Lew looked like a man dreaming. "She's—she's—well, she's something special, all right."

"But naturally," I said, "it's too late to think of putting her in the picture, now."

Lew frowned. "I'm afraid there's not a chance. You know how high Sheehan is on the kid we've already lined up."

"May I suggest," I said, "that we at least take Shirley in to see Sheehan?"

"I don't think we'd get anywhere doing that," said Lew. "And yet . . ."

"Tell you what, Lew," I said. "Suppose I just take her into Sheehan."

Lew looked out the window. "Okay," he said. "You win. We'll take her in together!"

So into Sheehan's office we all trooped. And when, an hour or so later, we all trooped out again, Shirley Temple, who'd won over Winfield Sheehan in about two minutes flat, had been signed to a $150-a-week Fox contract and had been given her first assignment—in Stand Up and Cheer.

Well, Shirley started work—and everybody on the set fell in love with her immediately. Everything connected with making pictures thrilled her—and she took the work with great seriousness. One day soon after shooting started, Jimmy Dunn muffed a line. In tones of high indignation, Shirley corrected him. The cameras had kept on rolling while she was setting him right. When this was viewed with the day's rushes, it was decided to leave it in the film just as it had occurred, and the scene was rewritten around it.

Thereafter, Shirley's delightful corrections when other players missed lines became a running gag on the set. They'd deliberately make fluffs to see if Shirley would catch them. She would—every time.

Shirley was really a present from Heaven for Fox. I've mentioned the chaotic conditions at the Fox studios in those days. The company was said to be deeply in the red. Twentieth Century was interested in buying Fox, and Sheehan was under terrific pressure from the stockholders and the board of directors to improve the situation so that the company would be a more valuable property to sell. Stand Up and Cheer, into which a million dollars—a big amount then—was poured, was a desperate effort to recoup.

Stand Up and Cheer was finished and released—and even the raves that Shirley evoked didn't save it from being less than a box-office smash. Winfield Sheehan was called to New York to have coals of fire heaped on him by the board of directors. He walked into the meeting, opened his briefcase, and took out some papers. "Here, gentlemen," he said, "is ten million dollars."

And he showed them all the fabulous offers from other studios for Shirley Temple's services that her personal triumph in Stand Up and Cheer had already brought. (One was from Paramount—they wanted her for something called Little Miss Marker.) So instead of being fired, Sheehan was given a brand new one-year contract—at a salary reported to be $365,000! And soon thereafter, 20th Century was glad to pay millions to buy Fox—just to get Shirley!

I've been asked many times why I didn't sign Shirley Temple to a contract. Well, I was no agent—I was simply a writer and composer and my only interest in Shirley was in seeing an enormously talented and attractive kid get the break she deserved.

And I certainly don't claim any great credit for discovering Shirley. I do think that maybe I have a certain "intuition" about talent—but my running into Shirley in that theater lobby was nothing but blind luck—just a happy accident.

But I'd like to wind this up with a little request to Mrs. Agar: Shirley—may I make a date right now to meet Linda Susan in the lobby of the Fox-Ritz theater in about four years? THE END

This early photo of Shirley was autographed for Joy Gorney, who discovered Shirley in 1934, by Mrs. Temple: "Gratefully . . . for Shirley."

A NEW FACE a new future

How Plastic Surgery easily takes years off the prematurely aged face, quickly reshapes an ugly nose and corrects other facial blemishes is told and illustrated with 88 before-and-after pictures in fascinating book, YOUR NEW FACE IS YOUR FORTUNE, written by famous Plastic Surgeon. Yours, post-paid in plain wrapper — only 25¢

FRANKLIN HOUSE Books
1102 Fox Bldg., Phila., Pa., Dept. 2-R

Be an ARTIST

LEARN AT HOME IN YOUR SPARE TIME!
Trained artists are capable of earning $65, $80 or more a week. By our practical method we teach you COMMERCIAL ART, DESIGNING and CARTOONING all in ONE course. FREE BOOK—"Art for Pleasure & Profit" describes training and opportunities in art. STATE AGE. Course G.I. Approved

STUDIO 804-R, WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART
1115—15th ST., N. W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

Are You a STAR OF TOMORROW?

SEND PHOTO OR SNAPSHOT TODAY FOR FREE UNUSUAL PLAN!

YOU may have talent for motion pictures, radio or television. Act NOW for a career in SINGING, DRAMATICS, MUSIC, DANCING, ANNOUNCING!

HOLLYWOOD CASTING DIRECTORY
5109 A HOLLYWOOD BLVD. HOLLYWOOD 27, CAL.

Marvel

$3.50 WHIRLING SPRAY SYRINGE for Women

At DRUG COUNTERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

FreeBooklet, MarvelCo., 604EastSt., NewHaven, Ct.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW and SENSATIONAL in EVERYDAY CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

Show rich Satin and Velour Greeting Cards. Never before offered. Get easy orders FAST! Astounding value—16 for $1 Up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery, Floral Charmettes, Napkins, 25 other Assortments retail 60c to $1.00 . . . SAMPLES ON APPROVAL. No experience needed. Start NOW—earn all year 'round. WRITE TODAY!

Satin and Velour Designs

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 95D, St. Louis 3, Mo.

LEG SUFFERERS

Why continue to suffer without attempting to do something? Write today for New Booklet—"THE LIEPE METHODS FOR HOME USE." It tells about Varicose Ulcers and Open Leg Sores. Liepe Methods used while you walk. More than 40 years of success. Praised and endorsed by multitudes.

FREE BOOKLET

LIEPE METHODS, 3284 N. Green Bay Ave., Dept. D-39, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Help Relieve Distress Of MONTHLY FEMALE WEAKNESS

Are you troubled by distress of female functional periodic disturbances? Does this make you suffer from pain, feel so nervous, tired—at such times? Then do try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. Pinkham's is famous to help girls and women troubled this way.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

WHAT PRICE GLORY?

(Continued from page 58)

that marriage to novelist Marcus Goodrich had brought her.

What does being First Lady of Hollywood entail? It entails, in effect, the assumption of a position comparable to that of a member of a royal family. The occupant is no longer just a star—she's a personage, treated with a respect amounting almost to awe. Critics of both her professional and private lives handle her with velvet gloves. She's no longer fair game for any sort of public gossip or irreverent speculation. Her presence is demanded at official occasions, no social function is really top-drawer without her celebrated name on the guest list. She is, in a vastly wider sense than are other major Hollywood figures, public property.

The mantle of First Lady has been worn easily by the last two to bear the resplendent title—Norma Shearer and Joan Crawford. They served superbly, reveling in the role. They have had no successor. Ingrid Bergman has had the honor for the taking, but the diffident Swede has preferred to stay aloof from the glittering hullabaloo.

Will Olivia de Havilland, aware of the personal concessions that her acceptance would force her to make, ascend the throne?

Well, let's take a look at that quiet private life she's been enjoying with Marcus Goodrich. . . .

I didn't like Marcus Goodrich before I met him. His biography indicated that he had an excellent record as a sea captain, had been skipper of his own ship in two wars, and had written one highly successful novel about a destroyer, "Delilah." But I, like almost every other male Hollywood correspondent, had nursed a secret crush on Olivia for a long time, and in my opinion there wasn't a man alive good enough for her.

Well, when I actually did meet the fellow—just a short while after they'd been married—I was astonished to find I liked him immediately. Perhaps this was mainly because Olivia was completely happy. Not the way any movie star seems happy right after the marriage, with all the practiced reactions for the benefit of the press. Olivia just was, that's all.

Months later, when I saw Marc and Olivia again, there was no change. They were still completely devoted to each other.

There were, naturally, certain adjustments that had been made in their lives. "Marc is a cold-blooded tyrant," Olivia

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Coming down the elevator in the building where I work I thought I recognized someone who entered the car at a lower floor. "Hello there," I said, "I knew you by your voice." He replied, "Oh, you mustn't be seen talking to me, Miss, you'll be ruined socially." Everyone in the elevator burst out laughing. The man was Fred Allen—my favorite comedian.

Elsie L. Meyers
Woodside, L. I.

"Flamingo" by PORAD

A new wing back softie that fits like a glove—finely made of excellent leathers. A hard-to-believe value!

$3.99

Black suede or Leather in Red, Green or White.
—Sizes 4 to 9, medium width.
—6 to 9, AA width.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED

ORDER BY MAIL—AND SAVE!

PORAD'S
*Vogue-Craft SHOES, 212 Virginia St.
Seattle 1, Wash., Dept. D4

Send_____prs. "Flamingos" at $3.99 pr.

COLOR—First choice	COLOR—Second choice
Size	Width

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone_____ State_____
( ) Check ( ) Money Order ( ) C.O.D.
Send check or money order and we pay postage. When sent C.O.D. customer to pay $3.99 plus charges. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

LADIES EARN UP TO $23 WEEKLY!

Lovely DRESS GIVEN TO YOU!

Ladies, here's your chance to earn up to $23 weekly! And besides, take your pick of dozens of gorgeous Spring dresses—without a penny of cost. That's what we offer you for representing us in your spare time. Show our popular frocks to your friends, then send us their orders. Collect handsome cash commissions in advance. No canvassing or experience necessary. Pleasant, dignified business. Get free details of this unusual offer and Portfolio of new styles. Send no money. Everything furnished FREE. Lovely fabric samples included. Rush your name, address and dress size on a penny postcard.
Fashion Frocks, Inc., Desk B4054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio.

Get the FREE Portfolio of LATEST SPRING DRESSES as low as $3.98

GLAMOROUS MODELS
shampoo without water

Have shining clean hair always, the way lovely Barbizon School models do—with Minipoo!

WAVE STAYS IN! You'll thrill to the glorious sheen Minipoo restores—without disturbing wave.

QUICK! EASY! No water, soap, drying. With handy mitt, fragrant Minipoo removes oil, dirt, odors in 10 minutes.

BETWEEN WATER SHAMPOOS

Barbizon Model
Joan Conroy says,
"Minipoo freshens hair between water shampoos."

BEFORE A DATE

IDEAL DURING COLDS

Barbizon Model
Chris Holly says,
"No shampoo colds washing with dry Minipoo!"

Barbizon Model
Betty Ellen says,
"When time's short, Minipoo does the trick!"

MINIPOO
10 MINUTE DRY SHAMPOO
Cosmetic Distributors, Jersey City, N. J.

30* Shampoos and Handy Mitt in each Package

CARE goes where hunger is! Send food packages overseas through

50 Broad Street
New York 4, N.Y.

EUROPE NEEDS YOUR HELP!

The Europeon Recovery Program (Marsholl Plon) deols in fundomental economics—the reconstruction of over-all economic systems. It cannot—ond does not—toke the place of direct oid to stricken Europeans. Millions ore still hungry. They still need CARE. You con help o friend or relative by sending o 22.5 pound food pockoge through CARE, 50 Broad Street, New York 4, N. Y. Delivery is guaranteed.

WALLET SIZE MOVIE STAR PORTRAITS (SIZE 2 x 2¼)

Glossy Black and White Photos 32 PHOTOS (2 SETS) 50c OR 80 PHOTOS (5 SETS) $1.00

SPECIAL OFFER! All 11 sets (176 Photos $2.00 postpaid)

FREE! NEW COLOR PHOTO OF ROY ROGERS WITH EVERY ORDER

Each set contains 16 photos—Order by number to prevent duplication.

Set ±S contains photos of Montgomery Clift, Gordon MacRae, Scott Brady, Larry Parks, Shirley Temple, Burt Lancaster, Howard Duff, Rita Hayworth, Lana Turner, Lew Ayres, Jane Wyman, Ingrid Bergman, Esther Williams, Robert Mitchum, John Lund, Yvonne DeCarlo.

SET ±K all Western set contains photos of Dale Evans, Roy Rogers, Gene Autry, Charles Starrett, Bill Boyd, Tex Ritter, Allan Lane, John Wayne, Randolph Scott, Bill Elliott, Ken Curtis, Roy Rogers with Dale Evans, Bob Nolan, Monte Hale, Tim Holt, Bob Livingston.

Set ±P contains Western Stars with horses—Roy Rogers, Gene Autry, Bill Elliott, Charles Starrett, Bill Boyd, Al "Lash" La Rue, Eddie Dean, Johnny Mack Brown, Monte Hale, Allan Lane, Bob Steele, Sunset Carson, Tim Holt, Randolph Scott, Rod Cameron, John Wayne.

SET ±L contains photos of Shirley Temple, Ronald Reagan, Rita Hayworth, Larry Parks, Jane Powell, Dan Dailey, Jeanne Crain, Rory Calhoun, Ingrid Bergman, Alan Ladd, Betty Grable, Dougias Fairbanks, Jr., Ava Gardner, Marshall Thompson, Joan Leslie, and Gregory Peck.

Roy Rogers

SET ±M contains photos of Roy Rogers with Trigger, Gene Autry, Al "Lash" LaRue, Bill Boyd, Jack Beutel with Jane Russell, Johnny Mack Brown, Eddie Dean, Gabby Hayes, Monte Hale, Charles Starrett, Jimmy Wakely, Rod Cameron, Smiley Burnette, Robert Mitchum, Roy Rogers with Dale Evans, Buster Crabbe.

SET ±A contains photos of Burt Lancaster, Guy Madison, Roy Rogers, Lana Turner, Margaret O'Brien, Gene Autry, Alan Ladd, Bing Crosby, Cyd Charisse, Yvonne DeCarlo, Gregory Peck, William (Bill) Elliott, Jane Wyman, Angela Lansbury, Viveca Lindfors, Dorothy Lamour.

SET ±H contains photos of Ingrid Bergman, Lana Turner, June Allyson, Bing Crosby, Cornel Wilde, Jeanne Crain, Bill Boyd, Dane Clark, Shirley Temple, Dale Evans, Danny Kaye, Margaret O'Brien, Yvonne DeCarlo, Rita Hayworth, Betty Grable, Gene Autry.

Set ±G contains photos of Guy Madison, Roy Rogers, James Mason, Glenn Ford, Cornel Wilde, Alan Ladd, Lon McCallister, Andy Russell, Robert Mitchum, Frank Sinatra, Perry Como, Ronald Reagan, Sunset Carson, Helmut Dantine, Harry James, Tom Drake.

Set ±N contains photos of the following Bathing Beauties: Rita Hayworth, Jane Russell, Virginia Mayo, Lana Turner, Rhonda Fleming, Pauiette Goddard, Susan Hayward, Eila Raines, Jane Greer, Barbara Britton, Jane Wyman, Olga San Juan, Mona Freeman, Veronica Lake, Alexis Smith, Ginger Rogers.

Set ±O contains photos of these Movie Pin-Ups: Ava Gardner, Marie McDonald, Ann Sheridan, Jane Russell, Cyd Charisse, Lana Turner, Barbara Stanwyck, Ann Miller, Joan Leslie, Barbara Hale, Alexis Smith, Jean Peters, Janis Paige, Martha Vickers, Beverly Tyler, Arlene Dahl.

Set ±R contains 16 different poses of Roy Rogers.

Sold in complete sets only. Two sets 50c; five sets for $1.00. All 11 sets (176 Photos) only $2.00.

IRVING KLAW : 212 EAST 14 ST. DEPT. BB-6, NEW YORK CITY 3, N. Y.

told me with a smile. "He goes to work at 8:30 in the morning and stays in his study until three in the afternoon. If I so much as put my head in the door, he snaps like an enraged bulldog."

This rugged, cold-hearted author, who can so bluntly eject the charming delicacy of a wife like Olivia from his thoughts and presence, entered at this point. He said, "I am the worst, most domineering extrovert in the whole world." Both Olivia and I knew by this statement that at certain moments he also is an accomplished liar—for beneath this blustering tweed-coat exterior there exists an extremely sentimental and sensitive individual.

At this point it would be nice to say, "He can go away now and we'll take up the personal life of Olivia de Havilland." That's impossible. The two can't be separated. And that's certainly one reason why Olivia would be uncomfortable in the role of First Lady of Hollywood. Marc is a guy who would never be happy in a life weighed down by social impediment. He wants, within sensible limits, to be able to plan and move about as he sees fit.

high on a hill . . .

When Olivia finished The Snake Pit, the setting of her private life was moved to a new locale. The people from whom Marc and Olivia had rented their hilltop house in the Santa Monica mountains came back from the East—and this meant the Goodriches had to look for another home. After weeks of search, they found it—this time just beyond Brentwood, again on a hill and with the happy asset that from Marc's study, by a slight craning of the neck, he could see the ocean they both love.

Olivia had completely knocked herself out with The Snake Pit and The Heiress, the picture that followed. Marc insisted that she was not so much as to make one move toward buying new draperies or organizing the house. They were, he announced, going on an automobile trip.

"Wonderful," said Olivia. "Where are we going?"

"To nowhere," Marc retorted. "We're going to be free-wheeling, free souls."

"Can we take Catherine?"

"We must take Catherine, dearest. She'd die if we didn't."

Catherine is the Siamese cat. For the benefit of non-cat-lovers, let it be explained that Catherine, like all Siamese, is less like a cat than a human being. In fact, she can carry on a conversation—even though it's understood only by her masters. She is beloved equally with their airdale, Shadrac.

Shadrac, who is proud of his calloused soul and didn't mind the arrangement, was banished to a dog boarding house, and Olivia, Marc and Catherine took off in Olivia's Buick—which, as contrasted to Marc's Lincoln Continental is not the type of car that says on a cross-country trip, "Look at me, I'm carrying a movie star around!" (A First Lady, it goes without saying, would have travelled in the Lincoln.)

They drove north, through the California redwood forests, to the Rogue River country. They stayed in motels where cats are welcome. In only one place were they immediately recognized. They'd found a delightful little restaurant off the beaten path. As they dined, the chef, who assisted with the serving, appeared at the kitchen opening to hand the entree to the waitress. He nonchalantly began to hum "To Each His Own."

Olivia, who enjoys the honest interest of movie fans but hates the intrusion of gawkers, was highly pleased with this oblique demonstration. She went into the kitchen and, simply and friendlily—and definitely without any First Lady-like condescension —thanked the man for the divine dinner.

In San Francisco, at the St. Francis Hotel, Catherine became a problem. Olivia, wearing a beaver coat, smuggled her in while Marc registered. Catherine, her feelings hurt, struggled like crazy all the way up on the elevator, and the bellhop eyed Olivia de Havilland, the potential First Lady of Hollywood, as though she were a girl suffering from very active jitters.

During the two-day stay, the Goodriches kept rushing back to the hotel between sightseeing trips to see that Catherine had room service. (Those who have beloved pets can easily understand how human beings can thus dislocate their lives for a dog or a cat.)

In Olivia's pre-marital days, she'd been so busy pursuing her career that she'd never learned much about domesticity. But after her marriage, she systematically read books on household management and continually surprised her gruff spouse with new-found efficiency in things domestic. Came the day that their servants left. An Oriental couple, they had been in the restaurant business before the war. Their equipment had been stored with a friend who could no longer keep it, so they reluctantly concluded that they must go back into business. Reluctant is the word, for the Goodriches insist on the most excellent of help and pay them accordingly.

"I don't want another couple for a while," Olivia told Marc. "I want the fun of organizing my own house. And I want to do some cooking. . . ."

"Cooking?" said Marc. "You mean . . . ah . . . cooking?"

"I do! You'll see!" said Olivia. "I'm a wonderful cook—I bet."

"Well," said Marc, "I have dined with the savage pygmies of Inner Australia, suppered with the head-hunters of darkest Gombolia, eaten mysterious delicacies in Tibetan lamasaries where no white man had ever dared set foot. And so, my dear, even if it kills me—and I have no doubt it will—I shall sample whatever curious repasts you may place before me."

"O.K., Major Hoople," said Olivia, and tackled the Thanksgiving turkey.

"A magnificent job of embalming," Marc declared.

Olivia graduated to the Christmas goose.

Marc indicated his approval by stowing the leftovers not in the disposal unit, but in the deep freeze.

chaos in the kitchen . . .

He said nothing about the height to which dishes eventually were stacked in the kitchen. Now, the average woman hates to do dishes. Olivia absolutely detests it. In fact, when she served tea one afternoon and failed to bring a cup for herself as Marc and a friend sipped theirs, she frankly explained that there wasn't another clean cup in the house.

The friend offered to go wash one. "Over my dead body!" Olivia said. "I will not let you see that horrible kitchen."

Eventually, such devastation must be faced. Marc and Olivia cleaned up that night—and agreed that since they were busy professional people who worked at home, they needed help after all. . . .

Olivia and Marc have their studies in the same wing of the house, but they visit each other during working hours only on formal emergencies. In Olivia's study is a carefully kept catalogue of the more than a hundred scripts that have been submitted to her in the past year. In her own precise longhand, she makes marginal notes about the possibilities of each role. A story rejected today may come to life six months hence as a result of her intelligent consideration of its qualities—a fact which has earned her the gratitude of more than one writer and producer.

In the midst of all this preoccupation, Olivia is likely to emerge of an afternoon to face an irate husband who bellows, "Olivia, you didn't eat your lunch!" Such reprimands she takes with humility.

Nevertheless, in some argument about world affairs, she'll marshal her rebuttal and fly verbally at her husband in a manner to shock anyone not conversant with the understanding manner in which they have adjusted their temperaments.

There's one matter concerning them on which there's no argument whatsoever—the matter of Olivia's ex-beaus. Marc frankly stated when he married Olivia that he wanted her to drop all contact with her ex-beaus. This may have been because Marc has lived a good deal in Mexico—on which country he's an admiring authority. In Mexico, marriage automatically ends a girl's friendship with other men. Anyhow, Olivia has dropped all her ex-beaus.

The Goodriches make no claim, even to themselves, of a perfect marriage. They do, however, take the responsibilities of their vows with refreshing seriousness.

Olivia and Marc have no desire to be on the "best guest list"—as they inevitably would were Olivia to become First Lady. Their circle of friends is small—but permanent. They're both staunchly determined to live their life together as they see fit—and they see fit to cherish their sensible freedom of choice.

And so, though the pressure may be strong on Olivia to tackle the role of First Lady of Hollywood, I believe that Olivia and her Marc are even stronger—and that this will prove to be one more battle in which Olivia the Magnificent, now aided and abetted by an adoring and understanding husband, will emerge the victor.

THE END

HOW TIME FLIES!

■ And how about a few better roles for Bette Davis? The little Davis lass, whose Mildred in Of Human Bondage was one of the outstanding screen portrayals of last season actually hasn't had a part worthy of her talents, since. In her newest picture, Special Agent, she has so little to do, she could almost as well have stayed home. How about giving this little girl a great big hand?—October 1935 Modern Screen

* * *

Dick Powell's the answer to many a maiden's prayer, if fan mail is any criterion. And a very busy young man too, what with just having completed a small private hotel, where he will spend his declining bachelor days.—October 1935 Modern Screen

* * *

Robert Taylor . . . swellest fledgling star in Hollywood, dining out with Irene Hervey who is his best girl and his greatest inspiration to succeed. They go steadily together like any other small town couple, he says.—September 1935 Modern Screen

PERSONAL! to YOUNG WIVES
enjoy this 'extra' advantage in
INTIMATE FEMININE HYGIENE

Greaseless Suppository Assures Continuous Medication for Hours

Many a young wife who knows about Zonitors has a much better chance for happiness. This higher type intimate feminine cleanliness is one of the MOST EFFECTIVE methods ever discovered. Zonitors are more convenient, daintier and less embarrassing to use — SO POWERFULLY GERMICIDAL yet ABSOLUTELY SAFE to tissues. They're positively non-poisonous, non-irritating and non-smarting.

Easy To Carry If Away From Home

Zonitors are greaseless, stainless, snow-white vaginal suppositories. They are not the type that quickly melt away. Instead, when inserted, they instantly begin to release powerful germicidal properties and continue to do so for hours.

They Leave No Tell-Tale Odor

Zonitors do not 'mask' offending odor. They actually destroy it—help guard against infection. Zonitors kill every germ they touch. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE Zonitors immediately kill every reachable germ and keep them from multiplying. You can buy Zonitors at any drug counter.

Zonitors
(Each sealed in separate glass vial)

FREE: Mail this coupon today for free booklet sent in plain wrapper. Reveals frank intimate facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMR-49, 370 Lexington Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

MADE SPECIALLY FOR BLONDES

New Shampoo with ANDIUM

Washes Hair Lighter
Gives it SHINE...!

To help keep blonde hair from growing dark or faded use BLONDEX, the home shampoo that contains amazing new ANDIUM for extra lightness and SHINE. Instantly removes the dingy film that makes hair dark. Washes hair shades lighter, gives it lovely lustre. Takes only 11 minutes at home. Safe for children. Get BLONDEX at 10c, drug and dept stores.

CAT-TEX

SOLE OUT-WEARS LEATHER!

EARN EXTRA MONEY! FULL, SPARE TIME!
Make many EXTRA DOLLARS with our new, sell-on-sight Plastic Line! Tablecloths, Aprons; Combination Shopping Bags; many other lovely, fast-selling items, novelties. Postal brings free details. Write today. HURRY! ROYALTY SALES CO. Box 748, Passaic 2, N. J.

Doesn't it seem more sensible?
ALL-VEGETABLE LAXATIVE

NATURE'S REMEDY (NR) TABLETS —A purely vegetable laxative to relieve constipation without the usual griping, sickening, perturbing sensations, and does not cause a rash. Try NR—you will see the difference. Uncoated or candy coated—their action is dependable, thorough, yet gentle as millions of NR's have proved. Get a 25c box and use as directed.

Nature's Remedy
NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT

FUSSY STOMACH?
RELIEF FOR ACID INDIGESTION, GAS AND HEARTBURN

FOR THE TUMMY!

THE CASE OF THE HESITANT HEART

(Continued from page 63)

to ask who gave it to her. I forgot my manners but not my mission and gaped.

"Well, show me, show me, show me—come on," I urged. "The ring."

"Ring?" Greer blinked her eyes beautifully. "There isn't any ring. We're not engaged."

"You mean you've accepted a maharajah's present like that and you're not engaged!"

Greer shook her head.

"Then," I said, "let's put it plainly—when are you going to marry Buddy?"

"Why, Hedda," protested Greer, wide-eyed and innocent, "we have no plans."

"No plans," echoed Buddy Fogelson. But he was smiling—and Greer, she was already giggling and blushing away like a bride.

Greer's had men in her life before—but never as grand a guy as Buddy Fogelson. Buddy's no Adonis. He's not even handsome, if you're looking for Barrymore profiles, Bob Taylor widow's peaks or Guy Madison curls. But Buddy's got character, manliness, gentleness and kindness written in every one of the many lines of his strong, rugged face. One glance, and you know you're seeing a man.

bud conquers all . . .

Bud Fogelson's a Texas millionaire—and a self-made one, for he never inherited a nickel. He hails from Dallas, where everyone who knows him and has watched him make his fortune in oil respects and loves him. That irresistible appeal clicks wherever he goes—even in Hollywood, where in the fairly short time he's been around I've yet to find one person—male or female—who doesn't fall completely for his quiet charm. I've yet to hear one snide remark shot his way, one word against him.

Even Richard Ney, Greer's divorced husband, thinks Buddy's swell. Peter Lawford, much younger than Buddy, is now a great pal of his. Pete was out shooting skeet one day with Ned McLean of Washington, D. C. (Evalyn Walsh McLean's son) and Ned had Buddy in tow. All Pete knew was that his name was Buddy and that he didn't have his car with him, so he offered to drive the nice guy home. Buddy countered with an invitation to dinner and they've been great friends ever since. Since then he's visited Buddy in Dallas and had himself a time in that smart and breezy Texas town.

During World War II, Buddy served on the staff of General Eisenhower as a colonel—and he made a fine record. When he came back he rolled up his sleeves and set to work again. He's the prototype of the successful American business man—a guy who's collected his stake with boldness and hard work, with brains to see opportunity and the guts to gamble for it.

Every time I've talked to Buddy he's protested, "I'm not news, Hedda, I'm not even interesting," and I've come right back, "You are to me." But he still won't say a thing about himself. He couldn't. Buddy isn't the type. He hasn't used words to build his life, but actions—and you can read those in the lines of his suntanned face, the blue Texas eyes that are gentle, but at the same time tough.

Buddy has an artistic side to him that you'd never suspect unless you knew him well. Walter Pidgeon, one of his best friends, who's visited Buddy in Dallas and has known him over a long span of years,

Don't Let "Dryness" Spoil Your HAIR!

Just try this SYSTEM on your hair for 7 days, then see for yourself if you are really enjoying the pleasure of Attractive Hair that can so often capture love and romance for you.

DO YOU WANT... LONGER HAIR? MAKE THIS EASY 7-DAY TEST

When SCALP and HAIR conditions are normal and dry, brittle, breaking-off hair can be retarded, it has a chance to get longer and more beautiful. Make this easy 7-DAY test. This amazing JUELENE System is not a hair restorative.

SEND NO MONEY!—Fully Guaranteed

Just try the JUELENE SYSTEM for 7 days. Then let your mirror PROVE the thrilling results. JUELENE comes in 2 Forms ☐ Pomade ☐ Liquid. SEND FOR IT TODAY! C. O. D. $1.00 plus Government charges. It is fully guaranteed. Money back if you are not delighted. Write Now!

JUEL CO., 4727 N. Damen, Dept. R-603, Chicago 25, Ill.

NOW! ANYONE CAN HAVE PLENTY of HOT WATER QUICK

Summer or Winter . . . Day or Night

New Pocket-size Portable Electric Water Heater. Regular Price $2.95

SPECIAL OFFER NOW . . . . ONLY $1.98

Merely place a BOIL-QWIK Portable Electric Water Heater in a receptacle containing water. Just plug in nearest socket . . . Eureka! In a few minutes Hot Water. Thousands use for bath, washing clothes and dishes, shaving, cleaning cream separators, pails, etc. No fires to build, hot water to carry or running to basement to light fires. Read and follow directions before using. The regular price of BOIL-QWIK is $2.95; but if you'll tell your friends about it, to advertise BOIL-QWIK we'll let you have one for $1.98 plus tax. SEND NO MONEY! Just your name and address. We'll mail heater at once together with FREE information telling how you can get a SECOND heater WITHOUT COST. On arrival merely pay postman $1.98 plus Federal Tax, C. O. D. postal charges. Satisfaction guaranteed or return within 10 days for full refund of purchase price. This special price offer is subject to withdrawal without notice so write today. SEND NO MONEY!

ZEVEX CORP., 11 E. Hubbard, Dept. D-67, Chicago 11, Ill.

HEMSTITCHER

Hemstitch on any sewing machine with this handy attachment. Does two piece, criss-cross, inlaid, circular and hemstitching for pleats, also tucking, smocking and picoting. Makes rugs, comforters, slippers, etc. out of any material. Easy directions included

Both for $1.00

BUTTON HOLER

Makes button holes on your sewing machine instead of by hand. Also darns stockings, sews buttons, zippers, and can be used for quilting. Sews in any direction—front, back or sideways.

SEND NO MONEY—Merely send your name, address and pay postman $1.00 plus postage on arrival. Or, send $1.00 with order, and we mail attachments postage paid. You risk nothing. Satisfaction guaranteed or $1.00 back

LELANE CO. Dept. DM49 Box 571 Kansas City 10, Mo.

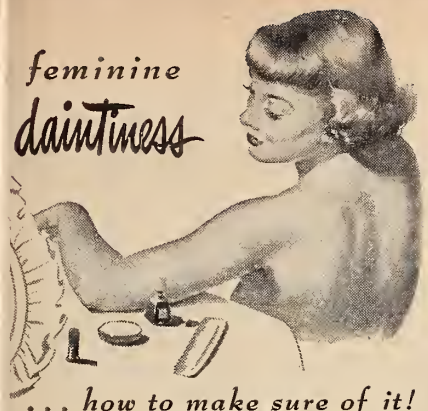
Easy as A-B-C

Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher

LEARN AT HOME THIS MONEY SAVING WAY

Simple as A-B-C. Your lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. You read real notes—no "numbers" or trick music. Some of our 850,000 students are band LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. Soon you are playing popular music. Mail coupon for our illustrated Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention your favorite instrument. U. S. School of Music, 1444 Brunswick Bldg., N. Y. 10, N. Y. (51st Anniversary)

FREE BOOKLET



U. S. School of Music, 1444 Brunswick Bldg., N.Y.10, N.Y.

Please send me Free Booklet and Print and Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument).

Have you
Instrument.....Instrument?.....

Name.....
(Please Print)

Address.....

feminine daintiness

. . . how to make sure of it!

Intimate feminine daintiness is vital to your charm. To be sure . . . syringe regularly. Faultless Feminine Syringes are designed specifically for this hygienic care, their gentle flushing action cleansing thoroughly, quickly. Modern, convenient, no accessories to handle, easy to put away. $1 to $2.98 at drug stores.

send for this free personal booklet

"Facts You Should Know About Intimate Feminine Care." Written by a registered physician. Sent in plain envelope.

Feminine Products Div., Dept. MS-49.
The Faultless Rubber Co., Ashland, Ohio

Faultless feminine syringes is my authority that there are few finer tenor voices around than Buddy's. When he was a kid, Buddy went to New York and by accident met the greatest tenor of them all, Enrico Caruso. He sang for him and Caruso begged him, "Let nothing stop you from developing your voice. It's one of the finest I've ever listened to."

It still is, according to Pidge (who can warble a note or two himself). Those two get together beside a piano, when nobody's around, and there isn't an operatic tenor aria that Buddy can't sing beautifully. But music, the way things turned out, was never to be his profession. He couldn't follow Caruso's advice because there was his way in the world to make, from young manhood on, and he made it, very well indeed. Yet Buddy never lost his voice—or his love of music and the arts. Last time Dorothy Kirsten, the Metropolitan Opera star, was out in Hollywood he sang duets with her—privately, of course, and only safely within the circle of his friends. Because Buddy could never be a show-off.

pleasant atmosphere . . .

Buddy Fogelson is 44. He's on the short side in build, stocky-ish, and, as I've said, nobody would ever swoon at first glance. He's been married, and divorced, but—to show the sensible, good-natured person he is—his ex-wife and the man she later married are among his best friends in Dallas and he sees them often. He keeps two apartments in his home city, one at the Dallas Athletic Club, and another at the fashionable Maple Terrace. He has another, since Hollywood and Greer Garson came into his life, at the Shoreham in Beverly Hills. Before he moved into that he lived at the Beverly Hills Hotel—and you can't find a bellboy or a waiter there who doesn't sing his praises. When Buddy lived there he warmed up the place with his hospitality, friendliness and the family atmosphere he loves to surround himself with.

Buddy has no children of his own. But his sister has some charming children, and five or six years ago Buddy adopted one nephew, Gale, and has been a real father to him, not merely a doting uncle. And he's been that to the rest of his nieces and nephews, too. He's not only paid the expenses of their education but has personally supervised it—he's a working dad by proxy who basks in their fun and affections.

In fact, it was to look after his foster brood that Buddy first started coming out to California. The kids were in school here and he just had to see how they were doing. Last summer there was hardly a lunch or dinner at the Beverly Hills Hotel when 10 or 12 of Gale's college sidekicks weren't around swimming in the pool, slamming tennis balls across the courts and being entertained royally by Uncle Buddy, who's never happier than when he can make kids have a good time. It was through his love of his "family" that he walked onto a movie set for the first time in his life—and met his fate in Greer.

Elizabeth Taylor was the unconscious Cupid in the case. Like this:

Elizabeth's dad, Francis Taylor, runs an art gallery in Beverly Hills where he sells paintings and Liz is around there a lot. Pretty girls and attractive young men of the same age find a way of getting together. It wasn't long before Elizabeth was a member in good standing of the Fogelson young set and Buddy and her dad, Francis, were pals too. About then Elizabeth asked Buddy and Gale if they wouldn't like to see what every visitor to Hollywood wants to see sometime—a movie being made. She was making Julia Misbehaves at MGM.

FREE ENLARGEMENT of your favorite photo

NEW SILK FINISH • GOLD TOOLED FRAME

Just to get acquainted, we will make you a FREE 5x7 enlargement of any picture or negative and mount it in a handsome gold tooled frame. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes, and clothing for information on having this enlargement beautifully hand colored in oil.

SEND NO MONEY. Send your most cherished photo or negative now, accept your beautifully framed enlargement when it arrives, and pay postman only 19c for frame plus small handling and mailing charge. If you are not completely satisfied, return the enlargement within 10 days and your money will be refunded. But you may keep the handsome frame as a gift for promptness. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS
7021 Santa Monica Blvd., Dept. M103, Hollywood 38, Cal.

FREE . . PERFUME SAMPLE

FROM CALIFORNIA . . . "FLOWERS OF GOLD" exciting new fragrance. So lingering, alluring, tantalizing men can't resist. Send only 10c for postage & packing. WE MAIL Reg. 1.00 size as ADVERTISING OFFER.

GLAMORINE OF CALIF.
140 Borel Ave. Dept. 6 San Mateo, Calif.

WANT A U.S. GOVERNMENT JOB?

START AS HIGH AS $3,021 YEAR

Thousands appointments being made.
Veterans Get Preference.
Mail Coupon today SURE.

COUPON
FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. M108, Rochester 4, N. Y.
(Not Government Controlled)
Sirs: Rush without charge (1) 40-page book with list of U. S. Government Jobs. (2) Tell me how to qualify for one.
Name.....
Address.....Vet?.....

TEETHING PAINS RELIEVED QUICKLY

WHEN your baby suffers from teething pains, just rub a few drops of Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion on the sore, tender, little gums and the pain will be relieved promptly.

Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is the prescription of a famous baby specialist and has been used by mothers for over fifty years. One bottle is usually enough for one baby for the entire teething period.

Buy it from your druggist today

DR. HAND'S TEETHING LOTION
Just rub it on the gums

A REAL MIDGET RADIO!

CARRY IT IN YOUR POCKET

Works on new diode—Needs No Tubes, Batteries or Electric "Plug-Ins." Plays years for nothing! In Beautiful Red Plastic.

Guaranteed to Work on local stations

SEND ONLY $1.00

(bill, ck, mo) and pay postman $2.99 C.O.D. plus postage or send $3.99 and we pay postage. SENT COMPLETE, READY TO PLAY on simple attachment. LISTEN AT HOME, IN BED, ON FARMS, SCHOOL, MOST ANYWHERE, ANYTIME! Wonderful gifts for anyone! Amazingly low-priced! Order Now!

MIDWAY CO. Dept. TMM-4 KEARNEY, NEBR.

MAKE $$$$ EASILY

Selling greeting cards, napkins, coasters, stationery and a complete line with name on. Costs nothing to try. Send for samples and Selling Plan on approval.

MERIT
370 PLANE ST. DEPT. J NEWARK, N. J.

NEW! ORDER BY MAIL · THE ORIENTAL TOUCH

Pat. Pend.

Actual Photo

lustrous SILVER COPPER BRONZE GOLD

sizes 1 to 12 narrow medium wide

MING THONGS with PLATFORM

- Built In Air Lift Arch
- Wedge Heel. Removable Straps
- Crepe Sole

Never before offered at a price so low! Fit Guaranteed! Money-back guaranteed

ONLY 2.95

COLLEEN ENTERPRISES, Haverhill, Mass.
Rush me prs. Ming Thongs @ 2.95 ea.
SIZE ..... WIDTH ..... COLOR .....
2nd Color Choice .....
NAME .....
STREET .....
CITY ..... ZONE ..... STATE .....
☐ Check ☐ Money Order ☐ C.O.D. d

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL
MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST
Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.
Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c. (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 392S Strathmoor Station, Dept. 2409, Detroit 27, Michigan.
SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE
©1935 LAKE LAB

Imitation DIAMOND BRIDAL SET
$1.95 Each → BOTH $2.95
PERFECT MATCHED Gorgeous TRUE LOVE Pattern
Exquisite Engagement and Wedding Rings set with Gleaming Brilliant imitation Diamonds. Extra Large White Center Brilliant. Genuine STERLING SILVER Mounting. SEND NO MONEY. Send size or string. Pay postman C. O. D. on delivery plus 20% tax and postage.
WORLD WIDE DIAMOND CO., Dept. A-935
2451 S. MICHIGAN AVENUE . CHICAGO 16, ILLINOIS

WHY DON'T YOU WRITE?
Writing short stories, articles on homemaking, business, hobbies, travel, local and club activities, etc., will enable you to earn extra money. In your own home, on your own time, the New York Copy Desk Method teaches you how to write the way newspaper women learn—by writing. Our unique "Writing Aptitude Test" tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities essential to successful writing. You'll enjoy this test. Write for it, without cost or obligation.
VETERANS: This course approved for Veterans' Training.
NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
Suite S719-O, One Park Avenue New York 16, N. Y.

LIKE to DRAW?
Use spare time at home preparing for profitable art career. A complete home study course with money back agreement. For details and talent test give age and occupation.
AMERICAN SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL ART
DIVISION D. BOX 8066 . DALLAS 5. TEXAS

THERE'S MONEY FOR You in PLASTICS
No Experience Necessary!
Here's CASH for you . . . easy! Show friends, neighbors amazing laundry-saving tablecloths, aprons, rainwear, babies' needs, etc. Tremendous demand. Sell on sight. BIG PROFITS, full or part time. Write for FREE Outfit.
LORAINE PRODUCTS, Dept. DM-141
411 So. Clinton Street Chicago 7, Illinois

COULD YOU USE MORE MONEY?
MAKE UP TO 100% CASH PROFIT SELLING FRIENDS GREETING CARDS
Make extra money easily, pleasantly. Show latest, most novel box assortments for All Occasions, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Stationery. Wonderful values bring quick sales. Extra bonus. Write for free samples Name Imprinted and Floral Decorated Stationery and new All-Occasion samples on approval. Special offers.
FREE SAMPLES FLORAL DECORATED and PERSONAL STATIONERY
PILGRIM GREETING CARD CO.
111 Summer St., Dept. M-1, Boston, Mass.

BROKEN JEWELRY WANTED
All kinds. Highest cash prices paid for rings, jewelry, spectacles, gold teeth, diamonds, broken and usable watches, etc. Cash mailed promptly. Write for FREE shipping container.
LOWE'S, Dept. MS
Holland Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years
Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H.S. texts supplied. Diploma. Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.
American School, H-414, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

"Sure," he grinned gallantly, "I want to see my favorite star, Miss Elizabeth Taylor, in action."

"Oh, I'm not the star," Liz told him. "Greer Garson is. You know her, of course."

"No," said Buddy.

"But you've seen her—on the screen I mean."

Buddy shook his head. "Afraid not," he admitted. "I don't see many pictures." Truth is, Buddy Fogelson has been far too busy for much movie-going. (To date, he tells me, he's seen Greer in only one picture, Julia Misbehaves.)

Well, he knew who Greer Garson was, of course, but that's about all. He wasn't interested in the glamor part of Hollywood. So when he stepped onto the set of Julia Misbehaves with Elizabeth Taylor, he wasn't smitten by the Great Garson's glamor. On the contrary.

It's kind of a romantic story, how Greer caught Buddy's eye—and his heart—at the same time that day. If a clever script writer were dreaming up a way to make boy and girl "meet cute," as they say in scenario circles, he could do worse than snitch it.

not too impressed . . .

It so happened, you see, that when Mr. Fogelson looked out on the stage he saw, centered among a swarm of hovering movie-makers, a very Hollywood-looking lady, obviously the star. People were fluttering around focusing cameras carefully her way, beaming spotlights, giving reverent pats to her coiffure, artistically draping her dress and going through all the whoop-de-do that an out-country boy like Buddy supposed was what happened to a movie star in action. "So that's Greer Garson," he thought. "Hmmmm." He wasn't too impressed with what he saw.

But out of the side of his appraising Texas eyes Buddy saw something seated in a corner that did make him perk up and take notice and hum a "Hmmmm" in a different tone. It was an attractive redhead that piqued his interest. This carrot-top was obviously nobody much—maybe a script girl or a steno. She was surrounded by grips and electricians joking and cutting up. And try as he might, Buddy couldn't keep his attention on the star in the spotlight. Whenever he looked that way, he found his eyes bouncing back to the redhead who was so easy on his blue eyes.

When Elizabeth Taylor snapped him out of his reverie by asking, "Don't you want to meet Greer Garson?" he rallied like a true gentleman. "Well, maybe I'd better." But inside, Buddy was telling himself, "I'd a darn sight rather meet that cute redhead."

Which is exactly what happened, because that's right where Elizabeth led him. You've already guessed it, of course—the glamor gal in the spotlight was Greer's stand-in, and the redhead cutting up with the crew was Greer herself!

Elizabeth explained the mistake and Greer threw back her head and laughed and her very merry and warm personality was just what Buddy Fogelson admired. Greer happened to be footloose and fancy free—if not yet legally free, as she is now—and in no time Julia Misbehaves was completed and she could turn her mind to more tender things than mud puddles and acrobats.

All in all, the soil was ripe for romance. And that's what blossomed, dearies, although nobody's done much confessing about when it turns into an orange blossom, least of all Greer Garson or Buddy Fogelson. I like to tease them both about the marathon courtship they're waging, and it's fun to blame, in turn, faint heart and fair lady. I'm not too

Money is unimportant here!!

Land of Cockaigne (COCKAYNE). This is a modern artist's idea of that delightful paradise which was part of the folklore of Europeans many, many centuries ago.

THE LAND of Cockaigne is a wonderful place where the houses are built of cake, and shops are eager to give you their merchandise for free.

We live in a land blessed with plenty—But the rub is that we will always need hard cash to buy the things we want.

Assure yourself that you will have the money you need for the things you want later in life is to salt away some of the money you now earn in U. S. Savings Bonds.

Start saving now . . . the automatic way, on the Payroll Savings Plan where you work, or through your bank or post office.

AUTOMATIC SAVING IS SURE SAVING-
U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢ and 50¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.
Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

WIN CASH CONTESTS
WIN next contest you enter. CONTEST BULLETIN has helped others win. Big winners tell secrets, teach you how to win BIG PRIZES. Magazine lists current contests.
SEND 25c FOR SAMPLE COPY.
GENERAL CONTEST BULLETIN
1609 East 5th St. Dept. 104-D Duluth 5, Minn.

LOOK! 10 DAY "NO-RISK" FREE EXAMINATION OFFER STARTS YOU IN AN EASY, PROFITABLE GREETING CARD BUSINESS PROFITS TO 100%
Take quick orders—make big extra cash. 47 different money makers. Bonus. Special offers. Request All-Occasion boxes on approval for 10 day free examination and FREE exclusive Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery samples.
FREE SAMPLES EXCLUSIVE Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, North Abington 53, Mass.

EXCITING LOVE TALES

ALL 4 for Only $1.00

Reprints of Regular $2 Books at this special price

MADE FOR LOVE
By Gail Jordan

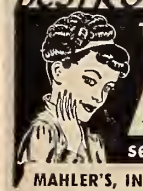
Gerald Ramsay, though only twenty-five, has gleaned a vast experience in love. Sybaritic and personable, he has just enough money and just enough charm to be able to make a permanent career of being a house guest. And in the course of his visits, into the homes of the wealthy, he had met girls who had everything and were willing to prove it.

EXCESS WIFE
By Wright Williams

Women were very important to Carlton Shaw, but only as stepping stones to success in radio. But he learned to his sorrow that though a man may have a "use 'em and leave 'em" attitude, women usually prefer their affairs with strings attached.

THE FALLEN WOMAN
By Carlotta Baker

As a doctor of psychiatry, Helen Denise learned a good deal about life in the raw from her patients. She had in Sonya Jaeger a living example of an over-rich, over-sexed girl. In the wealthy wastrel, Florian del Vecchio, she could study the effect of dissipation and riotous living on a man who was making a career of sowing wild oats. But Helen herself remained on the sidelines UNTIL Florian set out to destroy HER OWN careful defenses.



A TALENT FOR LOVE
By Thomas Stone

In Manhattan's Greenwich Village, would-be writers, artists, and young people of various other talents live and love. Some of them have more of a talent for love than anything else. Tommy Terry, for instance, never got beyond the first act of a play, but he had been the star of more than one bedroom scene.

These four books are so thrilling that they were "best-sellers" at $2.00 each. Each one is packed with romance, passion and thrills. Each book is complete and bound separately. Not one word left out. Hours of exciting reading. Mailed postpaid if you send order with $1.00 or sent C.O.D. plus postage. Money Back Guarantee.

KNICKERBOCKER PUB. CO., Dept. N-12
26 East 21st St. New York 10, N. Y.

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER

TEMPORARY RELIEF IS NOT ENOUGH

ONLY BY KILLING THE HAIR ROOT CAN YOU BE SURE UNWANTED HAIR IS GONE FOREVER. BRINGS RELIEF AND SOCIAL HAPPINESS. DO NOT USE OUR METHOD UNTIL YOU HAVE READ OUR INSTRUCTION BOOK CAREFULLY AND LEARNED TO USE THE MAHLER METHOD SAFELY AND EFFICIENTLY. USED SUCCESSFULLY OVER 50 YEARS.

NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU

SEND 6¢ COINS OR STAMPS FOR BOOKLET

MAHLER'S, INC., Dept. 36-D, E. Providence, R. I.

GET $$$ EASILY

Selling greeting cards, napkins, coasters, stationery and a complete line with name on. Costs nothing to try. Send for samples and Selling Plan on approval.

WELCOME

368 Plane St. Dept. C Newark 2, N. J.

Learn FLOWER ARRANGEMENT

Floristry and Floriculture. Big demand for arrangers and lecturers. Study at home. Learn to make professional sprays, wreaths, corsages, etc. Send for folder "Opportunities in Floristry."

NATIONAL LANDSCAPE INSTITUTE
Dept. D-4, 310 S. Robertson Blvd., Los Angeles 36

GOOD MONEY IN WEAVING

Earn money at home weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from old rags or new yarn—in your community! No experience necessary. 31,000 doing it with easy running Union Looms costing less than $50.00! Send for our free booklet today.

UNION LOOM WORKS
112 Factory St. BOONVILLE, N. Y.

STAMMER?

GET THIS FREE BOOK!

This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 48 years. Benj. N. Bogue, Dept. 4910, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

...Train At Home For This WELL PAID PROFESSION-

PRACTICAL NURSING

Help fill the urgent need for Trained Practical Nurses. If you are between 18 and 55, it's easy to train at home in your spare time to take your place in this respected calling. Many earn while learning. High school is not needed. Nurse's equipment included. Mail this ad today for FREE Facts.

Wayne School Of Practical Nursing, Inc.,
2525 Sheffield Ave., Oesk K-39, Chicago 14, Ill.
Please rush FREE FACTS and Sample Lesson Pages.

NAME _____ Age _____

Full Address _____

frivolous, either, when I say I think a guy like Buddy deserves better treatment than the dingle-dangle Greer's giving him. In fact, I said as much to Buddy the evening I saw them at that cocktail party—and he said, pretty straight, too, "Tell that to Greer, won't you?"

"Tell her?" I came back. "I've been yelling it at the girl!"

But I must admit their "friendship" (as the studio puts it) has encountered a slightly on-again-off-again schedule which is a handicap to any passion with serious intent. Since Buddy's big oil interests are in Texas, he's been in Hollywood mostly only for two- or three-week stays, flying to and fro in his private plane, making dates with Greer by long distance—and sometimes having to break them when a business deal comes up. But still, there's been plenty of time and opportunity to dine and dance, to take in parties in the set they both travel in—at Louis B. Mayer's and Sir Charles Mendl's, at Pidges, and Hernando Courtwright's (who owns the Beverly Hills Hotel) and at Greer's house. And they've managed to be together quietly up at Greer's Carmel hideaway cottage, too—with Mama along to chaperone.

Greer keeps saying, "We're not engaged"—and Buddy backs her up. But to me, both of them look like cats who've just gulped down a couple of canaries.

Greer's wearing a tiny, square-cut diamond on her third finger left hand and she says, "Oh, that's just an old ring I've had." How old? It could be a perfect cover-up to wear a tiny chip like that when everyone would expect Buddy Fogelson to come through with a bunch of karats. And yet, as I told them that night when I saw those jewels circling Greer's wrist—"in all my long and varied experience I've yet to see a man hand a woman such an architectural structure in diamonds as that bracelet—unless he had very, very serious intentions." I drew only smug smiles from the lovebirds.

And Buddy has bestowed other lovely gifts on his lady. A prize Susie Singer ceramic, for one thing, that's a beauty; and several gorgeous paintings by Angna Enters, whose tiny hideaway house in Santa Monica they've often visited.

There are other straws in the wind: A friend of Greer's not too long ago had to let an excellent chef go and told Garson about it. "Maybe I'd better take him," mused Greer, "he'd be perfect for Buddy

MODERN SCREEN

"Stop showing off—who do you think you are—Ray Milland?"

MOTHER!

Be wise – give

This Pleasant Laxative

OF COURSE you hate to force a nasty-tasting laxative on your child. Next time he needs relief, give him pleasant-tasting Ex-Lax – the dependable laxative many doctors use in their practice.

Children love its delicious chocolate taste. Millions of mothers give Ex-Lax with confidence to their children. Ex-Lax is effective in a gentle way.

Ex-Lax is still only 10¢. There is no better laxative at any price.

When Your Child has a COLD

... and needs a laxative, give him easy-acting Ex-Lax. It works gently, comfortably and effectively.

When Nature 'forgets'... remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

AMAZING OFFER—$50 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES

of entirely different new DeLuxe All-Occasion cards. Patented feature television card included. Each box sells for $1.00, your profit 50¢. Surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Write today.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. S-19, White Plains, N. Y.

HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS Pain

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

"Exotic You"

COLORS
- BLACK
- AQUA
- ROSE
- POWDER BLUE
- PEACOCK

SEND FOR OUR NEW 1949 FREE CATALOG

IN ALL SIZES
9-11-13-15-17
10-12-14-16-18-20
only 6.98

16½-18½-20½-22½-24½
38-40-42-44-46-48
only 7.98

For daytime drama . . . for night time romance . . . You'll thrill to the irresistible glamour of exotic "Moorish" lace and grosgrain ribbon as it sweeps excitingly across the flesh tinted yoke and softly caresses your coquettish shoulders.

Seductive lace-edged peplum, lavishly draped in tiers, floats gloriously 'round your flirtatious hips to the tantalizing back-bustle. Naughty bo-peep neckline ties in a demure bow.

Expensively fashioned with full-flared gored skirt zipper placket, in your choice of finest quality crease resistant SILKY RAYON or luxurious quality CREPE ROMAINE.

DIRECT FROM OUR FACTORY TO YOU!

Send no money 10 DAY FREE TRIAL!

Miss Lee-Fashions, Inc. 275 SEVENTH AVE., DEPT. MS4, NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

Please rush "EXOTIC YOU" sizes and colors indicated. If not delighted, I may return dress within 10 days for refund.

☐ I prefer SILKY RAYON ☐ I prefer CREPE ROMAINE

☐ Send C.O.D. I'll pay postmn ☐ I enclose $ ..... you pay postage.

SIZE ..... 1st COLOR CHOICE ..... 2nd COLOR CHOICE .....

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... ZONE ..... STATE .....

and myself." (But she didn't take him.)

And an unmistakable change has come over Greer since she's had a man paying her worshipful court. It's the sort of cocky, assured look any woman gets who's in love. You can spot it a mile off. If I were a sob sister I'd fall back on that good old adjective "radiant" and not be too far off. She seems to love everyone else, too, more than before.

She's been pure peaches and cream to work with on the set of The Forsyte Saga—and even that eccentric Celt, Errol Flynn, who can cut a temperamental caper when he feels like it, is eating out of her hand.

So suppose by the time this gets set up in type they'll be Mr. and Mrs. Fogelson. It's coming on to a year since Buddy and Greer discovered each other and something's bound to happen soon. What are Greer Garson's chances of happiness with a man like the rich but unglamorous big business man from Dallas? Frankly, I don't know. Maybe Greer herself really doesn't.

Greer Garson is a lady driven hard by ambition to make something great of herself. I'm convinced her career is the first love in her life and always will be. From girlhood on she has fought fiercely through outrageous fortune, accidents, and discouraging health to get where she is. Success means everything to her. Each film she undertakes is Greer's whole life at that moment. When she finishes the day's work, there's just enough of Greer left to wobble into bed with a dinner tray. What would she have left for a husband, especially a family-loving, home-happy guy like Buddy?

As I write this, Buddy's in Beverly Hills, but he's spending his evenings without Greer, who's toiling away in The Forsyte Saga. He's seen alone at the hotels and cafés—where, incidentally, all the eligible girls in Hollywood out on the prowl stop by and give him a big hello, turning on the charm, and who can blame them? I get Garson-Fogelson rift rumors every hour—but if they're ever true, it won't be because Buddy Fogelson isn't. He's not that type.

If those two decide not to marry, I believe it will be either because Buddy Fogelson reasons that a busy screen star like Greer Garson is too elusive for a wife—or, on Greer's part, a decision that she could never yield a part of the career which is her life and become merely the wife of an American business man. Success, fame and the spotlight are her life's blood.

mother and daughter . . .

And then, too, there's another thing: Greer is pretty much mama's girl, and always has been. There's a very special affection which exists between her and the beautiful English lady with the halo of soft white hair, the deep blue eyes and the classic cameo-cut face. It was born of Greer's struggle days, when the goal behind her drive to success was to establish her mother in the sort of home she would have had if Greer's father hadn't died. That she has done at last in Bel-Air, and it's a source of great satisfaction to Greer. They're constant companions, those two, go everywhere together—to parties, premières, even baby showers. But I'm of the school that doesn't think that mothers, when they become mothers-in-law, are always much help toward married happiness, no matter how heavenly they are.

Certainly Greer's marriage with Richard Ney didn't work when he moved into Greer's house with mama to make a threesome. Tell me any place where it does. But then, I never could understand that marriage, anyway—either for Greer Garson or Dick Ney.

At any rate, it was a wartime marriage and had very little chance of success for dozens of reasons. Richard was away most of the time in the Navy and Greer was busy making her string of wartime hits. I check that off to a Hollywood whim or whimsy of some kind. (When Richard's book comes out—he's writing one on his Hollywood experiences—maybe there'll be a Fuller Explanation Department in a chapter on his marriage to Greer.)

So if and when Greer Garson and Buddy Fogelson tell it to a preacher, it will be Greer's third try at a happy marriage—she left her first husband in England—and you know about the third time being the charm. If Greer can walk the ticklish tightrope between Greer Garson, the all-out Hollywood star, and Mrs. Fogelson, a plain man's wife, I can't see any reason why they shouldn't be able to surmount such matters as different nationalities and backgrounds, or the two different worlds of Hollywood and the rip-roaring state of Texas, or—yes—even a mother-in-law.

Anyway, I'm holding the thought and crossing my fingers—and calling Greer Garson every hour on the hour with that same frank question: "When are you two going to get married?"

What I'm getting, too, as of now, is still that same old transcribed answer, "No plans."

Well, believe me, if I were Greer Garson—or Josephine Doakes—and I had a grade-A guy like Buddy Fogelson still hanging around with that gleam in his eye, I'd be mighty busy making some plans. That's for sure! THE END

Truly - you'll be lovelier with Solitair

SKIN-SAFE SOLITAIR! The only foundation-and-powder make-up with clinical evidence*—certified by leading skin specialists from coast to coast—that it DOES NOT CLOG PORES, cause skin texture change or inflammation of hair follicle or other gland opening. No other liquid, powder, cream or cake "foundation" make-up offers such positive proof of safety for your skin.

*biopsy-specimen

Gown by Ceil Chapman. Jewels by Seaman-Schepps.

See the loveliest you that you've ever seen—the minute you use Solitair cake make-up. Gives your skin a petal-smooth appearance—so flatteringly natural that you look as if you'd been born with it! Solitair is entirely different—a special feather-weight formula. Clings longer. Outlasts powder. Hides little skin faults—yet never feels mask-like, never looks "made-up." Like finest face creams, Solitair contains Lanolin to protect against dryness. Truly—you'll be lovelier with this make-up that millions prefer. No better quality. Only $1.00.

Cake Make-Up Solitair

Fashion-Point Lipstick

Seven new fashion-right shades

Contains Lanolin

Yes—the first and only lipstick with point actually shaped to curve of your lips. Applies color quicker, easier, more evenly. New, exciting "Dreamy Pink" shade—and six new reds. So creamy smooth—contains Lanolin—stays on so long. Exquisite case. $1.00

*Slanting cap with red enameled circle identifies the famous *Fashion-Point and shows you exact color of lipstick inside. U. S. Pat. No. 2162584

Gladys Swarthout

One of America's most popular singers . . . star for many years of the Metropolitan Opera, motion pictures, concert, radio and recordings.

Virginia Mac Watters

She has scored brilliant successes with the New York City Opera Company, at Covent Garden in London, and in concert.

The famous mezzo-soprano and opera's brilliant, new coloratura agree...

Camels for Mildness!

In a recent test of hundreds of people who smoked only Camels for 30 days, noted throat specialists, making weekly examinations, reported

NOT ONE SINGLE CASE OF THROAT IRRITATION due to smoking CAMELS!

Millions of people who have smoked Camels for years already know about Camel's cool, cool mildness. If you're not among those Camel smokers... if you've never given Camels a real, day-to-day trial . . . start your own 30-day test of Camel mildness today!

Try the mildness and rich, full flavor of Camels in your own "T-Zone" (that's T for Taste and T for Throat—your proving ground for cigarette mildness... for smoking enjoyment).

Money-Back Guarantee!

Try Camels and test them as you smoke them. If, at any time, you are not convinced that Camels are the mildest cigarette you ever smoked, return the package with the unused Camels and we will refund its full purchase price, plus postage. (Signed) R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

Doctors smoke for pleasure, too! And when three leading independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors what cigarette they smoked, the brand named most was Camel!

FIVE GREAT LESSONS IN LOVE"

may 15c

APR 13 1949

modern screen

MAGAZINE • A DELL MAGAZINE • MAGAZINE •

PER.

RECEIVED
MAY 10 1948
CONGRESS DIVISION

AN LADD

How much lovelier your Skin is with your First Cake of Camay!

MRS. CHARLES H. OGILVIE
the former Betty Hyott of Louisville, Ky.
bridal portrait painted by Alby Firss

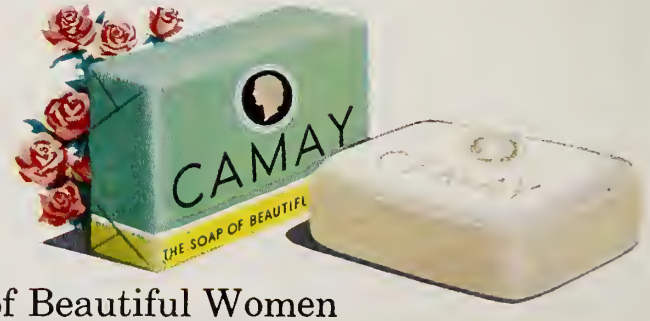
ABOUT ENSIGN AND MRS. OGILVIE—



It all began when Betty visited Annapolis. Just being there was exciting! But meeting Charles was the wonderful part—soon Southern belle became Navy bride!

At Coney Island — in New York — Betty and Charles won all kinds of prizes! A prize-winner for beauty too, Betty helps keep her complexion romantically lovely with the Camay Mild-Soap Diet.

A beautiful complexion inspires affection! You can have softer, smoother skin with your very first cake of Camay. Give up careless cleansing. Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors had scores of women test Camay's thrilling beauty promise. Nearly every one of these women won a lovelier complexion with just one cake of Camay. Follow the directions on the Camay wrapper for a really lovelier skin.

Camay the Soap of Beautiful Women

©CIB 189728

Who Says You Can't Teach an Old Farmer New Tricks?

... THIS FARMER'S DAUGHTER DOES!

"Whatever it is I'm ag'in it" was his creed . . . even to the romance of his beautiful daughter and her boy friend who sowed a new crop of ideas down-on-the-farm. It's rural but it's riotous . . . It's the surprise movie of the year!

a GLENN McCARTHY production

THE GREEN PROMISE

starring

MARGUERITE CHAPMAN
WALTER BRENNAN
ROBERT PAIGE

and NATALIE WOOD with

TED DONALDSON · CONNIE MARSHALL · ROBERT ELLIS
IRVING BACON · MILBURN STONE and JEANNE LA DUKE The 4-H girl from Mt. Vernon, Indiana

Original Story and Screenplay by MONTY F. COLLINS
Produced by ROBERT PAIGE and MONTY F. COLLINS
Directed by WILLIAM D. RUSSELL
Released by RKO RADIO Pictures

You'll applaud NATALIE WOOD, the little lovely who didn't believe in Santa Claus in "Miracle on 34th Street". She reaches inta your heart ta stir up all the joy and gaodness there.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Don't be Half-safe!

by

VALDA SHERMAN

At the first blush of womanhood many mysterious changes take place in your body. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

There is nothing "wrong" with you. It's just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl . . . so now you must keep yourself safe with a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this romantic age, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills this odor on contact in 2 seconds, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for 48 hours and keeps you shower-bath fresh. It also stops perspiration and so protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. Since physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion can now cause apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration, a dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend, or ruin a dress.

All deodorants are not alike—so remember—no other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely as new Arrid. Its safety has been proved by doctors. That's why girls your age buy more Arrid than any other age group. More men and women use Arrid than any other deodorant. Antiseptic, used by 117,000 nurses.

Intimate protection is needed—so protect yourself with this snowy, stainless cream. Awarded American Laundering Institute Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Safe for skin—can be used right after shaving. Arrid, with the amazing new ingredient Creamogen, will not dry out.

Your satisfaction guaranteed, or your money back! If you are not completely convinced that Arrid is in every way the finest cream deodorant you've ever used, return the jar with unused portion to Carter Products, Inc., 53 Park Pl., N.Y.C., for refund of full purchase price.

Don't be half-safe. Be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid now at your favorite drug counter—only 39¢ plus tax.

MAY, 1949

modern screen

the friendly magazine

stories

JUST ONE OF THOSE THINGS (Kirk Douglas) ... by Fred Morgan 22
TRAVELING MAN (Montgomery Clift) ... by K. Roby Eunson 24
THEY'LL REMEMBER MAMA (Betty Hutton) ... by Ida Zeitlin 30
LIES THAT HURT ALAN LADD ... by Erskine Johnson 32
IS SEX NECESSARY? (Jane Russell) ... by John Reynolds 34
CONFESSIONS OF A BACHELOR FATHER (Glenn Ford) ... by Ben Maddox 36
SLOW BOAT TO ROMANCE (Cornel Wilde-Patricia Knight) ... by Jack Wade 38
HOLIDAY IN THE SUN (Rory Calhoun) ... 40
RING ON HER FINGER (Jane Powell) ... by Florabel Muir 46
SAY IT ISN'T SO! (Gregory Peck) ... by Hedda Hopper 48
WE'RE TOGETHER AGAIN ... by Roy Rogers 50
FIVE GREAT LESSONS IN LOVE (Ingrid Bergman, Betty Grable, etc.) by Morgan MacNeil 52
HOME WAS NEVER LIKE THIS (Robert Taylor) ... by Christopher Kane 55
LANA TURNER'S BITTER TRIUMPHS ... by Kaaren Pieck 56
HOLLYWOOD'S AMAZING LOVE SQUABBLE (the Errol Flynns, the Dick Haymes) ... by Carl Schroeder 58
LET'S GET IT STRAIGHT! (Judy Garland) ... by Ethel Garland 62

features

THE INSIDE STORY ... 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS ... 6
EDITORIAL: Are Parents Human? (Margaret O'Brien) ... 29 PICTURE OF THE MONTH: Little Women ... 43

departments

MOVIE REVIEWS ... by Christopher Kane 16
MUSIC: Sweet and Hot ... by Leonard Feather 23
YOUR LETTERS ... 26
NEW FACES ... 27
FASHION ... 72
THE FANS ... by Gloria Lampert 96
ALSO SHOWING (Films Previously Reviewed) ... 110

ON THE COVER: Color Portrait of Alan Ladd with Jezebel by Nickolas Muray

Other picture credits, page 21

WADE H. NICHOLS, editor

WILLIAM HARTLEY, managing editor
WILLIAM JEFFERS, story editor
FLORENCE EPSTEIN, associate editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
CONSTANCE BARTEL, fashion editor
MAXINE FIRESTONE, assistant fashion editor
CHRISTOPHER KANE, movie reviewer
CAROL CARTER, beauty editor
TOM CARLILE, western manager
ROMA BURTON, western editor
VIOLA MOORE, assaciate editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff phatagrapher
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
GLORIA LAMPERT, assistant editar
BEVERLY OTT, assistant editor
IRENE TURNER, research editar
NANCY WOOD, faad editar

POSTMASTER: Please send natice an Farm 3578 and capies returned under Label Farm 3579 ta 261 Fifth Avenue, New Yark 16, New Yark

Val. 38, No. 6, May, 1949. Copyright, 1949, the Dell Publishing Ca., Inc., 261 Fifth Ave., New Yark. Published manthly. Printed in U. S. A. Published simultaneausly in the Daminion af Canada. International copyright secured under the pravisians of the Revised Canventian far the Pratectian af Literary and Artistic Works. Office af publicatian at Washingtan and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Chicaga Advertising affice, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicaga 1, Illinais. Gearge T. Delacarte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-President; Albert P. Delacarte, Vice-President. Single capy price, 15c in U.S. and Canada. Subscriptians in U.S.A. and Canada $1.80 a year; elsewhere $2.80 a year. Entered as-secand class matter Sept. 18, 1930, at the post affice Dunellen, N. J., under Act af March 3, 1879. The publishers accept na respansibility far the return of unsalicited material. Names af characters used in semi-fictianal matter are fictitiaus. If the name af any living persan is used it is purely a caincidence. Trademark Na. 301778.

One of M-G-M's Gala Silver Anniversary hits!

Everybody loves

Little Women

...and they love the boy-next-door!

M-G-M presents its newest TECHNICOLOR Production

Little Women

STARRING

JUNE ALLYSON • PETER LAWFORD
MARGARET O'BRIEN
ELIZABETH TAYLOR • JANET LEIGH
ROSSANO BRAZZI • MARY ASTOR
LUCILE WATSON • SIR C. AUBREY SMITH
HARRY DAVENPORT

A MERVYN LeROY PRODUCTION

Color by
TECHNICOLOR

Screen Play by ANDREW SOLT, SARAH Y. MASON and VICTOR HEERMAN
From the Novel by LOUISA MAY ALCOTT Produced and Directed by MERVYN LeROY
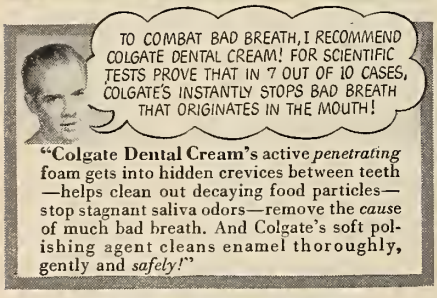
A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

SENSATIONAL SOUVENIR OFFER

(FULL COLOR ALBUM OF STARS)

Now you can own and treasure a beautiful album of the exciting stars you will see in "Little Women". There are six 6" x 8" pages, handsomely printed in thrilling life-like color—each portrait autographed. Just send 10c to cover postage and handling. Address M-G-M, Box LW9, 333 East 44th St., New York 17, N. Y.

NAME.....



ADDRESS.....

CITY.....ZONE.....STATE.....

I wouldn't want to be in his shoes!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth —helps clean out decaying food particles— stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

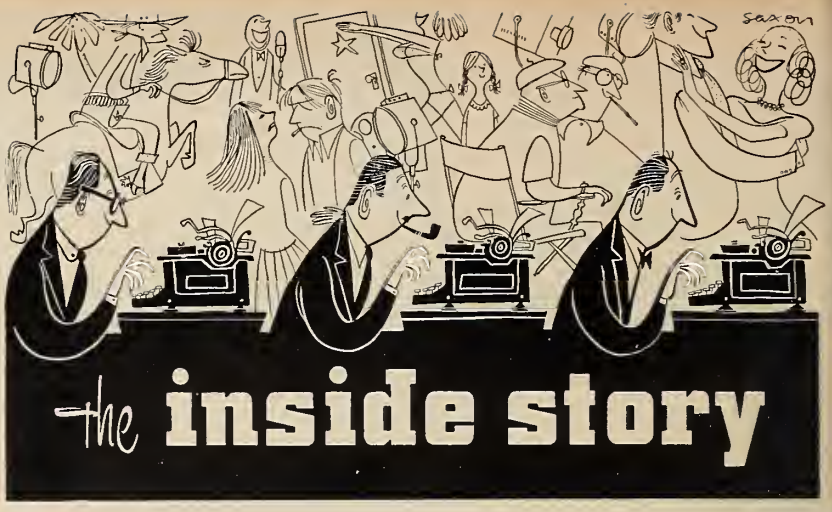
LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream



COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

NEW! ECONOMY SIZE EXTRA BIG! EXTRA VALUE! 59¢

Always use
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
after you eat and before every date

the inside story

WE'VE BEEN CALLED a few names in our time, but no one ever called us Mother of the Year. The fact that we were never a mother might be reason enough, but even so we've always been very decent to children: Helped them cross numerous street corners, gave them pennies on Thanksgiving, borrowed their comic books—all that sort of thing. And so—seeing all too clearly now that we'll never make the grade—we're going to do our own name-calling. Betty Hutton comes first. As far as we're concerned Betty Hutton is Mother of the Year. We arrived at this decision after a visit to Betty's house. Just dropped in with our yo-yo, as it were, and took a look at the kids, the mother, and the situation. Then, without anyone's having told us we suddenly k-n-e-w. What we knew is now on page 30 of this issue in a piece called, "They'll Remember Mama." "They," of course, refers to the sprouts, Lindsay and Candy, but all Betty has to do is say the word and we'll put ourself up for adoption . . .

WHEN WE HEARD that Robert Taylor was in England our first reaction was to run off with Barbara Stanwyck (who was in Hollywood). We didn't know what Barbara would think of the idea, so we controlled ourself. When Bob returned home we did the obvious—got a story on what happened in England. Turn to page 55 and you'll discover that "Home Was Never Like This" . . .

JUDGING FROM OUR own, we suspect that the American family could do with a little more discipline. Fellow, name of Peter Newton Ford, agrees with us. For it took him all of 14 weeks to get his father into line. But then, his father is Glenn Ford—and that makes matters rather special. The elder Ford's confessions are on page 36 of this issue. By the way, Peter N. Ford is four years old . . .

MORE OF OUR continuing introduction of our composite self: Gloria Lampert is a girl who came to our office wanting to write. We fixed that. We put her in a corner and gave her a stack of white cards. She looked at us, unabashed, and filed them. Did it alphabetically, too. That was three years ago. Today, Gloria is Assistant Editor of M. S. Born in Mount Vernon in 1924, reared in the theaters, art galleries, concert halls (and schools) of New York, she is directly related to our inferiority complexes. We get even by making her read proofs. She builds up her resistance by taking walks that would cripple a Boy Scout, and by riding any horse that will let her. Her milder pursuits include clay-modelling, whistling and men—all of which Gloria gaily pursues only when her multiple activities as assistant editor and Fan Club director will permit her . . .

WE WOULD LIKE to clasp the youth of America to our bosom. Because of the overcrowding that would result, however, we are limiting ourselves to the youth of Hollywood. Next month we plan to devote MODERN SCREEN to the movies' youngsters—Janet Leigh, Elizabeth Taylor, Bob Arthur, Guy Madison, Monty Clift, Wanda Hendrix, Lois Butler and many others who've already displayed their great possibilities. Join us in our "Salute to Youth," won't you?

GET SET TO HOWL!
That "SITTING PRETTY" Man is back
Clifton WEBB
Shirley TEMPLE
Mr. Belvedere Goes To College
Tom DRAKE · Alan YOUNG
Directed by ELLIOTT NUGENT • Produced by SAMUEL G. ENGEL
Written by Richard Sale, Mary Loos and Mary McCall, Jr. • Based on a Character Created by Gwen Davenport
AND WHAT HAPPENS SHOULDN'T HAPPEN..... to a college !!
20th CENTURY-FOX

One of the best Hollywood parties in yeors was the one Errol Flynn recently threw. Here the host tosses epigroms with Shirley Temple.

A fine ossortment of big movie nomes wos there. Clark Goble come with Joan Horrisan—one of the few femole producers in the industry.

The comera hoppened to catch Suson Peters in o bod moment—her strond of peorls hod just broken. Von Johnson remoined quite colm.

Jennifer Jones was present with David O. Selznick. Everyone was soying they'd be morried in the near future—probobly in Englond.

LOUELLA PARSONS' Good news

Ranald Calman was seated at Jane Wyman's right. Her escart was Lew Ayres. Jane and Lew are na langer moking a secret af their affectian far each ather.

Craig Stevens and Alexis Smith share a party jacularity with Ray Heindarf and his wife. Ray's the famed musical directar who wan an Academy Award in '43.

Errol Flynn's party gets the spotlight this month—and why not?

Everything happened—from Shelley Winters' "arrest," to the discovery of a stranger with a gun on his hip, right on through to the white mice races!

It was an evening of "surprises" from start to finish—one of the earliest being that Errol was assisted in receiving his guests by the stepmother and father of Nora Eddington, his almost ex-wife. Yes, they are definitely siding with Flynn in the marital breakup and seem sad and unhappy over her constant dating with Dick Haymes. (This very night of Errol's party, Nora and Dick were conspicuously present at the Mocamba dancing every number cheek to cheek.)

(For an account of the Dick Haymes-Joanne Dru-Errol Flynn-Nora Eddington marital jumble, see page 58.—ED.)

But to get back to the party—it was really a wingding, with Mike Romanoff giving out with his best catering, with beautifully set-up tables around the swimming pool, and the lights from the San Fernando Valley making a shimmering backdrop for the glamorous women, gorgeously gowned in their best dresses and jewels.

The unscheduled excitement started almost immediately. Two policemen showed up and "arrested" Shelley Winters. Later, it turned out to be a publicity stunt in connection with her appearance at a police benefit. It was a doubtful gag and when Shelley returned to the Flynn party—a lady columnist (not I) ripped her up and down her bare back for trying to steal the spotlight with such a stunt.

But that was only the beginning, kids.

There have been a lot af robberies in Hollywood lately and there might have been one at the Flynn affair if it hadn't been for the quick eye of Jack Eddington, Nora's father, who is with the Sheriff's office. He spotted a bulge in the pocket of an unknown guest and, sure enough, it turned out to be a revolver!

The man gibberingly attempted to explain that he had taken the gun from Errol's desk as a souvenir. But it was highly suspicious when a search revealed another gun on his person. Rather than call the police and em-

LOOK better SMILE brighter

USE THE BRUSH WITH Real
Nylon
Bristles

Made by the makers of
DR. WEST'S
MIRACLE-TUFT 50¢

Tyrone Power and Lindo Christian were wed with solemn ceremony in Rome's Church of Santa Francesca Romana on January 27. Outside, thousands rioted to get a glimpse of Ty and Linda.

barrass his guests, Errol gave orders that the suspicious stranger was to be given the bum's rush off the hill.

Ava Gardner, looking like another touch of Venus in a gorgeous white dress, laughed, "Have you ever seen so much excitement?" And I had to admit I hadn't. Not in one evening, anyway.

Two other lovelies in white were Mary Livingstone and Jane Wyman—Jane's dress of white lace being ultra form-fitting. She actually beamed, walking around on the arm of Lew Ayres. Janie no longer makes a secret of being very much in love with him.

Jennifer Jones and David Selznick were another arm-in-arm couple—although I thought they seemed unusually quiet and reserved.

Mary Pickford and Gloria Swanson, those mighty queens of the silent screen, were receiving a lot of attention from the younger crowd. Gloria is returning to pictures in Sunset Boulevard for Paramount and she looked as slim and glamorous as she did when her exotic hair-dos were the sensation of the screen.

I spotted Peter Lawford dancing with Gloria although he had come with another Gloria—Gloria Hatrick McLean. I don't know where her steady boy friend, Jimmy Stewart, was. They had just returned from spending a weekend in Mexico, chaperoned by the Jack Boltons.

Joan Fontaine arrived late because her baby had been baptized that afternoon. I attended the baptism and held the baby, who certainly squawked lustily. If that means good luck, Miss "Debbie" Dozier will lead a charmed life. What a pair of lungs!

Everyone was having a hilarious time reading the program of entries for the White Mice races. Printed in regular tip-sheet form, some of the names were a little on the risqué side, but a few I can pass on are:

Jack Benny: No Hope.

Pidgeon II: Still Trying.

Ava Gee: Has plenty of chances.

Crawford Gal: Winning form.

Everyone was crowding toward the tent where the Mice races were to be held—everybody but me. I don't like mice, white or any other color—and I have good cause to suspect Greer Garson feels the same way.

I saw Greer, who looked like a magazine cover in a startling green dress offsetting her red hair, peeking in at the races. But she had her skirts held tightly around her ankles! Of course, her escort was Buddy Fogelson—the more I see of that charming Texan, the better I like him.

Joan Bennett, in a luscious ice-blue gown, was having the time of her life doing a really wonderful jitterbug routine with none other than Jack Benny. I don't think they'd ever jitterbugged together before—but what they lacked in practice they more than made up in enthusiasm.

I had a radio show the next day so I couldn't stay for the finale which I hear took place long after dawn the next morning. But on thinking it over, I don't see what else could have happened in one evening.

* * *

What are we going to do about Montgomery Clift? Hollywood hostesses and the leading bachelor girls are just about to give up where he is concerned.

When he does occasionaly accept an invitation, he always informs his hostess he will come with the Gene Kellys or some other married couple, forestalling any plans she might have to play matchmaker.

The official Bobby-Soxers association recently nominated Monty as their dream man of the year. But listen to this:

A Hollywood girl who has a yen for him, decided to take things in her own hands and not wait for him to call. She called him and invited him to a very swank affair.

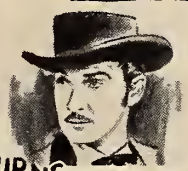
"I'd like to go very much," said Monty, politely, "but I don't have a dinner jacket."

And, honest—he doesn't. He ordered the

You Couldn't Tell a Traitor from a Hero

....and South of St. Louis Nobody Cared!

SOUTH OF ST. LOUIS



KIP.. His six-guns fought both sides for that South of St. Louis woman!

ROUGE Red-haired gun-runner queen —she kept men at each others' throats!

BURNS .. Even for men who had their price he raised his too high!

DEB The flash of her eyes fooled you but the flash of her gun never did!

BLACK COTTRELL.. Across the land his name was 'Black'. It was the color of his heart.

THE RANGER. He pulled the trigger first and asked questions later!

All its thousand-mile span of spectacular adventure in color by TECHNICOLOR

JAKE Among men of iron all he could think of was gold!

LOUIS

With thunder-clap violence comes this never-told chapter of Southwest history—presented by WARNER BROS.

STARRING

JOEL McCREA

ALEXIS SMITH · ZACHARY SCOTT · DOROTHY MALONE

DIRECTED BY RAY ENRIGHT · A UNITED STATES PICTURE · PRODUCED BY MILTON SPERLING

WITH DOUGLAS KENNEDY · ALAN HALE

WRITTEN BY ZACHARY GOLD AND JAMES R. WEBB

MUSIC BY MAX STEINER

It's your Big Springtime ADVENTURE-Thrill from Warner Bros!

DORIS DAY
...Singing sensation of the Bob Hope Radio Show!
THE GIRL WHOSE VOICE MAKES MILLIONS OF RECORDS WHIRL NOW BRINGS YOU AN ALL-TIME RECORD IN MUSICAL SCREEN ENTERTAINMENT FROM WARNER BROS.!
"MY DREAM IS YOURS"
The story of a love-song that swept a girl to star-glittering fame!
A MICHAEL CURTIZ PRODUCTION IN COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR HEAR THE DREAM-HITS THEY'RE ALL SINGING
MY DREAM IS YOURS
SOMEONE LIKE YOU
LOVE FINDS A WAY
I'LL STRING ALONG WITH YOU
(LYRIC BY AL DUBIN)
STARRING
JACK CARSON · DORIS DAY · LEE BOWMAN
WITH
ADOLPHE MENJOU · EVE ARDEN · "CUDDLES" S.Z. SAKALL
SELENA ROYLE · FRANKIE CARLE AND HIS ORCHESTRA · DIRECTED BY MICHAEL CURTIZ · SCREEN PLAY BY HARRY KURNITZ AND DANE LUSSIER
MUSIC BY HARRY WARREN · LYRICS BY RALPH BLANE · MUSICAL DIRECTION RAY HEINDORF
It's your Big Easter-time MUSICAL-Thrill from Warner Bros.!

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Frank Sinotro, Wolter Pidgeon and Esther Willioms were omang the 1,000 guests ot MGM's 25th Anniversary lunch honoring Louis Mayer.

first he has ever owned for the Academy Award shindig because he was told that all nominees must be in formal attire.

One of his best friends told me that Monty is a great deal like Lew Ayres. He is a "lone wolf" who falls just once or twice in a lifetime and who has no use for smitten femmes who pursue him.

(For some interesting sidelights on Mr. Clift, see page 24.—ED.)

* * *

Alan Ladd is not a temperamental guy. But he hit the ceiling when the script of After Midnight had him socking little Wanda Hendrix.

"Nothing doing," said Alan, "that comes out."

He was told that a very important story development hinged on the face slapping.

"Listen," said our boy friend, "I'm not going to hit any woman in a picture—but I'm certainly not going to hit one who weighs 98 pounds!"

Result: The script went back for a new plot hinge.

(Which is very much in keeping with Alan's character—as you'll read in the story on page 32.—ED.)

* * *

Clark Gable drew me aside at Joan Crawford's dinner party and said, "Louella, have you caught up with this Burt Lancaster?"

"Caught up with him?" I echoed. "I'm one of his biggest boosters."

"So am I after seeing him on the screen for the first time last night," Clark said. "I think he's the most terrific personality we've had on the soreen in years."

I thought—yes, the most terrific personality since Clark Gable! I've always thought that Burt had the same menacing punch and romantic wallop that Clark registered when he was first starting out. And now here was Clark, himself, doing a rave about a possible successor.

He must have read my thoughts because he grinned, "When they cast me as Lancaster's father—that's the day I retire!" Are you listenin', Burt? You should be plenty pleased over all this praise from Mr. King!

Joan's dinner was très elegante because she entertains in only the most formal way. Her dining room is stately enough for a banquet hall and her silver, crystal and linens are out of this world.

You don't want that "Left-Out Feeling"!

Stop looking on while others go places, Honey. Join the gang and be welcome—but first remember this: never trust your charm to anything but dependable Mum!

This unique cream deodorant makes you sure of charm. Contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Be a safety-first girl—get Mum today!

Mum-Safer for Charm ... Mum checks perspiration odor for the whole day or evening. Protects against risk of future odor after your bath washes away past perspiration.

Mum-Safer for Skin ... Gentle Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Doesn't dry out in the jar to form scratchy crystals. Mum is harmless to skin.

Mum-Safer for Clothes ...No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Quick, pleasant to use. Economical, too—no shrinkage, no waste.

keeps you nice to be near

Product of Bristol-Myers

For sanitary napkins—Mum is gentle, safe, dependable ... ideal for this important use, too.

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream— cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

Rita Hoyworth and Aly Khan dancing in a Paris night club. Aly's divorce proceedings have bogged down due to the illness of his first wife.

One of the most conspicuous guests was Greer Garson. I say "conspicuous" because there have been rumors that Joan and Greer were not the best of friends—that, in fact, they did not like one another at all. Well, there goes that gossip down the flue.

I must say, however, that only a daring hostess would have arranged the seating just the way Joan did it. She had Buddy Fogelson, Greer's boy friend, on her left and Clark Gable on her right. At another table, Greer dined with Gordon MacRae and two other couples.

A close woman friend who was with Olivia de Havilland soon after she was told by her doctor that she was going to have a baby, said that no woman ever received the news with deeper feeling.

Olivia was so overcome with happiness that her hands seemed almost unconsciously held in prayer as she talked about it—and her eyes were moist.

You can bet that nothing in the world will induce Livvy to do anything that would endanger her health at this time. She has wanted a baby for so long. Marcus Goodrich, the excited papa-to-be, told me, "This is the great happiness we have hoped for."

Speaking as a radio commentator and newspaper gal—the announcement came at an odd time for me. Livvy was scheduled to be the star of my next radio show. Her doctor had told her that she had to stay in bed for several weeks.

The only thing to do was to take the "show" to Olivia—and that's what we did. My radio producer, our writers and the technicians all hied ourselves over to the Goodrich home for the interview. We did our "spot" in an atmosphere of boudoir surroundings and much advance "baby" talk. Radio was never like this—before!

* * *

Personal Opinions: Katharine Hepburn's appearance at MGM's party given for 80 important salesmen of their pictures, didn't go so big with the boys. She showed up in slacks and about a half-hour late. . . . Isn't it about

Oh, the things they said . . . about the things she did . . .

Her reputation suffered . . .
but her romance didn't!
It might have been so-o-o innocent . . . but it turned out to be so embarrassing!
. . . Just ask Bob,
he knows!

Robert Young
Shirley Temple · John Agar

in

Adventure in Baltimore

A DORE SCHARY Presentation

Produced by Richard H. Berger • Directed by Richard Wallace • Screenplay by Lionel Houser

RKO RADIO PICTURES

You'll never know how Pretty you can be until you Try Magic Touch

Campana's new truly magical Cream Make-up. Needs no water or sponge. Touch finger tips to Magic Touch. As by magic they lift off a film of beauty which you apply to your face. Blend over face and suddenly you have the loveliest complexion you've ever known. 6 shades, 39¢ and $1 sizes. FREE! Beauty Booklet of Make-up Secrets! Write to Campana, 1100 Lincolnway, Batavia, Illinois. Booklet mailed you at once.

time Margaret O'Brien stopped acting sulky about her mother's marriage? She is a sweet little girl and she has her career. Her devoted mother has the right to her happiness, too. (We agree—see our letter to Margaret on page 29.—ED.) . . .

Can't blame Gloria De Haven for almost breaking out in tears when she is continually "checked" about whether or not she and John Payne are breaking up again. Once they were queried just as they were leaving the house to go to church. "Don't people want us to stay married?" young Gloria asked the reporter sadly. . . . How come Paramount introduces Mona Freeman as a full-fledged star in a Western? She's one of the most chic and sophisticated of the younger group. I consider her wasted in a shooter-upper like Streets of Laredo.

* * *

Paulette Goddard, who has put on ten pounds for Anna Lucasta, says her new figure will start a fad for plumper belles. Paulette has never been a modest gal and she's pretty well pleased with the way she stacks up as the voluptuous Anna.

I ran into her in one of her snug-looking outfits—steel-gray satin—on the Columbia lot when she was on the way to the set. The seams weren't bursting—but they were straining!

Paulette said, "It's the 'over-ripe look.' How do you like it?" I had to admit that she certainly looked well.

"Believe me," Paulette added, "the too-slim girl is a dodo bird. Men are demanding the womanly woman again—and that means curves and more curves."

* * *

When there is a baby shower in Hollywood, the glamor girls "oh" and "ah" over the pretty little things just like the Mrs. Joneses and Mrs. Browns in Kokomo.

Mrs. Reginald Gardiner was given one of the loveliest showers by Mrs. Darryl Zanuck, and Nadia and the expected heir received so many gifts it practically took a Mack truck to get them home.

The nursery is being done in yellow, an unusual color and a novel change from the customary pink or blue. Virginia gave Nadia a yellow bassinet, and the yellow blankets to go with it were so pretty.

Joan Fontaine was just full of information and advice about how to bring up a baby—Joan being an experienced mother of several months. Kay Williams Spreckels, who is expecting a baby in July, took notes on what the best-dressed babies are wearing.

Mrs. Louis Jourdan, Nadia's closest friend, seemed a little wistful, I thought. She is so happy for her friend, but she told me she and Louis have wanted a baby for so long.

FREE SUBSCRIPTIONS

It's almost as easy as filling out a questionnaire. In fact, it's just as easy and much more fun because if you're among the first 500 to send this questionnaire back, you'll win a three-month subscription to MODERN SCREEN absolutely free. All we want to know is which stories you liked in this issue—and which you didn't. And if you're like us, you probably have some favorite stars you want to see in MODERN SCREEN, so list those too. Remember—the first lucky 500 receive the June, July and August issues, free!

QUESTIONNAIRE

Which stories and features did you enjoy most in our May issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE RIGHT of your 1st, 2nd and 3rd choices.

Just One of Those Things (Kirk Douglas) ☐
Traveling Man (Monty Clift) ☐
They'll Remember Mama (Betty Hutton) ☐
Lies That Hurt Alan Ladd ☐
Is Sex Necessary? (Jane Russell) ☐
Confessions of a Bachelor Father (Glenn Ford) ☐
Let's Get It Straight (Judy Garland) ☐
Holiday In The Sun (Rory Calhoun) ☐
Ring On Her Finger (Jane Powell) ☐
Say It Isn't So (Gregory Peck) by Hedda Hopper ☐
We're Together Again (Roy Rogers) ☐
Five Great Lessons in Love (Bergman, Grable, etc.) ☐
Home Was Never Like This (Robert Taylor) ☐
Lana Turner's Bitter Triumphs ☐
Slow Boat To Romance (Cornel Wilde) ☐
Hollywood's Amazing Love Squabble (Errol Flynns-Dick Haymes) ☐
Louella Parsons' Good News ☐

Which of the above did you like LEAST?.....
What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....
.....
What 3 FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them, 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.....
.....
What MALE star do you like least?.....
What FEMALE star do you like least?.....
My name is.....
My address is.....
City..... Zone..... State..... I am ..... years old

ADDRESS THIS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Robert Mitchum was a model prisoner at the county sheriff's prison farm while serving his 60 days. (This cow was the envy of the herd.)

Joan Bennett, who could have passed for 25, looked radiant in a purple suit and really had it over the other gals. She's Hollywood's youngest grandma!

The luncheon table was set with the cutest little boy and girl dolls and with pink and blue flowers. The ice cream was molded into baby cradles with a doll in each.

The laugh of the afternoon came when a big, luscious-looking package arrived for papa Reggie Gardiner. It was from his pal, Jack Bolton, and it was a big apron with embroidered pockets for safety pins, aspirin and cigarettes!

There were lovely gifts from Joan Crawford, Rosalind Russell and Ginger Rogers. Pretty lucky baby, don't you think?

* * *

A close tab on your letters to my office this month, reveals:

More sympathy for Robert Mitchum with the idea of giving him "one more chance."

Several tips to Shirley Temple to let her hair grow a little longer.

Requests for Montgomery Clift and Jane Wyman to be teamed. One girl says, "Maybe they would fall in love and become the perfect team on and off the screen." (!?????)

The more adult letter-writers cheering for Hamlet and Laurence Olivier. The younger ones cheering for Montgomery Clift, Peter Lawford, Glenn Ford, et al.

An upswing of interest in William Holden.

Less Ava Gardner mail than last month.

Rita Hayworth still on the side-swipe list.

Linda Darnell being rediscovered as a "great beauty" after A Letter To Three Wives. Evidentally Linda's type of beauty is much admired by her own sex, because many more femmes than males wrote about her.

Some scattered complaints about the way Ingrid Bergman dresses off-screen—but none regarding her performance in Joan of Arc.

Well, I guess that's all for this month. Keep writing and letting me know your ideas. See you next month!

THE END

59¢-43¢
25¢ and 10¢

Have you ever wondered if you are as lovely as you could be—are you completely sure of your charm? Your deodorant can be the difference . . . and you will never know how lovely you can be until you use FRESH.

FRESH is so completely effective, yet so easy and pleasant to use . . . Different from any deodorant you have ever tried.

use FRESH and stay fresher

MOVIE REVIEWS

by Christopher Kane

We Were Strangers concerns Cubon revolutionists. When Jennifer Jones' brother is killed by official Pedro Armendoriz, she joins John Gorfield in the undergraund.

The revalutionists tunnel from her hause to a tomb in o cemetery, planning to plont o bomb to kill the gavernment heads when they attend a prominent funeral.

The plot is thwarted when the funerol is switched to outside the city. Jennifer and Garfield plon to flee Cubo tagether. But he dies ofter o gunfight with police—just as the revalutionists sweep to victory.

WE WERE STRANGERS

Cast: Jennifer Jones, John Garfield, Pedro Armendariz, Gilbert Roland, Ramon Novarro, Wally Cassell, David Bond.

Columbia.

In my opinion, this picture is a work of art. It tells of a group of Cuban revolutionists in the early 1930's, when that island was ruled by a dictator-president, and it seemed that freedom had vanished, to be replaced by machine guns. The revolutionary group is composed of four Cuban men, a Cuban girl—Jennifer Jones—who's seen her brother murdered by a police official, and an American of Cuban birth—John Garfield. They have a plan whereby the assassination of the president, high police and other government officials can be achieved in one move. They're going to tunnel from Jennifer's basement (which is directly across the street from Colon Cemetery) into the tomb of some important family. At the proper time, their organization will see to it that a member of the important family is killed, the funeral will bring out the big "hyenas," a bomb planted in the tomb will do the rest. The tunneling is not undertaken lightly. The revolutionists love liberty, but they are also men of conscience. They know the bomb may kill some innocent people, and they are troubled. Still, innocents are being slaughtered daily by the police, so the risk must be taken. The six live together, eating, talking, digging. They who had recently been strangers are now inhabitants of a private world. The digging reaches the poor part of the cemetery. The smell of death is so strong the diggers must wear handkerchiefs over ther faces. One man, sickened and horrified, escapes into insanity, wanders out onto the street, and is killed by a truck. The others work on. . . . But there isn't room to tell the whole story. In brief, the plot fails, Garfield is killed by police bullets just as the Cuban revolution breaks out. Cubans force the president to flee, Cubans battle the police, Cubans parade in the streets singing, but in the house where the six strangers had lived together, one man stands looking at the body of his friend, and says, "A man can die five minutes too early." This is a picture that will exhaust you. It mixes moments of poetry with moments of nightmare. It is beautiful, and terrible, and the acting is all so magnificent there's no sense in even trying to single out any performer. See We Were Strangers. Its like may not come your woy again.

Red Canyon: Girl meets bay, but Papa objects. Ann Blyth and Howard Duff carry on against Papa's wishes and breathtaking Western scenery.

RED CANYON

Cast: Ann Blyth, Howard Duff, George Brent, Edgar Buchanan, Jane Darwell.
Universal-International.

Here's George Brent growing old gracefully. He's grey-haired, fatherly and unromantic in the middle of Utah. His name's Bostel, he rules a settlement called Bostel's Crossing, and when he isn't concentrating on horse-breeding, he's giving his motherless daughter Lucy (Ann Blyth) orders, or he's swearing vengeance on the coyotes that made her motherless. (The coyotes are a bunch known as the Cordt gang.) One day Lucy defies papa, takes off on a race horse named Sage King (he's never been beaten, and he's awful lively) and heads for open country. She meets Howard Duff, a "saddle tramp" (isn't it colorful?) who explains he's going to capture and train the wild stallion known as Black Velvet. Not only that, Black Velvet's going to beat Sage King in the big race which is only a few months away. Ann laughs out of the side of her mouth, but you know girls. She think's Howard's lovely. She even helps him train Black Velvet (after he catches him, of course) and Howard and Ann are definitely something for Winchell to think about by the time the big race rolls around. But trouble, trouble. Papa George says Ann can't ride a wild horse; she's too young to get killed. And Howard confesses that his father is really Floyd Cordt, and that he grew up in the Cordt gang. Says he never went along with them, once he was old enough to know better, but he doesn't think that'll help much in Ann's pappy's eyes. He's right. Black Velvet wins the race, Papa George attempts to rub out Howard, and Howard has to kill his whole murdering family to prove he's a right guy. He does it without blinking. This is a very superior Western as to color, scenery, horses and dialogue. One of the funniest lines belongs to John McIntire (Floyd Cordt) the outlaw chief. At one point, he studies his honest youngest son sadly, and then he murmurs, "That Lin. He coulda been such a help to us, if his thinkin' was only straight."

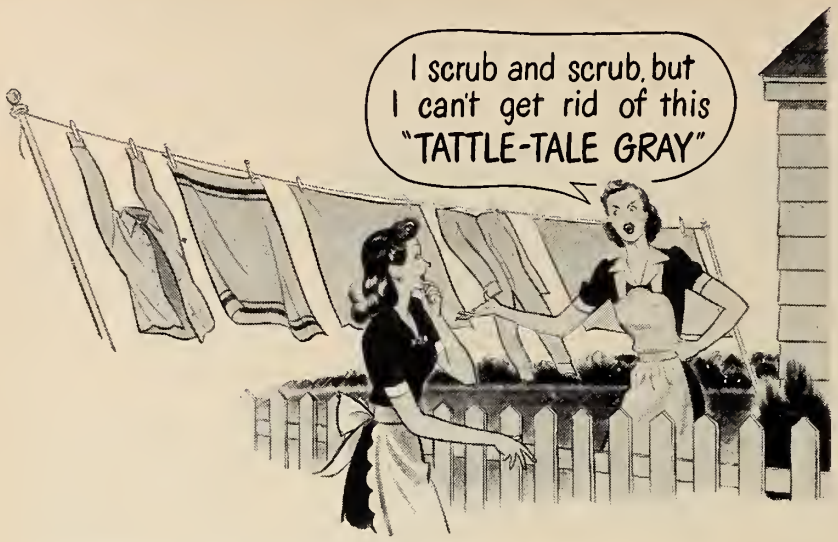
TONI TWINS prove magic of SOFT-WATER Shampooing

Lather . . . was Alva's problem!

"Imagine trying to shampoo your hair without enough lather," complains Alva Anderson. "And that's just about what happens every time I use a soap shampoo!" Of course, Alva won't ever get the lather she wants with a soap shampoo —especially in hard water! And she can't rinse away that dulling soap film, either. That's what leaves hair looking drab and lifeless. Makes it hard to manage, too!

But Alice got heaps of it!

"Toni Creme Shampoo is wonderful! Even in hard water, I get all the rich, creamy lather I need—and then some!" says twin Alice. And Toni does more than that! After Soft-Water Shampooing, your hair is exquisitely clean . . . shinier . . . more glamorous than you ever dreamed possible! Each strand shimmers with all, yes all its natural beauty! Curls are fresh, vibrant-looking . . . soft as a moonbeam!



Now it's Toni Creme Shampoo for Two!

The Anderson twins know there's nothing like Toni Creme Shampoo! Nothing like Soft-Water Shampooing in hard water! For Toni bursts into oceans of thick, billowy lather . . . rinses away dirt and dandruff instantly. Toni leaves your hair wonderfully fresh and radiant . . . sparkling with precious new highlights. Helps your permanent "take" better . . . look lovelier longer. Get the jar or tube of Toni Creme Shampoo today. Try Soft-Water Shampooing. It's for you!

Enriched with Lanolin

One Word Led to Another

DISGUSTED—What woman wouldn't be disgusted?—when the lure of mysterious washing miracles and other 'inducements'—ends in the same old weary wash days and dingy, half-clean clothes.

DELIGHTED—Any woman will be delighted—when sparkling, fragrant washes, done easily with the help of golden soap and active naptha—prove there still is nothing like Fels-Naptha Soap.

In many a 'clothes line chat', the Fels-Naptha Story is told again and again. The plain, straightforward story of two great cleaners—mild, golden soap and active Fels naptha—combined to do a thorough, gentle washing job, in machine or tub.

No mysteries. No 'inducements'—unless whiter washes and easier wash days can induce you to try Fels-Naptha Soap.

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

Mother Is A Freshman: Loretto Young enrolls in college to save the family fortune. Rudy Vallee's her lawyer, Van Johnson's her prof.

MOTHER IS A FRESHMAN

Cast: Loretta Young, Van Johnson, Rudy Vallee, Barbara Lawrence, Robert Arthur, Betty Lynn.
20th Century-Fox.

You think being rich is such a good deal? Why, widowed Loretta Young doesn't know where her next silver-blue mink is coming from. Her trust fund only pays off once every three years, she's used up all her ready cash, and her lawyer Rudy Vallee won't lend her five cents. (He's willing to marry her, but she'd rather die.) Betty Lynn, Loretta's spoiled daughter (you'd go far to find a more horrible example of modern youth) insists that she must have the means to go back to Painter College. She's not so interested in education, but she's terribly interested in an English professor named Michaels (Van Johnson). "You've got to get the money, Mother," she says. "Even if you have to go to work in one of those sweat shops. You're pretty good at getting spots out of things." The solution presents itself when Loretta remembers a scholarship her grandmother once set up at Painter. It provides $3000 for any female by the name of Abigail Fortitude who wishes to advance her education. (Granny's name was Abigail Fortitude; so was Loretta's, before she wed.) The $3000 will keep Loretta and daughter in the chips till the next trust fund payment comes due. Hitch: Loretta must go to college, to get the money. Double hitch: Professor Michaels is slated to fall in love with Loretta, which enrages daughter to an alarming degree. Before she'll permit her unhappy elders to wed, she makes them both suffer. Picture's fun when they keep it light; toward the end it bogs down a little painfully (daughter's renunciation scene, to be specific) but don't stay away on that account.

THE UNDERCOVER MAN

Cast: Glenn Ford, Nina Foch, James Whitmore, Barry Kelley, David Wolfe, Frank Tweddell.
Columbia.

Glenn Ford, U. S. Treasury agent, traps a Capone-like mobster in a couple of hours of exciting melodrama. This mobster, known as the Big Fellow, has successfully terrorized a whole city. His syndicate collects protection from small businessmen, runs gambling places, murders anybody who steps out of line. No citizens will testify against any of the Big Fellow's gangsters because they're afraid to. Glenn finds this out when a stool-pigeon coming to meet him and sell him valuable information is mowed down in broad daylight. A crowd of spectators sees the killing, but none will admit it. Glenn's next lead—to a Salvatore Rocco, one of the Big Fellow's "front-men"—is more productive. The gang gets to Rocco before Glenn does, of course, but Rocco's little daughter (Joan Lazer) salvages Rocco's records, and brings them to Glenn. The records are the break he's been waiting for. He goes into action, and, finally, the Big Fellow is brought to trial and convicted. The cast in Undercover Man is wonderful—Robert Osterloh and Anthony Caruso as the greedy ex-gangsters, Barry Kelley as the Big Fellow's rich and frightened lawyer, Frank Tweddell as an outspoken Police Inspector (the only one in the city), John Hamilton as a policeman who isn't so outspoken, Nina Foch as Glenn's worrying wife, James Whitmore and David Wolfe as Glenn's Treasury Agent companions, and Glenn himself as an investigator Edgar Hoover could be proud of.

The Undercover Man: Glenn Ford's a U. S. Treasury agent tracking down a mysterious mobster, much to the anxiety of wife Nina Foch.

THE BRIBE

Cast: Robert Taylor, Ava Gardner, Charles Laughton, Vincent Price, John Hodiak.
MGM.

FBI man Robert Taylor gets sent to Central America to investigate some funny goings-on. Scrap is being shipped out of the United States, but when it turns up in Central America it's airplane motors, and a few big crooks are cleaning up. The crooks are a cold-blooded killer (Vincent Price), a drunken weakling (John Hodiak), and a frightened fat man with fallen arches (Charles Laughton). Hodiak, who has heart trouble, is married to Ava Gardner. Ava sings in a night club, and knows from nothing about her low-life husband's enterprises. (He's got a spark or two of manhood left, by gosh, and he's insisted that she mustn't be dragged into any dirty work.) Robert and Ava fall in love; Ava confesses that she's married to a drunken

